"There are gold mines in Manchuria which may give a better account of themselves than any of our coal or iron mines. Some of the latter, as for instance the Ch'ih-chow mines of Anhui and the Su-chow mines of Kiangsu, have so far been any thing but a success, owing to difficulties of transporting the mineral to the places where it is required. But for gold there is a good market everywhere, and all that is brought out of the earth is sold immediately and on the spot. What has stood in the way of successful gold mining in China is want of method. The P'ing-tu gold mines on the Shantung promontory employ about 10,000 persons, and the working expenses are 800 taels a day, but the output daily is only three ounces of gold. But we are pleased to chronicle the existence of a very different state of things at the Amur gold mines. When Prefect Li assumed the direction six months ago the working of these mines was commenced with sudden and wonderful energy, and a subsidiary mine was opened at K'i-kan Ho. Here, where the gold brigands had worked at their forbidden mines before they were so disastrously scattered by the Chinese Government troops, gold mining is now actively proceeding under the sanction and encouragement of the Government. At first the output was very small, but it has since so increased that during the last ten days of the third moon (April 20-29, 1889), the joint production of both mines was between fifty and sixty ounces of gold dust. There are from 500 to 600 miners employed, and each is finding about a tenth of an ounce of gold every day, and it is expected that before many more months there will be 3,000 miners working there and producing 300 ounces of gold a day. Happy shareholders!

"These mines of Hei-lung Kiang lie near the frontier between that Chinese province and the Russian Amur territory. There are the Tung Kin Shan and the Si Kin Shan worthy of being named beside the California of the Americans and the Australia of the British, which are commonly called by us, respectively, Kiu Kin Shan and Sin Kin Shan, the old and new gold fields. Here stretches a gold vein of 400 to 500 li long, which if properly worked will yield us incalculable wealth, and is now only waiting for capitalists to come forward to supply the working capital. It must be confessed that the way these mines were managed before Prefect Li came along was anything but reassuring to investors, but now we may hope that more confidence will be felt and that these noble mines may be properly developed.

"According to the first clause of the Russian treaty the range of hills called the Hing An Ling separates our territory from the Russian, the gold country of Tung Kin Shan lying to the south and that of Sih Kin Shan or Moh Ho to the north of that range. The mines under Prefect Li's superintendence are on those mountains, some seventy or eighty li from Moh Ao. All provisions for the mines must be imported overland from Al-ken (otherwise called Saghalin Vla, or "Black River"), a distance of 1,500 li, through Moh Ho, passing Russian territory on their way. Prefect Li intends to effect a reform in this respect, and partly by the employment of steamers and partly by opening of new roads to render it possible to bring from China everything necessary for the proper working of the mines and the supply of the personnel with provisions without the aid of Russian roads."—Washington Star.

A CURIOUS DINNER.

Blacksnake Was the Only Dish and It Was Eaten Raw.

During the War of the Revolution, while Washington's army was marching through snow and ice in what was then wilderness in New Jersey, three men, who were members of the same regiment, were lost in the woods. For several days they wandered about in the terrible cold, with scarcely clothing sufficient to keep them from freezing, and with no food. The grand-daughter of one of these men now lives in this city, and tells this bit of interesting history, which has been handed down to her direct from her grandfather.

After wandering for three days without food or warmth, the poor fellows began to weaken and stagger wearily. It was evident that they could live but a short time unless some assistance should reach them. All three carried their guns, but fate seemed against them. Not a bit of game of any kind could they find. At last, driven to desperation, they decided to cast lots to see who should die that the others might live. The lot fell on the grandfather whose descendant tells this story.

It was the morning before Christmas that this took place, and when the man whose fate had been sealed prepared to give up his life, calmly and without a murmur, his companions refused to take it, resolving to die themselves rather than to eat their comrade. Just as they were about to resume their weary journey, weak and exhausted and scarcely able to stand, a huge blacksnake crawled by them. Quick as a flash one of the men pierced the reptile with the bayonet of his gun. Snake flesh was not thought to be very palatable, but when hunger makes men desperate they are not particular as to the quality of food they can get. So while his snakeship was still wriggling on the ground, an extremely unwilling prisoner, he was carefully cut in three pieces, and the three soldiers enjoyed their first meal in nearly four days. This was a Christmas dinner which Grandfather Boynton spoke of in after years as "the sweetest morsel of food that ever passed my lips."—Buffalo Express.

—A San Francisco family used a phonograph to cheer the mother's illness, and also to preserve the tones of her voice after death.

TWO BLIND MICE.

How They Met After Three Years and How They Parted.

She (surprisedly)—Why, Harry! you dear old fellow how do you do. Where have you been hiding all these past years, and why did you withdraw the light of your countenance from us?

He (graciously)—How glad I am to see you! But how you have changed, Lilly! I scarcely knew you. Can't we find a quiet corner and have a good old chat?

She (merrily)—Just the thing! Really, I was dreaming of you last Wednesday night. Let me see. You were in Egypt—no, you were in a cozy beer garden in Germany, smoking your pipe and listening to one of those delightful bands. Do tell me where you've been.

He (easily)—Well, I've been doing England, you know, purifying my accent and learning to eat cold meat breakfasts. But those months will never figure in history.

She (archly)—Yes, but haven't you lost your heart?

He (lightly)—How could I when I left it with you? Did you have to wrap it in cotton? Why; it's just about three years ago that we sat here and——

She (nervously)—Don't Harry, please don't.

He (solicitously)—Why, what's the matter?

She (sedately)—Haven't you heard?

He (heavily)—I've heard a good deal, I confess; but may be I haven't heard what you want to confess.

She (quietly)—Why, I married Mr. Mountemorris Park!

He (gayly)—O, Lilly! You naughty, naughty girl. How dare you show your face here to-night. There, there, don't blush.

She (fervently)—But, I'm not. The idea of a mother——

He (excitedly)—What!

She (honestly)—Do you mean to tell me you haven't heard of our twins?

He (dazedly)—Twins!

She (musingly)—They are darling boys, Harry, and as sweet-tempered as angels, and——

He (hysterically)—Ye gods!

She (persistently)—Yes, both of them.

He (laughingly)—Well, well! I could not have believed such a thing possible. To think that you, Lilly, only three years ago, on this very spot——

She (hastily)—Not that subject, Harry.

He (eagerly)—Very well. But the scent of the roses, don't you know, will hang round it still.

She (thoughtfully)—Let by-gones be by-gones.

He (helpfully)—So let it be. And the twins? I suppose you have christened them Gautama and Buddha, or something like that, eh? Buddhism used to be your favorite fad. Is little Gautama predisposed to colic and does Buddha's nose suffer from occult assaults?

She (warmly)—They are both charming boys, Harry. Doctor Skuleton vows they are the first twins on record who recovered from the measles in a month.

He (kindly)—I'm sure they're beauties. Does Monte bear his sorrows—blessings, I mean. Does he—or—toddle them on his knee, and all that sort of thing? He was deucedly lucky to get a gold dollar for a penny.

She (perplexedly)—A penny?

He (nervously)—Pardon my Anglo-Saxon. You're the gold dollar, of course. Poor Monte! I remember distinctly his telling me he intended becoming a monk—a sort of sentimental prisoner of Chillon, you know. But now, I suppose, he stays at home of an evening and reads cookery receipts and "How to Live on $500 a Year."

She (gravely)—Well, he has his clubs still, and he stays down at his office quite late some nights; he has to work very hard now.

He (dreamily)—Yes, I've met him at the theater several times. But one feels as if one could trust a cat with a pan of milk when one is thoroughly acquainted with the cat

She (uneasily)—Do you know, Harry, sometimes—odd moments, you know—I think he spends a good many nights at his office. There, just see how he's flirting with that woman over by the mantel; the one in that absurd gown of lilac silk, I mean.

He (pettishly)—Nonsense, Lilly, they're simply chatting.

She (curiously)—Who is she? I can't for the life of me remember her face.

He (hurriedly)—O, some stranger. Rather pretty, I think! Very neat waist and fetching eyes, eh?

She (smilingly)—You used to prefer blue eyes once, Harry, while hers are brown and small at that.

He (hotly)—What! you call those eyes small? Why, they're large and poetic and trusting. Did you ever see any thing to beat that hair or those hands? You must admit, Lilly, that she has a very small and pretty hand. Look at that complexion!

She (naturally)—How enthusiastic we are. Why, Harry! what's the matter?

He (moodily)—The matter? Well, Lilly, it's rather disagreeable for a fellow to have even his warmest friend descant in that way about the only girl a fellow ever——

She (breathlessly)—Harry!

He (dangerously)—Well?

She (excitedly)—O, Harry, your don't mean it!

He (feebly)—Well, ahem—yes. You see, Lilly, she—er—that is, we—er—we—we were married just seventy-eight days ago.

She (mockingly)—O, Harry! Just to think that three years ago we sat here and——

He (stubbornly)—It was three years and a half.

She (cruelly)—I say, that you should marry so soon and forget——

He (desperately)—But it was she who married me!

She (flippantly)—Poor boy, how you were taken in!

He (flushingly)—Now listen, Lilly, do. She's the dearest——

She (banteringly)—'Lemon or peach?

He (severely)—What nonsense! I met her at——

She (sweetly)—And so you were married!

He (severely)—Well, now that you know it all, I want you two to be friends, Lilly. By the way, that waltz seems familiar. Why, its your old favorite "La Gitana.' Old times for old friends, Mrs. Park, and I really must have this waltz.—De Witt Sterry, in Drake's Magazine.

TRUSTS OF ALL KINDS.

A Noted Jurist's Opinion on the Recent Combinations of Special Interests.

The formation of several combinations of special interests, under the title of "trusts," for the alleged purpose of preserving those interests, has attracted the attention of both legal and commercial minds, and a reporter called on Mr. Austin Abbott, whose works on law and reports of law courts have been acknowledged by the judges of the Court of Appeals and others connected with the bench as authority in all matters before the courts, to ascertain the nature of these trusts. Said he:

"The mystery which in the minds of some obscures this subject is a business mystery, not a legal one. Each of the legal principles which have rendered these combinations possible is easily comprehended and generally familiar. Nearly all of them have long been recognized and frequently separately applied. The modern spirit of organization has recently discerned the results that can be worked out through the combination of these familiar principles, and the secrecy which has attended the operation of the device is simply a matter of business policy. Heretofore efforts to obtain concert of action among corporations have been principally made either by one corporation taking stock in another, by one leasing the property of another, or by contracts between the boards of directors having one or more common members. These involve, in one form or another, embarrassments arising out of the limits of the powers of corporations and their directors, and also out of the fiduciary relation of directors to stockholders, and the incapacity of a director in two boards to sanction a contract between them. It was the fact that stockholders have not hitherto been regarded as holding any fiduciary relation to each other, or to their company, that has led to the invention of these trusts of stock for the control of corporations."

"What is a trust?"

"A 'trust,' so called, is a device to secure concert of action among a number of corporations of similar interests, by separating the voting power and the ownership of the stock, in each one, to a sufficient extent to concentrate the voting power of a majority of the stock, in each corporation, in the hands of a single committee or association, whose policy will, therefore, animate all the boards of directors, or who may even put the same persons in the several boards, so that the corporate action of all may be identical without contract. Under this arrangement it is intended that the beneficial interest in the stock, minus the voting power, shall rest where it was before, while the pecuniary value of the stock may be enhanced by the termination of all competition between the corporations thus brought under one control, and by the consequent advantage gained from the combined corporations in their competition with corporations and individuals in the same business, but not in the combination."

"Are such combinations legal?"

"The legal principles upon which this device rests are in the first place the characteristic features of corporate organization; in the next that the corporate combination by a 'trust' needs no corporate act; next the alleged justification of the objects of 'trusts;' next the legal theory of the 'trusts,' and lastly, the function of the trustees. Half the stock, plus one share, can elect a board of direction, to whose hands all the ordinary powers of that body are transferred, leaving the other half no right either of control or voice in the board. These directors are trustees of the franchise granted by the State, but can not bind the corporation by contract to exercise corporate powers inconsistent with the property rights of the stockholders. Hence all attempts to secure concert of action between such boards are of uncertain duration, as is seen in the pooling arrangements of carrying companies. But if the power to elect the boards in the several companies be lodged in one hand, then no contract is necessary. The directors who would not act in concert would simply be dropped at the next election, and others more subservient take their places. This leaves the corporations in a legal sense free, but the boards of direction act in concert, without entering into any contract in restriction of their franchises, consequently the conduct of the different directories can not be impeached. The 'trusts' are alleged to be justified by the fact that the object of the concert of action is the enhancement of the value of the stock, as the proprietorship remains where it was, the owners having only parted with their right to vote for the purpose of enhancing the security of the prospects of dividends. The mischiefs felt or feared from these 'trusts' are not in the injury to the interests of the stockholders, but in the aggrandizement of a corporate power resulting from this concert of action. Of course, the remarkable power which such combinations wield, both in enhancing the business of the companies thus securing the benefits of a common experience and concert of action, and in crushing out, one after another, competitors not in the combination, has invited public attention to the questions which are involved in the legal theory of such combinations, and the circumstances under which in each case they are attempted.—N. N. Mail and Express.

—Every object which you view in nature, whether great or small, serves to instruct you.

SOME NEW BOOKS.

A Choice Collection Whose Titles Have Not Yet Been Copyrighted.

Left at First. By the author of Righted at Last.

Canned Forests. By the author of Fresh Fields.

A Pious Picayune. By the author of A False Scent.

Tackhammer No. 112. By the author of File No. 113.

An Upholstered Virtue. By the author of A Gilded Sin.

The Baked Bicycle. By the author of The Wheel of Fire.

The Massacre of a Punster. By the author of A Noble Deed.

The Overland Veterans. By the author of The Water Babies.

His Eighth Consecutive Wife. By the author of Love is Enough.

Chills and Fever. By the author of The House on the Marsh.

Ashore in the Sea. By the author of Afloat in the Forest.

Mince-Pie at Midnight. By the author of A Bitter Reckoning.

Atop of Several Hates. By the author of Between Two Loves.

The A No. 1 Congregation. By the author of The Prime Minister.

The Biography of John L. Sullivan. By the author of A Noble Life.

Whispering It at a Tea Party. By the author of Sworn to Silence.

The Tan Shoes of 1889. By the author of the Blue Jackets of 1812.

Calling Down a Coal Mine. By the author of Can a Life Hide Itself?

A Sketch of Twelve Idiots. By the author of Waiting for the Verdict.

A Quarter of Emphatic Noes. By the author of A Pair of Blue Eyes.

The Voluble Auctioneer. By the author of The Silence of Dean Maitland.

Tripping to the Prize Fight. By the author of Stepping Heavenward.

The Flight of a Swallow-Tail. By the author of A Roundabout Journey.

Johnnie and His Toy Pistol. By the author of a Fearful Responsibility.

A Birdseye View of Rhode Island. By the author of The Wide, Wide World.

Evenings With the Patent Office Reports. By the author of Arcadian Days.

Getting Off in the Milky Way. By the author of Getting On in the World

The Genesis of the London Times. By the author of The Last of the Tribunes.

Autobiography of an Affidavit Editor. By the author of Truth is Always Best.

At the Apex of the North Pole. By the author of Is it Hot Enough for You?

Four Years Behind the Times. By the author of Two Years Before the Mast.

She Was not too Young to Dye. By the author of How to Grow Old Gracefully.

The Confessions of Job's Turkey. By the author of How to Live on $300 a Year.

He Eloped with the Governess. By the author of He Fell in Love With His Wife.

Elocutionists I Have Listened To. By the author of Why Suicide is on the Increase.

The High Broad Hat She Wore to the Theater. By the author of Can You Forgive Her?

Nevertheless, All the Same. Notwithstanding an Angel. By the author of But Yet a Woman.

Sixteen Grandmothers and Twenty-five Mothers-in-law. By the author of Eight Cousins.

Toiling for a Roast Cut from the Lower-most Rib. By the author of Playing for High Stakes.

The Unwasted Vigor of the Little German Band. By the author of Is Endless Punishment Eternal?

Cyclones and Scalping Knives in the Far West. By the author of Calm Reflections for Sabbath Evening.

The Bitter Quarrel in our Church Choir. By the author of Why the Millennium is Backward in Coming Forward.

The Overworked Sentimentalist, or the Fatigued Superlative. By the author of the Quick and the Dead.

The Surreptitious Extraction of the Strings from the Piano Next Door. By the author of The Worries of Life and How to Meet Them.—N. Y. Tribune.

—Prospective tenant—"But I thought you wrote me that the house had a wide prospect on the mountains. There are nothing but mountains of dirt where the aqueduct is being dug." "Oh, but, my dear madam, you could not possibly expect them to be made of chocolate at the rent named."—Fliegende Blatter.

—The Experiment Tried.—Spirited woman (to big plug ugly)—"Oh, if I were only a man, wouldn't I teach you manners!" Celestial novice—"Your prayer is granted. You shall be a man!" (Transforms her.) Big plug ugly—"What de ye say?" Newly-made man—"Um—er—I was merely remarking that it was a very pleasant day."

LITTLE'S

CHEMICAL FLUID

NON-POISONOUS

SHEEP DIP.

One gallon, mixed with 60 gallons of cold water will dip thoroughly 180 sheep, at a cost of 1 cent each. Easily applied; a nourisher of Wool; a certain cure for SCAB. Also,

Little's Patent Powder Dip,

(Poisonous.)

Mixes instantly with water. Prevents the fly from striking. In a 2 pound package there is sufficient to dip twenty sheep, and in a 7 pound package there is sufficient to dip one hundred sheep.

CATTON, BELL & CO.

SUCCESSORS TO FALKNER, BELL & CO.

Office, 406 California St. and Wool Agency Warehouse, cor. 6th and Townsend Sts

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

THE DESERTER.

It was the last year of the civil war—a year full of anxiety, suspense and privation of every kind. Down here in Louisiana we were beginning to realize that our cause was hopeless, and that the Confederacy was near its end. I suppose it was that knowledge which made people so reckless. Men had lost all sense of responsibility in the whirl of events, and acts were constantly committed which, in the light of a calmer day, seem the acts of madmen.

New Orleans, in possession of the Federals, had quited down to a certain extent, but the country parishes were in a ferment, occupied as they were in turn by Confederate and northern troops. The ravages of irresponsible, plundering bands had become so terrible in some of the western parishes that, at the urgent invitation of Judge Maxwell, who was a distant relative of mine, I took refuge with him at Boscabel, a plantation in the Red River country.

This district, it is true, was occupied by Federal troops, but they were well disciplined and committed no outrages. After the terrors and uncertainties of the "debatable ground," there was a comfortable feeling of security in finding ourselves within the lines and not in danger of capture. Several ladies, friends of Judge Maxwell, had collected at Boscabel, so our social life was far from dull.

Beautiful Adela Maxwell was our host's young daughter-in-law. She had only been married a week when her husband, who had enlisted in Gen. Taylor's army, was compelled to leave her.

She was a lovely, irresponsible child—a spoiled one, too. At 16 years of age she had married Theo Maxwell, who was not then 20. It was due to the recklessness so common at that period that the marriage of the young pair was sanctioned by the two families.

Theo was grave and thoughtful beyond his years; brave, as were all the Maxwells, almost stern in his ideas of duty, and only weak where his beautiful little bride was concerned.

Most southern women were brave and high spirited, ready to make any sacrifice for a cause they considered sacred, but Adela had not a grain of patriotism in her soul. She did not care a straw which cause conquered so that the war might end and Theo return home. Her standing grievance was that he had joined the army as a private instead of marching forth in all the glory of a general's paraphernalia.

At times she would give way to a perfect passion of grief, and eat nothing for days. Then the mood would change and she would be in the wildest spirits, laughing, singing, dancing. She reminded me of a butterfly I once saw fighting on the rim of a cannon the moment before it was discharged.

One morning she burst in upon us in the breakfast room in an irritable and impatient mood.

"I can't stand this!" she cried. "I never closed my eyes all night thinking of Theo. I can't eat, I can't sleep, and I shall die if Theo doesn't come home! I must see with my own eyes that he is alive and well."

"But how can you expect him to come?" cried Dora Maxwell, the judge's daughter, a sensible, spirited girl, who had not too much patience with her sister-in-law's childish ways. "He is a soldier, a private, too, and they are not allowed a furlough every time their wives happen to cry for them. With all this skirmishing going on around us you surely don't think there's any chance of his getting off? I do wish, Adela, you would try to be reasonable—for Theo's sake, if for no other reason.

"Look at Mrs. Rogers," she continued. "Her husband is in constant peril, and see how brave and cheerful she is! She says that is the only way in which she can imitate him."

"Don't talk to me of Mrs. Rogers!" Adela looked like a small fury. "Do you pretend to compare my love for Theo with hers for her husband? Easy enough to be quiet when she doesn't care a picayune for him! Didn't she actually hurry him off last week, when he hadn't been with her for more than an hour? Don't compare us and set that cold hearted thing up as my model!"

"I don't compare you," Dora said dryly. "Mrs. Rogers is utterly unselfish, a noble woman, to whom the honor of her husband is as dear as his life. She hurried him off because she knew if he waited until daylight his risk of being made a prisoner would be great. Besides, he had promised his captain to be back that night and he was in honor bound to keep his word."

Adela burst into a flood of angry tears.

"Honor! honor!" she repeated, petulantly. "I just hate the word! Honor made Theo join the army and leave me here to be wretched! Honor keeps him away! Some day honor is going to leave him on the battle field with a bullet in his heart. What will it do for me, if I lose him I'd like to know? Nobody here feels for me. Nobody loves Theo as I do!"

She hurried from the room, but stopped on the threshold and turned her pretty, tear stained face to us.

"Theo shall come back to me in spite of you all!" she cried.

Dora sighed deeply as the door closed behind Adela. "Poor Theo!" she said, softly. "He always seemed to feel such a contempt for women! Yet that girl can make him do anything!"

"She is such a child!" I interposed.

"Yes, and that makes her so unfit to be a wife. We are going to have an opportunity of sending letters through the lines today, and Heaven only knows what Adela will write to her husband! Enough to make him wretched, I dare say, for she won't spare him a single tear of hers. He'll fancy her pining to death, and before night, I dare say, she'll be laughing and singing."

But for once Dora was mistaken. Adela complained of a violent headache, and after writing her letter went to bed, and did not make her appearance until late the next day. Then she wore a subdued, rather frightened look, not natural to her. She appeared like a mischievous child who had done something naughty and was afraid of being found out.

For the two following days she was in a state of perpetual excitement almost hysterical. She would rush from door to window, or to any place which commanded a view of the long front avenue. At any unexpected sound she would spring up, listen breathlessly, and then sink back in her seat with a sigh.

"I am afraid my little girl is getting nervous," said Judge Maxwell on the second evening, putting his arm affectionately around her. "Come, it won't do when Theo returns for him to find a wife with her nerves unstrung. The women of our family were as brave as the men, and I can't have a Maxwell a coward."

"But I'm not an out and out Maxwell," she answered with a hysterical laugh. "and I'm an awful coward. Oh, why don't Theo come home!"

This was followed by a violent burst of tears, and she rung her hands as if in despair.

"Dora, you had better take your sister to her room and make her lie down," the judge said, gently. "Adela, my dear, you must try to control yourself. Remember that your tears will not bring your husband back one day sooner. You are only injuring your health and for Theo's sake you must take care of that."

After they left the room, the judge and I sat silent until the lamps were lighted. Suddenly he sprang to his feet, for we heard the hurried steps of a man on the long veranda in front of the house.

Then the door was violently thrown open and Theo stood before us. Theo pale, wild eyed, and covered with dust. He looked in our faces strangely, inquiringly and uttered a deep groan. His parched lips strove to speak, but the words died in a gasp.

"My son! what is the matter?" cried the judge, taking his hand.

"Adela, my darling! Is she dead?" the son managed to articulate. "Am I too late?"

"Adela? Why, she is in perfect health—never has been ill. She was in this room five minutes ago.

The judge stopped suddenly, terrified by his son's look. He had grown ghastly pale and sank into a chair.

He covered his face with his hands, shaking as if in an attack of ague. In a moment he controlled himself and tried to speak calmly. "Read that," he said, drawing a letter from his pocket, and handing it to his father, "and tell me if I could have stayed away?"

Months afterward I read the letter. In it Adela told her husband she was dying and he must come to her immediately if he would see her alive, but, ill as she was, no one should write to him but herself. If he loved her, come! The letter was written in faint, tremulous characters, as if the hand was too weak to hold the pen and the eyes too dim to see the lines.

Judge Maxwell's face was very stern when he laid down the letter.

"It was an unjustifiable deceit," he said, "but you must try to forgive her. You must not let it embitter your visit."

"Father, do you not understand!" cried the young soldier. "I asked for permission to visit a dying wife, but the general positively refused. They expect a battle at Pleasant Hill, and not a man was allowed to leave. I came without permission."

"A deserter! you, Theo Maxwell!" cried the judge, looking stunned.

"Yes, a deserter on the eve of battle," Theo cried, with a bitter laugh. "I've done for myself now, father." There was a hurried step in the corridor, and in a moment Adela was in her husband's arms, crying and laughing hysterically.

"I heard your voice, darling," she cried. "Why hadn't I been called? Didn't I tell you all he should come back to me? And now I've got him! I've got him! I've got him!" her voice rising shrill and strained with excitement. But what is the matter, Theo? Why do you look at me like that? What is the matter with you all?"

"The matter, madam," cried Judge Maxwell, sternly, "is disgrace to my son and your husband. By your falsehoods you brought him from his post—made him a deserter. Do you know what that means? A disgraceful death! Yes, that is what you have brought upon the man you professed to love."

He got no further, for Adela's head fell back on her husband's shoulder in merciful unconsciousness. He strained her to his bosom and pressed a kiss upon her white lips.

"Dora, take her to her room," he said. "Be gentle with her for my sake, sister. She is only a child and did not know what she was doing. I must get away from here before she revives." He tightened his belt and pulled his cap over his eyes.

The old judge laid a trembling hand on his son's arm.

"Theo, my son," he said, tremulously, "don't go back! There is a squadron of northern soldiers camped just back here in Miller's field. You can be taken prisoner by them, you know, and you'll be safe from, from"——

He stammered and choked.

"I understand you, father," Theo said, quietly. "You mean if I am taken prisoner I will escape a deserter's fate. It would add cowardice to desertion. No, sir, I will get back the soonest I can, and bear my fate as your son should. I had to run a cordon of Federal troops coming here, and I fear it will be hard work getting back through the lines."

"But Gen. Taylor is my friend." The old man's speech was growing inarticulate. "I will write to him, I will go to him. He must listen to me. No court martial could condemn you under such circumstances."

Theo smiled sadly.

"I hope for little leniency. I left on the eve of a battle, you must remember. Farewell, father! Be kind to my poor little wife. Dora, don't unman me." She was clinging to him and sobbing convulsively. "If you love me you will go back to Adela. Do not tell her what may happen to me. I leave her to you all as a sacred charge," he added, solemnly, and before any one answered had gone.

"I will go myself," stammered the judge, trying to rise from his seat. "I will explain to Gen. Taylor. My boy shall not be sacrificed." A convulsion passed over his face, his feet refused to support him and he sank back in his chair.

We knew well what was the matter. A year before he had had an attack of paralysis, a slight one, and his old enemy had him once more in its relentless grip. For three days and nights we watched beside him until the end came.

A week afterward our cruel suspense as to Theo's fate was over. In trying to pass the Federal pickets he had been shot.

"Thank God!" sobbed Dora, "he was spared the ignominious fate of a deserter. I think he wanted to be killed."

Adele's grief at first was violent. She soon returned to her father's house. In a few months I saw her there as lovely, as irresponsible and as gay as if she had not caused the disgrace and death of the man who had loved her more than his duty.

MISCELLANEOUS.

PROBATE NOTICE.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE County of Inyo, State of California.

In the matter of the estate of Eliza Ann Smith, deceased.

Notice for publication of time appointed for proving will, etc.

Notice is hereby given that Thursday, the 17th day of April A. D. 1890, at ten o'clock a. m. of said day, at the Court Room of said Court, at the town of Independence, in the County of Inyo State of California, has been appointed as the time and place for proving the will of said Eliza Ann Smith, deceased and for hearing the application of William S. Morton for the issuance to him of letters testamentary thereon, when and where any person interested may appear and contest the same.

Dated March 19th, 1890.

P. H. MACK, Clerk.
By H. C. WHIPPLE, Deputy Clerk.

DESERT LAND FINAL PROOF.

D E No. 385.

UNITED STATES LAND OFFICE, INDEPENDENCE, CAL., March 11, 1890.

Notice is hereby given that Patrick Henry Mack, of Independence, Inyo County, California, has filed notice of intention to make proof on his desert land claim No. 385, for the W½ of Sec. 35, Tp. 15 S., R. 36 E., M D M, before the Register and Receiver at Independence, California, on Monday, the 28th day of April, 1890.

He names the following witnesses to prove the complete irrigation and reclamation of said land: John Lucas, Thomas C. Boland, Reuben C. Spear and James R. Moffett, all of Lone Pine, Inyo County, California.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD, Register.

o n24

F. E. Bosworth,
Watchmaker & Jeweler.
BISHOP, CAL.

Fine and Complicated Watch Repairing a Specialty.

Guns, Sewing Machines, Organs and Music Boxes Put in Perfect Condition and Warranted.

I Prefer to do all work at your house and will call if you write to me at Bishop.

BELL'S
Flouring Mills,

A. N. BELL, Prop.

TRY BELL'S

EXTRA PATENT ROLLER FLOUR.

Having added Patent Rolls and other Improvements to our Mills, I am now turning out Flour that is fully

Equal to the Best.

Corn, Oats and Barley Cracked on Short Notice.

A. N. BELL,

Independence, Cal.

Fresno and Merced County
Lands To Rent and For Sale.

75,000 Acres of Wheat and Sugar Beet Land in the above Counties, to rent for a term of years. Also,

100,000 Acres of Fine Raisin, Fruit, Alfalfa, and Sugar Beet Land, with water for irrigation, for sale in tracts of from 20 acres to large tracts suitable for Colony purposes.

For particulars, apply to

E. B. PERRIN,
402 Kearney Street, San Francisco

n 9 2m

THIS PAPER IS ON FILE
AT PALMER & REY'S
ADVERTISING BUREAU!
165-7 Sansome St., San Francisco.
AND AT
PALMER & REY'S
Pacific States Advertising Bureau
46 Tribune Building,
NEW YORK.

IF YOU WISH A GOOD REVOLVER PURCHASE ONE OF SMITH & WESSON'S

Finest small arms ever manufactured and the first choice of all experts. In calibres 32, 38 and 44-100. Single or double action, Safety Hammerless and Target models. Best quality wrought steel, carefully fitted and finished, and warranted for workmanship and stock. Unrivaled for finish, durability and accuracy. Do not be deceived by cheap malleable iron imitations often sold for the genuine article. They are unreliable and dangerous. The SMITH & WESSON REVOLVERS are stamped upon the barrels with firm's name, address and dates of patents, and are guaranteed perfect. Insist upon having them, and if your dealer cannot supply you, an order sent to address below will receive prompt attention. Descriptive catalogue and prices upon application.

SMITH & WESSON,
Springfield, Mass.

SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN

is the oldest and most popular scientific and mechanical paper published and has the largest circulation of any paper of its class in the world. Fully illustrated. Best class of Wood Engravings. Published weekly. Send for specimen copy. Price $3 a year. Four months' trial, $1. MUNN & CO., PUBLISHERS, 361 Broadway, N.Y.

ARCHITECTS & BUILDERS
Edition of Scientific American.

A great success. Each issue contains colored lithographic plates of country and city residences or public buildings. Numerous engravings and full plans and specifications for the use of such as contemplate building. Price $2.50 a year, 25 cts. a copy. MUNN & CO., PUBLISHERS.

PATENTS may be secured by applying to MUNN & CO., who have had over 40 years' experience and have made over 100,000 applications for American and Foreign patents. Send for Handbook. Correspondence strictly confidential.

TRADE MARKS.

In case your mark is not registered in the Patent Office, apply to MUNN & CO., and procure immediate protection. Send for Handbook.

COPYRIGHTS for books, charts, maps, etc., quickly procured. Address

MUNN & CO., Patent Solicitors.
GENERAL OFFICE 361 BROADWAY, N. Y.

GOLD FREE. OUR NEW $85 Solid Gold Watch FREE.

Worth $100.00, next $3 watch in the world. Perfect timekeeper. Warranted heavy, SOLID GOLD hunting cases. Both ladies' and gent's sizes, with works and cases of equal value. ONE PERSON in each locality can secure one free, together with our large and valuable line of Household Samples. These samples, as well as the watch, are free. All the work you need do is to show what we send you to those who call—your friends and neighbors and those about you—that always results in valuable trade for us, which holds for years when once started, and this we are repaid. We pay all express, freight, etc. After you know all, if you would like to go to work for us, you can earn from $20 to $50 per week and upwards. Address, Stinson & Co., Box 819, Portland, Maine.

MISCELLANEOUS.

J. R. ELDRED,
Sheriff and Tax-Collector.
INYO CO., CAL.

P. H. MACK,
COUNTY CLERK,
AND
Ex-officio Auditor and Recorder,
INYO CO., CAL.

GEO. M. GILL,
District Attorney,
INYO CO., CAL.

J. J. MOORE,
County Treasurer,
INYO CO., CAL.

S. P. M'KNIGHT, C.E.
COUNTY SURVEYOR
AND
U. S. Deputy Mineral Surveyor
For California and Nevada.
BISHOP CREEK, INYO CO., CAL.

The obtaining of United States mineral patents a specialty.

All kinds of surveying given the most careful and accurate attention.

JUSTICE OF PEACE,
C. MULHOLLAND.
Office in the "INDEPENDENT" Building, Independence, Inyo County, Cal.

A. R. CONKLIN,
Attorney-at-Law.
Independence, Cal.
Will practice in all the Courts of the States of California and Nevada.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
Independence, Cal.

P. W. FORBES,
ATTORNEY AT LAW.
NOTARY PUBLIC.
Cases in U. S. Land Office a Specialty.
BISHOP, INYO COUNTY, CALIFORNIA.

IRVING J. WOODIN, M D.,
Physician & Surgeon,
(COUNTY PHYSICIAN)
Louise L. Woodin, M. D.
PHYSICIAN & SURGEON.
NIGHT CALLS ATTENDED.
Office and residence at the Reddy place, Independence.

W. H. GEORGE, M. D.,
Physician and Surgeon,
Bishop Creek, Cal.,
Offers his professional services to the people of Bishop Creek and vicinity. Office and residence opposite Andrew Clark's.

F. E. Bunting, M. D.
Physician & Surgeon
LONE PINE, CAL
OFFICE IN GELCICH BUILDING
All calls attended to immediately.

Lodge 221, F. & A. M.

Regular meetings of Lodge No. 221, F. & A. M., for the year 1889, will be held at the Lodge room at Independence as follows:

Saturday ..... February 1st
" ..... March 1st
" ..... March 29th
" ..... May 3rd
" ..... May 31st
" ..... June 28th
" ..... July 26th
" ..... August 30th
" ..... September 27th
" ..... October 25th
" ..... November 22nd
" ..... December 20th

P. H. MACK, W. M.
C. MULHOLLAND Sec.

P. W. FORBES. P. H. MACK.
MACK & FORBES.
Real Estate Agents,
Address, P. H. MACK, Independence, Cal.
P. W. FORBES, Bishop, Cal.

FRED BURCKHARDT
Watchmaker & Jeweler,
LONE PINE, CAL.

Time pieces of all descriptions repaired and regulated, satisfaction guaranteed. Jewelry made to order. Firearms repaired and loaded.

All orders from any part of the country will be promptly attended to, at the most reasonable charges. At the old stand "Mechanics' Hall," Lone Pine.

FRED BURCKHARDT.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CROCKER'S HOTEL.
BIG PINE - CAL

New House.
New Furniture.
Low Rates

Splendid hunting and fishing near by, in act, it is a veritable paradise for tourists and pleasure seekers.

Special attention given to the wants of every guest.

CROCKER BROS., Props.
sep1-tf

ANTONS SALOON
KEELER, CAL.

BEER, WINES, LIQUORS and CIGARS.

All kinds of Fancy Drinks, including pure water. A comfortable and pleasant Hall.

JOHN C. ANTON Prop.

Pioneer
Livery & Feed Stables.
INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

Having returned and resumed the management of the above well known feed and livery stables, patrons can be assured of finding there the best of Buggy Teams, Saddle Horses, and

Livery Accommodations

in general. Also, Hay and Grain for sale by the pound or ton.

O. I. MAIRS, Proprietor.

E. H. Edwards,
—DEALER IN—
General Merchandise,
LONE PINE,
INYO COUNTY - - - CALIFORNIA.

Inyo
Freighting Company.
REGULAR LINE
Mojave To Bishop.

Teams leave Mojave and Bishop weekly. Goods delivered with regularity at all points on the line. Consign goods to the Company at Mojave.

J. W. Murphy.
BLACKSMITHING
—AND—
General IronWork.
Wagons and Carriages Repaired.
HORSESHOEING, $2 00 for CASH
Shop on Edwards St., opposite the Court House, Independence.

BLACKSMITHING,
Horseshoeing, General Iron
—AND—
WAGON WORK.
PIONEER BLACKSMITH SHOP
Cor. Main St. & Depot Ave.,
INDEPENDENCE, CAL.
W. F. MATLACK.....PROPRIETOR.

Horseshoeing ..... $2 00 for Cash
For particulars, call and see W. F. MATLACK.

LONE PINE
Blacksmith Shop.
R. C. Spear, Prop'r
—ALL WORK ON—
MINING TOOLS,
FARMING IMPLEMENTS
& FREIGHTING OUTFITS
—PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO—
HORSE SHOEING,
CARRIAGE WORK,
GENERAL REPAIRING
All work attended to with neatness and despatch. Prices to suit the times.

BOOTS AND SHOES
MADE AND REPAIRED.
THE BEST MATERIAL.
FIRST-CLASS WORK.
Repairs done Promptly.
Prices Reasonable.
A. J. DAVIS,
nov 26-tf Independence,

MISCELLANEOUS.

Railroad Time Table.

CARSON & COLORADO RR

TAKING EFFECT, Sunday, May 10th, 1889.

STATIONS.		From Mound House. No. 1	To Mound House. No. 2.
		Leave—	Arrives—
Mound House		12.50 p. m.	5.55 p. m
Dayton		1.05 p. m.	5.15 p. m.
Wabuska		3.05 p. m	3.00 p. m
Hawthorne		6.00 p. m.	11.00 a. m
Luning		7.30 p. m.	10.05 a. m
Sodа Springs		9.15 p. m.	9.05 a. m
Belleville		10.25 p. m.	7.45 a. m
Candelaria	Ar.	11.10 p. m	Lv. 7.10 a. m
		No. 3.	No. 4.
		Leave—	Arrives—
Belleville		8.10 a. m	5.25 p. m
Benton		11.40 a. m	—
Bishop Creek		1.50 p. m.	11.50 a. m
Alvord		2.45 p. m	10.40 a. m
Independence		4.10 p. m.	8.20 a. m
Lone Pine		5.00 p. m.	7.40 a. m
Keeler	Ar	5.45 p. m.	Lv. 7.00 a. m

Trains 1 and 2 run daily.
Train 3 runs Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays.
Train 4 runs Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays.

Passenger trains make close connection at Mound House with express trains of V. & T. R., which connect at Reno with east and west bound trains of Central Pacific Railroad.

Stage Connections:

AT HAWTHORNE with United States Stage Company's coaches for Aurora (26 miles); Bodie (35 miles); Hundy and Bridgeport.

AT LUNING (125 miles from Mound House) with Gilmer, Salisbury & Co's tri weekly stages (leaving Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays) for Downeyville, Grantsville and Belmont.

AT CANDELARIA with U. S. Stage Co's. stages for Columbus (8 miles), Silver Peak, Montezuma Allda Valley, Gold Mountain, etc.

H. M. YERINGTON,
General Superintendent.

R. J. LAWS, Assistant Superintendent.

D. A. BENDER,
General Freight and Passenger Agent.

LUMBER. LUMBER.
SPRATT & CREASER,
BIG PINE.
—DEALERS IN—
ALL KINDS OF LUMBER.

Square timber of all dimensions for buildings and bridges.

CEILING,
FLOORING,
FENCING,
RUSTIC.

All kinds of tongued and grooved lumber.

Surfaced lumber of all kinds.

All orders filled promptly. Lumber delivered on board the cars at Alvord.

SPRATT & CREASER,
sep1-tf Big Pine, Inyo Co., Cal.

EDWARD CHENOT
Independence, Cal.,
INVITES PUBLIC ATTENTION TO HIS extensive Stock of
GENERAL MERCHANDISE
....Consisting of....
GROCERIES,
PROVISIONS
Tobacco, Cigars,
WINES AND LIQUORS
FLOUR & GRAIN
Together with an Assortment of
DRY GOODS AND CLOTHING
ETC., ETC
Buyers and consumers should call and examine my stock and prices before purchasing elsewhere.
E. CHENOT.
Independence, Cal., March 29 1884.
n476tf

R. J. WHITTAKER
—PAINTER.—
BIG PINE, - - - - CAL.

HOUSE PAINTING,
SIGN WRITING,
PAPER HANGING,
GRAINING,
GILDING ON WOOD AND GLASS

Wagons Painted

The best of materials used and satisfaction guaranteed.

Wm. Muth-Rasmussen.
Bee Keeper.
Manufacturer of Comb Foundation.
Independence, Inyo Co. Cal

NATHAN RHINE.

NATHAN RHINE,
(Successor to Harris & Rhine.)
MERCHANT,
INDEPENDENCE
Inyo Co. Cal.
Wholesale & Retail
—DEALER IN—
General Merchandise

MY STOCK
CONSISTING OF
Almost every needed article is well calculated to satisfy the wants of everybody; and, as in the past, it will be our aim in the future to retain the extensive patronage enjoyed heretofore.

NATHAN RHINE.

NATHAN RHINE
BANKER
Independence, Cal.
SELL EXCHANGE
—ON—
SAN FRANCISCO
Draw Direct
—ON—
NEW YORK,
LONDON, England.
BERLIN, FRANKFORT-on-the-Main, GERMANY.

I AM PREPARED TO TRANSACT ALL KINDS,
—OF—
GENERAL
BANKING & EXCHANGE.
BUSINESS.

Wechsel in beliebigen Summen auf Berlin und Frankfurt am de Main.
Deutsche Vollmachten geben Sicht.
Geldsendungen von und nach Deutschland besorgt.

AGENT FOR
WELLS FARGO & CO'S.
EXPRESS

MUTUAL
Life Insurance Co.
OF NEW YORK
CAPITAL - - - - $5,000,000

LIVERPOOL
AND LONDON AND GLOBE
INSURANCE - COMPANY
Capital - - - - - $21,000,000

NATHAN RHINE.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY, APRIL 18 1890

MARKET REPORT.

Bar silver, 95½
Lead, 3 90
Copper, 14 30
Tin, 20 85
Sugar, .05½
Coffee, 20 @ 19¾
Wool, foothill, 10 @ 12.

COURT NOTES.

Superior Court of Inyo County California
Hon. John A Hannah, Judge.

MONDAY, April 14th.

W. T. Grant vs. A. Walker—Plaintiff granted new trial.

Estate of H. J. Hartshorne, deceased—Decree of settlement of final account.

TUESDAY, April 15th.

Estate of Eliza Ann Smith, deceased—Probate of will continued until May 5th.

H. Fehrman vs. Ezra and T. J. Goodale—Filed complaint in action for foreclosure.

WEDNESDAY, April 16th.

R. W. Scott vs. Mollie Scott—Plaintiff granted divorce. Defendant allowed to resume her maiden name.

BORN.

SCHALTEN—At Big Pine, April 11th, to Mr. and Mrs. L. Schalten, a son.

MCMURRY—At Big Pine, April 11th, to Mr. and Mrs. J. McMurry, a son.

Mrs. Barnes of Keeler has been visiting at Independence.

Mary A. Clark has been granted a divorce from Henry L. Clark.

W. K. Miller was up from Lone Pine at the beginning of the week.

C. B. Rawson and T. F. A. Connelly were in town on Monday.

H. F. Bosworth, the jeweler, has been in this vicinity during the week.

J. H. Roberts left Independence on Thursday morning for San Francisco. He expects to return within thirty days.

Mr. R. S. Miner has been too ill all the week to appear in Court; he is confined to his bed most of the time.

The Supervisors have made arrangements for having the witnesses in the Elliott case conveyed to Bakersfield by rail. No arrangements have been made for transportation by wagons.

James McDonald Superintendent of the Defiance mine, came in from Darwin yesterday to meet Hon. P. Reddy, owner of the mine and get further instructions in regard to improvements.

Barna Peeler of Bishop is reported to be dangerously sick. He was taken with the grip some weeks ago and other maladies have followed from this. Serious fears are entertained for the result.

A person who was at Cerro Gordo a few days ago reports that a good deal of ore is already on the dump of the Union mine, and more is coming out. He says the ore is fine looking and worth $200 a ton, perhaps much more.

W. A. Greenly and Scott Broder came in from Deep Spring last Monday. They report that the new road from Atwood to the Sylvania District is already in fine condition and makes an excellent highway for teams of any capacity.

Mr. W. C. Chapin arrived at Independence last Monday. About five years ago Mr. Chapin was here in company with Mr. Albert Bierstadt, the famous artist. Mr. Bierstadt is interested in mining claims in this country and Mr. Chapin is here looking after those claims with a view to their further development.

It is reported that J. J. Gunn has struck a very rich ore body in the Minnietta mine. The ledge is said to be five feet wide of solid galena ore. The report does not come from Mr. Gunn and is only given as a rumor. All of Jack's friends hope that the reality will be even greater than rumor says of the strike.

Several persons who have been to Sylvania recently report very favorably of the mines. They say that a large quantity of ore is already on the dumps and that it appears to be of excellent quality. Not many men are yet employed there nor will any more be wanted for some time yet. Until a furnace is built there will be no need of any more miners at the camp.

During the past week Mr. L. D. Mathews has met all of the riparian owners along Owens river from the lake upward to near Independence. All of them met his proposals for the transfer of their water rights in a very liberal spirit and from most of them he already holds written contracts for such transfer. So far everything promises well for the success of the building of the big canal. If it goes we will have lively times.

Under-Sheriff Yaney and H. C. Whipple got back to Independence last Sunday from a trip to the Southeast part of the county. They were gone eleven days. They report that a large party of miners are at work in the Panamint range about thirty miles south of the town of Panamint. The men are opening up mines belonging to parties in San Bernardino. Mr. Taylor, a well known citizen of San Bernardino, is one of the principal owners of the mines.

County Bonds.

The State now holds $50,500 in Inyo county 5 percent. bonds, leaving a balance of $20,000, which the State has agreed to purchase. On the 5th inst. the State Board of Examiners, by resolution, ordered the Controller to draw his warrant for $20,055 in payment of said balance of $20,000 which the Controller refused to do. It appears that some time ago the Legislature appropriated $20,000 for the benefit of a certain Mrs. Sautter whose husband was killed while in the employ of the State; said money to be invested by the Board of Examiners in United States, State or County bonds and the interest be paid to her. When the Board decided to take $20,000 worth of Inyo county 5 percent. bonds there was $55 accrued interest on said bonds which made the face value and accrued interest amount to $20,055; and as there is but $20,000 in the fund set apart for Mrs. Sautter the Controller refuses to draw his warrant and has referred the matter to the Attorney General.

SUPERVISORS' PROCEEDINGS.

WEDNESDAY, April 16, 1890.

The Board of Supervisors met in special meeting at 6 o'clock p. m. Present, Harger, Sneden, Robinson and Stewart. Absent, Eddy.

The Board accepted the proposal of the C. and C. R. R. to carry witnesses in the Elliott case to Bakersfield and return for $35.00 each, tickets to be for a continuous trip and good for 30 days.

P. H. Mack was duly appointed agent of the County to pay and contract for the payment of witnesses expenses.

The County Auditor was ordered to draw his warrant in favor of P. H. Mack for the sum of $900 to pay the expenses of witnesses in said case to and from Bakersfield, and also to draw his warrant in favor of D. A. Bender, Passenger Agent of the C. and C. R. R., for the sum of $1,925 in payment for 55 round trip tickets from Independence to Bakersfield, provided that in case said 55 tickets are not used the said D. A. Bender will refund to Inyo county $35.00 for each and every ticket not used. The Clerk was instructed to communicate with the proper railroad officials and make definite arrangements as to date of tickets.

The Board considered the matter of appointing a License Tax Collector and laid the matter over till next regular meeting.

The petition of J. R. Moffitt to be appointed License Tax Collector was laid over till next regular meeting.

The following claims of members of the Board were allowed on the Salary Fund:

J. D. Harger	$20 10
S. G. Sneden	19 80
E. Robinson	6 30
J. J. Stewart	10 80

Board Adjourned.

The Broder Conklin Case.

The case of Broder et als. vs. Conklin et als. was taken up in the Superior Court last Tuesday before Judge Rooney of Tuolumne county. Hon. Barclay Henley and Crittenden Thornton Esq. of San Francisco appeared for the Plaintiffs, Attorney Miner being too ill to attend. Hon. P. Reddy and his law partner Joseph Campbell Esq. counsel for the Defendants. Mr. J. F. Smith of Sonora, Official Reporter. The first part of the day was occupied in arguing motions made by Plaintiffs to strike out portions of the amended answer offered by the Defendants. The motions were overruled.

The following witnesses were named: For Plaintiffs, A. R. Conklin, T. F. A. Connelly, W. A. Greenly, Thomas Webb, J. C. Irwin, G. W. Brady, J. S. Broder, O. I. Mairs, C. M. Joslyn and John A. Hannah. For Defendants, A. W. Ebeshutz, J. W. P. Laird, John Shepherd, J. S. Gorman, Joseph Seely, W. K. Miller, Nathan Rhine, Henry Lery, John A. Lank and J. D. Mairs.

Wednesday morning T. F. A. Connelly was put upon the stand as witness for the Plaintiffs. The examination of this witness continued all day and was resumed at the evening session. Under cross-examination by M. Reddy the witness proved to have very indistinct recollection of dates, conversations and other circumstances in connection with the case. A. R. Conklin was put upon the stand after Mr. Connelly but his examination was not proceeded with because vouchers that were asked for have not yet been received from San Francisco. Mr. Conklin said the papers would be here on Friday and Court adjourned till next morning.

Thursday morning W. A. Greenly was put upon the stand as a witness for the Plaintiffs. Mr. Greenly was Assignee when Mr. Broder made an assignment and was examined in regard to the sale of the property and money transactions in connection therewith. The examination of Mr. Greenly was concluded at 4 o'clock p. m. Eleven years having elapsed since he was appointed Assignee of the Broder estate his recollection of several circumstances connected with the affair were not very distinct.

Thomas Webb was the next witness called. He testified coolly to circumstances that occurred after soon after the sale of the property. His cross-examination was continued this morning.

G. W. Brady was called after Mr. Webb, his examination being brief.

J. S. Broder was next called and his examination continued until noon recess was taken.

The Whale.

Such is the appropriate name for a mining claim in Saline Valley located by J. Waite Smith, Ambrose Smith, J. Welsh and Arlie Mairs. The claim is located near the base of the Ubaheba peaks, about eleven miles east of the works of Conn & Trudo. The ledge is forty feet wide on the surface and this large mass of ore lies exposed for a comparatively long distance. The vein has three separate streaks, differing from each other in color and general character. A ton of ore was gathered, one-third of it taken from each of the streaks, and all of it as nearly as possible of average quality with the whole ledge. The ore was shipped to San Francisco, worked, and yielded as follows: Gold, $34 per ton; silver, $6; copper, 13½ percent. The presumption is that all of the gold was obtained in the ore from one of the streaks; and if this be true the ore of that streak contains gold to the amount of $102 per ton. It is certain that nearly all the silver was contained in another of the streaks, while copper is more or less diffused thro' the whole mass, but chiefly in the third streak. From this third streak tons of ore can be taken out that will carry 40 percent. copper, and even more. The locators of this immense ledge are making arrangements for its development. The work done by Conn & Trudo in developing the borax deposits of Saline Valley, making a good road and otherwise drawing attention to that region, has led to a closer examination of the country for other minerals. It has long been known that lead and copper existed in the mountains on both sides of the valley but up till very recently little more was done than an occasional hasty visit to the region by one or two prospectors to enable them to stay long enough in the country to learn much about it. The "Whale" is distant from Independence about thirty-five miles in a southeasterly direction.

Religious Services.

Rev. J. H. De La Matyr will preach at Lone Pine on Sunday at 11 o'clock, a. m. at Georges Creek at 2:30 p. m. and at Independence at 7:30 o'clock evening; Sunday School at Independence and Lone Pine at 11 o'clock a. m.

The State Agricultural Society proposes to give four days racing at Sacramento, Saturday, April 26th, Tuesday, April 29th, Thursday, May 1st, Saturday, May 31. At least four races each day, all running. The cracks of the California stables will be in these races.

The Smart Superintendent.

In the early days of mining many quite promising localities were hindered from development by "smart" Superintendents. These all-knowing gentry got big salaries and did little else than squander the money of the stock-holders as long as they could be induced to pay assessments. The stockholders got tired of putting up "more mud," and disgusted with hopes and promises that were never realized, refused to pay more and the mines were abandoned without ever having been fairly prospected. Near Independence are two instances of what the "smart" Superintendent could do. In one case a mill was built to be run by water power. Then the ditch was made for conveying the water from the river and when all this was done it was discovered that the mill stood above the highest point ever reached by the water even when the river was in flood. In the other case a shaft was sunk about two hundred feet back from the edge of an exceedingly steep precipice about five hundred feet high. Then the "smart" Superintendent decided that it would be better to have a tunnel. He put men at work in the bottom of the shaft to run his tunnel out to the precipice, and hoisted the dirt and rock up the shaft by the windlass. Before the Superintendent reached daylight with his tunnel begun at the wrong end the owners got badly disgusted and quit. This was about twenty-five years ago. Recently a practical miner went to work near the locality of this hidden tunnel and is opening up what gives good promise of being a valuable mine.

Samuel J. Randall, with every opportunity to acquire vast wealth, preferred to remain honest and poor. In the grave riches will be useless to him; his tomb will be a shrine where many generations will do honor to a man who preferred poverty and hands unstained with plunder, to wealth acquired at the sacrifice of his own self-respect.

OFFICIAL.

PROPOSALS FOR 18th DISTRICT FAIR.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT THE Board of Directors of the 18th District Agricultural Association of California have decided to locate the Fair of said Association for the year 1890, at such town within any of the counties of Alpine, Mono and Inyo as shall offer to the Association the largest money premium for said privilege; and will also provide a speed track and necessary buildings and will give the use of the same for holding the Fair free of cost to the Association.

Sealed Proposals to be forwarded to the Secretary of the Association on or before May 17th, 1890, at Independence, Inyo county, California.

C. MULFORLAND,
Secretary.

PROPOSALS FOR BOARDING INYO COUNTY PRISONERS.

Notice is hereby given that sealed proposals will be received by the Board of Supervisors of Inyo county, at the office of the County Clerk until Tuesday, May 5, 1890, at 12 o'clock m., for the boarding of Inyo county prisoners, for the term of one year, beginning May 10th 1890 and ending May 10th, 1891, said bids to designate the price per diem for each prisoner, and said board to be paid for by warrants drawn upon the General Expense Fund, upon bills duly verified and presented at the regular meetings of said board of Supervisors.

Proposals must be endorsed "Proposals for Boarding County Prisoners," and the same will be opened between the hours of ten o'clock and twelve o'clock A. M. on the 5th day of May, 1890, and the Board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

P. H. MACK,
Clerk.

Proposals for Care of Indigent Sick of Inyo County.

Notice is hereby given that sealed proposals will be received by the board of supervisors of Inyo county, at the office of the County Clerk until 12 o'clock M. on Tuesday, May 5th, 1890, to contract for the care of said indigent sick for the term of one year from May 10th 1890 to May 10th, 1891, said bids to designate the amount for which parties contracting will care for said indigent sick on the basis of an average of four patients per day throughout the year, and to include all medicine, nursing, board, lodging and washing. Said bids to include the burial and funeral expenses of any indigent sick person or persons who may die while under such care.

Said contractor to care for all the indigent sick properly admitted to the contractor's care. And said bids to designate the price per head at which all excess of patients over the average of four each day throughout the year will be cared for, and excess to be paid for by extra allowance on presentation of bills duly sworn to, at the regular meeting of said Board immediately after said contract has expired. The average four per day to be paid for at the regular meetings of the Board on presentation of bills duly verified. All payments to be made by warrants drawn upon the Hospital Fund of said county.

The person or persons to whom said contract shall be awarded shall give a good and sufficient bond in double the sum of the contract price, for the faithful performance of said contract.

The care and management of said indigent sick by such contractor shall be at all times subject to the inspection of said Board of Supervisors, or any member thereof, or any person appointed by the Board for such purpose.

Sealed proposals must be endorsed, "Proposals for Care of Indigent Sick," and the same will be opened between the hours of ten o'clock and twelve o'clock A. M., on the 5th day of May, 1890, and the Board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

P. H. MACK,
Clerk.

S. H. BIGLAND,

—DEALER IN—

Owens Valley Lands

39 SUTTER STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO.

1-26

A VOICE from Ohio. Here is a portrait of Mr. Gardner, of Salem, Ohio. He writes: "Was at work on a farm for $25 a month; I now have an agency for E. C. Allen & Co.'s albums and publications and often make $25 a day." (Signed) W. H. GARDNER.

William Kline, Harrisburg, Pa., writes: "I have never known anything to sell like your album. Yesterday I took orders enough to pay me over $25." W. J. Elmore, Lancer, Mo., writes: "I take an order for your album almost every house I visit. My profit often is more than $20 a day." Another at a single city writes: "Others are doing quite as well; we have not space to give extracts from reports received daily from other agents." Now is the time to make money. Any one can become a successful agent. Sells itself on sight—little or no talking necessary. Wherever shown, every one wants to purchase. Agents take thousands of orders with rapidity never before known. Great profits await every worker. Agents are making fortunes. Ladies make as much as men. Youth, reader, can do as well as any one. Full information and terms FREE. To those who write for same, with particulars and terms for our Family Bibles, Books and Periodicals. After you know all, should you conclude to go no further, why no harm is done.

Address E. C. ALLEN & CO., AUGUSTA, MAINE.

WEINSTOCK & LUBIN:

DON'T think that you run any risk in sending to WEINSTOCK, LUBIN & Co. for anything you may need. Goods not as ordered are returnable at their expense. That is one reason why they try so hard to have things just right the first time.

DON'T imagine that there is anything mysterious or bothersome about ordering goods by mail. It's as simple as A. B. C. Some few hints as to sending money, etc., will be found on page one of WEINSTOCK, LUBIN & CO'S Catalogue. Free to any address.

WEINSTOCK, LUBIN & Co.
400, 402, 404, 406, 408, 410, 412 K ST.,
SACRAMENTO, CAL.
DRY GOODS, CLOTHING, HOUSEHOLD SUPPLIES, ETC.

DON'T do for a day without the handsome Catalogue of WEINSTOCK, LUBIN & Co. Beautiful illustrations and full information about all kinds of Clothing, Dry Goods, Household Supplies, etc., for Men, Women, and Children. Over a quarter of a million people read it yearly.

DON'T make the mistake of thinking you can buy elsewhere to as good advantage. WEINSTOCK, LUBIN & CO'S prices styles and qualities have brought them the largest general retail trade on the Coast. Is not that trade public verdict that they hold first place?

☞ The following advertising souvenirs will be sent by WEINSTOCK, LUBIN & Co., free to any address, on receipt of two cents postage for each article. Not more than two articles sent to one address.
No. 1.—"Tour of the World," a folder for the library table or schoolroom, contains 36 small views of the principal buildings and cities of the world. No. 2.—Small Round Pocket Mirror for men and ladies. No. 3.—Box of Wooden Dominoes. No. 4.—Book of Popular Songs with music. No. 5.—Harmonica for a child. 1

MISCELLANEOUS.

Lake View Hotel
Keeler, Cal.
John Barnes, Prop'r.

☞ First-class hotel in every respect. The table always supplied with the best in the market. Clean, nicely furnished rooms. Transient visitors will receive every courtesy and attention.

THE BAR

—Is constantly supplied with the finest—

Wines, Liquors, & Cigars.

NORMAN HOUSE,

Independence, - - Cal.

New House,
New Furniture,
Low Rates.

☞ Special attention will be given to secure the comfort of guests.

O. I. MAIRS, Prop.
feb12tf

IRWIN'S SALOON

Cor. Edwards and Market Streets,

Independence . Cal.

THE PUBLIC GENERALLY ARE RESPECTFULLY invited to call and inspect my establishment, which has been entirely rebuilt and furnished in a style second to none on this side of the mountains. A SPLENDID NEW BILLIARD TABLE provided for the amusement of patrons.

THE BAR

Is supplied with the most celebrated brands of pure Wines and Liquors and the Finest Havana Cigars.

JOHN C. IRWIN, Proprietor.
feb12tf

Palace Saloon.

WALTER OBER, Lessee.

—THE BAR—

Is constantly supplied with the best kinds o

WINES, LIQUORS, & CIGARS.

☞ The most careful attention given to the the amusement and comfort of patrons.

A FINE BILLIARD TABLE

Is always at the disposal of visitors to the Palace Saloon Dec. 20 89

PIONEER BREWERY
INDEPENDENCE

BEER ICE COLD.

The Bar is supplied with the Best of all kinds of Liquors and Cigars.

The Coolest Hall in the town. Call in and see what comfort you can have this hot weather.

PHILIP GEHRIG, PROPRIETOR

MISCELLANEOUS.

A. K. EUGLEY,

BIG PINE INYO CO. CAL.

PROVISIONS,
&c., &c., &c.

Postmaster and Deputy Co Clerk.

A. K. EUGLEY,
Big Pine, Cal.

Sulphur & Borax Baths

AT SODA SPRINGS, NEVADA
On Iron & Colorado Railroad

These valuable Springs offer special

INDUCEMENT TO INVALIDS

THE WATER CONTAINS

SULPHUR, MAGNESIA AND BORAX.

And Is Very Strengthening and Cleansing

When used for bathing purposes.

THE BATH HOUSES HAVE BEEN REBUILT

—And a large—

SWIMMING : BATH

Added, where those wishing to do so can take an invigorating plunge.

Excellent Accommodations

—AND—

Board by the Day, Week, or the Month

One of the BEST Telescopes in the world. FREE Our facilities are unequaled, and to introduce our superior goods we will send FREE to ONE PERSON in each locality, as above. Only those who write to us at once can make sure of the chance. All you have to do in return is to show our goods to those who call—your neighbors and those around you. The beginning of this advertisement shows the small end of the telescope. The following cut gives the appearance of it reduced to about the fiftieth part of its bulk. It is a grand, double size telescope, as large as is easy to carry. We will also show you how you can make from $3 to $10 a day at least, from the start, without experience. Better write at once. We pay all express charges. Address, H. HALLETT & CO., Box 880, PORTLAND, MAINE.

BISHOP ADVERTISEMENTS.

A. COHN & CO.

—DEALERS IN—

General Merchandise.

—ALL KINDS OF—

Farm Implements

—AND—

--MACHINERY--

Farm Produce

—OF ALL KINDS BOUGHT—

Orders for all kinds of supplies needed in mining camps promptly filled.

GIVEN & INGALLS.

—DEALERS IN—

FARM PRODUCE.

J. E. DUNLAP.

Harness Maker.

Harness of all kinds, from the lightest to the heaviest. Any kind of new work made promptly and of the best material. Repairing done on the shortest notice. A full line of saddles and harness.

H. E. WRIGHT.
DRUGGIST.

Medicines, Drugs, Toilet and Fancy Articles. Physicians' prescriptions carefully and promptly filled. All drugs and medicines fresh and of the best quality. All orders by mail receive immediate attention

Valley View Hotel.

O. H. Hill, Prop'r.

A New House Newly Furnished Throughout. Guests will receive every courtesy and attention.

NEVADA STABLE
BISHOP.

Opposite Valley View Hotel, Main St

In the Livery Department nothing is kept but safe and good traveling carriage and saddle horses. Conveyances of all kinds first class. Good attendance and the best of hay and grain for all animals boarding at the stable

S. P. SMITH, Prop.

BISHOP CREEK
BREWERY,

MUNZINGER, PHILLIPPAY & CO., Proprietors.

All the appliances and conveniences of First Class Brewery, including a beautiful grove for out-door parties.

☞ Customers supplied on all points ☜
☞ Of the C. & C. Railroad. ☜

Send orders to
MUNZINGER, PHILLIPPAY & CO.
Bishop Creek, Cal.

A NEW DEAL!

BISHOP CREEK
Livery, Feed & Sale Stable.

ROBERT O'NEIL, Prop'r.

Horses are boarded by the day, week or month. Stock bought and sold.
Bishop Creek, Cal., Nov. 20, 1883.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Newest Styles
OF
Fashionable Clothing
Dry Goods, Ladies' Wear, etc., etc
AT
L. WOOD'S
CASH STORE

A small stock of fresh groceries & canned goods constantly renewed.

Fresh Produce, and Grain Flour, etc., constantly on hand.

CANDIES,
PEANUTS,
WALNUTS,
TOYS!

THE CASH STORE
Is Where You Get
WORTH OF YOUR MONEY

THOMAS & HILL,
—DEALERS IN—
GENERAL MERCHANDISE
BIG PINE, INYO COUNTY, CAL,

We keep constantly on hand goods of all kinds needed in a country home. We order only First-Class Goods and ask no more than a reasonable profit. Give us a trial.

THOMAS & HILL

J. FORBES. W. D. TOBEY

FORBES & TOBEY,

HAWTHORNE, NEV.,

—DEALERS IN—

LUMBER

OF ALL KINDS.

DOORS,
SHINGLES,
SASH AND BLINDS,
LATH,
RUSTIC
MOULDINGS,
DRESSED LUMBER.

Matched and Dressed Flooring.

sept 11-tf

INDEPENDENCE
SHAVING SALOON.

Shaving, Hair Cutting, etc., done in the best manner.

WM. H. HUFF, Prop'r

COLONEL QUARITCH, V.C.

By H. RIDER HAGGARD.

This was their last beat before lunch, which was now to be seen approaching down a lane in a donkey cart convoyed by Ida and the squire. The latter was advancing in stages of about ten paces, and at every stage he stopped to utter a most fearful roar by way of warning all and sundry that they were not to shoot in his direction. Edward gave his gun to his bearer and at once walked off to join them, but the colonel went with George to look after two running cocks which he had down, for he was an old fashioned sportsman, and hated not picking up his game. After some difficulty they found one of the cocks in the hedge row, but the other they could not find, so reluctantly they gave up the search. When they got to the lane they found the luncheon ready, while one of the beaters was laying out the game for the squire to inspect. There were fourteen pheasants, four brace and a half of partridges, a hare, three rabbits and a woodcock.

"Halloo," said the squire, "who shot the woodcock?"

"Well, sir," said George, "we all had a pull at him, but the colonel wiped our eyes."

"Oh, Mr. Cossey," said Ida, in affected surprise, "why, I thought you never missed anything."

"Everybody misses sometimes," answered that gentleman, looking uncommonly sulky. "I shall do better this afternoon when it comes to the driven partridges."

"I don't believe you will," went on Ida, laughing maliciously. "I bet you a pair of gloves that Col. Quaritch will shoot more driven partridges than you do."

"Done," said Edward Cossey, sharply.

"Now, do you hear that, Col. Quaritch?" went on Ida. "I have bet Mr. Cossey a pair of gloves that you will kill more partridges this afternoon than he will, so I hope you won't make me lose them."

"Goodness gracious," said the colonel, in much alarm. "Why, the last partridge driving that I had was on the slopes of some mountains in Afghanistan. I dare say that I sha'n't hit a haystack. Besides," he said, with some irritation, "I don't like being set up to shoot against people."

"Oh, of course," said Edward, loftily, "if Col. Quaritch does not like to take it up, there's an end of it."

"Well," said the colonel, "if you put it in that way I don't mind trying, but I have only one gun and you have two."

"Oh, that will be all right," said Ida to the colonel. "You shall have George's gun; he never tries to shoot when they drive partridges, because he cannot hit them. He goes with the beaters. It is a very good gun."

The colonel took up the gun and examined it. It was of about the same bend and length as his own, but of a better quality, having been once the property of James de la Molle.

"Yes," he said, "but then I haven't got a bearer."

"Never mind. I'll do that, I know all about it. I often used to hold my brother's second gun when we drove partridges, because he said I was so much quicker than the men. "Look," and she took the gun and rested one knee on the turf, "First position, second position, third position. We used to have regular drills at it," and she sighed.

The colonel laughed heartily, for it was a curious thing to see this stately woman handling a gun with all the skill and quickness of a practiced shot. Besides, as the bearer idea involved a whole afternoon of Ida's society, he certainly was not inclined to negative it. But Edward Cossey did not smile; on the contrary, he positively scowled with jealousy, and was about to make some remark when Ida held up her finger.

"Hush," she said, "here comes my father," the squire had been counting the game, "he hates bets, so you mustn't say anything about our match."

Luncheon went off pretty well, though Edward Cossey did not contribute much to the general conversation. When it was done, the squire announced that he was going to walk to the other end of the estate, whereon Ida said she should stop and see something of the shooting, and the fun began.

CHAPTER XXI.

THE END OF THE MATCH.

They began the afternoon with several small drives, but on the whole the birds did very badly. They broke back, went off to one side or the other, and generally misbehaved themselves. In the first drive the colonel and Edward Cossey got a bird each. In the second drive the latter got three birds, firing five shots, and his antagonist only got a hare and a pheasant that jumped out of a ditch, neither of which, of course, counted anything. Only one brace of birds came his way at all, but if the truth must be told, he was talking to Ida at the moment, and did not see them till too late.

Then came a longer drive when the birds were pretty plentiful. The colonel got one, a low flying Frenchman, which he killed as he topped the fence, and after that for the life of him he could not touch a feather. Every sportsman knows what a fatal thing it is to begin to miss and then get nervous, and that was what happened to the colonel. Continually there became distant cries of "Mark! mark! over!" followed by the apparition of half a dozen brown balls showing clear against the gray autumn sky, and sweeping down toward him light lightning. Whizz in front, overhead, and behind; bang, bang; bang—again with the second gun, and they were away—vanished, gone, leaving nothing but a memory behind them.

The colonel swore beneath his breath, and Ida, kneeling at his side, sighed audibly, but it was no use, and presently the drive was done, and there he was with one wretched French partridge to show for it.

Ida said nothing, but she looked volumes, and if ever a man felt humiliated Harold Quaritch was that man. She had set her heart upon his winning the match, and he was making an exhibition of himself that might have caused a school boy to blush.

Only Edward Cossey smiled grimly as he told his bearer to give the two and a half brace which he had shot to George.

"Last drive this next, gentlemen," said that universal functionary as he surveyed the colonel's one Frenchman, and then, glancing sadly at the tell tale pile of empty cartridge cases, added: "You'll have to shoot up, colonel, this time, if you are going to win them gloves for Miss Ida. Mr. Cossey has knocked up four brace and a half, and you have only got a brace. Look you here, sir," he went on in a portentous whisper, "keep forrard of them, well forrard, fire ahead and down they'll come. You're a better shot than he is, a long way. You could give him 'birds,' sir, that you could, and beat him."

Harold said nothing. He was sorely tempted to make excuses, as any man would have been, and he might with truth have urged that he was not accustomed to partridge driving, and that one of the guns was new to him. But he resisted manfully, and said never a word.

George placed the two guns and then went off to join the beaters. It was a capital spot for a drive, for on each side were young larch plantations, sloping down toward them like a V, the guns being at the narrow end and level with the ends of the plantations, which were at this spot about a hundred and twenty yards apart. In front was a large stretch of open fields, lying in such a fashion that the birds were bound to fly straight over the guns and between the gap at the end of the V shaped covers.

They had to wait a long while, for the beat was of considerable extent, and this they did in silence, till presently a couple of single birds appeared coming down the wind like lightning, for a stiffish breeze had sprung up. One went to the left over Edward Cossey's head, and he shot it very neatly, but the other, catching sight of Harold's hat beneath the fence, which was not a very high one, swerved and crossed, an almost impossible shot, nearer sixty than fifty yards from him.

'Now!" said Ida.

"Now!" said Ida, and he fired, and to his joy down came the bird with a thud, bounding full two feet into the air with the force of its impact, being, indeed, shot through the head.

"That's better," said Ida, as she handed him the second gun.

Another moment and a covey came over, high up. He fired both barrels and got a right and left, and snatching the second gun sent another barrel after them, hitting a third bird, which did not fall. And then a noble enthusiasm and certainty possessed him, and he knew that he should miss no more. Nor did he. With two almost possible exceptions he dropped every bird that drive. But his crowning glory, a thing whereof he still often dreams, was yet to come.

He had killed four brace of partridge and fired twelve times, when at last the beaters made their appearance about two hundred yards away at the further end of a rather dirty barley stubble.

"I think that is the lot," he said, "I'm afraid that you have lost your gloves, Ida."

Scarcely were the words out of his mouth when there was a yell of "mark," and a strong covey of birds appeared swooping down the wind right on to him.

On they came, scattered and rather "stringy," and Harold gripped his gun and drew a deep breath, while Ida, kneeling at his side, her lips apart, and her beautiful eyes wide open, watched their advent through a space in the hedge. Lovely enough she looked to charm the heart of any man, if a man out partridge driving could descend to such frivolity, which we hold to be impossible.

Now is the moment. The leading brace are something over fifty yards away, and he knows full well that if there is to be a chance left for the second gun he must shoot before they are five yards nearer.

"Bang!" down comes the old cock bird. "Bang!" and his mate follows him, falling with a smash into the fence.

Quick as thought Ida takes the empty gun with one hand and passes him the cocked and loaded one with the other. "Bang!" Another bird topples head first out of the thinned covey. They are nearly sixty yards away now. "Bang!" again, and oh, joy and wonder! the last bird turns right over backward and falls dead as a stone some seventy paces from the muzzle of the gun.

He had killed four birds out of a single driven covey, which shooters well know is a feat not often done even by the best driving shots.

"Bravo!" said Ida. "I was sure that you could shoot if you chose."

"Yes," he answered; "it was pretty good work," and he commenced collecting the birds, for by this time the beaters were across the field. They were all dead, not a runner in the lot, and there were exactly six brace of them. Just as he picked up the last George arrived, followed by Edward Cossey.

"Well, I never," said the former, while something resembling a smile stole over his melancholy countenance. "That's the masterest bit of shooting that ever I did see. Lord Walsingham couldn't beat that himself—sixteen empty cases and twelve birds picked up. Why," and he turned to Edward, "bless me, sir, if I don't believe the colonel has won them gloves for Miss Ida after all. Let's see, sir, you got two brace this last drive and one the first, and a leash the second, and two brace and a half the third, six and a half in all. And the colonel, yes, he has seven brace, one bird to the good."

"There, Mr. Cossey," said Ida, smiling sweetly, "I have won my gloves. Mind you don't forget to pay them."

"Oh, I will not forget, Miss de la Molle," said he, smiling also, but not too prettily.

"I suppose," he said, addressing the colonel, "that that last covey twisted up and you browned them."

"No," he answered quietly, "all four were clear shots."

Mr. Cossey smiled again an incredulous smile, which somehow sent Harold Quaritch's blood leaping through his veins more quickly than was good for him, and turned away to hide his vexation. Edward Cossey would rather have lost a thousand pounds than that his adversary should have got that extra bird, for not only was he a jealous shot, but he knew perfectly well that Ida was anxious that he should lose, and desired above all things to see him humiliated. And then he, the smartest shot within ten miles round, to be beaten by a middle aged soldier shooting with a strange gun, and totally unaccustomed to driving! Why, the story would be told over the country—George would see to that. His anger was so great when he thought of it that, afraid of making himself ridiculous, without another word he set off with his bearer toward the castle, leaving the others to follow.

Ida looked after him and smiled. "He is so conceited," she said; "he cannot bear to be beaten at anything."

"I think that you are rather hard on him," said the colonel, for the joke had an unpleasant side which jarred on him.

"At any rate," she answered, with a little stamp, "it is not for you to say so. If you disliked him as much as I do you would be hard on him, too. Besides, I dare say that his turn is coming."

The colonel winced, as well he might, but looking at her handsome face, set just now like steel at the thought of what the future might bring forth, he reflected that if Edward Cossey's turn did come he was by no means sure that the ultimate triumph would rest with him. Ida de la Molle, to whatever extent her sense of honor and money indebtedness might carry her, was no butterfly to be broken on a wheel, but a woman whose dislike and anger, or, worse still, whose cold, unvarying disdain, was a thing from which the boldest hearted man might shrink aghast.

Nothing more was said on the subject, and they began to talk, though somewhat constrainedly, about indifferent matters. They were both aware that it was a farce, and that they were playing a part, for beneath the external ice of formalities the river of their devotion ran whither they knew not. All that had been made clear a few nights back. But what will you have? Necessity, overriding their desires, compelled them along the path of self denial, and, like wise folk, they recognized the fact, for there is nothing more painful in the world than the outburst of hopeless affection.

And so they talked about painting and shooting and what not, till they reached the gray old castle towers. Here Harold wanted to bid her good-by, but she persuaded him to come in and have some tea, saying that her father would like to say good night to him.

Accordingly he went into the vestibule, where there was a light, for it was getting dusk, and there he found the squire and Mr. Cossey. As soon as he entered Edward Cossey rose, said good night to the squire and Ida, and then passed toward the door, where the colonel was standing, rubbing the mud off his shooting boots. As he came, Harold, being slightly ashamed of the shooting match, very sorry to have humiliated a man who prided himself so much upon his skill in a particular branch of sport, held out his hand, and said, in a friendly tone:

"Good night, Mr. Cossey. Next time that we are out shooting together I expect I shall be nowhere. It was an awful fluke of mine killing those four birds."

But Eward Cossey took no notice of the friendly words or outstretched hand, but came straight on as though he intended to walk past him.

The colonel was wondering what was best to do, for it was impossible to mistake the meaning of the oversight, when the squire, who was sometimes very quick to notice things, spoke in a loud and decided tone.

"Mr. Cossey," he said, "Col. Quaritch is offering you his hand."

"I observe that he is," he answered, setting his handsome face, "but I do not wish to take Col. Quaritch's hand."

Then came a moment's silence, which the squire again broke.

"When a gentleman in my house refuses to take the hand of another gentleman," he said, very quietly, "I think I have a right to ask the reason of his conduct, which, unless that reason is a very sufficient one, is almost as much a slight upon me as upon him."

"I think that Col. Quaritch must know the reason, and will not press me to explain," said Edward Cossey.

"I know of no reason," replied the colonel, sternly, "unless, indeed, it is that I have been so unfortunate as to get the best of Mr. Cossey in a friendly shooting match."

"Col. Quaritch must know well that such is not the reason to which I allude," said Edward. "If he consults his conscience he will probably discover a better one."

"You have made a very serious implication against me, Mr. Cossey," he said in a cold, clear voice. "Before you leave this room you will be so good as to explain it in the presence of those before whom it has been made."

"Certainly, if you wish it," he answered, with something like a sneer. "The reason why I refuse to take your hand, Col. Quaritch, is that you have been guilty of conduct which proves to me that you are not a gentleman, and, therefore, not a person with whom I desire to be on friendly terms. Shall I go on?"

"Most certainly you will go on," answered the colonel.

"Very well. The conduct to which I refer is that you were once engaged to my aunt, Julia Heston; that within three days of the time of the marriage you deserted and jilted her in a most cruel way, as a consequence of which she went mad, and is to this moment an inmate of an asylum."

Ida gave an exclamation of astonishment, and the colonel started and colored up, while the squire, looking at him curiously, waited to hear what he had to say.

"It is perfectly true, Mr. Cossey," he answered, "that I was engaged twenty years ago to be married to Miss Julia Heston, though I now for the first time learn that she was your aunt. It is also quite true that that engagement was broken off under most painful circumstances, within three days of the time fixed for the marriage. What those circumstances were I am not at liberty to say, for the simple reason that I gave my word not to do so, but this I will say, that they were not to my discredit, though you may not be aware of that fact. But as you are one of the family, Mr. Cossey, my tongue is not tied, and I will do myself the honor of calling upon you to-morrow and explaining them to you. After that," he added, significantly, "I shall require you to apologize to me as publicly as you have accused me."

"You may require, but whether I shall comply is another matter," said Edward Cossey, and he passed out.

"I am very sorry, Mr. de la Molle," said the colonel, as soon as he had gone, "more sorry than I can say, that I should have been the cause of this most unpleasant scene. I also feel that I am placed in a very false position, and until I produce Mr. Cossey's written apology, that position must to some extent continue. If I fail to obtain that apology, I shall have to consider what course to take. In the meanwhile I can only ask you to suspend your judgment."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

FRANK WHITE WINS $5,000 IN THE MEXICAN LOTTERY.

How a Sacramento "Bee" Route Agent Cleaned up a Small Fortune Out of One Dollar.

If ever there was a man whom other men might appropriately term "lucky," and if there is a man in Sacramento who would be mentioned as deserving of good luck—that man is Frank L. White. He is fortunate in being happily married, young, in good health, and the principal owner of THE BEE'S city routes. His latest streak of good fortune, however, came on February 6th, when he drew one-fourth of the second prize ($20,000) in the Mexican Lottery, thus replenishing his exchequer to the pleasant tune of $5,000.

A BEE reporter interviewed Frank today, as he was dealing out the huge bundles of BEES to his score of carriers. "Yes," said the genial, good-natured agent, "I won $5,000 in the Mexican Lottery in the last drawing, and I received my money to-day—in new, crisp United States notes. Some people prefer gold, but don't you know that greenbacks are good enough for me—and especially when you get $5,000 for $1. How did I come to purchase the ticket? Well, I'll tell you. I was coming down to the office the day before the drawing, when I met on J street an old fellow who sells lottery tickets. I asked him if he had any left, and he replied that he had just one Mexican ticket. It was No. 42,356 and I bought it. When the list came along I saw that that number had drawn the $20,000 prize. I didn't make any noise about it, but quietly put my ticket in the hands of Wells, Fargo & Co., and, as you know, my $5,000 arrived to-day. The money comes in at a very opportune time, as I proposed to build myself a house the coming Summer. As it is now, I can have erected a much more pretentious residence than I at first contemplated, and can establish as neat and comfortable a little home as anybody's. The Mexican lottery seems to be my mascot. One day last Summer my barber bet me a Mexican ticket against $1 on a baseball game. I won the ticket and then the ticket won $10. Oh, I am going to stay with the Mexican lottery. I guess I will win the big prize next month, and then you can write me up and put in my picture. That's all I know about winning the $5,000, and, boy's that's all the papers. Hustle out, now, on your routes. Hold on there, you reporter, and we will go around the corner"—and they did.—Sacramento Bee, March 4th.

IT GIVES PLEASURE

To testify in behalf of any honest proposition, and that is why all that once try the Great Sierra Kidney and Liver Cure join in praising its excellent qualities and sending in their testamonials for the benefit of those afflicted as they were before using this wonderful medicine. Be sure and get one bottle which will convince yourself. For sale by all druggists. Take no other.

Sierra Chemical Co., 2424 Mission street, San Francisco, Cal.

GENTLEMEN: It gives me extreme pleasure to testify in behalf of your wonderful remedy, THE GREAT SIERRA KIDNEY AND LIVER CURE. I have given it a thorough trial, and it has not only cured me, but some of my best friends can testify to its meritorious qualities. Please state that I can truthfully recommend to all this best of all medicines. Very truly your,

HARRY MEYERS,
1109 Market street.

Stupid people and uneducated people, according to William Black, do not care for nice discriminations. They always have decided opinions.

WAKED UP EFFECTUALLY.

A lethargic, dormant condition of the liver is hardly to be overcome with drastic cathartics and nauseous cholagogues. A gentler, pleasanter and far more effective means exists of arousing the organ when somnolent. This is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, vouched for by the medical fraternity, tested by the public for many years. A resumption by the biliary organ of its secretive function, with the activity attendant upon health, a return to regularity of the bowels and a renewal of digestion, are the no less happy and certain results of using the Bitters systematically. Its laxative effect is never painful and drenching, its tendency being rather to perpetuate regularity than to produce a copious action. Malaria, nervousness, debility, kidney troubles and neuralgia it subdues effectually.

Life's a reckoning we cannot make twice over. You cannot mend a wrong subtraction by doing your addition right.

"The world grows weary praising men,
And wearied grows of being praised—"
But never wearied grows the pen
Which writes the truths that have amazed the thousands who have been given up by their physicians and who have been restored to complete health by using that safest of all remedies for functional irregularities and weaknesses, which are the bane of womankind. We refer, of course, to Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, the only guaranteed cure for all those chronic ailments peculiar to women. Read the guarantee on the bottle-wrapper.

To regulate the stomach, liver and bowels, Dr. Pierce's Pellets excel. One a dose.

It is a most mortifying reflection for any one to consider what he has done compared with what he might have done.

DON'T MISS A GOOD THING.

You want an elegant collection of artistic novelties, which can be procured by anyone. You will be astonished at the variety, beauty and oddity.

To get these buy a box of the genuine Dr. C. McLane's Celebrated Liver Pills, price 25 cents, and mail us the outside wrapper with your addres plainly written and 4 cents in stamps. We will then mail you the above list with an elegant package of oleographic and chromatic cards. Address, Fleming Bros., Pittsburg, Pa.

Leisure for men of business, and business for men of leisure would cure many complaints.

If Dobbins' Electric Soap is what so many insist that it is, you can not afford to go without it. Your grocer has it, or can get it, and you can decide for yourself very soon. Don't let another Monday pass without trying it.

Think twice before you believe every evil story you hear, and think twenty times before you repeat it.

No stranger should leave the city without a box of "Tansill's Punch" 5c. Cigars.

Teach children to love everything that is beautiful, and you will teach them to be useful and good.

FIRST CAPITAL PRIZE.

Two Illinoisans Hold One-Twentieth of $300,000 in The Louisiana State Lottery—Two Texans Held Another Piece.

Messrs. S. S. Simpson and John Bogla, residing at Carrollton, Ill., arrived in the city Friday morning. The object of their visit was to collect $15,000 as they held one-twentieth of ticket No. 64,585, which drew the first capital prize of $300,000 in the drawing of The Louisiana State Lottery Company on Tuesday last. Mr. Simpson is a merchant and Agent of the Adams Express Company at Carrollton. Mr. Bogla is a tenant farmer residing about a mile from Carrollton and is one of Mr. Simpson's customers. He came from Germany several years ago a poor emigrant, and has been working for sometime as a farm hand in the section of country in which he lives.

Last month he suggested to Mr. Simpson that they put in a dollar each and try their luck in a lottery ticket. A blank was drawn, so they concluded to try again. Mr. Simpson sent $2 for two $1 tickets, and received by return mail two one-twentieth tickets one of them the lucky number, 64,585.

As soon as they heard of their good fortune they started at once for New Orleans.

Their ticket was presented at the office of the company as soon as they arrived here and they were promptly paid by a check on the New Orleans National Bank.

This is the first time either of the gentlemen has ever been south, and both of them will remain until after the carnival.

Another Piece Paid.

Another couple of lucky investors arrived in the city yesterday. They were two young men named John D. Mayfield, a private banker and secretary of the Texas Savings Loan Association of Waco, Tex., and his book keeper, Mr. Ed C. Himstedt. They were accompanied by their friend, Mr. J. A. Van Etten of Little Rock, Ark., where Messrs. Mayfield and Himstedt formerly resided. Messrs. Mayfield and Himstedt were copartners in one-twentieth of ticket No. 64,585, which drew the first capital prize of $300,000, and on the presentation of the ticket at the office of The Lottery Company were promptly given a check on the New Orleans National Bank for $15,000. Two thirds of the prize was owned by Mr. Himstedt, and his employer gave him a certificate of deposit for $10,000 before the ticket was cashed. Both gentlemen will remain in the city to witness the carnival and will leave for home on Wednesday next.—New Orleans Picayune, February 16.

PILES! PILES! PILES!

Dr. William's Indian Pile Ointment is the only sure cure for Blind, Bleeding or Itching Piles ever discovered. It never fails to cure old chronic cases of long standing.

Judge Coffinbury, Cleveland, O., says: "I have found by experience that Dr. William's Indian Pile Ointment gives immediate relief."

Do not suffer an instant longer. Sold by William's Manufacturing Co., Props., Cleveland, Ohio. 50c. and $1.

OREGON THE PARADISE OF FARMERS.

Mild, equable climate, certain and abundant crops. Best fruit, grain, grass and stock country in the world. Full information free. Address the Oregon Immigration Board, Portland, Oregon

Beware of imitations of the genuine Seal of North Carolina Plug Cut Tobacco.

March April May

Are the best months in which to purify your blood. During the long, cold winter, the blood becomes thin and impure, the body becomes weak and tired, the appetite may be lost, and just now the system craves the aid of a reliable medicine. Hood's Sarsaparilla is peculiarly adapted to purify and enrich the blood, to create a good appetite and to overcome that tired feeling.

N. B.—Be sure to get

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Apothecaries, Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar

SURE CURE FOR PILES.

Sure cure for blind, bleeding and itching Piles. One box has cured the worst cases of ten years' standing. No one need suffer ten minutes after using Kirk's German Pile Ointment. It absorbs tumors, allays the itching, acts as a poultice, gives relief. Dr. Kirk's German Pile Ointment is prepared only for Piles and itching of the private parts, and nothing else. Every box is warranted.....

Sold by druggists and sent by mail on receipt of price, $1.00 per box. J. J. Mack & Co., Wholesale Agents, San Francisco.

Hearts are very much alike, and all need lots of patience to keep them good and happy.

STONE IN THE KIDNEY.

I was first taken with sharp pains in the lower part of my bowels in the region of the bladder. Shortly blood appeared mixed with my urine, and a few weeks later I had an attack of gravel, I tried a number of doctors. One said it was gravel, another inflammation of the bladder, and another stone in kidneys. For three months I was under the care of an eminent doctor at Albany, but constantly growing worse, went home to die. At this time I was induced to try Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, of Rondout, N. Y., and am now robust and strong. A remedy which can do this for one so near death as I was should be known everywhere. I hope this statement will cause others afflicted as I was to use the Remedy.—C. W. Brown, Petersburgh, N. Y.

DR. KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, made at Rondout, N. Y. $1; 6 for $5.

Send for book, how to cure Kidney, Liver and Blood disorders.

Have you learned the lesson of yesterday or the infinite meaning of to-day? It has duties of its own; they cannot be left until to-morrow. To-morrow will bring its own work.

Try Germea for Breakfast.

FULL WEIGHT PURE

DR. PRICE'S CREAM BAKING POWDER

MOST PERFECT MADE

Its superior excellence proven in millions of homes for more than a quarter of a century. It is used by the United States Government. Indorsed by the heads of the Great Universities as the Strongest Purest and Most Healthful. Dr. Price's the only Baking Powder that does not contain Ammonia, Lime or Alumn. Sold only in Cans.

PRICE BAKING POWDER CO.,
NEW YORK. CHICAGO SAN FRANCISCO

You can certainly

Stop Coughing

With 10 parts molasses or honey to one part of PERRY DAVIS'

Pain Killer.

Take ½ teaspoonful often.

TRY IT.

PAIN KILLER also Cures Sore Throat, Diphtheria, Rheumatism, Neuralgia

A JUDGE OF TOBACCO

Always buys Seal of North Carolina, "Plug Cut." He can't be fooled by inferior imitations.

PENSIONS!

For Soldiers' Widows, Mothers and fathers of diseased Soldiers of all Wars.

MEXICAN SOLDIERS AND THEIR WIDOWS

Entitled at any age if any way sick. Address, CAPT. J. H. SHEPARD, Registered U. S. Pension Att'y, 1068 East 15th St., Oakland, Cal. Member of Lyon Post, No. 8, G. A. R., Dep't of Cal. Send the names of all Widows, Mothers and Fathers of Soldiers not receiving Pensions.

Cures in 1 TO 5 DAYS. Guaranteed not to cause Stricture. Mf'd only by the Evans Chemical Co. Cincinnati, Ohio. Trade Mark

I prescribe and fully endorse Big G as the only specific for the certain cure of this disease. G. H. INGRAHAM, M. D., Amsterdam, N. Y.

We have sold Big G for many years, and it has given the best of satisfaction. D. R. DYCHE & CO., Chicago, Ill.

$1.00. Sold by Druggists.

SINGERS who have used Piso's Cure for Consumption say it is BEST OF ALL. Sold everywhere. 25c.

Dr. L. GOLDSCHMIEDT,

Twenty years New York private and Hospital Experience. All Chronic and Special Diseases. Call or address, No. 5 Stockton Street, San Francisco, Cal.

ASTHMA CURED FREE A trial package by mail to sufferers. Dr. R. SCHIFFMAN, St. Paul, Minn.

After 22 Years,

St. Jacobs Oil cured a man of chronic pains from sunstroke, which took the form of chronic HEADACHE, which was completely cured as follows:

Paragon, Ind., July 30, 1888.

I suffered with pains in my head from sunstroke 22 years. They were cured by St. Jacobs Oil and have remained so four years.

SAMUEL B. SHIPLOR.

AT DRUGGISTS AND DEALERS.

THE CHARLES A. VOGELER CO., Baltimore, Md.

A HOUSEKEEPER'S HEAVEN.

The pleasant prediction is made that drudgery will be abolished from the household and the occupation of the domestic servant will be gone.

Valuable Advice for the Present Day.

Mrs. Helen E. Sterrett, in a recent number of the Forum, contributes an article entitled "Housekeeping in the Future." In it she tells how in a few years electricity will supply light for the home, the family cooking and washing will be done outside, and there will be so little work in the household that the occupation of the domestic servant will be gone.

But Mrs. Sterrett's article is simply a prediction, and has no more than a passing interest for the ladies who live in 1890. Their social and household cares are straining their delicate, nervous system, and the result is terrible. Headaches, backaches, and womanly ills are growing alarmingly common. Many of them find that memory is failing; they are unable to recall the names of friends or tell whether they have performed some of their usual household duties.

Their nerves are in such a condition that very slight causes, or perhaps no cause at all, may irritate them. Life grows to be a burden. There is no need for despair, but there is great need of caution. Their nerves should be built up, life fortified, and brain restored with that remarkable preparation, Paine's Celery Compound. Instead of the depressed and languid feelings, after the Compound has been used, they will feel active, vigorous, and happy. To those who are weak and failing, and desire health and happiness instead of illness and misery, we earnestly urge that they act upon this advice.

DR. SYKES' SURE CURE FOR CATARRH. ESTABLISHED CHICAGO 1870. 1888 Removed TO CINCINNATI. Has cured many cases pronounced hopeless by physicians. Send for Free Book "Common Sense Talk" and numerous testimonials. They will convince you.

Dr. SYKES' SURE CURE CO., 330 Race St., Cincinnati, O.

CHICHESTER'S ENGLISH PENNYROYAL PILLS RED CROSS DIAMOND BRAND. Safe and always reliable. Ladies, ask Druggist for Diamond Brand, in red, metallic boxes, sealed with blue ribbon. Take no other. All pills in pasteboard boxes, pink wrappers, are dangerous counterfeits. Send 4c. (stamps) for particulars, testimonials and "Relief for Ladies," in letter, by return mail. Name Paper. Chichester Chem'l Co., Madison Sq., Phila., Pa.

The Oldest Medicine in the World is probably DR. ISAAC THOMPSON'S CELEBRATED EYE-WATER. This article is a carefully prepared physician's prescription, and has been in constant use for nearly a century. There are few diseases to which mankind are subject more distressing than sore eyes, and none, perhaps, for which more remedies have been tried without success. For all external inflammation of the eyes it is an infallible remedy. If the directions are followed it will never fail. We particularly invite the attention of physicians to its merits. For sale by all druggists. JOHN L. THOMPSON, SONS & CO., TROY, N. Y. Established 1797.

$75.00 to $250.00 A MONTH can be made working for us. Persons preferred who can furnish a horse and give their whole time to the business. Spare moments may be profitably employed also. A few vacancies in towns and cities. B. F. JOHNSON & CO., 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va.

USE NEW WELLINGTON COAL.

A Letter for You

ESTEEMED FRIEND:—We are still offering as good bargains as you obtained of us last year on the same favorable terms. We use even greater care than ever in selecting and packing goods and rarely have a complaint of price, quality or failure to arrive in order, but thousands of letters of approval and encouragement. The "Home Circle" is published each month and weekly bulletins giving market changes each week; these will be sent to you or your friends on application. Our stock is much more complete than ever before, and comprises almost everything a family needs to make life a pleasure. At this time we offer until sold special bargains in London layer raisins at $1.50 and $1.75 for 20-lb. boxes; cheap raisins down to 5c. and common Mission dried grapes low as 40 and even 50lbs. for $1.00. Butter is too low for anything. Interior dairies fair to good, per roll of 2 lbs., 20c to 30c.; choice coast dairies 32c. to 35c. in quantities of 25 or 50 rolls, and but little more at retail. We will send you a 12-roll box this week at $4.00 that will guarantee to suit. In shoes we offer infants soft soles, Nos. 0 to 3, at 20 and 25 cents, and nice kid, good enough for your baby or ours, sizes 1 to 5, at 40c. to 50c. Ladies shoes we sell, Sunday or everyday, and good value, not auction goods, but regular stock, at $1.50; children's school shoes, we have them so good and cheap that you could save your taxes every month buying of us. Men's everyday shoes at $1.25, but we don't recommend them, but at $1.50, $1.75 and $2.00 we warrant them to give satisfaction. Underwear, we beat the world for price, quality and variety for men, women and children; low as 10c. for infants in grey, and high as you want to pay. But send us a trial order or ask for the full list. Do not send for a few items by mail without adding for postage. Address plainly, Smith's Cash Store, 418 Front St., San Francisco. Cal.

THE BEST SEEDS are those put up by D. M. FERRY & CO. Who are the largest Seedsmen in the world. D. M. FERRY & Co's Illustrated, Descriptive and Priced SEED ANNUAL for 1890 will be mailed FREE to all applicants, and to last season's customers. It is better than ever. Every person using Garden, Flower or Field Seeds should send for it. Address D. M. FERRY & CO. DETROIT, MICH.

Damiana Bitters.

TRADE MARK

The great Mexican Remedy for Disorders of the Kidneys and Bladder, Damiana is recognized by all physicians as the best Nervous Stimulant, gives health and strength to the Generative and Procreative Organs. For sale everywhere.

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE,
323 & 325 Market St., S. F., Agents.

STEINWAY. KRANICH, PEASE & BACH, Gabler, Roenish Pianos; Burdett Organs, Band Instruments. Largest stock of Sheet Music and Books. Bands supplied at Eastern Prices. MATTHIAS GRAY CO., 206 Post Street, San Francisco.

Reliable SEEDS

The famous Hovey Seed Store of Boston, and Hovey Nurseries of Cambridge, Mass., have been moved to East Pasadena, California, where the business will be conducted as The Raymond Flower and Seed Store, C. H. HOVEY, Manager. East Pasadena, Cal. Send for complete catalogue.

GILES' CREOSOZONE

FOR THE DESTRUCTION OF

VERMIN and PARASITES

AFFECTING POULTRY AND BIRDS.

Price, FULL QUART, 75c. FULL DIRECTIONS ON EACH CAN.

SOLD BY ALL GROCERS AND DRUGGISTS.

Prepared only by Nelson Giles, Jr., Manufacturing Co., National City Cal.

Copyright, 1889.

"TAKEN IN."

"I used often to read the newspaper aloud to my wife," said Bert Robinson, "and once I was fairly 'taken in' by a patent medicine advertisement. The seductive paragraph began with a modest account of the sea-serpent, but ended by setting forth the virtues of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, which, it was alleged, was a sure cure for all Bronchial, Throat and Lung troubles, and would even cure Consumption, if taken in time. The way I was taken in was this: I had lung disease, and I bought a bottle of the remedy; I was a stranger to it, and it took me in—and cured me." Robinson's experience is identical with that of thousands of others. So true is this, that after witnessing, for many years, the marvelous cures of Bronchial, Throat and Lung affections wrought by this wonderful remedy, its manufacturers feel warranted in selling it as they are doing, through druggists, under a positive guarantee that, if taken in time and given a fair trial, it will relieve or cure in every case, or money paid for it will be refunded. No other remedy for such maladies is sold under such trying conditions; no ordinary remedy could sustain itself under such a plan of sale.

For all chronic or lingering Coughs, Weak Lungs, Spitting of Blood, Bronchitis, Shortness of Breath, Asthma, and kindred ailments, it is a most potent remedy. While it cures these diseases it also cleanses the blood, invigorates the liver, improves digestion, and builds up both flesh and strength. Contains no alcohol to inebriate, no sugar or syrup to sour or ferment in the stomach and interfere with digestion. It is a concentrated, fluid, vegetable extract. Dose small and pleasant to taste. It stands alone in the field of medicine, and is as peculiar in its wonderful curative effects as in its composition. Therefore, don't be fooled into taking something recommended as "just as good." Bear in mind, it's the only Liver, Blood and Lung Remedy possessed of such transcendent curative properties as to warrant its manufacturers in selling it under a printed certificate of guarantee, which wraps every bottle. WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Proprietors, 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

SICK HEADACHE,

Bilious Headache, Dizziness, Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, and all derangements of the stomach and bowels, are promptly relieved and permanently cured by the use of

DR. PIERCE'S PELLETS.

They are Purely Vegetable and Perfectly Harmless. As a LIVER PILL, Unequaled!

ONE PELLET A DOSE! SMALLEST, CHEAPEST, EASIEST TO TAKE.

S. F. N. U., No. 404 New Series No. 11.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

COUNTY OFFICIAL PAPER.

C. MULHOLLAND, - - - Proprietor.

Independence, Cal.,

FRIDAY, - - - APRIL 25, 1890.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

VOL. XXI. NO. 46. INDEPENDENCE, INYO CO., CAL., APRIL 25, 1890. WHOLE NO. 1017.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

COUNTY OFFICIAL PAPER.

C. MULHOLLAND, - - - Proprietor.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One Year (post paid)	$4.00
Six Months	2.25
Three Months	1.50
One Month	50
Single Copies	20

STARS AND CROSSES.

The Order of the Black Eagle, Prussia's Highest Decoration.

Apropos of decorations, one of the great events of the year in Berlin is the annual "investitur." The custom of rewarding valiant deeds and public service by decorations dates back to the middle ages. The highest in Prussia is the Order of the Black Eagle, which was created by Frederick I. on the day of his coronation in 1701. This order the royal princes of the house of Hohenzollern acquire as a birthright; but the decoration itself can only be conferred by the King, when the prince has reached his tenth year. At that age he is invested with the star of the order, which he wears on the left breast. The ribbon, cross and chain are reserved till his eighteenth year. Others than these princes must be thirty years old before they can hope to receive this decoration, which confers upon them hereditary nobility. By courtesy it is awarded to German and foreign monarchs and great princes in recognition of valiant deeds, while statesmen and officers in high positions occasionally receive it as a rare distinction. Emperor Wilhelm I. conferred it upon Empress Augusta as a reward for her devotion to the sick and wounded German soldiers during the Franco-German war, and Frederick extended the same honor to his wife, the Empress Victoria, as an acknowledgment of her faithful nursing while he suffered from the malady that afterward ended his life. The present Emperor, not to be behindhand, has conferred it upon his spouse, presumably as a reward for her maternal care of the royal offspring.

On January 18, the anniversary of the founding of the order, the Emperor will, according to the immemorial custom, assemble all the cavaliers of the order in a solemn chapter, when the newly designated members will also be in attendance. The dress of the cavaliers of the order of this ceremony is extremely picturesque, being full gala uniform, over which is worn a long, trailing, red velvet mantle, lined with light-blue silk and tied in front with strings of gold. On the left breast of the mantle glitters the star of the order, while the cross hangs around the neck upon a golden chain. Such a chapter includes all the great men of the Empire—the Kaiser, Graf Helmuth Von Moltke, Prince Bismarck and an array of princes, nobles and potentates such as one sees nowhere else. The novices are led to the foot of the throne, where they kneel and receive from their sovereign's sword the traditional stroke to the accompanying words: "Besser Ritter als Knecht." They are then invested with the mantle, chain and star, and receive the greetings of those around, and the "kiss and handshake" of the cavaliers.

The Order of the Black Eagle ranks as the very first among the decorations at the Prussian capital. The decoration itself is a golden cross with blue enamel, octagonally pointed, and in the center a black eagle on an orange-colored field, the whole surmounted by the inscription "Suum cuique," girdled with laurel leaves. The chain has twelve black eagles in gold and twelve shields with emblematic devices, all of exquisite workmanship. The star is of silver, eight-pointed or rayed, and has in the center the black eagle with inscription and laurel, similar to the cross.—Berlin Cor. Chicago News.

AFTER THE RELEASE.

The Sensations of Soldiers Upon Leaving Libby Prison.

In Captain Bliss' "Reminiscences of Service in the First Rhode Island Cavalry" a few pages are devoted to the four months the author passed in Libby prison, and especially to his and his comrades' experiences upon being exchanged and sent within the Union lines.

Nine commissioned officers and about a thousand private soldiers were put upon a flag-of-truce boat and went down the river toward "that happy land which a prisoner always called 'God's country.'"

As I looked at my fellow-prisoners I noticed that their confinement and hardships seemed to have taken the human expression out of their features, and substituted for it the fierce and brutal appearance of hungry animals. I saw two men fighting for a bone such as a well-fed dog would not have looked at, and yet they knew that they would soon be within the Union lines and supplied with abundant food.

The Confederate officials upon the boat treated our little squad of officers very kindly, calling us into a little room where they gave us some excellent boiled mutton and some corn-bread of the finest quality. As the place was rather crowded I stepped out of the door with the food in my hands. Instantly a soldier rushed toward me, with both hands extended to seize the food, and, without saying a word, I gave it to him.

"Excuse me, sir," he said. "When I saw that food I could not resist the temptation to reach forward and seize it. I was a man once; I am only a brute now; only the animal instincts remain."

I have always regretted that I did not learn this soldier's name. It was no common mind that could realize at such a moment the degradation to which his sufferings had reduced him.

I can not describe the scene when these weary and broken prisoners first caught sight of the old flag. Tears streamed down the cheeks of men who had endured prison hardship and suffering without a murmur. That flag was to them not only the symbol of their country—it represented home, food, friends and all that could render life desirable.

On board our own flag-of-truce boat hot coffee and abundant food was at once furnished to the released men, who were so excited with joy that they could not sleep when night came; hardly a man of them closed his eyes for twenty-four hours.—Youth's Companion.

—A rather amusing incident occurred during the Yale game. One of our ushers had been kicked in the head by a Yale player as he lay on the ground. On rising he expostulated with his adversary who, advancing his lower jaw with that peculiar Yale accent, replied: "Ah, wot d'ye tink yez playing, checkers?"—Columbus Spectator.

TELL YOUR MOTHER.

A Bit of Advice to Silly and Romantic Young Women.

I wonder how many girls tell their mothers every thing! Not those "young ladies," who, going to and from school, smile, bow and exchange notes and cartes de visite with young men who make fun of you and your pictures, speaking in a way that would make your cheeks burn with shame if you heard it. All this, most incredulous and romantic young ladies, they will do, although they gaze at your fresh young faces admiringly, and send or give your charming verses or boquets. No matter "what other girls may do," don't you do it. School-girl flirtation may end disastrously, as many a foolish and wretched young girl can tell you. Your yearning for some one to love is a great need of a woman's heart. But there is a time for every thing. Do not let the bloom and freshness of your heart be brushed off in silly flirtation.

And, above all, tell your mother every thing. "Fun" in your dictionary would be indiscretion in hers. It would do no harm to look and see. Never be ashamed to tell her, who should be your best friend and confidant, all you think and feel. It is very strange that so many young girls will tell every person before "mother" that which is most important she should know. It is very sad that indifferent persons should know more about her fair young daughter than she herself. Have no secrets that you would not be willing to trust to your mother. She is your best friend, and is ever devoted to your honor and interest. Tell her all.—Fanny Fern.

"THE CURSE OF SLANG."

A Fair Girl Graduate Illustrates the Truth of Her Essay's Title.

"Mamie," said a grammar-school girl to a member of the graduating class, "have you finished your essay?"

"O, yes," gushed Mamie; "and it is too lovely for anything—a princess slip of white surah, the back cut off a little below the waist line, and full breadths of silk gathered in so as to hang gracefully over the tornure, and three bias ruffles on the——"

"Why, what are you talking about?" interrupted her friend. "I mean, have you finished writing your essay, you know?"

"Er—no," said Mamie, her enthusiasm rapidly diminishing; "but I have begun it, and I wish the awful thing was in Halifax!"

"What's the subject?"

"The Curse of Slang."

"Gracious! Isn't that a difficult subject to write up?"

"Difficult! Well, I should giggle! I'll have to hump myself to get it finished in time for the commencement, and I've a good notion to let it slide. I might shut up the Professor's optic by pleading illness, but I'm not that sort of a hairpin. But come, waltz up into my room and look at my stunning graduating harness. It'll paralyze you."—Norristown Herald.

RACHEL'S CUPIDITY.

How the Great Jewish Actress Solicited Valuable Gifts.

Rachel, the famous tragedienne, was as avaricious as she was gifted. On one occasion she was invited to dine at the house of a wealthy Parisian who worshipped her genius. Observing a magnificent boquet of flowers that adorned the center of the table she exclaimed: "How lovely!"

"Pardon, mademoiselle," said her host with true French gallantry, "permettez moi de vous presenter cela," at the same time lifting the flowers out of the massive silver vase in which they rested.

"But, monsieur," said Rachel, "twas the vase that I admired."

"Parfaitment, c'est a vous aussi, (this is yours also)" said the ever-polite host.

When the repast was finished she asked her friend to send her home in his own carriage, as she was afraid some one might rob her of her silver vase if she returned in a public cab.

He assented readily, but as he handed her into the vehicle he said imploringly: "You will at least return my carriage, will you not, mademoiselle?"

It may be presumed that the coach came back.—Texas Siftings.

WILL SHOW UP.

A Prominent Citizen Contemplates a Surprise for Chicago Detectives.

"I'm going to Chicago to show myself," said a conspicuous, talkative passenger to a crowd of listeners in the smoking car. What for? Well, I'll tell you. 'Tain't because I'm proud of my personal appearance, though folks do say I'm a man that's likely to attract attention in a crowd. You see, there's five or six men up in Chicago who have been looking for me for a month, at least, so I have heard. Why they haven't found me is more than I can imagine. I live only fifty miles from Chicago, in a right smart of a town. I'm quite a prominent citizen, too. There ain't nobody down my way that don't know me. My name is frequently in the papers. There isn't a conductor or brakeman on the railroad who doesn't know me by sight, and most of 'em to talk to. Yet these Chicago fellows haven't been able to find me. I haven't any idea on earth what they want to see me about, but I'm going up to Chicago to show myself just for fun."

"Who are these fellows who have been looking for you?"

"City hall detectives."—Chicago Herald.

A New Sort of Engineer.

Mrs. Bagley—Who was that young man we met yesterday at the Academy of Fine Arts, William?

Bagley—That was Ironhead, of Chicago. He is a civil engineer.

Mrs. B. (with asperity)—I don't think he is, William.

Bagley—Why, Clara, I have known him for five years——

Mrs. B. (decisively)—Pardon me, William, but I know better. In the course of fifteen minutes' conversation he contradicted me at least four times. If that wasn't incivility, what was it?—Philadelphia Call.

IN THE SUNDAY-SCHOOL.

A Young Sprig of the Law Has His First Experience as a Teacher.

"Why, dear me, if it isn't almost three o'clock! I've got to start right off to Sunday-school! I've got a class, you know! You'll come along, too, won't you, George? You must come! You need it sadly enough, goodness knows!"

This was Eva. Eva is sort of a seventh cousin of mine, with a charming home just out of town, and I was Sundaying there. Eva's papa has just gone in pretty vehemently on an iron mine up in Michigan; and, you see, I'm nursing Eva along, so to speak, till I see what that mine is going to do. So I said: "Why, I assure you, nothing could give me greater pleasure."

So we went; and I, with the accustomed modesty of my profession (the law,) slunk into a back seat with the intention of quietly twirling my thumbs and otherwise utilizing the time.

But hark!—a stealthy tread—'tis the superintendent!

"I am very much in need of another teacher; one of my teachers is away today, and won't you be good enough to take his place?"

"Well, I should rather say not!" I remarked to my inner self, while outwardly I stammered: "Why—thank you, sir—but, really—it has been so long since I had such a pleasure—that—really, I fear I could scarcely—do the subject justice."

But the superintendent was quite sure, etc.; and after about five minutes of this fascinating debate, during which what seemed to me about a thousand eyes were feasting upon my glowing features—my temperature having gone from eighty-five to the neighborhood of eight hundred—my charming seventh cousin came swaying swan-like down the aisle, saying:

"O, do ask him to take a class; he teaches a class beautifully; only he needs a little urging!"

"O, Sapphira, Sapphira, how the modern nineteen-year-old, brown-eyed Sunday-school teacher can leave you behind when she wants to!"

"You just take lesson paper and ask the questions; they're all printed there, you see, and they answer them, and that's all!"

I looked toward the door, but two corpulent females stood there in protracted converse. To squeeze between them was impossible. The lowness of the lintel precluded a wild leap over their heads, the windows were closed and calked with cotton since the winter. So I walked meekly down the aisle, my heart throbbing with religious emotion, and took my place before my class. There they sat—ten boys of them, waiting for the fray. I seized the lesson paper, there they were, just ten questions of them, waiting to be asked. With an impressive Sabbatical intonation I began dealing out the ten interrogations from left to right. Regarding the accuracy of the answers the brevity of my preparation did not permit me to form an authoritative opinion. Regarding their speed there could be no question; and hardly had I begun before I found myself at the last boy, and my last question was used up. I looked around at the superintendent to see if he showed signs of closing the office, but he appeared to be right in the midst of business hours and was holding a very cheerful conversation with my aforementioned Sapphiratical relative.

I gazed about at the other teachers; they were all deep in the instruction of youth. The time for folding your tents, like the Arabs, had evidently not yet arrived. It was safe to say that I'd got to ask that class some more questions. Bright thought! I'll begin at the other end. So I did, reading the meager words as slowly and lingeringly as possible. But there I was again at the last boy. I peered anxiously around. The superintendent was still chatting with enchanting obliviousness; his able corps of assistants were still in the heat and din of the engagement.

"Boys," said I, striving as best I could to conceal my emotion, "how long does this last?"

"Till four."

I shot an eager glance at the ecclesiastical time-piece over my head; it was seventeen minutes past three.

"My good"—but I checked myself. I was way up in front, where every body could see. I'd got to keep things moving, or there'd be no end of scandal. Calling up all the resources of a well disciplined mind, I speedily hit upon another plan, and asked my ten precious questions all over again, making the boys answer in concert. This got rid of several minutes. It was now twenty-six minutes past three. An awkward pause; a moment of intense thought; then I had them answer, beginning at the last question and going backward. Then I had all the boys over twelve years of age recite in turn; then all under twelve. It was now nineteen minutes of four.

Then I began again at the first question, making each boy stand up and face the opposite wall, while he answered. Thirteen minutes and twenty-nine seconds of four!

"Boys," said I, beginning to warm to the work; "now stand up and answer these questions again, lifting your right foot off the floor as you do so; now your left foot; now both feet." Six minutes eighteen and nine-tenth seconds of four!

"Boys," said I, mopping my dewy brow, "I will ask you these questions again; and, as each one is called up, he must first stand on his feet and repeat his answer backward; and then stand on his head and repeat it sideways."

I had only, however, got as far as the fourth boy when the bell rang and the school closed.

This happened three months ago, but my physician tells me it will yet be a long time before I can endure any severe mental strain; and that I must not think of resuming the onerous duties of my profession. I tell you this is pretty hard, when I had such a fine start, with a nice, light office and an upholstered swivel-chair; and my letter-heads all printed and every thing all ready for a case.—J. P. Lyons, in Puck.

DIGNITY OF LABOR.

An Eloquent Appeal to Those Unfortunates Who Can "Find Nothing to Do."

There is dignity in labor. It does not narrow down the mental powers and the individual dignity, as is too often asserted; but if pursued with a proper appreciation of its incalculable assistance to human happiness, and made subservient to the great plan of human life, is ennobling, and itself exalted.

An idle man no more respects himself than do others respect him. He feels that he is a fit and exposed object for others' jeers and light remarks. He lacks an internal feeling of dignity, that is the noblest of all the impulses by which he is controlled and his life made a bright example. He sees others at work around him, and feels a sense of isolation come over him that is perpetually gnawing at the huge pile of happiness he had laid away for the good time when he should have nothing to do. In his expected happiness he is of all men most miserable. Something is wanting to give a zest to the pleasures he is continually trying to enter upon. There hangs an undefined and undefinable gloom about his horizon. His blood flows sluggishly. He looks forward to nothing, because his all is right about him in the stagnant present. His pleasures pall on his taste. He is cloyed with the very sweetness he had so wistfully coveted. He envies the jolly, red-faced draymen, dragging at their loads of boxes, bales and barrels. The very sweep looks happy to his eye, because he seems to go into his work with signs of animation. Oh! the misery of literally having nothing to do! nothing to do!

Some drones are always hanging about the doors of the world's busy hive, complaining that they can find nothing to do; that the avenues to distinction, to fortune and to happiness are all choked up with the jostling masses. This has ever been the lamentation of these pitiful fellows since the world began to revolve on its axis. Can find nothing to do? Look about you and see! Have you looked yet? If you have, have you looked as a laborer would go about the work actually before him? There is room enough in the wide world for all the willing hands that wish to go into the fields of labor. But you can not find work by waiting for it. It does not walk round to every man, carrying its own polite note of invitation. It comes only of seeking and of asking. Its skirts are got hold of by the assistance of a strong will. Your practical men are always busy about something. They are not dreamers. They put their hand to whatever comes uppermost, whether it be the flail or the sledge, the hoe or the chisel, and so they take their rank with the rest of the world's workers. But the professed genius is meanwhile dreaming over its prospects, building its peopled castles, waving its wand backward and forward over the whole earth, in hopes that something fortunate may turn up of itself.

To this numerous class we heartily commend the following short passage from an eloquent oration delivered some time since. Read it and reflect upon it, that some profit may grow from the same:

"Sit not with folded hands calling on Hercules. Thine own arm is the demigod. It was given to thee to help thyself. Exalt thine adopted profession, nor vainly hope that its name alone will exalt thee. Look on labor as honorable, and dignify the task before thee, whether it be in the study, office, counting-room, workshop or furrowed field. There is an equality in all, and the resolute will and pure heart may enoble either.

"But no duty requires thee to shut out beauty, or to neglect the influences that may unite with Heaven. The wonders of art will humanize the calling. The true poet may make thee a better man, and unknown feelings will well up within thee, where the painter's soul glows on canvass, and the almost breathing marble stands a glorious monument of the statuary's skill.

"Nature, too, will speak kindly to thee from field and forest, from hill and lakeside. Go into glade and woodland, by the waving harvest, and the bright river hurrying to the sea. Look up at the stars in the still night. Listen to the gentle voice of the south wind, as it whispers with the pines. Watch the pulsations of the ocean, as they regularly beat on the sand. Such teachings will tell thee there is consolation in the struggles of this life, and may foreshadow the repose of that which is to come."—Boston Budget.

There May Be a Slip.

Sardonicus—I should thing there would be more embezzlement in summer than in winter.

Ukerdek—And why?

Sardonicus—The weather is so much nicer in Canada.

Ukerdek—Yes, but the jails are a great deal more uncomfortable in warm weather than in cool.—Detroit Free Press.

—The export of silver from the United States since 1848 has amounted to $451,746,771.

THE MULE STRUCK OUT.

That Is Why Headless Chickens Were Picked Up in Virginia.

There has been considerable gold found recently several miles north of the District line, and several shafts have been sunk on various properties, all of which, to use the usual language of the boom, "exceed the most sanguine expectations of the promoters." Several farmers out near the seat of disturbance have been earning considerable money hauling ore from the shaft to Senator Sawyer's stamp mill, a few miles away. The shafts are sunk and the ore extracted by the usual methods of drilling and blasting. For the latter purpose nitro-glycerine is used.

One of the teamsters put several empty nitro-glycerine cans in his cart and took them to his home, near Takoma Park, last week, intending to clean them up and make pails of them. He set them down in the barn yard while he was putting up the mules. A half grown hog saw the cans, walked up and nuzzled them around. About a gill of the stuff had collected in the bottom of each, and the pig licked it down. It has a sweet flavor and is medicinal. Then the farmer came out, picked up the cans and took them into the house. The pig chewed up a stray ear of corn, a dead rat, some corn husks and two or three other delicacies and ambled into the barn. Perhaps nothing would have happened if the razor back had been gifted with ordinary intelligence, but what would possess him under the circumstances to go and scratch his back against the post of the off mule's stall is past understanding. Now, mules are only human; they are not exempt from or above the foibles of mankind.

When things go wrong with them they make the welkin ring with their wild Homeric "Hee-aw! hee-aw! hee-aw!" and then kick like a Queen Anne musket. So when the off mule looked around and saw the pig scratching his back six inches from his heels he straightened his neck, closed his eyes in brief and silent prayer, swung his sinister limb up over his shoulder and then struck out like Kelly at the bat. The pig described a beautiful parabola, screaming all the time like a 300 pound shell from one of Admiral Porter's mortars, sailed out through the barn doors on a flat trajectory and struck on top of the hen house.

Then came a clap of thunder sound; the pig, O, where was he? Ask of the winds which whistled round the heavens and the sea. The nitro-glycerine had exploded, slaying pig, hen house and poultry into the middle of Ballyhack. There hasn't a piece of that pig been found big enough to hold an inquest on, nor a piece of hen house big enough for a hen to pick her teeth on, and a colored man was arrested on Long bridge the other day for having in a bag some headless chickens, which he confesses he picked up over in Virginia.—Washington Post.

Shocking Depravity.

Benevolent Old Lady (to little girl)—My little dear, do you wash your face and hands every morning?

"No, mum."

"Good gracious! That's perfectly dreadful. Do you wash your face in the middle of the day?"

"No, mum."

"Dear me! When do you wash yourself?"

"I never washes."

"Horrible! It is shocking how depraved the lower classes are! I must organize a society to see that children are properly washed. Tell me, little one, do you really never wash yourself?"

"No, mum, mamma washes me every morning."—Texas Siftings.

An Excuse That Excused.

Miss Elder—Why were you not at my birthday reception yesterday, Mr. Smithers? Didn't you receive your card?

Mr. Smithers—Yes, but I mislaid it.

Miss Elder—But didn't you remember the date?

Mr. Smithers (without malice)—I thought I did until I heard a gentleman say that you were not born yesterday.—Life.

Love's Madness.

Madeleine (fondly)—George, dearest, I could not make out your last love letter at all. It was full of the queerest marks.

George (a very young M. D.)—Good heavens! I have sent you a prescription and have given your letter to the prescription clerk! And the patient died.

(Falls in convulsions.)—Pittsburg Bulletin.

No One's Death Desired.

Landlord (to departing guest)—I trust I may rely upon your recommending my establishment?

Guest—I don't happen to have at this moment a mortal enemy in the world!—Humoristische Blaetter.

Her Idea of Nervousness.

"I felt so nervous, mamma," said a little girl, referring to an accident of the previous day.

"What do you mean by 'nervous,' my dear?"

"Why, mamma, it's just being in a hurry all over."—London Tid Bits.

Subtle Grief.

"And your husband fell from the Eiffel tower?"

"Yes. How I wish it had been taller!"

"Monster! You rejoice at his death?"

"Sir, you insult me! I wanted him to live longer."—Munsey's Weekly.

So Glad.

She (at the mint)—Ah, now I know, Harry, why I think you as good as gold.

He—Oh, get out!

She—No, but you are really. You are pressed for money, you know.—Boston Transcript.

Negative Evidence.

Barber—Excuse me, sir; but did I cut you?

Victim (feeling the blood trickle down his cheek)—I didn't hear any firearms go off.—Time.

Sweet Consent.

Deep in her eyes of bonnie blue
I saw the lovelight shine;
"Sweet love," I softly asked, "will you
Be mine?"

She raised her head and breathed a sigh,
Her eyes with tears were wet,
And blushingly she made reply,
"You bet!" —Boston Courier.

VISITING CARDS.

Their Introduction Not so Much a Matter of Invention as of Evolution.

It is not easy to determine with precision where and when visiting and invitation cards originated in Europe. In reality they were not so much a matter of invention as of evolution. The first person who utilized the white back of the playing card to write his name on when he failed to find his friend at home, or to leave a message or invitation for him, would, were he known, be entitled to the title of "inventor." We know that in England these cards had their origin in the way indicated. Dr. Carlton, in English Notes and Queries, says that in examining a lot of old papers he came across a number of such cards dated 1752-1764, many of which were printed from English copper-plates on the backs of old playing cards. The visiting cards were small, the cards having been cut, and those of the Earl and Countess of Northumberland were printed on the back of the trey of clubs and of the queen of diamonds respectively. The invitations to card-parties, printed from copper-plates, were large enough to cover the whole back of a playing card. The Duchess of Grafton's card is printed on the back of the ace of hearts, and Lady Northumberland's on the back of the ten of spades and ten of hearts. At the bottom of the latter are added the words: "Without hoops if agreeable." It is presumed the huge hoops of those days impeded access to the card-table. It would appear that the use of such invitation-cards, especially in connection with card-parties, had become established in London in the first half of the eighteenth century. Previously, invitations to such parties were wont to be sent verbally through servants. The writing on the back of playing cards was to prevent mistakes as well as from an appreciation of the symbolical appropriateness of the form. Cardboard proper, as we know it, had not yet been invented. The custom was found convenient, and so was extended to calling-cards, and became fashionable. Some thirty-five years ago a house in Dean street, Soho, the residence of either Hogarth (1698-1764) or his father-in-law, was in course of repair. On removing a marble chimney-piece in the front drawing-room four or five playing cards were found, on the back of which names were written—one that of Sir Isaac Newton (born 1642). It has been conjectured these were visiting cards; but it is really doubtful whether the philosopher would have employed such. Might they not have been produced by the artist as studies for his art? In plate IV of his Marriage-a-la-Mode, several such cards are represented lying on the floor in the right hand corner of the picture. On one, the painter, with his wonted caustic humor, has satirized the ignorance of the upper classes by inscribing on it the following ingeniously misspelled polite inquiry: "Count Basset begs to no how Lade Squander sleapt last nite." In a novel called the "Spiritual Quixote," published in Bath in 1766—the scenes being laid in that city in the time of Beau Nash, who died 1760—a preacher is called to account because, while he is continually inveighing against gaming, he has in his pocket a pack of soiled cards ready for his engagements or pleasures. A note says: "A set of blank cards has since been invented by which the above absurdities may be avoided." This note seems to date the substitution of visiting cards proper for inscribed playing cards. Nor must we overlook the passage in chapter 12 of St. Ronan's Well, in which "the Captain presented to Lucky Dodds the fifth part of an ordinary playing-card much grimed with snuff, which bore on the blank side his name and quality." Whether Ben Johnson's expression: "You shall cartel him" points to an earlier use of these cards in affairs of honor, we do not take it on us to decide.—American Notes and Queries.

THE AQUATIC SPIDER.

How It Prepares Itself for an Attack On Its Unsuspecting Prey.

While their nearly constant abode is the water, they are, like most other spiders, air-breathers; consequently they need some special provision for providing themselves with air while living under the water, and for this purpose they possess the art of constructing a kind of diving-bell. It is an interesting sight to witness one of them making his air-cell. Clinging to the lower side of a few leaves, and securing them in position by spinning a few threads, the spider rises to the level of the water, with its belly uppermost, and, doubling up its hind-legs, retains a stratum of air among the hairs with which its body is covered. Then it plunges into the water and appears as in the first stage of the making of its silvery robe. Going immediately to the spot it had chosen, it brushes its body with its paws, when the air detaches itself and forms a bubble under the leaf. The spider surrounds this bubble with the impermeable silky matter furnished by its spinneret. Returning to the surface, it takes in another layer of air, which it carries down and adds to the first one, also extending the envelope over it. The process is kept up till the "diving-bell" has reached the proper size and is finished. The ideal form of the construction is that of a thimble, but it often assumes an irregular shape, like an inverted sack. When the spider has taken possession of its redoubt it remains quiet in it, head down, watching for the appearance of an insect. Perceiving one, it seizes it and returns to its lodge, which it has secured against intruders by spinning threads across it, to devour its prey at its leisure.—M. Emile Blanchard, in Popular Science Monthly.

THE GAMBLING MANIA.

An Evil Which Is Spreading Everywhere to an Alarming Extent.

The effect of the existing bucket shop craze upon the boys and young men in every branch of industry in down-town New York is its most serious aspect. It is catching among them, and they are putting in many a dollar that they do not take out. Every little while one of them makes a lucky hit, and all of his comrades hear of it and get the fever. The boy of the period can buy a share of stock, or a barrel of oil or a bushel of grain on paper for a dollar, or ten shares for $10 or 100 shares for $100. He is an office boy or a clerk on $5 or $10 a week. He makes a lucky hit, and finds himself a few dollars ahead. He neglects his work or throws up his situation, or hangs on, thinking of nothing but the bucket shop and its easy method of giving him money. All notions of honest, old-fashioned work leave his brain, and he becomes good for nothing at a very early age.

The craze for betting on horse races has grown apace since the mutual pool system has become so common. The old-fashioned auction pool is yet very popular with those who desire to wager any considerable sums of money, but the mutual pools admit of buying chances for the small sum of $1, and that $1 may return the investor any sum from itself to $20 or even $50. The common mutual pool ticket costs $5 and the next most popular one $3. It is common enough for these to pay ten or twenty times their price, and fascination of big possible winnings on small investments is what makes the race tracks so successful hereabouts. The result of this craze, which has grown like a volcano since the pool bill became a law, is the establishment of hundreds of places in the city where tickets may be had on the sly. It promises to develop yet more as the season advances. With the tracks at Jerome Park, Sheepshead Bay, Gravesend, Brighton, Monmouth Park, Guttenburg and Clifton, there isn't a day save Sunday, from April to January, in which there are not races. Hundreds of people flock to them to bet, and thousands stay at home and bet through the track's agents and the city pool selling places.

It may be added the bar-rooms are constantly adding devices and machines of chance with which luck may be tempted, the defeated ones to pay for the drinks, of course. It is plain, too, that the idlers in the parks and the newsboys and bootblacks in the alleys are pitching pennies to a degree never before noticed. It is also common enough to see two well dressed men seat themselves in a horse car and then proceed gravely to match dimes to see which man pays the fare of both. So in little things as well as in more extensive transactions the mania to gamble crops out and becomes more conspicuous.—N. Y. Cor. Providence Journal.

USES OF SLATE.

Various Purposes to Which This Serviceable Substance Is Devoted.

Slate is not confined to its use as a roofing material by any means, but, on the contrary, is probably more universally used than any other stone. In composition and texture, it is admirably adapted to the reception of carved and molded designs, is susceptible of a high polish, and possesses great power of resistance to the principal destructive elements, besides having the additional merit of wide range of color, embracing black, dark blue, purple, purple-clouded green, gray-clouded green, light green and a clear, bright red. The scope of consumption is rapidly expanding, and among the uses to which slate is applied the following may be enumerated: Flagging, flooring, floor tiles, molding for tiles, vestibule trimmings, slabs, etc., wainscoting, mantels, hearthstones, steps, risers, platforms, sills and lintels, turned balusters, laundry and bath tubs, sinks and water trays, meat and water tanks, refrigerator and cooling-room shelves, cistern linings, brewers' vats, mangers, butchers' and curriers' tables, bar fixtures, billiard table beds, urinals, school slates and blackboards, countertops, vault work, grave linings and covers and memorial tablets. Of the above, no record of production or value can be obtained that would prove at all useful as a basis for estimates. Possibly, a faint idea of the proportions devoted to these various uses might be obtained from the production of the Slatington (Pa.) section, where, besides an output of 108,000 squares of roofing slate, there were also made (in 1885), in round numbers, 39,900 cases of school slates, 31,850 pieces, or 1,430 cases, or 27 carloads, of flagging, 5,900 cases of blackboards, 30 cases of mantels and hearths and 47 carloads of shaved slate.—Mineral Resources.

LITTLE'S
CHEMICAL FLUID
NON-POISONOUS
SHEEP DIP.
One gallon, mixed with 60 gallons of cold water will dip thoroughly 180 sheep, at a cost of 1 cent each. Easily applied: a nourisher of Wool; a certain cure for SCAB. Also,
Little's Patent Powder Dip,
(Poisonous.)
Mixes instantly with water. Prevents the fly from striking. In a 2-pound package there is sufficient to dip twenty sheep, and in a 7-pound package there is sufficient to dip one hundred sheep.
CATTON, BELL & CO.
SUCCESSORS TO FALKNER, BELL & CO.
Office, 406 California St. and Wool Agency Warehouse, cor. 6th and Townsend Sts.
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

C. Mulholland,
EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.
PUBLISHED EVERY FRIDAY

INDEPENDENCE, CAL

FRIDAY APRIL 25 1890

County Official Paper.

FRESH AIR FOR CONSUMPTIVES.

Beneficial Treatment of Victims of the Disease in a Western Hospital.

Last year 289 patients, mostly adults, died of consumption in this community. In comparison with the consumption death rate in other northern cities this number of deaths is small. Under proper living the average of twenty-four deaths a month from consumption could be reduced one-half.

Consumption can be cured. It can be prevented. It is essentially a disease of bad air and poor nourishment. It has its specific germ, but this may be rendered harmless except in the case of the few who are most strongly predisposed to the disease. Drugs in the strict sense are of no sort of value in this disease, but in an abundance of pure air and much outdoor life, combined with nourishing food, there is ample security in the most of cases.

The person predisposed to consumption should spend all available time in the open air. He should become a fanatic on the subject of ventilation and on maintaining an equable temperature, as low as he can bear without absolute discomfort, in his living rooms. He should, and everybody should, make it an invariable rule to inflate his lungs fully and frequently every day. The person who has charge of a consumptive should never falter in the belief that consumption is a communicable disease. He should go into the air frequently and inflate his lungs to their capacity. He should use disinfectants freely. "Live out of doors and have nourishing food" is a direction which, if followed, would make a great reduction in the consumptive mortality.

The success of Dr. Detweiler's consumption hospital, at Falkenstein, is so positive that there is little doubt that he has found the proper means of dealing with this disease which carries away more than a hundred thousand lives in a year in this country alone. His method, in brief, is to keep the patient either lying or walking in the open air almost day and night, and to give them a rich, liberal and peculiarly adapted diet. He uses milk freely, and wine and brandy under careful regulations. All cases cannot be treated alike in every detail. Some consumptives cannot endure the cold; in some cases it is necessary to use compressed and in others "dilated" air. But in the main the patient is made to spend many hours every day lying, profusely covered, on a lounge placed on a veranda, even in the coldest weather. Some spend eleven hours a day in this way.

Massage is systematically applied, daily rubbing down, and the cold douche where patients can stand it. The diet is carefully regulated to tempt the digestion. The meals consist of breakfast from 7 to half-past 8, a second breakfast at 10, dinner at 1, fresh milk at 4, and a warm supper at 7. The food is "cooked rather rich," and is so appetizing that 80 per cent. of the patients gain an average of ten pounds in three months. The average patient takes nearly a bottle of claret, Rhine or Hungarian wine daily, while others are given two teaspoonfuls of brandy every hour or two and a glass of brandy milk punch on retiring. The patients sleep with their window wide open at night, no matter how cold the weather.

This hospital is near Frankfort, where the climatic conditions are not particularly favorable and where the seasons are no less severe than here. It is just as tolerable to live outdoors here as there.

From this brief report of the methods of Dr. Dettweiler the reader can make certain rules concerning the consumptive patient whose case has not reached the severe stages. The two essential rules are to have the patient live in the open air and to supply him with nourishing food.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Indian Horsemanship.

There are some points in Indian horsemanship that deserve mention here. To begin with he always mounts from the off (right) side of his horse instead of the near side, as we do. The only reason why the cavalry man has not been taught for centuries to mount from both sides is that his saber, swinging from the waist belt on his own left side, was in the way. Now that we are attaching the saber to the saddle instead of the trooper, it will probably lead to practice on both sides. West Point has already begun it. The Indian, once in his saddle, wrapped in his blanket, is a depressing sight. He sits hunched up on his pony, his knees way up, his feet thrust far into the stirrups not unlike those of ladies' saddles. He looks utterly awkward and ungraceful as he jogs along, flapping perpetually with his wooden handled whiplashes at the right flank of his steed; but the instant he clears for action, throws off his blanket and darts out over the prairie, he is transfigured.

More daring, graceful, swaying horsemanship it would be almost impossible to conceive of. You forget the bunched up knees in the freedom and flexibility of his lithe, painted body. You marvel at the cat like agility with which he bounds on or off his dashing pony, ducks under or down on either side, firing under his neck as he whirls across the springy turf, but you have only to remember that it is all second nature to him. He began to ride the moment he was loosened from the bonds of the pappoose board and has been at it ever since. Many of them, especially among the Snakes or Shoshones, are wofully bow legged as a consequence and most ungainly bipeds when afoot.—Colman's Rural World.

Land Worth $3,000,000 an Acre.

The highest price ever paid for a piece of Chicago real estate was that given by Mr. H. H. Kohlsaat for the northwest corner of Dearborn and Madison streets. The dimensions of the property are 20 by 40 feet, and the price paid was $150,000, which is equivalent to $7,500 per front foot, $187.50 per square foot, $1.30 per square inch, or about $8,000,000 per acre.—Chicago Journal.

DECAY OF TRADITION.

The Invention of Writing Seems to Have Put An End to Folk Lore.

It is said that the invention of writing injured the power of memory, and years ago, before the schoolmaster was abroad as he is nowadays, it was possible to meet with many instances of strong memorizing capacity among persons who could neither read nor write. Complicated accounts could be kept by the aid of a "tally" only, and the memory of many a small farmer or petty rural shop keeper was his only ledger and order book. It is certain that since the art of writing has become an almost universal accomplishment the faculty of memory, being less needed, is less cultivated. Long after the invention of letters our forefathers rested much upon oral tradition. Antiquarians assert that one of the ancient races of Italy possessed no written language, and even where written characters were in use oral tradition formed an important supplement to them. "Folk lore" tales and ballads have been handed down from lip to lip for centuries with curious fidelity.

When oral tradition was recognized as a vehicle for actual information more care was taken regarding its accuracy than would be the case in these days. The old reciters jealously guarded a time honored form of words, even in their prose narratives. Breton peasants, notably those who possess a talent as raconteurs, will repeat a legend or a story with scrupulous fidelity to the established form in which they have always heard the incidents related, and will check a traveler who attempts to deviate from the orthodox version with "nay, monsieur, the story should begin thus," repeating the regular form of the tale. The eastern story teller deviates little in his time honored recitals of tales of love, adventure and magic; we recognize all our old friends from the "Arabian Nights" if we halt to listen to a professional raconteur in the streets of any Oriental town. In the days of "war against proscribed books" faithful memories were often utilized to preserve prohibited works from oblivion. During the persecution of the Waldenses, in the Thirteenth century, when their version of the Scriptures was prohibited and destroyed wherever found, their ministers committed whole books of the sacred volume to memory, and repeated chapters at their religious meetings. It would be tedious to enumerate the many instances in which tradition has preserved what written histories were forbidden to chronicle.

On the whole, oral traditions are strangely accurate; strangely, when we consider how facts are frequently altered and distorted when occurrences are related by different story tellers. The child's game of "Russian scandal" (in which a secret whispered to one person and repeated to a circle of others, is usually altered out of recognition when repeated aloud by the last hearer) is played every day in society. And yet local tradition will faithfully chronicle the site of a battle, the burial place of a hero, the date of a siege, and sometimes, after generations of historians and antiquarians have scoffed at the "unreliable local legend," a later investigation will discover that the despised traditional story was the true one after all. Centuries of repetition may have slightly added to the incidents or distorted some of the facts, but the main tale is strictly exact. The reputed "treasure trove" may prove but a trifling hoard, the battlefield smaller in extent, the graves of the heroes less numerous; but in each case local tradition is true regarding the facts that occurred and the localities where they took place.

Traditions may at least claim to be as accurate as written history; though this, perhaps, is faint praise. Oral tradition is usually free from conscious party bias. The repeaters of traditional lore carry on the tale as they heard it; but how many an eloquent historian appears to assume a brief for one side or another in every party contest, and to write his history with a view, not of elucidating facts, but of representing certain historical characters as angels or the reverse. Such writers are always the pleasantest to read; an "impartial historian" is sadly dull, as a rule; but when a biased writer plays the part of Clio, tradition may often prove the safer guide of the two. Folk lore, if not an altogether reliable guide, is seldom totally at fault in its statement of facts, and tradition has frequently kept alive memories which might otherwise have perished altogether. Books may be destroyed, and history willfully garbled, but it is less easy to extinguish local traditions.—Manchester Courier.

Prevalence of Superstition.

There is not one man in a thousand who can honestly and sincerely say that he is utterly free from superstition. He may not be ever impressed with signs and see omens in everything, but the chances are that if he put on a sock wrong side out, he will laugh at his own credulity, and not remove it, though he check the rising disposition to make the orthodox wish. He feels a sense of satisfaction that he sees the new moon for the first time over his right shoulder. The incident cannot do him any harm. Just now the reigning fad is to carry a rabbit foot around in one of the pockets. That will bring good luck according to the old colored superstition. Of course, a man says to himself that it is all nonsense, but the fool is not in the way, and somehow the man who would become indignant if you accused him of being superstitious continues to carry the African's favorite charm about with him. No man would deny that ex-Governor Crittenden is a man of education and culture, conspicuous in his church and presumably a Christian; yet he has for years carried in his pocket a rabbit foot, a buckeye and a petrified potato, and in the crown of his hat the buttons off of a rattlesnake's tail, each having its own mystic power of good. If there is one man carrying a rabbit foot about for luck I'll bet there are 10,000 in St. Louis.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

A Very Peculiar Ghost.

The people residing in the neighborhood of Brushy Ridge, this county, are greatly exercised over the reappearance there of what they claim to be a genuine ghost. It is said to be as large as a red fox and has four legs and a pair of wings. The strange and oddly shaped "spook" can both walk and fly, and make hideous cries at all times of night. The people of that locality are so terrorized by the unnatural being that they cannot be induced to venture from their homes at night.—Columbus (O.) Letter.

LIFE'S WANDERER.

Pass on, O tired wanderer!
Upon thy lonely way;
Thou must not pause a moment,
Till the closing of the day

Out there upon thy pathway,
The land is white with snow,
But ever, ever onward,
Thy weary feet must go.

Why dost thou stand here, wanderer,
And weep with bitter fear?
Why dost thy not go bravely on,
Without a sigh or tear?

Dost thy not know, O wanderer,
That just beyond thy sight
The soft, green grass is growing
And the sun shines warm and bright?

And when, at last, thou seest
Gold and purple in the west,
Thou mayst lie down, O wanderer,
To a long, long, peaceful rest!

And thou wilt know of grander things
When thou wakest from thy sleep;
Then, wanderer, thou wilt wonder
Why it was that thou didst weep.

Pass on, pass on, O wanderer,
Upon thy toilsome way!
Thou wilt rest in peace and happiness
At the closing of the day

—Zola M. Boyle.

A Brilliant Actress.

He (to Miss Breezy of Chicago)—Your friend Miss Wabash has made quite a success on the stage, has she not, Miss Breezy?

She—Oh, yes, she is very popular. Clara possesses an innate refinement of manner, an air gracious ness of demeanor, as it were, rarely seen even among those eminent in the profession.

He—Where is she playing now?

She—Nowhere at present. The last time I saw Clara she said that she was on her uppers.—The Epoch.

Retribution.

The shades of night were falling fast,
When through our sanctum sanctum passed
A youth half clad in snow and ice,
Who scorned the placard's bold device:—
SHUT THE DOOR!

The pressman in the cellar dim
At midnight dark discovered him.
Our chief the elevator shaft
Himself had opened to the draft,
Nor heeded there the legend trim:—
SHUT THE DOOR!

There in the gloom all cold and gray,
Lifeless, but beautiful, he lay;
While far above the legend shone,
Close by the sanctum telephone:—
SHUT THE DOOR!

MISCELLANEOUS.

BUHACH

THE UNRIVALED

Insect Exterminator

Manufactured solely from Pyrethrum flowers, grown in California, in a locality where the soil and climate are peculiarly adapted to the production of flowers rich in the essential oil which makes them so remarkably destructive to insect life.

Avoid the Worthless and Spurious Preparations, sold as Insect Powders, and use Buhach from original packages, and clear your premises of all Annoying and Destructive Insect Pests.

None Genuine Without the Trade Mark.

If your dealer doesn't keep it, order directly from the

Buhach Producing & Manufacturing COMPANY,
SOLE MANUFACTURERS,
STOCKTON, - - CALIFORNIA.

F. E. Bosworth,
Watchmaker & Jeweler.
BISHOP, CAL.

Fine and Complicated Watch Repairing a Specialty.

Guns, Sewing Machines, Organs and Music Boxes Put in Perfect Condition and Warranted.

I Prefer to do all work at your house and will call if you will write to me at Bishop.

Fresno and Merced County
Lands To Rent and For Sale.

75,000 Acres of Wheat and Sugar Beet Land in the above Counties, to rent for a term of years. Also,

100,000 Acres of Fine Raisin, Fruit, Alfalfa, and Sugar Beet Land, with water for irrigation, for sale in tracts of from 20 acres to large tracts suitable for Colony purposes.

For particulars, apply to
E. B. PERRIN,
402 Kearney Street, San Francisco
n 9-2m

IF YOU WISH A GOOD REVOLVER PURCHASE ONE OF SMITH & WESSON'S

Finest small arms ever manufactured and the first choice of all experts. In calibres 32, 38 and 44/100. Single or double action, Safety Hammerless and Target models. Best quality wrought steel, carefully finished for workmanship and stock. Unrivaled for finish, durability and accuracy. Do not be deceived by cheap malleable iron imitations often sold for the genuine article. They are unreliable and dangerous. The Smith & Wesson Revolvers are stamped upon the barrels with firm's name, address and dates of patents, and are guaranteed perfect. Insist upon having them, and if your dealer cannot supply you, an order sent to address below will receive prompt attention. Descriptive catalogue and prices upon application.

SMITH & WESSON,
Springfield, Mass.

SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN

is the oldest and most popular scientific and mechanical paper published and has the largest circulation of any paper of its class in the world. Fully illustrated. Best class of Wood Engravings. Published weekly. Send for specimen copy. Price $3a year. Four months' trial, $1. MUNN & CO., PUBLISHERS, 361 Broadway, N.Y.

ARCHITECTS & BUILDERS Edition of Scientific American.

A great success. Each issue contains colored lithographic plates of country and city residences or public buildings. Numerous engravings and full plans and specifications for the use of such as contemplate building. Price $2.50 a year, 25 cts. a copy. MUNN & CO., PUBLISHERS.

PATENTS may be secured by applying to MUNN & CO., who have had over 40 years' experience and have made over 150,000 applications for American and Foreign patents. Send for Handbook. Correspondence strictly confidential.

TRADE MARKS.

In case your mark is not registered in the Patent Office, apply to MUNN & CO., and procure immediate protection. Send for Handbook.

COPYRIGHTS for books, charts, maps etc., quickly procured. Address

MUNN & CO., Patent Solicitors.
GENERAL OFFICE 361 BROADWAY, N. Y

MISCELLANEOUS.

J. R. ELDRED,
Sheriff and Tax-Collector.
INYO CO., CAL.

P. H. MACK,
COUNTY CLERK,
—AND—
Ex-officio Auditor and Recorder,
INYO CO., CAL.

GEO. M. GILL,
District Attorney,
INYO CO., CAL.

J. J. MOORE,
County Treasurer,
INYO CO., CAL.

S. P. M'KNIGHT, C. E.
COUNTY SURVEYOR
—AND—
U. S. Deputy Mineral Surveyor
For California and Nevada.
—BISHOP CREEK, INYO CO., CAL.—

The obtaining of United States mineral patents a specialty.

All kinds of surveying given the most careful and accurate attention.

JUSTICE OF PEACE,
C. MULHOLLAND.
Office in the "INDEPENDENT" Building, Independence, Inyo County, Cal

A. R. CONKLIN,
Attorney-at-Law.
Independence, Cal.
Will practice in all the Courts of the States of California and Nevada.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
Independence, Cal.

P. W. FORBES,
ATTORNEY AT LAW.
NOTARY PUBLIC.
Cases in U. S. Land Office a Specialty.
BISHOP, INYO COUNTY, CALIFORNIA.

IRVING J. WOODIN, M D.,
Physician & Surgeon,
(COUNTY PHYSICIAN)
Louise L. Woodin, M. D.
PHYSICIAN & SURGEON.
NIGHT CALLS ATTENDED.
Office and residence at the Reddy place, Independence.

W. H. GEORGE, M. D.,
Physician and Surgeon,
Bishop Creek, Cal.,
Offers his professional services to the people of Bishop Creek and vicinity. Office and residence opposite Andrew Clark's.

F. E. Bunting, M. D.
Physician & Surgeon
LONE PINE, CAL
OFFICE IN GELCICH BUILDING
All calls attended to immediately.

Lodge 221, F. & A. M.

Regular meetings of Lodge No. 221, F. & A. M., for the year 1889, will be held at the Lodge room at Independence as follows:

Saturday ..... February 1st
" ..... March 1st
" ..... March 29th
" ..... May 3rd
" ..... May 31st
" ..... June 28th
" ..... July 26th
" ..... August 30th
" ..... September 27th
" ..... October 25th
" ..... November 22nd
" ..... December 20th

P. H. MACK, W. M.
C. MULHOLLAND Sec.

P. W FORBES. P. H. MACK.
MACK & FORBES.
Real Estate Agents,
Address,
P. H. MACK, Independence, Cal
P. W. FORBES, Bishop, Cal.

FRED BURCKHARDT
Watchmaker & Jeweler,
LONE PINE, CAL.

Time pieces of all descriptions repaired and regulated, satisfaction guaranteed. Jewelry made to order. Firearms repaired and loaded.

All orders from any part of the country will be promptly attended to, at the most reasonable charges. At the old stand "Mechanics' Hall," Lone Pine.

FRED BURKHARDT.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CROCKER'S HOTEL.
BIG PINE - CAL

New House.
New Furniture.
Low Rates

Splendid hunting and fishing near by, in act, it is a veritable paradise for tourists and pleasure seekers.

Special attention given to the wants of every guest.

CROCKER BROS., Props.
sep1-tf

ANTONS SALOON
KEELER, CAL.

BEER, WINES, LIQUORS and CIGARS.

All kinds of Fancy Drinks, including pure water. A comfortable and pleasant Hall.

JOHN C. ANTON. Prop.

Pioneer
Livery & Feed Stables.
INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

Having returned and resumed the management of the above well known feed and livery stables, patrons can be assured of finding there the best of Buggy Teams, Saddle Horses, and

Livery Accommodations

in general. Also, Hay and Grain for sale by the pound or ton.

O. I. MAIRS, Proprietor.

E. H. Edwards,
—DEALER IN—
General Merchandise,
LONE PINE,
INYO COUNTY - - - CALIFORNIA.

Inyo
Freighting Company.
REGULAR LINE
Mojave To Bishop.

Teams leave Mojave and Bishop weekly. Goods delivered with regularity at all points on the line. Consign goods to the Company at Mojave.

J. W. Murphy.

BLACKSMITHING
—AND—
General IronWork.

Wagons and Carriages Repaired.

HORSESHOEING, $2.00 for CASH

Shop on Edwards St., opposite the Court House, Independence.

BLACKSMITHING,
Horseshoeing, General Iron
—AND—
WAGON WORK.

PIONEER BLACKSMITH SHOP
Cor. Main St. & Depot Ave.,
INDEPENDENCE, CAL.
W. F. MATLACK ..... PROPRIETOR.

Horseshoeing ..... $2.00 for Cash
For particulars, call and see
W. F. MATLACK.

LONE PINE
Blacksmith Shop.
R. C. Spear, Prop'r
—ALL WORK ON—
MINING TOOLS,
FARMING IMPLEMENTS
& FREIGHTING OUTFITS
—PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO—
HORSE SHOEING,
CARRIAGE WORK,
GENERAL REPAIRING

All work attended to with neatness and despatch. Prices to suit the times.

BOOTS AND SHOES
MADE AND REPAIRED.

THE BEST MATERIAL.
FIRST-CLASS WORK.

Repairs done Promptly.
Prices Reasonable.

A. J. DAVIS,
nov 30-tf Independence,

MISCELLANEOUS.

Railroad Time Table.

CARSON & COLORADO R R

TAKING EFFECT, ...

Sunday, May 10th, 18 9.

STATIONS.	From Mound house. No. 1	To Mound House. No. 2.
	Leaves—	Arrives—
Mound House.....	12:30 p. m	5.55 p. m
Dayton	1:00 p. m.	5.15 p. m.
Wabuska	3.55 p. m	3.06 p. m
Hawthorne	6.50 p. m.	11.00 a. m
Gardner	7.30 p. m.	10.05 a. m
Soda Springs.....	9:15 p. m.	9.05 a. m
Belleville.....	10:25 p. m.	7.45 a. m.
Candelaria.....	Ar. 11.15 p. m	Lv. 7.10 a. m
	No. 3.	No. 4.
	Leave—	Arrives—
Belleville.....	8.10 a. m	5.25 p. m
Benton	11.40 a. m	-
Basalt Creek	1.50 p. m.	11.00 a. m
Alvord.....	2.35 p. m.	10.00 a. m.
Independence.....	4.10 p. m.	8.30 a. m
Lone Pine.....	5.00 p. m.	7.40 a. m
Keeler.....	Ar 5.45 p. m.	Lv. 7.00 a. m

Trains 1 and 2 run daily.
Train 3 runs Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays
Train 4 runs Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays

Passenger trains make close connection at Mound House with express trains of V. & T. R. R., which connect at Reno with east and west bound trains of Central Pacific Railroad.

Stage Connections:

AT HAWTHORNE with United States Stage Company's coaches for Aurora (26 miles); Bodie (27 miles); Lundy and Bridgeport.

AT LANDING (125 miles from Mound House) with Gilmer, Salisbury & Co's. tri-weekly stages (leaving Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays) for Downieville, Grantsville and Belmont.

AT CANDELARIA with U. S. Stage Co's. stages for Columbus (8 miles), Silver Peak, Montezuma, Alida Valley, Gold Mountain, etc.

H. M. YERINGTON,
General Superintendent.

R. J. LAWS, Assistant Superintendent.

D. A. BENDER,
General Freight and Passenger Agent.

LUMBER. LUMBER.

SPRATT & CREASER,
BIG PINE.
—DEALERS IN—
ALL KINDS OF LUMBER.

Square timber of all dimensions for buildings and bridges.

CEILING,
FLOORING,
FENCING,
RUSTIC.

All kinds of tongued and grooved lumber.
Surfaced lumber of all kinds.
All orders filled promptly. Lumber delivered on board the cars at Alvord.

SPRATT & CREASER,
sept tf Big Pine, Inyo Co., Cal.

EDWARD CHENOT
Independence, Cal.,

INVITES PUBLIC ATTENTION TO HIS extensive Stock of

GENERAL MERCHANDISE
....Consisting of....
GROCERIES.
PROVISIONS
Tobacco, Cigars,
WINES AND LIQUORS
FLOUR & GRAIN
Together with an Assortment of
DRY GOODS AND CLOTHING
ETC., ETC

Buyers and consumers should call and examine my stock and prices before purchasing elsewhere.

E. CHENOT.
Independence, Cal., March 29, 1884.
n47617

R. J. WHITTAKER
—PAINTER,—
BIG PINE, - - - - CAL.

HOUSE PAINTING,
SIGN WRITING,
PAPER HANGING,
GRAINING,
GILDING ON WOOD AND GLASS

Wagons Painted

The best of materials used and satisfaction guaranteed.

Wm. Muth-Rasmussen.
Bee Keeper.
Manufacturer of Comb Foundation.
Independence, Inyo Co. Cal

NATHAN RHINE.

NATHAN RHINE,
(Successor to Harris & Rhine.)
MERCHANT,
INDEPENDENCE
Inyo Co. Cal.

Wholesale & Retail
—DEALER IN—
General Merchandise

MY STOCK
CONSISTING OF
almost every needed article is well calculated to satisfy the wants of everybody; and, as in the past, it will be our aim in the future to retain the extensive patronage enjoyed heretofore.

NATHAN RHINE.

NATHAN RHINE
BANKER
Independence, Cal.

SELL EXCHANGE
—ON—
SAN FRANCISCO
Draw Direct
—ON—
NEW YORK,
LONDON, England.
BERLIN, FRANKFORT-on-the-Main, GERMANY.

I AM PREPARED TO TRANSACT ALL KINDS,
—OF—
GENERAL
BANKING & EXCHANGE,
BUSINESS.

Wechsel in beliebigen Summen auf Berlin und Frankfurt am de Main.
Deutsche Vollmachten geefligt.
Geldsendungen von und nach Deutschland besorgt.

AGENT FOR
WELLS FARGO & CO'S.
EXPRESS

MUTUAL
Life Insurance Co.
OF NEW YORK
CAPITAL - - - - $5,000,000

LIVERPOOL
AND LONDON AND GLOBE
INSURANCE - COMPANY
Capital - - - - - $21,000,000

NATHAN RHINE.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY, APRIL 25 1890

MARKET REPORT.

Bar silver, 100⅛
Lead, 3 87
Copper, 14 20
Tin, 19 80
Sugar, .05⅛
Coffee, 17 @ 19¾
Wool, foothill, 16 @ 18.

COURT NOTES.

Superior Court of Inyo County California Hon. John A. Hannah, Judge.

TUESDAY, April 22d.

Broder et als. vs. Conklin et als.—Order discharging Receiver and directing an accounting. Filed report of Receiver.

WEDNESDAY, April 23d.

Broder et als Conklin et als.—Filed exception to report of Receiver. Filed the amended report of Receiver.

J. Levi vs. Max Cohn et als.—Order to file briefs on demurrer.

In the matter of the assignment of A. Cohn & Co.—Order setting aside and vacating order made January 27, 1887.

W. H. Jenkins et al. vs A. W. Eibeshu'z—Filed complaint. A tion on promissory note.

SCHABBELL.—At Camp Independence, April 18th, to Mr. and Mrs. Fred Schabbell, a daughter.

LAWRENCE—At Citrus, April 18 h, to Mr. and Mrs Frank Lawrence, a so .

Religious Services.

Rev. J. H. De La Matyr will preach at Lone Pine on Sunday at 11 o'clock, a. .m. at Georges Creek at 2:30 p. m. and at Independence at 7:30 o'clock evening; Sunday School at Independence and Lone Pine at 11 o'clock a. m.

The alfalfa crop will be unusually heavy this year.

The schools at Independence and Milton close to-day.

S. P. Smith was down from Bishop during the week.

R. O'Neal of Bishop was in town early in the week.

John Reddy came in from Darwin on on Tuesday.

The Maxim Mill was started up a few days ago for a short run.

Pap Walker came up from Olancha yesterday and returned to day.

Hon. P. Reddy and A. R. Conklin Esq. went to Darwin on Wednesday.

The Broder-Conklin case will be argued in San Francisco on June 10th.

R. S. Miner's health is slowly improving and he was able to be out yesterday.

On next Wednesday evening the first of May, a dance will be given in Mairs' Hall.

S. A. Densmore has been confined to his bed for the past week with a heart complaint.

Ed. Walker was in town several days this week on business relating to the Broder estate.

Mrs. J. C. Irwin has been visiting with Mrs. J. J. Gunn at Lookout during the past two weeks.

Quite a number of Independence people intend going to Bishop on Tuesday to attend the Odd Fellows' celebration.

The trial of the Blythe case began at San Francisco on the 15th of July. Over nine months have been occupied in this trial.

Pat. Clinton and William Hannigan are working the Eclipse mine. At present they are cleaning up the mine and it will be some time yet before a shipment can be made.

Last Tuesday night Martin Mee was stricken with paralysis and was quite helpless for twenty-four hours. Dr. Woodin, who is attending him, thinks he will be all right in a few days.

Mr. Stephen Banta of Reno came down to Bishop last week on a visit to Rev. Geo. De La Matyr. He has since been to Independence and other parts of the Valley. It would be very desirable to have Mr. Banta interested in property here; he is a good man to have for a neighbor.

W. S. Judkins and Charles Hutchings passed through Independence last Wednesday on their way to Prescott, Arizona. They started from Reno and were two weeks reaching Independence. It is a long journey and much of the way through a a very desert country.

When W. L. Hunter went to Georges Creek four years ago he had fifteen acres of alfalfa to start with. Now he has one hundred acres of alfalfa, and corn, barley and wheat. He has a fine young orchard of five acres, many of the trees already bearing, and ten acres planted with forest trees. This last will in time be his best paying crop.

J. B. Swearingen, formerly of Inyo county, and an old resident of Havilah, has purchased the Cosmopolitan Hotel from Jeff Carver and took possession last Friday. Mr. Swearingen is well and favorably known throughout the county, and that he will make a success of his venture is beyond a doubt.—Californian, Bakersfield. Mr. Swearingen will gladly welcome acquaintances from Inyo who attend the Elliott trial.

Already the customers of J. W. Symmes are writing many letters asking how soon he can ship fruit. It will be several weeks yet before apricots are ready for shipping, but these inquiries show how keen the demand is for Owens Valley fruit. During the past few weeks Mr. Symmes has got orders for fifty tons of winter apples and fifty tons of honey. He was unable to fill one tenth of either order. These facts indicate what a large business can be done in fruit raising. There need be no fear of overstocking the market; if every acre in Owens Valley suitable to fruit growing was covered with bearing trees there would be plenty of demand for the fruit.

A Murderous Superstition.

Last Sunday an Indian was murdered near Lone Pine. His throat was cut and his head nearly severed from the body. A party of Indians were all in a big wagon together and all had been drinking. The murdered man was lying in the bottom of the wagon and one of the others took a butcher knife and deliberately cut his throat. The body was thrown into the road and the party in the wagon drove on. Soon after the man was killed John Parish came along with a big team; the leaders shied and refused to go on and as it was then quite dark he got out to find what was the matter. In front of his team he found the body; he drove around it and went on home. N xt morning early he and some others went to the place but the body had been removed and buried in the night. A search was made and the body soon found. On the same day an Indian was arrested for the crime by Deputy-Sheriff James R. Moffett and the accused is now in jail at Independence awaiting examination. This is but the latest of many such murders, all growing out of a gross superstition. The Indians have a custom of choosing a "Medicine Man," or doctor, by lot. The man upon whom the lot falls must accept the office whether he likes it or not. Then comes the pinch; when three patients of the doctor die his life is forfeit and it is a high merit to kill him. They believe that after the third Indian dies the doctor deals death promiscously and that his victims are transformed into coyotes, a fate which all Indians appear to regard with great horror. Even an Indian may hate the idea of being transformed into a filthy, cowardly prairie wolf. This murdered Indian was a doctor and having lost three patients the Indians believed that he was "coyoteing" people, hence the killing. But it is high time for the whites to interfere and put a stop to these barbarous murders. It appears that there are some doubts about the Courts having authority over these Indians as it is alleged that they have not severed their tribal relations, and therefore are not subject to the laws of the land. But they are living among us and it is not to be tolerated that they should go on committing these brutal crimes without any check. If these murders cannot be prevented and the murderers punished in the ordinary course of law some other way must be found to prevent such brutal crimes.

The Elliott Witnesses.

The following witnesses have been subpœnaed in the Elliott case;

Sam Spratt	J. Y. Ashmore
Frank Spratt	John Bodle
I. J. Woodin	E l. Ober
Andrew Bell	John Kinney
Ed Crocker	Mrs. Dennis Hessian
C. L. Meyers	Jacob Tracy
P. H Mack	John Mullane
J. R. Eldred	Marshall Naylor
C. Mulholland	George Hall
A. K. Eugley	J. C. Eddy
Chris Engle	Charles C. Anthony
Mrs. Sallie Bell	Mrs. Luke Barnaby
Milton Crocker	S. G. Gregg
Luke Barnaby	P. P. Keough
June Smith	Miss Jennie Bell
Mrs. June Smith	Miss Ella Bell
Willie Baker	W. P. George
Elton Baker	S. P. McKnight
Fannie Baker	Fannie F. Elliott
John Gorevin	W. R. Tibbetts
George Rinehackel	A. G McAfee
Vernon Smith	Mrs. A. G. McAfee
W N. Saylor	Geo. L. Cornell
Mrs. Saylor	R. Hessian Sr.
J. C. Crocker	J. J. Gunn
Elias Blake	Mrs. J. J. Gunn
J. D. Shaw	Mrs. J. C. Irwin
O. Allerton	Jennie (Indian).

Worthy of Support.

The Chronicle Union, published in Mono county, urges the voters of that county to tender to Hon. Cyrus Coleman, of Alpine county, the Republican nomination for Assemblyman. According to the arrangement existing between the counties of Alpine, Mono and Inyo, Mono would have the right to nominate the next Republican candidate for the Assembly. But the Mono paper argues that the general good of the District should be preferred to gratifying the personal ambition of any man; and as Mr. Coleman has already given ample proof of his ability and desire to do good service for the District he ought to be chosen. It is very safe to say that if the people of Mono decide to have Mr. Coleman for their candidate the choice will be heartily approved in Inyo.

Big Land Schemes.

The same parties who propose to make a big canal and convey the water of Owens River to Salt Wells Valley have got control of a large tract of land in Lassen county and will make extensive improvements there. Doubtless the purpose is to supply large tracts of desert land with water and then sell to settlers. This is the only way now known by which large bodies of land now worthless can be made valuable. Of course no one can compel settlers to pay more than market value for land and water and if the promoters of these enterprises find profit in their work they will well deserve it. Without such enterprises as these vast tracts of fine land that will support a dense population would remain the same worthless deserts that they now are for ages to come.

Notice to Witnesses.

All witnesses in the Elliott case are requested to take the regular train leaving here May 31, which should connect at Sacramento with train for Bakersfield, arriving there at 9.15 p. m. May 5th. Tickets for the round trip, good for thirty days will be given to witnesses at the various stations and their expenses paid by the agent of this county, who will accompany them.

P. H. MACK, Agent.

Excursion Rates

The C. and C. railroad has fixed the following rates for round trip tickets to Bishop on April 29th:

Keeler	$5 00
Lone Pine	4 00
Independence	3 00
Big Pine	1 50
Benton	2 00

The property subject of the action in the case of Broder et als. vs. Conklin et als. has been turned over to A. R. Conklin, he giving a bond in the sum of $10,000 to pay and account for all the rents and profits of said property provided the plaintiffs win the suit.

Frank Fitzgerald is working more than twenty men at the Modock and is shipping about fifteen tons of good ore and concentrates each week. J. J. Gunn has fourteen inches of solid galena in the Minnietta and is making good shipments.

INDEPENDENCE

SHAVING SALOON.

Shaving, Hair-Cutting, etc., done in the best manner.

WM. H. HUFF, Prop'r

Farmers are everywhere learning the truth that their poverity is due in great measure to the demonetization of silver. The farmers and other citizens of New Jersey have asked Congress to restore silver to its proper use as a coin metal. It should be repeated incessantly until the wrong is righted. The demonetization of silver was accomplished by forgery and the perpetrator of the crime should be in jail wearing the dress of a convict. The crime was hatched in Wall street and the criminal was hired by Wall street capitalists.

OFFICIAL.

PROPOSALS FOR 18th DISTRICT FAIR.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT THE Board of Directors of the 18th District Agricultural Association of California have decided to locate the Fair of said Association for the year 1890, at such town within any of the counties of Alpine, Mono and Inyo as shall offer to the Association the largest money premium for said privilege; and will also provide a speed track and necessary buildings and will give the use of the same for holding the Fair free of cost to the Association.

Sealed Proposals to be forwarded to the Secretary of the Association on or before May 17th, 1890, at Independence, Inyo county, California.

C. MULHOLLAND,
Secretary.

PROPOSALS FOR BOARDING INYO COUNTY PRISONERS.

Notice is hereby given that sealed proposals will be received by the Board of Supervisors of Inyo county, at the office of the County Clerk until Tuesday, May 5, 1890, at 12 o'clock M., for the boarding of Inyo county prisoners, for the term of one year, beginning May 10th 1890 and ending May 10th, 1891, said bids to designate the price per diem for each prisoner, and said board to be paid for by warrants drawn upon the General Expense Fund, upon bills duly verified and presented at the regular meetings of said Board of Supervisors.

Proposals must be endorsed "Proposals for Boarding County Prisoners," and the same will be opened between the hours of ten o'clock and twelve o'clock A. M. on the 6th day of May, 1890, and the Board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

P. H. MACK,
Clerk.

Proposals for Care of Indigent Sick of Inyo County.

Notice is hereby given that sealed proposals will be received by the Board of Supervisors of Inyo county, at the office of the County Clerk until 12 o'clock M., on Tuesday, May 5th, 1890, to contract for the care of said indigent sick for the term of one year from May 10th 1890 to May 10th, 1891, said bids to designate the amount for which parties contracting will care for said indigent sick on the basis of an average of four patients per day throughout the year, and to include all medicine, nursing, board, lodging and washing. Said bids to include the burial and funeral expenses of any indigent sick person or persons who may die while under such care.

Said contractor to care for all the indigent sick properly admitted to the contractor's care. And said bids to designate the price per head at which all excess of patients over the average of four each day throughout the year will be cared for, said excess to be paid for by extra allowance on presentation of bills duly sworn to, at the regular meeting of said Board immediately after said contract has expired. The average four per day to be paid for at the regular meetings of the Board on presentation of bills duly verified. All payments to be made by warrants drawn upon the Hospital Fund of said county.

The person or persons to whom said contract shall be awarded shall give a good and sufficient bond in double the sum of the contract price, for the faithful performance of said contract

The care and management of said indigent sick by such contractor shall be at all times subject to the inspection of said Board of Supervisors, or any member thereof, or any person appointed by the Board for such purpose.

Said proposals must be endorsed, "Proposals for Care of Indigent Sick," and the same will be opened between the hours of ten o'clock and twelve o'clock A. M., on the 6th day of May, 1890, and the Board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

P. H. MACK,
Clerk.

S. H. BIGLAND,

—DEALER IN—

Owens Valley Lands

39 SUTTER STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO.

1-26

BELL'S

Flouring Mills,

A. N. BELL, Prop.

TRY BELL'S

EXTRA PATENT ROLLER FLOUR.

Having added Patent Rolls and other improvements o our Mills, I am now turning out flour that is fully

Equal to the Best.

Corn, Oats and Barley Cracked on Short Notice.

A. N. BELL,

Independence, Cal.

A $20 A Day Man:

A VOICE from Ohio. Here is a portrait of Mr. Garrison, of Salem, Ohio. He writes: "Was at work on a farm for $30 a month; I now have an agency for E. C. Allen & Co's albums and publications and often make $20 a day." (Signed) W. H. GARRISON.

William Kline, Harrisburg, Pa., writes: "I have never known anything to sell like your album. Yesterday I took orders enough to pay me over $25." W. J. Elmore, Bangor, Me., writes: "I take an order for your album at almost every house I visit. My profit is often as much as $20 for a single day's work." Others are doing quite as well; we have not space to give extracts from their letters. Every one who takes hold of this grand business gives us grand profits. Shall we start YOU in this business, reader? Write to us and learn all about it for yourself. We are starting many; we will start you if you don't delay until another gets ahead of you in your part of the country. If you take hold you will be able to pick up gold fast. Read—On account of a forced manufacturer's sale $25,000 ten dollar Photograph Albums are to be sold to the people for $2 each. Bound in Royal Crimson Silk Velvet Plush, Charmingly decorated insides. Handsomest albums in the world. Largest Size. Greatest bargains ever known. Agents wanted. Liberal terms. Big money for agents. Any one can become a successful agent. Sells itself on sight—little or no talking necessary. Wherever shown, every one wants to purchase. Agents take thousands of orders with rapidity never before known. Great profits await every worker. Agents are making fortunes. Ladies make as much as men. You, reader, can do as well as any one. Full information and terms free, to those who write for same, with particulars and terms for our Family Bibles, Books and Periodicals. After you know all, should you conclude to go no further, why no harm is done. Address E. C. ALLEN & CO., AUGUSTA, MAINE.

WEINSTOCK & LUBIN:

Getting their Catalogues.

WE value to the utmost our out-of-town post office acquaintances. Uncle Sam is our hard working ally and we have no disposition to make his tasks lighter. He grumbles a little during busy seasons when an avalanche of mail orders flood his office here, but that matters little so long as you get your goods on time.

In these days of steam and electricity it is a luxury to be an out-of-town shopper. No jostling, no confusion—a catalogue, pen and ink, and you receive as much attention as your city friend. The catalogue is a great help—a silent salesman, perhaps the best. You may know, for instance, that you want ten yards of cashmere for a gown, but the catalogue reminds you of linings and other accessories at such a saving in prices that your postage is a cipher. Then it illustrates a new trimming which takes your fancy and your cashmere gown develops into a stylish affair quite impossible in village shopping. By a systematic turning of its pages other necessaries confront you which might as well be ordered one time as another, saving time and money, too.

Our new Catalogue is fuller of illustrations than any previous one. We think seeing things as they are is a help—a two-inch illustration tells you more about a lace pattern or a suit of clothes than we could explain in a column.

If the new Catalogue shows an improvement on older methods, the out-of-town people are responsible for it. An unusual order generally puts an idea into our heads—which we think out, and put in force in the next issue. This is why our Catalogue is such a useful book and constantly growing larger.

Send your address and a catalogue will be sent you free.

Weinstock, Lubin & Co.

Nos. 400 to 412 K ST., SACRAMENTO, CAL.

RETAIL DRY GOODS, CLOTHING, HATS, MILLINERY, SHOES, NOTIONS, HOUSE SUPPLIES, ETC.

2

MISCELLANEOUS.

Lake View Hotel

Keeler, Cal.

John Barnes, Prop'r.

First-class hotel in every respect. The table always supplied with the best in the market. Clean, nicely furnished rooms. Transient visitors will receive every courtesy and attention.

THE BAR

—Is constantly supplied with the finest—

Wines, Liquors, & Cigars.

NORMAN HOUSE,

Independence, - - Cal.

New House, New Furniture, Low Rates.

Special attention will be given to secure the comfort of guests.

O. I. MAIRS, Prop.

feb12tf

IRWIN'S SALOON

Cor. Edwards and Market Streets,

Independence . Cal.

THE PUBLIC GENERALLY ARE RESPECTFULLY invited to call and inspect my establishment, which has been entirely rebuilt an furnished in a style second to no e on this side of the mountains. A SPLENDID NEW BILLIARD TABLE provided for the amusement of patrons.

THE BAR

Is supplied with the most celebrated brands of pure Wines and Liquors and the Finest Havana Cigars.

JOHN C. IRWIN, Proprietor.

feb12tf

Palace Saloon.

WALTER OBER, Lessee.

—THE BAR—

Is constantly supplied with the best kinds o

WINES, LIQUORS, & CIGARS.

The most careful attention given to the the amusement and comfort of patrons.

A FINE BILLIARD TABLE

Is always at the disposal of visitors to the Palace Saloon Dec. 20 89

PIONEER BREWERY

INDEPENDENCE

BEER ICE COLD.

The Bar is supplied with the Best of all kinds of Liquors and Cigars.

The Coolest Hall in the town. Call in and see what comfort you can have this hot weather.

PHILIP GEHRIG, PROPRIETOR

MISCELLANEOUS.

A. K. EUGLEY,

BIG PINE, INYO CO. CAL.

PROVISIONS,

&c., &c., &c.

Postmaster and Deputy Co Clerk.

A. K. EUGLEY,
Big Pine, Cal.

Sulphur & Borax Baths

AT SODA SPRINGS, NEVADA

On Ion & Colorado Railroad

These valuable Springs offer special

INDUCEMENT TO INVALIDS

THE WATER CONTAINS

SULPHUR, MAGNESIA AND BORAX.

And Is Very Strengthening and Cleansing

When used for bathing purposes.

THE BATH HOUSES HAVE BEEN RE-BUILT

—And a large—

SWIMMING : BATH

Added, where those wishing to do so can take an invigorating plunge.

Excellent Accommodations

—AND—

Board by the Day, Week, or the Month

One of the BEST Telescopes in the world. Our facilities are unequaled, and to introduce our superior goods we will send FREE to ONE PERSON in each locality, as above. Only those who write to us at once can make sure of the chance. All you have to do in return is to show our goods to those who call—your neighbors and those around you. The beginning of this advertisement shows the small end of the telescope. The following cut gives the appearance of it reduced to about the fifteth part of its bulk. It is a grand, double size telescope, as large as is easy to carry. We will also show you how you can make from $5 to $10 a day at least, from the start, without experience. Better write at once. We pay all express charges. Address, H. HALLETT & CO., Box 880, PORTLAND, MAINE.

BISHOP ADVERTISEMENTS.

A. COHN & CO.

—DEALERS IN—

General Merchandise.

—ALL KINDS OF—

Farm Implements

—AND—

--MACHINERY--

Farm Produce

—OF ALL KINDS BOUGHT—

Orders for all kinds of supplies needed in mining camps promptly filled.

GIVEN & INGALLS.

—DEALERS IN—

FARM PRODUCE.

J. E. DUNLAP.

Harness Maker.

Harness of all kinds, from the lightest to the heaviest. Any kind of new work made promptly and of the best material. Repairing done on the shortest notice. A full line of saddles and harness.

H. E. WRIGHT.

DRUGGIST.

Medicines, Drugs, Toilet and Fancy Articles. Physicians' prescriptions carefully and promptly filled. All drugs and medicines fresh and of the best quality. All orders by mail receive immediate attention

Valley View Hotel.

O. H. Hill, Prop'r.

A New House Newly Furnished Throughout. Guests will receive every courtesy and attention.

NEVADA STABLE

BISHOP.

Opposite Valley View Hotel, Main St

In the Livery Department nothing is kept but safe and good traveling carriage and saddle horses. Conveyances of all kinds first-class. Good attendance and the best of hay and grain for all animals boarding at the stable

S. P. SMITH, Prop.

BISHOP CREEK

BREWERY,

MUNZINGER, PHILLIPPAY & CO., Proprietors.

All the appliances and conveniences of First Class Brewery, including a beautiful grove for out-door parties.

Customers supplied on all points Of the C. & C. Railroad.

Send orders to

MUNZINGER, PHILLIPPAY & CO.

Bishop Creek, Cal.

A NEW DEAL!

BISHOP CREEK

Livery. Feed & Sale Stable.

ROBERT O'NEIL, Prop'r.

Horses are boarded by the day, week or month. Stock bought and sold.

Bishop Creek, Cal., Nov. 20, 1889.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Newest Styles!

OF

Fashionable Clothing, Dry Goods, Ladies' Wear, etc., etc

AT

L. WOOD'S

CASH STORE

A small stock of fresh groceries & canned goods constantly renewed.

Fresh Produce, and Grain Flour, etc., constantly on hand.

CANDIES,
PEANUTS,
WALNUTS,
TOYS!

THE CASH STORE

Is Where You Get

WORTH OF YOUR MONEY

THOMAS & HILL,

—DEALERS IN—

GENERAL MERCHANDISE

BIG PINE, INYO COUNTY, CAL,

We keep constantly on hand goods of all kinds needed in a country home. We order only First-Class Goods and ask no more than a reasonable profit. Give us a trial.

THOMAS & HILL

J. FORBES. W. D. TOBEY.

FORBES & TOBEY,

HAWTHORNE, NEV.,

—DEALERS IN—

LUMBER

OF ALL KINDS.

DOORS,

SHINGLES,

SASH AND BLINDS,

LATH,

RUSTIC

MOULDINGS,

DRESSED LUMBER.

Matched and Dressed Flooring.

sept 11-tf

COLONEL QUARITCH, V.C.

By H. RIDER HAGGARD.

CHAPTER XXII.

THE BLOW FALLS.

On the following morning, about 10 o'clock, while Edward Cossey was still at breakfast, a dog cart drew up at his door and out of it stepped Col. Quaritch.

"Now for the row," said he to himself. "I hope that the governor was right in his tale, that's all. Perhaps it would have been wiser to say nothing till I had made more sure," and he poured out some more tea a little nervously, for in the colonel he had, he felt, an adversary not to be despised.

Presently the door opened and "Col. Quaritch" was announced. He rose and bowed a salutation, which the colonel, whose face bore a particularly grim expression, did not return.

"Will you take a chair?" he said, as soon as the servant had left, and, without speaking, Harold took one, and presently began the conversation.

"Last night, Mr. Cossey, " he said, "you thought proper to publicly bring a charge against me, which, if it were true, would go a long way toward showing that I was not a fit person to associate with those before whom it was brought."

"Yes," said Edward, coolly.

"Before making any remarks on your conduct in bringing such a charge, which I give you credit for believing to be true, I propose to show to you that it is a false charge," went on the colonel, quietly. "The story is a very simple one, and so sad that nothing short of necessity would force me to tell it. I was, when quite young, engaged to your aunt, Miss Heston, to whom I was much attached, and who was then 20 years of age, and though I had little besides my profession, she had some money, and we were going to be married. The circumstances under which the marriage was broken off were as follows: Three days before the wedding was to take place I went unexpectedly to the house, and was told by the servant that Miss Heston was up stairs in her sitting room. I went up stairs to the room, which I knew well, knocked and got no answer. Then I walked into the room, and this is what I saw: Your aunt was lying on the sofa in her wedding dress (that is, in half of it, for she had only the skirt on) as I first thought, asleep. I went up to her and saw that by her side was a brandy bottle half empty. In her hand also was a glass containing raw brandy. While I was wondering what it could mean she woke up, got off the sofa and began to stagger round the room, and I saw that she was intoxicated."

"It's a lie," said Edward, excitedly.

"Be careful what you say, sir," answered the colonel, "and wait to say it till I have done. As soon as I realized what was the matter, I left the room again, and going down to your grandfather's study, where he was engaged in writing a sermon, I asked him to come upstairs, as I was afraid that his daughter was not well. He came and saw, and the sight threw him off his balance, for he broke out into a torrent of explanations and excuses, from which in time I extracted the following facts: It appeared that ever since she was a child, Miss Heston had been addicted to drinking fits, and that it was on account of this constitutional weakness, which was of course concealed from me, that she had been allowed to engage herself to a penniless subaltern. It appeared, too, that the habit was hereditary, for her mother had died of the effects of drink and one of her aunts had become mad from it. I went away and thought the matter over, and came to the conclusion that, under these circumstances, it would be impossible for me, much as I was attached to your aunt, to marry her, because, even if I was willing to do so, I had no right to run the risk of bringing children into the world who might inherit the curse. Having come to this determination, which it cost me much to do, I wrote and communicated it to your grandfather, and the marriage was broken off."

"I do not believe it; I do not believe a word of it," said Edward, jumping up. "You jilted her and drove her mad, and now you are trying to shelter yourself behind a tissue of falsehood."

"Are you acquainted with your grandfather's handwriting?" asked the colonel, quietly.

"Yes."

"Is that it?" he went on, producing a yellow looking letter and showing it to him.

"I believe so—at least it looks like it."

"Then read the letter."

Edward obeyed. It was one written in answer to that of Harold Quaritch to his betrothed's father, and admitted in the clearest terms the justice of the step that he had taken. Further, it begged him, for the sake of Julia and the family at large, never to mention the cause of his defection to any one outside the family.

"Are you satisfied, Mr. Cossey? I have other letters if you wish to see them."

Edward made no reply, and the colonel went on:

"I gave the promise that your grandfather asked for, and in spite of the remarks that were freely made upon my behavior, I kept it, as it was my duty to do. You, Mr. Cossey, are the first person to whom the story has been told. And now that you have thought fit to make accusations against me which are without foundation, I must ask you to retract them as fully as you made them. I have prepared a letter which you will be so good as to sign," and he handed him a note to the squire. It ran:

"DEAR MR. DE LA MOLLE—I beg in the fullest and most ample manner possible to retract the charges which I made yesterday evening against Col. Quaritch, in the presence of yourself and Miss de la Molle. I find that those charges were unfounded, and I hereby apologize to Col. Quaritch for having made them."

"And supposing that I refuse to sign," said Edward, sulkily.

"I do not think," answered the colonel, "that you will refuse."

Edward looked at Col. Quaritch, and the colonel looked at Edward.

"Well," said the colonel, "please understand that I mean you should sign that letter, and indeed, seeing how absolutely you are in the wrong, I do not think that you can hesitate to do so."

Then very slowly and unwillingly Edward Cossey took up a pen, affixed his signature to the letter, blotted it and pushed it from him.

The colonel folded it up, placed it in an envelope which he had ready, and put it in his pocket.

"Now, Mr. Cossey," he said, "I will wish you good morning. Another time I should recommend you to be more careful, both in the facts and the manner of your accusations," and with a slight bow he left the room.

"Curse the fellow," thought Edward to himself as the front door closed; "he had me there—I was forced to sign. Well, I will be even with him about Ida, at any rate. I will propose to her this very day, Belle or no Belle, and if she won't have me, I will call the money in and smash the whole thing up," and his handsome face bore a very evil look as he thought it.

That very afternoon he started, in accordance with this design, to pay a visit at the castle. The squire was out, but Miss de la Molle was at home, the servant said, and accordingly he was ushered into the drawing room, where Ida was working, for it was a wet and windy afternoon.

She rose to greet him coldly enough, and he sat down, and then came a pause which she did not seem inclined to break.

At last he spoke. "Did the squire get my letter, Miss de la Molle?" he asked.

"Yes," she answered, rather icily. "Col. Quaritch sent it up."

"I am very sorry," he added, confusedly, "that I should have put myself in such a false position. I hope that you will give me credit for having believed my accusation when I made it."

"Such accusations should not be lightly made, Mr. Cossey," was her answer, and, as though to turn the subject, she rose and rang the bell for tea.

It came, and the bustle connected with it prevented any further conversation for awhile. At length, however, it subsided, and once more Edward found himself alone with Ida. He looked at her and felt afraid. The woman was of a different clay to himself, and he knew it—he loved her, but he did not understand her in the least. However, if the thing was to be done at all it must be done now; so with a desperate effort he screwed himself up to the point.

"Miss de la Molle," he said; and Ida, knowing full surely what was coming, felt her heart jump within her bosom and then stand still. "Miss de la Molle," he repeated, "perhaps you will remember a conversation that we had some weeks ago in the conservatory?"

"Yes," she said, "I remember—about the money."

"About the money and other things," he said, gathering courage. "I hinted to you then that I hoped in certain contingencies to be allowed to make my addresses to you, and I think that you understood me."

"I understood you perfectly," answered Ida, her pale face set like ice, "and I gave you to understand that in the event of your lending my father the money, I should hold myself bound to—to listen to what you had to say."

"Oh, curse the money!" broke in Edward. "It is not a question of money with me, Ida; it is not, indeed. I love you with all my heart. I have loved you ever since I saw you. It was because I was jealous of him that I made a fool of myself last night with Col. Quaritch. I should have asked you to marry me long ago, only there were obstacles in the way. I love you, Ida; there never was a woman like you—never."

She listened with the same set face. Obviously he was in earnest, but his earnestness did not move her; it scarcely even flattered her pride. She disliked the man intensely, and nothing that he could say or do would lessen that dislike by one jot—probably, indeed, it would only intensify it.

Presently he stopped and stood beside her, his breast heaving and his face broken with emotion, and tried to take her hand.

She withdrew it sharply.

"I do not think that there is any need for all this," she said, coldly. "I gave a conditional promise. You have fulfilled your share of the bargain, and I am prepared to fulfill mine in due course."

So far as her words went, Edward could find no fault with their meaning, and yet he felt more like a man who has been abruptly and finally refused than one declared chosen. He stood still and looked at her.

"I think it right to tell you, however," she went on in the same measured tones, "that if I marry you it will be from motives of duty, and not from motives of affection. I have no love to give you, and I do not wish for yours. I do not know if you will be satisfied with this. If you are not, you had better give up the idea," and she for the first time looked up at him with more anxiety in her face than she would have cared to show.

But if she hoped that her coldness would repel him, she was destined to be disappointed. On the contrary, like water thrown on burning oil, it only inflamed him the more.

"The love will come, Ida," he said, and once more he tried to take her hand.

"No, Mr. Cossey," she said, in a voice that checked him; "I am sorry to have to speak so plainly, but till I marry I am my own mistress. Pray understand me."

"As you like," he said, drawing back from her sulkily. "I am so fond of you that I will marry you on any terms, and that is the truth. I have one thing to ask of you, Ida, and it is that you will keep our engagement secret for the present, and get your father (I suppose I must speak to him) to do the same. I have reasons," he went on by way of explanation, "for not wishing it to become known."

"I do not see why I should keep it secret," she said; "but it does not matter to me."

"The fact is," he explained, "my father is a very curious man, and I doubt if he would like my engagement because he thinks I ought to marry a great deal of money."

"Oh, indeed," answered Ida. She had believed, as was indeed the case, that there were other reasons, not unconnected with Mrs. Quest, on account of which he was anxious to keep the engagement secret. "By the way," she went on, "I am sorry to have to talk of business, but this is a business matter, is it not? I suppose it is understood that, in the event of our marriage, the mortgage you hold over this place will not be enforced against my father."

"Of course not," he answered. "Look here, Ida, I will give you those mortgage bonds as a wedding present, and you can put them in the fire; and I will make a good settlement on you."

"Thank you," she said, "but I do not require any settlement on myself; I had rather none was made; but I consent to the engagement only on the express condition that the mortgages shall be canceled before marriage, and as the property will ultimately come to me, this is not much to ask. And now one more thing, Mr. Cossey; I should like to know when you would wish this marriage to take place; not at once, I presume."

"I should wish it to take place to-morrow," he said, with an attempt at a laugh; "but I suppose that between one thing and another it can't come off at once. Shall we say this time six months, that will be in May?"

"Very good," said Ida, "this day six months I shall be prepared to become your wife, Mr. Cossey. I believe," she added, with a flash of bitter sarcasm, "it is the time usually allowed for the redemption of a mortgage."

"You say very hard things," he answered, wincing.

"Do I? I dare say. I am hard by nature. I wonder that you can wish to marry me."

"I wish it beyond everything in the world," he answered, earnestly. "You can never know how much. By the way, I know I was foolish about Col. Quaritch; but, Ida, I cannot bear to see that man near you. I hope you will drop his acquaintance as much as possible now."

Once more Ida's face set like a flint. "I am not your wife yet, Mr. Cossey," she said; "when I am, you will have a right to dictate to me as to whom I shall associate with. At present you have no such right, and if it pleases me to associate with Col. Quaritch, I shall do so. If you disapprove of my conduct, the remedy is simple—you can break off the engagement."

He rose, absolutely crushed, for Ida was by far the stronger of the two, and, besides, his passion gave her an unfair advantage over him. Without attempting any reply, he held out his hand, and said good night, for he was afraid to attempt any demonstration of affection, adding that he would come to see her father in the morning.

She touched his outstretched hand with her fingers, and then fearing lest he should change his mind, promptly rang the bell.

In another minute the door had closed behind him, and she was left alone.

CHAPTER XXIII.

"GOOD-BY, MY DEAR, GOOD-BY."

When Edward Cossey had gone, Ida rose and put her hands to her head. So the blow had fallen, and the deed was done, and she was engaged to be married to Edward Cossey. And Harold Quaritch! Well, there must be an end to that. It was hard, too—only a woman could know how hard. Ida was not a person with long record of love affairs. Once, when she was twenty, she had a proposal which she had refused, and that was all. So it happened that when she became attached to Col. Quaritch, she had found her heart for the first time, and for a woman, somewhat late in life. Consequently her feelings were all the more profound, and so indeed was her grief at being forced not only to put them away, but to give herself to another man who was not agreeable to her. She was not a violent or ill regulated woman like Mrs. Quest. She looked facts in the face, recognized their meaning, and bowed before their inexorable logic. It seemed to her almost impossible that she could hope to avoid this marriage, and if that proved to be so she might be relied upon to make the best of it. Scandal would, under any circumstances, never find a word to say against Ida, for she was not a person who would attempt to console herself for an unhappy marriage. But it was bitter, bitter as gall, to be thus forced to turn aside from her happiness—for she well knew that with Harold Quaritch her life would be very happy—and fit her shoulders to this heavy yoke. Well, she had saved the place to her father by it, and also to her descendants if she had any, and that was all that could be said for it.

She thought and thought, wishing in the bitterness of her heart that she had never been born to come to such a heavy day, till at last she could think no more. The air of the room seemed to stifle her, though it was by no means overheated. She went to the window and looked out. It was a wild, wet evening, and the wind was driving the rain before it in sheets. In the west the lurid light of the sinking sun stained the clouds blood red, and broke in arrows of ominous light upon the driving storm.

But, bad as the weather was, it attracted Ida. When the heart is heavy and torn by conflicting passions, it seems to answer to the calling of the storm, and to long to lose its petty troubling in the turmoil of the rushing world. Nature has many moods of which our own are but the echo and reflection, and she can be companionable when all human sympathy must fail. For she is our mother from whom we come, to whom we go, and her arms are ever open to clasp the children who can hear her voices. Drawn thereto by an impulse which she could not have analyzed, Ida went upstairs, put on a thick pair of boots, a mackintosh and an old hat, and sallied out into the wind and wet. It was blowing big guns, and as the rain whirled down, the drops struck upon her face like a spray. She crossed the bridge and went out into the park land beyond. The air was full of dead leaves, and the grass rustled with them, for this was the first wind since the frost. The great boughs of the oaks rattled and groaned above her, and high overhead, among the sullen clouds, a flight of wind tossed rooks were being blown this way and that.

Ida bent her tall frame against the rain and gale, and fought her way through it. At first she had no clear idea as to where she was going, but gradually, perhaps from custom, she took the path that ran across the fields to Honham church. It was a beautiful old church, and had originally been founded by the Boissey family, and enlarged (particularly as regards the tower, which had been partially blown down and rebuilt about the time of Charles I, and was one of the finest in the country) by the widow of one of the De la Molles, whose husband had fallen at Agincourt, as a memorial forever. There, upon the porch, were carved the "hawks" of the De la Molles, wreathed round with palms of victory; and there, too, within the chancel, hung the warrior's helmet and his dinted shield.

Nor was he alone, for all around lay the dust of the illustrious dead, come after the toil and struggle of their stormy lives to rest within the walls of that old church. Some of them had monuments of alabaster, where they lay in effigy, their heads pillowed upon that of a conquered Saracen; some had monuments of oak and brass, and some had no monuments at all, for the Puritans had ruthlessly destroyed them. But they were nearly all there, some twenty generations of the bearers of an ancient name, for even those of them who had perished on the scaffold had been borne here for burial. The whole place was eloquent of the dead and of the mournful lesson of mortality. From century to century the bearers of that name had walked in these fields, and lived in yonder castle, and looked upon the familiar swell of yonder ground and the silver flash of yonder river, and now their dust was gathered here, and all the forgotten turmoil of their lives was lost in the silence of their narrow tomb.

Ida loved the spot, hallowed to her not only by the altar of her faith, but also by the human associations that clung round and clothed it as the ivy clothed its walls. Here she had been christened, and here among her ancestors she hoped to be buried also. Here as a girl she used, with her brother James, to creep in awed silence and look through the window when the full moon was up, at the white figures stretched in their silence within. Here, too, she had sat for Sunday after Sunday for more than twenty years, and stared at the quaint Latin inscriptions cut on marble slabs, which recorded the almost superhuman virtues of departed De la Molles of the Seventeenth and Eighteenth centuries, her own immediate ancestors. The place was familiar to her whole life; she had scarcely a recollection with which it was not in some way connected, it was not wonderful, therefore, that she loved it, and that in the trouble of her mind her feet shaped their course toward it.

Presently she was there in the churchyard, and, taking her stand under the shelter of a line of Scotch firs, through which the gale sobbed and sung, leaned against a side gate and looked. The scene was desolate enough; the rain dropped from the roof on to the sodden graves beneath, and ran in thin sheets down the flint facing of the tower; the dead leaves whirled and rattled in and about the empty porch, and over all shot one red and angry arrow from the sinking sun. She stood in the wind and rain, and gazed at the old church that had seen the end of so many sorrows more bitter than her own and the wreck of so many summers, till the darkness began to close round her like a pall, while the wind sung the requiem of her hopes. She was not of a desponding or pessimistic character, but in that bitter hour she found it in her heart to wish, as most people have done at one time or other in their lives, that the tragedy were over and the curtain had fallen, and that she lay beneath those dripping sods without sight or hearing, without hope or dread. It seemed to her that the hereafter must indeed be terrible if it outweighs the sorrows of the here.

The rain dropped from the roof.

And then, poor woman, she thought of the long years between her and rest, and, leaning her head against the gate post, began to cry bitterly in the gloom.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Surveyors in the Brown's Valley irrigation district, in Yuba county, found the remains of a man on a hill in the district. His identity is unknown.

FROM AN OLD VETERAN OF THE WAR TO HIS COMRADS AND OTHERS.

March 2, 1890.

Sierra Chemical Co., 424 Mission Street, San Francisco, Cal.

GENTLEMEN:—Having been troubled since I came out of the army in 1865, more or less with kidney and liver complaints, I can say truthfully that I have found The Great Sierra Kidney and Liver Cure the only medicine which has ever helped me, and I am happy to-day. I am fast on the road to health and can cheefully recommend this wonderful remedy to all my old comrades and veterans of the war. DANIEL S. COOK, 317 Eddy street, San Francisco, Cal.

Only that nature which shall first perform the task of educating up to perfect manhood by perfect practice will perform the task of a perfect state.

FORTUNE'S TEMPLE.

A Visit to the Offices of The Louisiana State Lottery Company, Where Millions are Paid Out.

The "Examiner" Correspondent Explains the Company's Remarkable System of Bookkeeping—The December Drawing—What Banker Baldwin Says.

The Mardi Gras carnival and the great semi-annual drawing of The Louisiana State Lottery have become the two distinctive features of creole life in the Queen City of the South. Attempts have been made at different times, in other cities, confessedly in imitation, to reproduce these civic entertainments, but they have not as a rule been successful. Time and experience have amply demonstrated the peculiar preeminence of New Orleans for the administration of these occasions of public joy.

The December drawing of The Louisiana State Lottery Company took place on Tuesday, the 17th of the month. As New York correspondent of the Examiner, I was present and was an eyewitness to all that transpired during the distribution of the prizes. I had previously been very courteously received at the offices of the company by the President, Mr. M. A. Dauphin, a gentleman of great force of character, energy and business tact. I was permitted to inspect with the fullest freedom the books of the company, and to become familiar with the interior working of the vast clerical machinery which directs its affairs.

Were any additional evidence needed other than the high character of Generals G. T. Beauregard and Jubal A. Early—these gentlemen not only personally superintend the drawings, but they also stake their honor as a guarantee of the fairness and honesty of the proceedings—this would be found in the careful, accurate, and, indeed, well-nigh perfect system of administration which has grown out of the peculiar exigencies of the business.

No such system could exist without purpose. It speaks more eloquently than words for the good faith of those in charge. It is not only the record of an honorable past, but it is the best guarantee for the future.

Taking the mere bulk of the business done by the Company, I confess I was surprised at it. At the December Semi-Annual Drawing—the Christmas Drawing it is called here—the list of prizes footed up the enormous sum of $2,159,600, with $600,000 as the Capital Prize.

I have ascertained by a careful inspection of the books that during the five years last past Twenty-five Millions of Dollars, in exact figures $24,080,000 have been paid out to the fortunate owners of winning tickets. Vast as this sum may appear, it is evidently only an earnest of what is to come, for during the year 1885 the total payments, as the books show, amounted to but $2,490,000. From this time on the annual amount paid to subscribers gradually increases year by year, until in 1889 it reaches the enormous sum of $8,500,000. The business of the Lottery is thus very evidently seen to be, as I have said, a gradual growth, the outcome of fair business principles and the fruit of wide popular approval. Without this approval no such showing could ever have been made.

The home of The Louisiana State Lottery is situated in this city on the corner of St. Charles and Union streets, New Orleans. It consists of two handsome buildings, joined together by a connecting wing, thus forming an interior court open to the streets. The general character of the architecture is severe and singularly attractive from its very simplicity. As I entered the building I noticed the same characteristics within as without, everywhere an absence of pretention and display, and a corresponding evidence of earnestness and work. I was assured by Mr. Conrad, under whose thorough superintendence the clerical work is carried on, that the employees of the Company are chosen with great care from the best families of the South. No bonds are required of them, their personal character being a sufficient pledge of the fidelity of their service. I had not proceeded far in my tour of inspection before I realized that the trip through the different departments was destined to be a liberal education. The system in force is so perfect as to give the Company absolute knowledge of the smallest details of its own affairs, and therefore to place it in a position to protect and often materially aid its customers. The force actually employed during the busy season amounts to over one hundred and fifty trained clerks, and even this force would be inadequate were it not for the methods inaugurated by the Managers and carried out with rare devotion to duty by the different heads of departments.

I became impressed with the fact that this concern was virtually a postoffice, an express company and a bank. Indeed, I know of no bank which will do for its customers what this corporation will do, i. e., open an account for any subscriber who will deposit at least one dollar, invest for him any portion of the remittance he may send, and retain the residue as a credit on their books, keeping him supplied with any information he may require, and protect him in case he has lost or has been illegally deprived of his ticket.

All this the company does at its own expense. How it is done is a marvel. A letter, let us say, arrives in New Orleans, bearing the postmark, "Marysville, California," and addressed "M. A. Dauphin." Before that letter is, so to speak, at rest it will undergo some very curious experiences. It will receive every attention at the hands of the argus-eyed clerks. In the case of a letter with money, the mailing clerk not only records the number and description, the mail in which it came, the hour when received, but even the name of the railroad or other conveyance by which it arrived; in short every external feature of this missive to fortune's temple is made a matter of record. It now passes to another department, where its inner contents are carefully analyzed. If the letter contains money—one, two, three, four or more dollars—it is thus accordingly classified. If a $1 letter it goes into a $1 box. If a $2 epistle, then into a $2 box, and so on. The mail thus "stripped" proceeds one step further, and inclosures, letters and envelopes and all are forwarded, with the exact account of the total number of letters—and dollars—to what is known as the Filling Department. Here the orders for tickets are filled, and the account stated by the preceding department verified. The envelopes thus prepared then go to the corresponding clerks, who record the tickets on a register kept for that purpose, and forward each with an appropriate answer to its destination.

So much for the letters which do contain money (and not too much or too little) and are signed and do not want merely information and do not make complaint. In any case the correspondent is assured of entire justice and every attention. If the letter is unsigned or without proper address, it goes with whatever it contains to what is known as the "Tracing Department," whose clerks often wait many years for a clew to the identity of the sender. His money is not lost however. It is safe in the Company's keeping until the owner shall turn up. The Tracing Department is virtually a dead-letter office and it is a detective department as well. In its custody are the loose sheets of the entry clerks of the Forwarding Department, called the Register, afterwards bound in book form. These sheets contain a complete history of the receipts and disposition of every letter with money which has entered the Company's office. It is in the Tracing Department, therefore, that the record of every winning number is almost immediately perfected.

I noticed during the Drawing that when General Beauregard called out any prize of Ten Thousand Dollars and over, that a messenger was at once dispatched to the office. I was informed subsequently that before the last number had been drawn the Tracing Department had filed its report, showing just where the tickets drawing the Prizes had been sold, with the name and address of the holder. The forger and the thief stand no show against such a system, fortified as it is by other special safe-guards, and they know it. It would be well for the innocent holders of tickets to know and appreciate it also, for it can easily be seen that in case a letter is lost or stolen in the mails in transit it cannot be the fault of The Louisiana State Lottery Company. The system of the Lottery Company is too perfect to admit the possibility of a mistake.

The very nature of the Company's correspondence has forced it into a banking business. "A" wins a small prize, say of $40; not infrequently he will instruct the company to invest a certain amount of this sum in tickets and to hold the remainder subject to his order. In this way he actually asks the company to open an account. This the company cheerfully does, carrying for years thousands of names upon its books, which have but a few dollars to their credit. The lottery people are put to all sorts of trouble, but nothing daunts them. They exercise sublime patience under what is sometimes extreme provocation

There is something very striking in the following instructions which I take from the elaborate manual printed by the company, which every clerk must study upon entering its service: "Under no circumstances must a letter be couched in any other than the most respectful terms, no matter what terms the writer may have used in stating his case or under what provocation the answer is made. Any disrespectful remarks on the part of the complainant can only affect or discredit himself, but does not cancel any claims he may still have on the company for equitable treatment or absolve it from any responsibility it may justly have to bear."

Those of the Examiner's readers who may have received from my imperfect account some little suggestion of the pains taken by the company to meet the exacting requirements of its correspondence, must appreciate the pathetic dignity of these words.

Mr. A. Baldwin, President of the New Orleans National Bank, said to me in this connection: "They certainly do exercise marvellous care. I do not believe you will find anything like such system anywhere else; certainly not in the Postoffice at Washington nor in the Treasury Department."

"I understand, Mr. Baldwin," said your correspondent, "that the Postoffice authorities place obstacles in the way of the delivery of the mails."

"That is all over now," replied Mr. Baldwin emphatically," and there ought never to have been the slightest question raised. The Louisiana State Lottery was made part of the Constitution by an overwhelming popular vote, its charter has been repeatedly recognized by the Circuit Court and by the United States Supreme Court. Therefore the Postoffice Department has no option but to carry its mail, as in the case of any other company legally incorporated. There is, of course certain prejudice afloat against the mere scheme of the lottery, but the general Government of this country and no less a patriot than General George Washington have superintended such enterprise. Why, the Paris Exposition was nothing more than a lottery scheme, and no one has ever heard the slightest question as to the propriety of the methods therein employed by the French nation."

"I understand that the four National Banks of New Orleans guarantee the payment of winning tickets?"

"Of course they do, and why not? Such is the credit of the company and so great are its resources that a winning ticket is as good as a certified check. It is practically a bank note. However, it is literally true the four National Banks of this city have guaranteed in writing the payment of the prizes."

"I have said but little about the actual drawing, because I imagine Pacific Coast readers are already familiar with its details. But it was an impressive scene. The Academy of Music was packed with an audience of ladies and gentlemen who came to hear the decrees of the fickle goddess of fortune from the lips of those distinguished Generals, Beauregard and Early, whose names form part of the history of the country. The numbers are drawn from two wheels by orphan boys of one of the orphan asylums, who have been carefully blindfolded. I found myself like the rest of the audience, readily getting accustomed to large sums. But even the calm voice of General Beauregard grew eloquent when he announced that number 98,455 had drawn the first capital prize of $600,000, and the excitement that ensued cannot be described. It was rather a big plum surely. But as things are now going, I have not the slightest doubt that the time will soon come when the winner of a capital prize in The Louisiana State Lottery may become, as if by magic, a millionaire, and all by one turn of the wheel.—San Francisco (Cal.) Examiner, January 16th, 1890.

I am glad that I am not bound to make the world go right, but only to discover and to do with a cheerful heart the work that God appoints.

WAKED UP EFFECTUALLY.

A lethargic, dormant condition of the liver is hardly to be overcome with drastic cathartics and nauseous cholagogues. A gentler, pleasanter and far more effective means exists of arousing the organ whose somnolence. This is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, vouched for by the medical fraternity, tested by the public for many years. A resumption by the biliary organ of its secretive function, with the activity attendant upon health, a return to regularity of the bowels and a renewal of digestion, are the no less happy and certain results of using the Bitters systematically. Its laxative effect is never painful and drenching, its tendency being rather to perpetuate regularity than to produce a copious action. Malaria, nervousness, debility, kidney troubles and neuralgia it subdues effectually.

The wind often turns an umbrella, but a borrower rarely returns it.

THE ONLY GUARANTEED CURE

for all blood taints and humors, pimples, blotches, eruptions and skin diseases of every name and nature, is Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. A certificate of guarantee from a responsible business house warrants it to benefit or cure, or money refunded.

Chronic Nasal Catarrh positively cured by Dr. Sage's Remedy. 50 cents, by druggists,

---

Mr. Blair is subjecting the Senate to a course of compulsory education.

HOW I SAVED MY LIFE.

I was taken sick while at the dinner table with terrible distress in my stomach. Before this I had been hearty and strong. For fourteen days I kept getting worse, despite the efforts of two doctors. I lost forty pounds, and was satisfied that I could live but a few days. My trouble was Stomach and Liver Complaint, resulting in an attack of bilious colic. At this time I saw Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, of Rondout, N. Y., advertised, and sent for a bottle. I also sent for my physician, and told him that I was going to try the Favorite Remedy. He examined it and told me to use it three days and let him know the result. In the three days I walked four miles. Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy has saved my life.—W. S. Bitzer, Slate Mills, Ross Co., Ohio.

DR. KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, made at Rondout, N. Y. $1; 6 for $5.

Send for book, how to cure Kidney, Liver and Blood disorders.

Giles—Does that girl of yours know that you are a poet? Tudsam—Yes; but I'm trying to keep it from her father.

A TIME-HONORED POLICY.

Conservative commercial men will note with satisfaction that the PACIFIC BANK, of San Francisco, continues to give proof of the soundness of its business methods, and the prudence and wisdom of its administration by its last statement.

It is a striking fact that a bad memory for debts is very frequently accompanied by a remarkably good memory for faces.

All who use Dobbins' Electric Soap praise it as the best, cheapest and most economical family soap made; but if you will try it once it will tell a still stronger tale of its merits itself. Please try it. Your grocer will supply you.

The man who is able to travel extensively can generally learn enough in a year to make a bore of himself all the rest of his life.

Rich, fragrant, fine, "Tansill's Punch."

That Tired Feeling

is experienced by almost everyone at this season and many people resort to Hood's Sarsaparilla to drive away the languor and exhaustion. The blood is laden with impurities, the mind fails to think quickly, and the body is still slower to respond, Hood's Sarsaparilla is just what is needed. It overcomes that tired feeling, purifies and enriches the blood, makes the head clear, creates an appetite, and tones the nervous system.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Apothecaries, Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar

MONEY

Can be made easy by raising Chickens. A large 32-page Illustrated Catalogue describing Incubators, Brooders, Brooding Houses, How and What to Feed, How long to keep them in the Brooder, Drinking Fountains, Diseases and their Cure, in fact more information than is given in many 25-cent books. Sent to any address on receipt of 2c. stamp. Wire Netting, Bone Mills, Bone Meal and all kinds of Poultry Supplies.
Address,
Petaluma Incubator Co., Petaluma, Cal.

SURE CURE FOR PILES.

Sure cure for blind, bleeding and itching Piles. One box has cured the worst cases of ten years' standing. No one need suffer ten minutes after using Kirk's German Pile Ointment. It absorbs tumors, allays the itching, acts as a poultice, gives relief. Dr. Kirk's German Pile Ointment is prepared only for Piles and itching of the private parts, and nothing else. Every box is warranted.....

Sold by druggists and sent by mail on receipt of price, $1.00 per box. J. J. Mack & Co., Wholesale Agents, San Francisco.

OREGON THE PARADISE OF FARMERS.

Mild, equable climate, certain and abundant crops. Best fruit, grain, grass and stock country in the world. Full information free. Address the Oregon Immigration Board, Portland, Oregon

---

Try Germea for Breakfast.

FULL WEIGHT PURE

DR. PRICE'S CREAM BAKING POWDER

MOST PERFECT MADE

Its superior excellence proven in millions of homes for more than a quarter of a century. It is used by the United States Government. Indorsed by the heads of the Great Universities as the Strongest Purest and Most Healthful. Dr. Price's the only Baking Powder that does not contain Ammonia, Lime or Alumn. Sold only in Cans.
PRICE BAKING POWDER CO.,
NEW YORK. CHICAGO SAN FRANCISCO

BEST COUGH MEDICINE, PISO'S CURE FOR CONSUMPTION.

It has permanently cured THOUSANDS of cases pronounce by doctors hopeless. If you have remonitory symptoms, such as Cough, Difficulty of Breathing, &c., do not delay, but use PISO'S CURE FOR CONSUMPTION immediately. By Druggists. 25 cents.

Reliable SEEDS

The famous Hovey Seed Store of Boston, and Hovey Nurseries of Cambridge, Mass., have been moved to East Pasadena, California, where the business will be conducted as
The Raymond Flower and Seed Store,
C. H. HOVEY, Manager,
East Pasadena, Cal.
Send for complete catalogue.

INVENTORS

are invited to consult the old established Patent Firm of Mason Fenwick & Lawrence, Wash., D.C.

DR. SYKES' SURE CURE FOR CATARRH
ESTABLISHED CHICAGO 1870
1888 Removed TO CINCINNATI.
Has cured many cases pronounced hopeless by physicians. Send for Free Book 'Causes Ease Talk' and numerous testimonials. They will convince you.
Dr. SYKES' SURE CURE CO., 330 Race St., Cincinnati, O.

Dr. L. GOLDSCHMIEDT,

Twenty years New York private and Hospital Experience. All Chronic and Special Diseases. Call or address, No. 5 Stockton Street, San Francisco, Cal.

A Letter for You

ESTEEMED FRIEND:—We are still offering as good bargains as you obtained of us last year on the same favorable terms. We use even greater care than ever in selecting and packing goods and rarely have a complaint of price, quality or failure to arrive in order, but thousands of letters of approval and encouragement. The "Home Circle" is published each month and weekly bulletins giving market changes each week; these will be sent to you or your friends on application. Our stock is much more complete than ever before, and comprises almost everything a family needs to make life a pleasure. At this time we offer until sold special bargains in London layer raisins at $1.50 and $1.75 for 20-lb. boxes; cheap raisins down to 5c. and common Mission dried grapes low as 40 and even 50 lbs. for $1.00. Butter is too low for anything. Interior dairies fair to good, per roll of 2 lbs., 20c to 30c.; choice coast dairies 32c. to 35c. in quantities of 25 or 50 rolls, and but little more at retail. We will send you a 12-roll box this week at $1.00 that will guarantee to suit. In shoes we offer infants soft soles, Nos. 0 to 3, at 20 and 25 cents, and nice kid, good enough for your baby or ours, sizes 1 to 5, at 40c. to 50c. Ladies shoes we sell, Sunday or everyday, and good value, not auction goods, but regular stock, at $1.50; children's school shoes, we have them so good and cheap that you could save your taxes every month buying of us. Men's everyday shoes at $1.25, but we don't recommend them, but at $1.50, $1.75 and $2.00 we warrant them to give satisfaction. Underwear, we beat the world for price, quality and variety for men, women and children; low as 10c. for infants in grey, and high as you want to pay. But send us a trial order or ask for the full list. Do not send for a few items by mail without adding for postage. Address plainly, Smith's Cash Store, 418 Front St., San Francisco. Cal.

THE BEST SEEDS are those put up by D. M. FERRY & CO. Who are the largest Seedsmen in the world. D. M. FERRY & Co's Illustrated, Descriptive and Priced SEED ANNUAL for 1890 will be mailed FREE to all applicants, and to last season's customers. It is better than ever. Every person using Garden, Flower or Field Seeds should send for it. Address D. M. FERRY & CO. DETROIT, MICH.

ORATORS say Piso's Cure for Consumption is THE BEST for keeping the voice clear. 25 cents.

Damiana Bitters.

TRADE MARK

The great Mexican Remedy for Disorders of the Kidneys and Bladder, Damiana is recognized by all physicians as the best Nervous Stimulant, gives health and strength to the Generative and Procreative Organs. For sale everywhere.
NABER, ALFS & BRUNE,
323 & 325 Market St., S. F., Agents.

STEINWAY. KRANICH, PEASE & BACH'R, Gabler, Roenisch Pianos; Burdett Organs, Band Instruments. Largest stock of Sheet Music and Books. Bands supplied at Eastern Prices. MATTHIAS GRAY CO., 206 Post Street, San Francisco.

GILES' CREOSOZONE

FOR THE DESTRUCTION OF

VERMIN and PARASITES

AFFECTING POULTRY AND BIRDS.

Price, FULL QUART, 75c. FULL DIRECTIONS ON EACH CAN.
SOLD BY ALL GROCERS AND DRUGGISTS.
Prepared only by Nelson Giles, Jr., Manufacturing Co., National City Cal.

SINGERS who have used Piso's Cure for Consumption say it is BEST OF ALL. Sold everywhere. 25c.

USE NEW WELLINGTON COAL.

WHAT THE TOWN WANTED.

Citizen—So you think of locating here?

Physician—Yes. I thought some of practicing among you.

Citizen—See here, young man, there is a good opening here for a man as understands his biz, but we don't want no practicing, or experimenting—doctoring's what we want!

Many times women call on their family physicians, suffering, as they imagine, one from dyspepsia, another

INYO INDEPENDENT.

COUNTY OFFICIAL PAPER.

C. MULHOLLAND, - - - Proprietor.

Independence, Cal.,

FRIDAY, - - - MAY 2, 1890.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

VOL. XXI. NO. 47. INDEPENDENCE, INYO CO., CAL., MAY 2, 1890. WHOLE NO. 1018.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

COUNTY OFFICIAL PAPER.

C. MULHOLLAND, - - - Proprietor.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One Year (post paid)	$4.00
Six Months	2.25
Three Months	1.50
One Month	50
Single Copies	20

A MARKET EPISODE.

With the noise the brokers made,
With the music Mammon played,
Rang and roared like very Bedlam
The Chicago Board of Trade,
Where the Demon of the Market
Led the discord, bell in hand—
Demas, with his shrieking chorus,
Dives, with his bellowing band—
Till the clamor in the chamber
Grew the clamor of a town,
And the money-mad halloo,
As if battle trumpets blew,
Seemed a dithyrambic tempest
That would never quiet down.

But amid the Babel din
Came a small magician in,
And the tumult quickly dwindled
To a murmur low and thin.
Thro' that revel hall of Plutus
Stole a hush of queer surprise.
All the "bulls" and "bears," enchanted,
Dropped their voices and their eyes,
For the velvet-footed vision
Gliding o'er the marble floor
Soothed them, like a tender spell,
To a feeling none would tell,
And a look like fathers' faces
Peeping thro' the nursery door.

'Twas a curious magic spun
Round the heart of every one;
'Twas a something less than sentiment,
And something more than fun.
Oh, a cat may watch a king, they say;
But chance had altered that,
For a whole brigade of money kings
Were looking at a cat;
Nor the corn of all the prairies,
Nor the cotton of the South,
Calling thro' the "ticker's" whir,
Could their souls that moment stir
Like the sight of gray Grimalkin
With a kitten in her mouth.

It was pussy's "moving day,"
For some warning seemed to say
She must domicile her babies
Farther out of peril's way;
And the mother's new migration,
With her brood of mother cares,
From behind the elevator
To behind the gallery stairs
Was the play that caught the traders
As they rushed their bargains thro',
And the small domestic role
Was so pretty and so droll
Not a man but would have watched it
Till the dinner whistle blew.

Buyer's bid and jobber's bet,
Stock commission, margin, net,
Consols, credits, "shorts" and "futures," Pussy made them all forget,
As with head erect her burden
Straight she toted o'er the track,
Laid it in its new-made cradle,
And sedately trotted back.
Every time she took a kitten
All the crowd their silence broke
With a chorus of hurrahs;
And a symphony of "ahs,"
When at home she safely dropped it,
Like a gentle thunder spoke.

Never heeding looks or cheers,
On her slow and calm careers,
Thro' the lane of eager gazers
Marched the cat with slanting ears;
To and fro with patient paces,
Turn by turn and trip by trip,
Going with a furry bundle
Coming with an empty grip,
All her mind upon her business,
Pussy kept her steady gait,
And the wonder-smiling men
Saw her pass and pass again,
Counting cats thro' all the litter,
And the last was number eight.

At the ending of the play
Of Grimalkin's moving day,
When her weak and mewing family
Was snugly stowed away,
On the first step of the stairway,
Seated with a quiet grace,
Pantomime of dumb contentment,
With her paw she washed her face;
And the speculators, laughing,
As the mimic "curtain fell,"
Vowed the cat-and-kitten drama
Was a treat that paid them well.
But the charm was broken surely,
And (so soon it seemed a sin)
Ere the last half minute went
Of that quarter-hour well spent
They were "whooping up the market"
With the same old Babel din.

—Theron Brown, in Harper's Bazar.

MARK, THE CHORE BOY.

How by Self-Denial He Saved Arthur's Life.

"Please, ma'am, will you give me something to eat? I hain't eat nothing but green apples an' wild onions since day before yesterday, an' oh! ma'am, I'm so hungry."

The speaker was a ragged, dirty, unkempt lad, of, perhaps, twelve years of age, who stood at the kitchen door of Josiah Green's farm-house one sultry afternoon in July and looked up into Mrs. Green's face with eager, famished eyes.

"Where did you come from, and what's your name?" asked the housewife, viewing him with suspicious, though not unkindly eyes, and speaking in a motherly voice.

"I'm from the city," said the boy. "I've been a bootblack there, and a newsboy, and an errand-boy, and, do my very best, could hardly keep from starving. There's a dozen boys for every job, and some of 'em are worse off than I am, for they have little brothers and sisters to help, while I am all alone in the world. One day a fine gentleman what was having a shine told me that he used to live on a farm when a boy, and that if I would go into the country, I could get a job at doing chores for my board, and have all the milk I could drink, and go to school in the winter, and perhaps grow up and be President."

The kind-hearted Mrs. Green laughed as she invited the lad into the house, and said that for once, at least, he should have all the milk he could drink. She was better than her word, for she not only brought him milk, but sweet home-made bread, the like of which he had never tasted before, and doughnuts, and, to crown all, a mammoth piece of dried-apple pie, and a goodly slice of cheese.

Placing a chair at the table, she said: "Now, my little man, eat your fill. Mr. Green and my son, who is about your age, will soon be home from the village, where they have gone for the mail, and then we will see what more can be done for you."

The motherly heart of Mrs. Green was evidently stirred with sympathy for the poor little orphan, for she softly murmured to herself: "My boy Arthur's age, and alone in the world. Poor little lad."

"You asked me my name, ma'am, and I forgot to tell you," said the lad, his mouth full of pie. "It's Mark Bloomer. The boys called me 'Bloom' for short, I—" But before Mark could complete another sentence Mr. Green drove up to the door, the horse was halted with a loud "whoa," and Mrs. Green was soon busily engaged in unloading sundry packages of groceries, for which her husband had bartered butter and eggs at the combined village store and post-office. She was assisted by her son Arthur, who was so greatly astonished at the unexpected sight of Mark Bloomer that he dropped a paper bag he was carrying, which bursting open permitted the milk crackers it contained to roll like so many small wheels in every direction. Mark and Arthur both sprang to pick them up, and in doing so bumped their heads together. Neither was hurt, and it proved to be the best introduction they could have had, for they both laughed very heartily, and when two boys laugh over the same thing it usually ends in their becoming friends. The two boys had just finished picking up the crackers when Farmer Green entered the kitchen.

"Hello, mother!" he shouted, in his rough but kindly voice. "Where did you find this 'ere youngster?"

"O, he happened along," laughed Mrs. Green. "He is from the city, and he is looking for a place to do chores for his board, and in the winter go to school."

"O, father, let him live with us. O, do keep him, father; I do so want some one to play with."

"I don't believe 'twould be a very profitable speculation to hire a boy just to play. Doing chores ain't play."

"But we would 'make believe' it was," urged Arthur. "Please, father, let him stay."

"We'll see about that. Come here, youngster," said the farmer to Mark, who during the foregoing short dialogue had remained perfectly silent, hoping against hope that Arthur would prevail upon his father to permit him to stay. Mark at once stepped up to Mr. Green.

"You're an honest-looking lad enough, though you are ragged and dirty. And so you want to do chores for your board, eh? What do you know about farm-work?"

"Not any thing," said Mark; "I've always lived in the city, but I know I could learn. I will do my very best, sir, if you will take me."

"Well, well, we'll see about it in the morning. In the meantime you had better go down to the creek, and take a bath. I s'pose we'll have to keep you over night anyway, and them feet and hands of yours ain't just the things to put between clean white sheets. Arthur may go with you and show you the 'swimming-hole,' but don't stay in the water long, and be sure and put up the bars so that the cows won't get into the meadow," shouted the farmer after them as they started, with many a whoop and shout, for Oaks creek, a stream flowing through Mr. Green's farm.

As soon as the boys had disappeared the farmer turned to his wife and said;

"Well, Polly, what do you think? Had we better keep this young tramp or not? I really need a boy to help do the chores; Arthur isn't at all strong, as you remind me twenty times a day. If I thought the lad would be of any earthly use to me I'd try him for a month."

"He seems an honest, bright lad," said Mrs. Green, "and, besides, he's just Arthur's age. Let's give him a trial."

The fact of his being "just Arthur's age" seemed to be his strongest recommendation in the eyes of the loving mother. Arthur was a sickly though merry lad, and the "chores" that naturally fall to the lot of boys of his age on all farms had, in great part, been done by his father; the doing which kept the latter from his other duties to such an extent that he was continually behindhand with his work.

In the course of half an hour Arthur and Mark returned from the creek, the latter looking very clean and rosy and the former very blue.

"We have concluded, Mark," said the farmer, slowly, "to give you a month's trial."

"Hurrah! hurrah!" shouted Arthur, throwing his cap in the air. "Ain't that jolly? Now I shall have some one to play with."

"I shall expect you," continued the farmer when Arthur's enthusiasm had somewhat abated, "to help milk, feed the pigs and hens, water the horses, bring in the wood and water, and do such other light work as I may call upon you to do. If at the end of a month we are mutually satisfied with each other we will make a bargain for a longer period."

That night, for the first time in his life, Mark Bloomer slept on a feather bed between snow-white sheets. The next morning he was up at daybreak and had the fire made and the tea-kettle singing right merrily before Mrs. Green made her appearance. In a short time the farmer came into the kitchen with two large tin milk-pails, one of which he handed to Mark with the remark:

"Now, my lad, come out to the barn with me and I will give you your first lesson in milking." Mark was rather awkward at first, but soon learned to milk as well as the farmer himself. In fact, he did so well and so endeared himself to the whole Green household, especially Arthur, that at the end of the trial month they were not only willing but anxious to have him stay through the fall and winter and do chores for his board and schooling.

"All work and no play makes Jack a dull boy." Farmer Green, being a sensible man, recognized the truth of this old saying, and gave Mark one day each week, "all to himself." Instead, however, of its being all to himself, it was all for Arthur; for he gave up the entire day to the amusement of the latter, making for him kites, balls, bows and arrows, traps, etc. In fact he worked harder on his play days than at any other time. Arthur was constantly singing his praises; he could "out-run, out-swim, out-skate any boy round.' At school he fairly astonished the teached by the rapid progress he made. At Farmer Green's every thing about the barn and shed was in order; every tool had a place of its own, and was kept in its place; the cows were sleek; the horses shone like glass bottles; the wood-shed was piled full of wood, and the wood-box and water-pails were never empty.

"I don't know what I should do without him," said the well-satisfied farmer. "He's worth his weight in gold."

Things went along thus pleasantly until the holiday vacation. The day but one before Christmas Mr. Green handed a sealed envelope to Mark, saying: "I want you to take this to Mr. Perry. He lives over on the Cherry Valley road, you know. I'd let you have one of the horses, but I've got to go to the village for that load of feed. You'd better put the letter in your inside coat pocket, for there's money in it. It's the pay for that yearling I bought. I didn't agree to pay for it till the 1st of March, but Perry's just heard that his daughter in Ohio is very sick, and is going to see her; consequently he wants the money for car fare."

Mark placed the letter in his inside pocket, as directed, and started on his errand, whistling a merry tune. The farmer went to the villiage, got his load of feed, and returned home and unloaded it.

"Seems to me it's about time Mark got back. It's almost chore time," said Mr. Green to his wife.

"O, may be he's met some of his schoolmates on the road, and is having a play-spell. Boys will be boys, you know," said the kind-hearted Mrs. Green.

At five o'clock Mark had not made his appearance, and the farmer went out to milk alone. "'Tain't like him to dilly-dally when on an errand," he muttered to himself, as he took down his milking-stool. "I hope he hasn't run away with that money. He's been a good boy since being here, but what do I know about his past record? I do hope he hasn't run away. Not that I care so much for the money; but I had learned to like the boy."

The chores done, the Green family sat down to supper. All were silent until the farmer said:

"That boy had twenty dollars in an envelope in his inside pocket, and there can't be any further doubt but that he's run away with it. I'd give another twenty dollars, cheerfully, if I could think otherwise."

"Mark is honest, father," said Arthur. "He'll come back all right, see if he don't. I don't know what, but something has happened to him. I know it. He'll return some day, if not to-night, and clear up the mystery."

"I think so, too," said Mrs. Green. "Perhaps he has met with an accident. Hadn't you better drive to Mr. Perry's in the morning and see?"

"Yes. I'd go to-night if it wasn't so stormy," replied the farmer.

But when in the morning he drove up to Mr. Perry's door he found the house locked up. The whole family had gone to Ohio. He inquired at the few houses on the road between Mr. Perry's and his own home, but could hear nothing of the missing boy. Sadly he unhitched his horse, firmly convinced he had seen the last of Mark and his twenty dollars.

One day about the middle of January, just as the Greens had sat down to dinner, the kitchen door slowly opened and Mark Bloomer stepped in. He was "poor as a crow," as Arthur expressed it; his eyes and cheeks were hollow and he was so weak he could hardly walk! At this unexpected apparition Mrs. Green arose from her chair so suddenly as to nearly overturn the table. Arthur uttered a loud "Hurrah! I told you so!" while Mr. Green could only sit and stare in open-eyed wonder.

"Why, where have you been, and what makes you so thin and pale?" asked the good housewife as she placed a plate and cup and saucer for Mark.

"I've been in the pest-house and I've had the small-pox," said the boy. "When I've had something to eat I'll tell you all about it. I'm awful hungry."

After dinner Mark told his story as follows:

"Although I didn't say any thing about it, I hadn't been feeling well for some time before I went away. I thought it wasn't nothing more than a cold until that day I went to Mr. Perry's. I felt sick enough to die before I got half way there. My head and back burned and ached, and the trees and houses and things looked as though they were just spinnin' round. I couldn't think what was the matter with me at first, but soon made up my mind I was coming down with the small-pox. The day before I went to Mr. Perry's Ike Pier told me that Sam Smith was 'down with the small-pox and in the pest-house.' About a fortnight before, you remember, Sam and I had worked together in the woods. When that came into my mind I knew what was the matter of me, and I says to myself it won't never do for me to go back home and give Arthur the small-pox. Weak and sickly as he is, he would die sure. I'll just go to the pest-house and bear Sam Smith company. I managed, somehow, to get to Mr. Perry's and give him the envelope. I told him all about it, and where I was going, and made him promise to tell you; but he was so frightened and in such a big hurry to get rid of me that I don't believe he realized what he said."

"He went West that very day," broke in the farmer, "and I got a letter from him yesterday, in which he says he got the money all right, and told me all about your—your—"

"Heroic behavior," said Mrs. Green, who used to be a "schoolma'am," and prided herself on having a better education than her husband.

"Well," continued Mark, "I got to the pest-house somehow—I can't remember how myself—and the doctors said it was a 'fine case;' though what there was 'fine' about it is more than I, for one, can tell, for I was sick 's a horse. They pulled me through all right, however, and here I am, and that's all there is about it."

"Well, Mark," said Mr. Green, "I will say this much: your home is here just as long as you care to stay. When you get strong enough you can go to work, and I'll pay you ten dollars a month the first year, and more the next, and you can go to school winters. I feel that your presence of mind saved my son's life, for he never could have lived through what you've endured. God bless you!" and to hide his emotion the farmer abruptly left the room.

Good Mrs. Green, with the tears streaming down her cheeks, clasped the two boys in her arms and said:

"Henceforth, instead of one son, I have two. Arthur, you must love Mark as a brother, for he just the same as saved your life."

"I knew he wasn't a thief," said Arthur, squirming from his mother's arms. "Hurrah, for brother Mark! Hurrah, for every body!"—Thomas Burke, in Yankee Blade.

THE SHORT-WEIGHT MAN.

He Had a Soft Snap Until He Met a Retired Prize-Fighter.

I was reading in the papers the other day that the "short-weight" man had been arrested and held to bail in Chicago on a charge of swindling. It was all of nine years ago that I saw him play his game in Toledo, and he has not only been at it ever since, but must have laid away a snug little sum of money. I was in a large retail grocery house one day when the man came in, briskly inquired for the proprietor, and said:

"In connection with the Government effort to shut out all adulterated goods we are compiling tables to show that ninety per cent. of retail buyers are defrauded in weight. These tables are classified by States, counties and cities, and I respectfully request the privilege of examining your scales."

"But they have been tested by the city sealer," protested the merchant.

"Then so much the better," replied the stranger, as he took several weights, each of which was stamped "U. S.," from his sachel.

"But—I—I—come in later when I am at liberty. I want to understand this matter more thoroughly."

"Oh, certainly," and the man replaced his weights and bowed himself out, to return at another hour and "arrange matters in a satisfactory manner."

I met him fifty times in three years, and up to that date no one had questioned his identity as a Government agent while he had "fixed matters" with hundreds of men whose scales had been found short. It was in De Witt, Iowa, that I saw him last. He entered a grocery there, tested a scale without having said a word, and then explained his mission to the proprietor.

"Is my scale short," inquired the grocer.

"Two ounces to the pound, sir."

"And for seven years I have been giving customers only fourteen ounces to the pound?"

"Exactly."

"Well, durn my hide, I've dropped $300 a year right along even while doing that, and this satisfies me that I had better go back to my old trade, which was prize fighting! Now is a good time to begin!"

And he hauled off and knocked the agent clean over a broom rack and under the stove, and then lifted him up and booted him into the street.—N. Y. Sun.

ERICSSON'S PATRIOTISM.

He Loved His Native Sweden Although He Never Revisited It.

Though he was a citizen of the world and a naturalized American, his interest in his native land never ceased; indeed his affection for it increased as he advanced in years. Yet he never visited Sweden after his departure from home in 1826. He did propose in the latter part of his life to return thither, and declared that he would rather lie under a mound of gravel in Sweden when he was dead than beneath the tallest monument that could be erected on American soil. He became interested, however, in his study of solar heat and the development of his sun motor, and was not willing to transfer himself to a region so little adapted to such studies as the high latitudes of Sweden. He needed, as he explained, to be near the vertical rays of the sun. "New York is certainly not vertical under the sun, but the rays in midsummer incline only seventeen degrees, and produce a heat scarcely two degrees less than in the tropics, thus sufficient for my purpose."

When Ericsson obtained a position securing to him an income much in excess of his modest needs, which was not until after he had reached his sixtieth year, he was constantly making gifts to Sweden and to Swedes. These appear to have attracted little or no attention in this country, but they have added a feeling of affection to the pride with which his countrymen remember him. An ancient miner sent word through one of Ericsson's correspondents, that he had known John in his youth; immediately a draft was sent to purchase a handsome watch for the old gossip, and as one of his neighbors, "the man with the leathern apron," was subsequently found to have some vague recollections in the same line, he received 150 crowns to "buy him a coat."

When famine pinched the Norrlanders in 1867, and collections for their relief were taken up in various countries, the total contributions from the United States amounted to 20,316 Swedish crowns. Of this sum Ericsson gave 20,216 crowns, and a subscription of 100 crowns from the Swedish Minister completed the total.—Scribner's Magazine.

A Question of Relative Values.

"John! John! Wake up!"

"What is the matter, Maria?"

"I hear a noise in the kitchen. Go down quick and see what it is. May be it's a burglar."

"Mrs. Billus, what do you consider the actual cash value of the silver and plated ware and other stealable articles in the kitchen?"

"There's ten dollars' worth, at the very least."

"And do you suppose, madam, I am going to run the risk of meeting an armed burglar for a pitiful, beggarly, dad-dinged ten dollars, madam?"

(Angrily) "Why not, John Billus? Isn't your life insured for $5,000?"—

—Fifty-seven of Yale's graduating class of one hundred and forty will study law.

—There are one hundred and fifty-one college branches of the Y. M. C. A. in the United States.

—Five points are deducted from a student's grade at Lafayette if he be found guilty of profanity.—Indianapolis Journal.

—Four times a month the Catholic priests of the diocese of New York meet and discuss theological subjects in the Latin tongue.

DYNAMOS ON WAR-SHIPS.

An Interesting Automatic Governor of Use in Case of Accident.

"If you want to know what the most interesting of the recent electrical inventions is—the most interesting to naval men, that is," said a naval officer the other day, "you will find it in the dynamo governor. The ordinary run of people did not think about this point, of course, but when Edison's works down town in New York burned out because the load on the dynamos was suddenly lightened and the whole power of the machines was turned loose on the lamps that remained there was not a naval officer but stopped to think what would happen on a war ship should such an accident occur there. Under the ordinary method of controling electrical systems the engineer has to stand by to manipulate what is called a resistence box whenever the load at the dynamo is suddenly increased or diminished by adding to or cutting off the number of lamps. If this box is attended to instantly, matters are all right. But in a war ship in time of battle it might very easily happen that an unlucky shot from the enemy would not only cut off all but a few of the lamps, but also kill the engineer whose duty it was to handle the resistance box. Or the lamps might be cut off and the engineer be too badly frightened to do the right thing. In a moment the remaining lamps on the ship would be destroyed and the dynamo as well. The magazine would be in utter darkness, and fatal confusion would prevail. The one thing for which naval men have looked was a governor for the dynamo. When it was found it was a simple thing—just an extra coil of wire placed on the dynamo, this coil being made of much larger wire than is used on the horseshoe magnet. It is not easy to explain the action of the extra coil of wire, but it receives the current, and serves it as a governor serves a throttle on a steam pipe of an engine. If there is a call for an increased service, the series coil, as it is called, provides it. If every lamp but one of a 500-lamp circuit be cut off at one stroke, that one lamp burns on, unaffected to any appreciable extent.

"There is another feature of this governor that makes it valuable to a war ship whose coal space is limited. When the lamps are cut off the power of the dynamo and the consequent consumption of coal are not wasted in forcing the current through a resistance box. The reduction in the power used is almost in proportion to the load removed or the number of lamps cut off. If 500 lamps, for instance, require 50-horse power, the power required when 450 lamps were cut off would be, say, 7-horse power, which means a saving of the coal required for the 43-horse power dispensed with.

"The invention is not of the sort to attract notoriety outside of people interested in electrical plants, but to naval vessels it is a matter of enough importance to remove the only objection against dynamos on shipboard."—N. Y. Sun.

A STINGY MILLIONAIRE.

He Wears a Suit Worth Two Dollars and a Half at the Most.

Mrs. Hetty Green has enjoyed the reputation for a long time of being the most shabbily dressed millionaire who wanders within the precincts of Wall street, and any one who has seen her and made a comparison mentally with appearance of a mechanic's wife going to market Saturday night is convinced that her reputation is well deserved. Russell Sage wears inexpensive clothes, but they are not only neat, but usually have the appearance of being recently purchased. The only rival Mrs. Green has in point of shabbiness in old Joe Robinson, who was one of the contractors engaged in the Union Pacific railroad, and is said to be worth $4,000,000. He was down in Wall street yesterday progressing along the thoroughfare with the assistance of his crutches, as the genial old fellow is lame, dressed in an old suit of gray clothes and without an overcoat. He doesn't wear any overcoat because it represents an expenditure of money he is not willing to make. His whole outfit, including hat and boots, would not command $2.50 at any well-regulated pawn shop. He is one of the few stingy millionaires who are perfectly good-natured in their stinginess. He is not cross or crabbed, but greets every body he knows with the utmost geniality. He and Sidney Dillon are very good friends, but neither the arguments of Mr. Dillon nor any one else can spur him on to invest money in a wardrobe. The story is told of his seeing a friend on the street not long ago in conversation with a gentleman whom he did not know. He went up to the two men and was about to speak, when the man who was a stranger to him turned and said he was very sorry but he had no small change. The friend explained the situation, although he was somewhat embarrassed, and the stranger extendad profuse apologies to the millionaire whom he had taken for a beggar.—N. Y. World.

How Pecans Are Polished.

Salesman at a fancy grocery store: Will you have pecans with the hulls polished or just the plain, common every-day pecan. No difference in the meat. The difference is in the polishing of the hulls and the price. You pay two cents extra on the pound for the polished hull. Why? Because it is a fad, That's all. Some folks like to have the polished pecans on the table because they look nice. How are they polished? Well, that is a Chicago trick. There is a place in this town that does nothing else but polish nuts. A huge cylinder, operating on the same principle as the peanut roaster you see on the streets, is put in motion. It contains a few pounds of brickdust. The nuts are put in the cylinder and it is given a few revolutions. The dust gives the hull of the nuts the bright brown, polish appearance you see in these pecans! Some folks come in and ask where pecans come from. They come from the South generally, but as good pecans grow right here in Illinois, near Alton, as in any portion of the country. —Chicago Tribune.

TROUBLES IN CHINA.

Secret Societies Against the Ruling Manchu Tartar Dynasty.

The Emperor of China and the Empress do not agree. The Emperor of China wishes to prove that he rules; the Empress-dowager has the same ambition. The dispute originated in a love affair. When the Emperor, who is eighteen years old, came to the throne he became deeply in love with the daughter of a Mancha military officer, the lady being, according to Manchu tastes, exceedingly beautiful. He also chose another charming girl to be his second wife, should occasion arise. The Empress-dowager, however, had an exceedingly plain niece, who she was determined should marry the Emperor; and, despite the latter's objections, she succeeded in carrying out her plan. The Emperor now hates the Empress and the Empress-dowager with a hatred of great intensity. Quarrels are of frequent occurrence. Whatever the Emperor desires the Empress-dowager objects to; and, as they both are thoroughly obstinate and high-spirited, it is feared that the rupture will lead to a crisis of the most serious nature. The palace and government officials are divided into two parties—one headed by the Emperor and the imperial tutor; the other by the Empress-dowager. There are also two parties in China—one progressive, the other conservative. The former wanted a certain railway built, and the Emperor sanctioned it; the latter objected, and the Emperor withdrew his sanction. The Emperor is of rather progressive ideas himself, but the imperial tutor, who practically rules him, is strongly opposed to any innovations, Western or otherwise.

The domestic rancor in the palace has spread throughout all the nation. Secret societies are to be found everywhere, and they are sedulously spreading a spirit of disloyalty to and discontent at their Emperor; for the present ruler of the Chinese Empire is not a Chinese, but a Manchu, the Manchu Tartars having by force obtained their position and power. The object of the secret societies is to overthrow the existing state of things, and inaugurate an era of prosperity and enlightenment. The Manchu dignitaries in the capital are getting very anxious at the state of affairs, and do not trust even the highest of the native officials, many of whom are in favor of the spirit of change which has grown up among a large section of the people. The grain crop along a portion of the Yang-tse-Kiang has failed, and a serious famine over a large area of territory is expected during the winter. Hunger among a dense population like the Chinese is a direct cause of disorder. Various outbreaks arising out of this discontent have taken place at several ports, and, though apparently directed against foreigners, were really demonstrations stirred up by agitators against the imperial government at Pekin. A military camp has been formed near Shanghai in case of a rising.

The Emperor is regarded by the Chinese as being unlucky, and they point to the burning of the Temple of Heaven as a proof thereof. As, however, the Emperor insisted that some pet goats should be allowed to eat the grass within the sacred inclosure, and the Empress-Dowager objected, there is a suspicion that the Empress knows more about the fire than she will admit. Whether this be so or not, many, both foreigners and Chinese, think that the Manchu dynasty is almost at its end.—N. Y. Herald.

RUSSIAN WOLVES.

A Decidedly Interesting Problem of Natural History.

A curious report was recently brought home by a traveler from Norway, which, if it be true, will go far to correct the accepted ideas concerning the wisdom of extirpating noxious animals in countries where they abound. It is said that in one of the northern provinces the reward offered by government for the destruction of wolves had resulted in their becoming practically extinct, and thus there was every reason for congratulation. But it now appears that, unknown to man, the Norwegian wolves had been constantly engaged in a patriotic war of self-defense against the voracious packs of Russian Lapland; so long as their numbers were undiminished they held their ground, and even continued to do so for some time after they had begun to be decimated by the misguided hostility of their human fellows. It would seem that there then supervened a period in which the Russian wolves assumed a wily Fabian policy, "biding their time" until the hand of man stimulated by government blood money, had finished its work.

At last the ground was clear, but no sooner had the Norsk folk begun to rejoice than a fresh incursion was reported of huge hungry wolves from beyond the frontier, which have occupied the vacant hunting grounds of the slaughtered animals, so that the whole process of "extinguishing" must be recommenced, with no better prospect of finality than the labor of Sisyphus. The story presents us with food for reflection upon many interesting problems of natural history; first, we have the unsuspected power of united action evinced by the wolves of both countries, with the obvious induction to their reasoning faculties; then we may consider the extraordinary perception by the Russian wolves of the policy of the Norwegian Government, and its reaction upon their own fortunes; and we should not be wise to neglect the bearing of the episode upon what we are doing ourselves as in India. May it not happen that in the unexplored fastnesses of Thibet or Upper Burmah, legions of man-eating tigers, or rogue elephants, or relentless pythons, are silently watching our raids upon their kind, and gathering their forces against the day when Indian jungles have been emptied by the folly of man, an opportunity comes for a fresh irruption far worse than the first?—Murray's Magazine.

—A man at Everly, Ia., the other day poured boiling water on a pump handle to loosen it. It loosened sufficiently to fly up and break his nose and knock out several of his teeth.

THE SUN'S CYCLONES.

Disturbances of the Solar Atmosphere the Cause of Sun Spots.

Prof. Searle's lecture at the Catholic University on the physical constitution of the sun gave some interesting information respecting the sun spots. Galileo, he said, first saw the sun spots with the telescope. Sometimes they can be seen with the naked eye as the sun is setting, but only rarely. If we take an ordinary opera-glass, taking care to protect our eyes with a piece of smoked glass, it is probable that we can see one or two at almost any time.

The spots are composed of a dark portion called the umbra, and a surrounding lighter portion called the penumbra. They are irregular in shape and not round, as they would appear through the opera-glass. If we look through the telescope on two successive days we will see that the spots have changed their size and position. They are sometimes smaller and sometimes larger, and it often happens that new ones have appeared that we did not see before. But it will be found that all have moved considerably to the right, and this will be very noticeable every day.

It takes a spot on an average about twelve and one-half days to cross over from one side to the other. They seem to move slowly near the edges and more rapidly as they reach the sun. In the center they appear broader and more round than at the edges, where they are foreshortened and become elliptical. From these and other facts we conclude that the sun is, like the earth, a globe revolving around a central axis, but it takes the sun twenty-five days to make a revolution. Sometimes the spot that we have already observed will reappear at the end of twenty-five days from its first appearance, but ordinarily they do not live as long as that. The spots are found to occur only in a belt each side of the equator. They are in a continual state of flux and change, not only in themselves, but in relation to each other. They seem like the clouds in our air. The penumbra consists of rays or cylinders radiating from the umbra. Not only do the spots become elliptical as they approach the edge, but the umbra is noticed to approach the inner side of the spot and sometimes to disappear. Often there is a spiral arrangement of the rays as they approach indicating a whirlpool motion. The whole character of the umbra indicates that they are holes into which the surrounding water is being drawn with wild velocity. It is supposed that the bright surface of the sun which we see is a luminous cloudy envelope or gaseous atmosphere, and that the spots are centers of tremendous solar cyclones compared with which the wildest tornadoes that visit our earth are no more than the slightest breathings of a child. A velocity has been observed in their movement as great as 150 miles a second. When we consider the very enormous masses of matter, sometimes ten or even 100 times as great as the whole mass of the earth, which are projected upward in that way or thrown to one side or the other or thrust down into the great cavities this awful manifestation of power gives us a better idea of what such a velocity means and of the tremendous forces which work in its production.

There is still some dispute about the periodicity of the spots. The extraordinary weather this winter has been supposed to be due to the absence of sun spots, but it is doubtful if any real connection could be demonstrated. Every eleven years there is a time when we have a maximum of sun spots, and half way between there is a minimum of spots. This recurrence of periods of activity has been remarked ever since the spots have been under observation. Undoubtedly the spots have some connection with the magnetic phenomena of the earth, and especially with the aurora, and through these they may have some connection with the weather.

—It has been proven by trial that cement mortar which has been mixed with a large excess of water sets less quickly than mortar mixed with the usual quantity of water, but that in a few months the hardness of the two becomes about equal. On the other hand, mortar mixed with very little water sets quickly, but at the end of two years is only about half as hard as ordinary mortar.

—Polite beat—"Can't you accommodate me with three dollars?" Banker—"Man alive! you make me nervous. Why do you always ask for three dollars, instead of asking for one dollar or two dollars?" Polite beat—"Mr. Moneybags, if you think you understand the begging business better than I do, just you beg for a while and let me be the banker."—Texas Siftings.

—Miss Edith (to evening caller)—"When I write I have to be entirely alone and have every thing quiet, so there will be nothing to disturb my thoughts. I don't see how any one can dictate to an amanuensis." Mr. Good-fellow—"It's very easy. I dictate all my business letters." "You do? And don't your thoughts often wander from the subject until you find yourself unable to proceed?" "Oh, no. My typewriter is a man."—N. Y. Weekly.

LITTLE'S

CHEMICAL FLUID

NON-POISONOUS

SHEEP DIP.

One gallon, mixed with 60 gallons of cold water will dip thoroughly 180 sheep, at a cost of 1 cent each. Easily applied, a nourisher of Wool; a certain cure for SCAB. Also,

Little's Patent Powder Dip,

(Poisonous.)

Mixes instantly with water. Prevents the fly from striking. In a 2-pound package there is sufficient to dip twenty sheep, and in a 7 pound package there is sufficient to dip one hundred sheep.

CATTON, BELL & CO.

SUCCESSORS TO FALKNER, BELL & CO.

Office, 406 California St. and Wool Agency Warehouse, cor. 6th and Townsend Sts

SAN FRANCISCO, Cal.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

C. Mulholland,
EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.
PUBLISHED EVERY FRIDAY

INDEPENDENCE, CAL

FRIDAY MAY 2 1890

County Official Paper.

Now that Governor Waterman has positively declined to be a candidate the Republicans of Southern California will be unanimous for Colonel Markham as their candidate for Governor. Mr. Markham made one of the best Representatives in Congress the Southern District ever had.

As discussion on the silver question progresses more prominence is given to the fact that the demonetization of silver was accomplished by crime. This is right, and every effort should be made to trace the crime to its authors and they should be punished when their guilt is proven. This immense robbery was perpetrated by the tools of great capitalists of New York and London. Traitors at home were in league with our rivals and enemies in England to rob the American people. What has been stolen from us we can never get back, but the battle for right should continue till the system of robbery shall be brought to an end.

In connection with the project for building a big canal on the west side of Owens river to convey water to Salt Wells Valley, some suggestions may be offered worthy of consideration. Most of the owners of riparian rights never can take out water for the irrigation of their lands for the reason that the cost of doing so would far exceed the value of the land when the work should be done. To all such riparian owners the right is utterly valueless. Attempts enough have been already made to put the fact beyond all doubt that our home resources are so poor we never could build a canal such as is needed; to do that outside capital must be induced to come here. But in order to get that capital here we must prove our willingness to act intelligently and with reasonable liberality. The capital will not be thrust upon us; we must offer reasonable inducements for it to come here. Any evidence on the part of riparian owners of a disposition to force the projectors of this enterprise to buy them out would, in all probability, cause an abandonment of the whole project. Such riparian owners should consider that their lands are now of very little value; the said owners just manage to make a living, and without such an enterprise as is now contemplated the condition of said owners will be no better in the future. The projectors of this enterprise propose to secure to each riparian owner an abundance of water to irrigate the land owned by each, at the bare cost of conveying the water to the nearest point. With the improved methods of construction and machinery that large capital would employ the first cost per inch for water would be but a fraction of the expense incurred when many small canals are built to irrigate the same land that can be watered from a large canal. This project, if carried through, will convey water upon all land needing it on the west side of the river at much less cost than any ditches now in existence. No fears need be had about the water being conveyed away in such quantity as not to leave enough for local use; the projectors offer full guarantee for this. The owners of riparian lands along the river know that their lands have not increased much in value for ten years past, if, indeed, the land would sell for as much now as it would have sold for then. Without the building of a large canal the lands will not be worth any more than at present for years to come. On the very day when the building of the proposed canal should begin there would be an increase in the value of every acre of land along the line of it, and this increase of value is clear profit to the land owner without the expenditure of one dollar of his own money. The cost of the work would put so much money in circulation that the land owners would get more coin in six months than they have seen in the last six years. The projectors of this canal have already made surveys and estimates of the cost of opening a water way from Owens Lake to Haiwai. The amount needed to do that would not greatly exceed the cost of building the proposed canal. If obstructions should unwisely be put in the way that course could be adopted; then no more land in Owens Valley could be irrigated from the river than at present. There are two sides to this riparian rights question The projectors of this big canal have already secured a tract of patented land near Owens Lake and are themselves riparian owners. They in turn can maintain riparian rights and the consequences might be very serious for all land holders who might get water from the river above them. Where large sums of money have already been spent in the building of canals for the reclamation of large tracts of land the men who spent that money have a deep interest in the settlement of this question. It will be no easy matter to sell land and water where the title to water is at the mercy of a riparian owner. No trouble has ever arisen in Owens Valley about taking water from the river because there is abundance for everybody and vastly more than is ever used. But if riparian claims should ever be sustained in the Courts then all who are now taking water from the river for irrigating purposes are at the mercy of any person who owns land that even touches the river at a lower point. The great majority of riparian owners below the head of the proposed canal heartily favor the project and have promptly entered into contracts with the projectors for the transfer of their riparian rights. They in turn being fully secured for a supply of water from the canal. It is confidently believed that every riparian owner will make a like agreement when it is fully understood that rights to water are secured, and the vast benefit that is sure to come frem the completion of so important a work.

MISCELLANEOUS.

BUHACH

THE UNRIVALED

Insect Exterminator

Manufactured solely from Pyrethrum flowers, grown in California, in a locality where the soil and climate are peculiarly adapted to the production of flowers rich in the essential oil which makes them so remarkably destructive to insect life.

Avoid the Worthless and Spurious Preparations, sold as Insect Powders, and use Buhach from original packages, and clear your premises of all Annoying and Destructive Insect Pests.

None Genuine Without the Trade Mark.

If your dealer doesn't keep it, order directly from the

Buhach Producing & Manufacturing COMPANY,
SOLE MANUFACTURERS,
STOCKTON, - - CALIFORNIA.

S. H. BIGLAND,
—DEALER IN—
Owens Valley Lands
39 SUTTER STREET.
SAN FRANCISCO.
1-26

A $20 A Day Man!

A VOICE from Ohio. Here is a portrait of Mr. Garrison, of Salem, Ohio. He writes: "Was at work on a farm for $20 a month; I now have an agency for E. C. Allen & Co's albums and publications and often make $20 a day." (Signed) W. H. GARRISON.

William Kline, Harrisburg, Pa., writes: "I have never known anything to sell like your album. Yesterday I took orders enough to pay me over $25." W. J. Elmore, Bangor, Me., writes: "I take an order for your album almost every house I visit. My profit is often as much as $20 for a single day's work." Others are doing quite as well; we have not space to give extracts from their letters. Every one who takes hold of this grand business takes up grand profits. Shall we start YOU in this business, reader? Write to us and learn all about it for yourself. We are starting many; we will start you if you don't delay until another gets ahead of you in your part of the country. If you take hold you will be able to pick up gold fast. ☞ Read—On account of a forced manufacturer's sale 125,000 ten dollar Photograph Albums are to be sold to the people for $2 each. Bound in Royal Crimson Silk Velvet Plush. Charmingly decorated inside. Handsomest albums in the world. Largest Size. Greatest bargains ever known. Agents wanted. Liberal terms. Big money for agents. Any one can become a successful agent. Sells itself on sight—little or no talking necessary. Wherever shown, every one wants to purchase. Agents take thousands of orders with rapidity never before known. Great profits await every worker. Agents are making fortunes. Ladies make as much as men. You, reader, can do as well as any one. Full information and terms free, to those who write for same, with particulars and terms for our Family Bibles, Books and Periodicals. After you know all, should you conclude to go no further, why no harm is done.
Address E. C. ALLEN & CO., AUGUSTA, MAINE

IF YOU WISH A GOOD REVOLVER PURCHASE ONE OF SMITH & WESSON'S

Finest small arms ever manufactured and the first choice of all experts. In calibres 32, 38 and 44 100. Single or double action, Safety Hammerless and Target models. Best quality wrought steel, carefully inspected for workmanship and stock. Unrivaled for finish, durability and accuracy. Do not be deceived by cheap malleable iron imitations often sold for the genuine article. They are unreliable and dangerous. The Smith & Wesson Revolvers are stamped upon the barrels with firm's name, address and dates of patents, and are guaranteed perfect. Insist upon having them, and if your dealer cannot supply you, an order sent to address below will receive prompt attention. Descriptive catalogue and prices upon application.
SMITH & WESSON,
Springfield, Mass.

SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN
ESTABLISHED 1845

Is the oldest and most popular scientific and mechanical paper published and has the largest circulation of any paper of its class in the world. Fully illustrated. Best class of Wood Engravings. Published weekly. Send for specimen copy. Price $3 a year. Four months' trial, $1.
MUNN & CO., PUBLISHERS, 361 Broadway, N.Y.

ARCHITECTS & BUILDERS Edition of Scientific American.
A great success. Each issue contains colored lithographic plates of country and city residences or public buildings. Numerous engravings and full plans and specifications for the use of such as contemplate building. Price $2.50 a year, 25 cts. a copy. MUNN & CO., PUBLISHERS.

PATENTS may be secured by applying to MUNN & Co., who have had over 40 years' experience and have made over 100,000 applications for American and Foreign patents. Send for Handbook. Correspondence strictly confidential.

TRADE MARKS.
In case your mark is not registered in the Patent Office, apply to MUNN & Co., and procure immediate protection. Send for Handbook.
COPYRIGHTS for books, charts, maps etc., quickly procured. Address
MUNN & CO., Patent Solicitors.
GENERAL OFFICE: 361 BROADWAY, N. Y

OFFICIAL.

Application for Patent.

Mining Application No. 247.

UNITED STATES LAND OFFICE,
INDEPENDENCE, CAL.,
April 25, 1890.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT PATRICK Reddy, whose post office address is San Francisco, California, has this day filed his application for a patent for fourteen hundred and forty-eigh and seven-tenths linear feet of the Bernon Quartz Mine or vein bearing galena, lead and silver, with surface ground six hundred feet in width, situated in Coso Mining District, County of Inyo and State of California and designated by the field notes and official plat on file in this office as Lot No. 42, in Township 19 South, Range No. 40 East, of Mt. Diablo Base and Meridian.

Said Lot No. 42 being described as follows, to wit:

Survey of Connecting Line:

Commencing at corner common to Sections 14, 15, 22 and 23 of T 19 S., R. 40 E., M. D. B. and M., and running with Mag. Var. of 15 deg. 37 min. E. as follows:

N. 73 deg. 52 min. E., Needle varying along the line from N. 58 1-3 deg. E. to N. 58 3-8 deg. E. Magnetic. 71.99 chs to the S W cor. post of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine, being the S. E. cor. of the Bernon claim.

Survey of the Exterior Boundaries:

Commencing at a stake in high stone Mont. having pencil marks too dim to be read, being the S. W. cor. of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine, and the S. E. cor. of the Bernon claim, thence deflecting L. 180 deg. 86 deg. 57 min. from connecting line extended N. 73 deg 52 min. E. as assumed standard bearing of the survey, upon West boundary line of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine and East boundary line of the Bernon claim, and running as follows: 1. N. 19 deg. 11 min. W., upon East boundary of claim, local variation of declination of 0 deg. 18 min. E.; 0.90 chs to summit of limestone reef; 1 65 chs crossing high reef of limestone, 1.93 chs; whence bears S. 70 3-4 deg., W. 0.46 chs., face of open cut five feet wide. 1. N. 19 deg. 11 min., W. 4.09 chs, centre of ravine bearing Easterly 7.42 chs, summit of high croppings of lime rock; whence bears N. 59 degrees 11 min. W 4.53 chs centre incline prospect shaft 15 ft deep, no marks, 10.14 chs to centre of wash bearing Easterly from summit towards Defiance Works; 10.90 chs to old stake in high stone Mont marked in pencil as follows: — of Bernon and Defiance Ledge—surveyed by Joseph Seely, U. S. M. Surveyor; being the side line Mont. of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine; 749.7 ft., or 11 36 chs., Set 3 by 4 post in mound of stone marked Defiance West line and Bernon East line; whence bears N. 35 deg. 19 min. E. 1 28 chs. centre of incline prospect cut 12 ft. deep; whence bears N. 70 deg. 49 min E 0.76 chs centre of small prospect cut, whence bears N 79 deg. 07 min. E 5.57 chs centre of mouth of Defiance and Bernon Tunnel: whence bears N. 79 deg. 45 min. W. 2 43 chs. the face of Defiance and Bernon Tunnel; 14.39 chs centre of wash leading Easterly; 15.61 chs; whence bears N 70 deg. 49 min. E 0 03 chs an old stake in stone Mont. having Seely's name in pencil and other marks too dim to be read, being a side-line Mont. of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine; 1. N. 19 deg. 11 min. W 16.18 chs summit of ridge bearing Easterly; 20.31 chs, whence bears S 42 deg. 04 min. W. 1.75 chs a stake in stone Mont. marked Kerso Ledge, S W cor. Post No. 6; whence bears N 42 deg. 04 min. E. 6.91 chs a stake in stone Mont. marked Kerso Ledge N E Post; whence bears N 35 deg. 45 min E 2.41 chs a stake in stone Mont. marked Kerso centre point 1448.7 ft., or 21.95 chs. to stake in stone Mont., no marks, being the N W cor. of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine, set 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon N E cor. No. 1, and Defiance N W cor. No. 4; thence deflecting L. 90 deg. from Co. 1 extended N. 19 deg. 11 min. W making interior angle 90 deg. ran; 2 S. 70 deg. 49 min. W upon the North boundary line of the Bernon claim; local variation of declination of 0 deg. 18 min. E, 2, S 70 deg. 49 min. W 0.30 chs centre old sled road from summit of hill, 1.69 chs, whence bears N 60 deg. 07 min., W 3.06 chs a stake in stone Mont. being the Northerly end of Lode line and centre of Hidalgo claim, 2 10 chs whence bears N 79 deg. 57 min. W 0.61 chs the centre of Hidalgo incline shaft, 4.07 chs, crossing summit of Darwin Range, whence bears S 19 deg 31 min. E 2.91 chs. centre small shaft 300 ft or 4 545 chs, set 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked, Bernon L. L. P. No. 1; being the Northerly end of Lode Line and centre of Bernon claim, 7.86 chs centre mouth of tunnel bearing Northerly 650 ft, or 9.09 chs, set a 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon N W Cor. No. 4, being the N W Cor. of the Bernon claim; thence deflecting L 90 deg. from Co. 2 extended S 70 deg. 49 min. W making the interior angle 90 deg. and ran 3, S 19 deg. 11 min. E upon West boundary line of Bernon Claim, local variation of declination of 0 deg. 18 min. E, 0.15 chs centre wash bearing Westerly 4.07 chs, summit of ridge bearing Westerly, 9.01, center deep gulch bearing Westerly 10.15 chs, whence bears 28 deg. 47 min. W 9.19 chs a stone Mont. being the S E cor. of the Hidalgo Claim; whence bears S 56 deg. 51 min. W 11.17 chs a stone Mont. being the Southerly end of Hidalgo Lode Line; whence bears S 76 deg. 25 min. W 12.46 chs a stone Mont. being the S W Cor. of the Hidalgo Claim 3, S 19 deg. 11 min. E 13 25 chs, summit of spur bearing Westerly, 14.61 chs, crossing head of wash bearing Westerly 16.28 chs, summit of spur bearing Westerly 18.09 chs, whence bears N 86 deg. 28 min. E 3.32 chs the centre of mouth of Carry Tunnel, No. 1, whence bears N 83 deg. 29 min. E 4.22 chs the centre of mouth of Carry Tunnel No. 2, whence bears N 86 deg. 46 min. E 2.71 chs the centre of mouth of Carry Tunnel, No. 3, 21 65 chs, centre of ravine bearing Westerly, 21.47 chs, intersection with connecting line; whence bears S 73 deg. 52 min. W 62.89 chs the corner common to Sections 14, 15, 22 and 23 of T 19 S, R 40 E, M D B and M, 1418.7 ft, or 21 95 chs, in South side of ravine, set 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon S W Cor. No. 3, being the S W Cor. of the Bernon Claim; thence deflecting L. 90 deg. from Co. 3, extended S 19 deg. 11 min. E, making interior angle 90 deg. and ran; 4, N 70 deg. 49 min. E, upon South boundary line of Bernon, local variation of declination of 0 deg. 03 min. E, 1.26 chs, edge of ravine, 2.51 chs, ridge of spur bearing Westerly 3.40 ft, or 4.345 chs, set 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon L. L., P. No. 2, being the Southerly end of Lode Line and centre of claim, 7.06 chs crossing high reef of lime rock, 4, N 70 deg. 49 min. E, 600 ft, or 9.09 chs back to place of beginning, and set a 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon S E Cor., No. 2, and Defiance S W Cor., No. 3.

Containing 19.95 acres.

Survey of Lode Line.

Commencing at the L. L., P., No. 1, of Claim and deflecting thence L. 90 deg. from Co. 2, extended S 70 deg. 49 min W, making the interior angle 90 deg. ran, 5, S, 19 deg. 11 min. E, upon lode line; ascending 3.34 chs, whence bears S 74 deg. 41 min. W 2.91 chs a stone Mont. claimed to be the centre of Hidalgo Claim; whence bears S 72 deg. 36 min. E, 0.71 chs centre small shaft; descending; 10.30 chs, whence bears S 70 deg. 49 min. W 0.30 chs centre prospect hole 11.82 chs, whence bears N 70 deg. 49 min. E 0.50 chs centre incline shaft 60 ft deep. Ascending; 13.03 chs, summit of spur bearing Westerly. Descending; 13.36 chs, whence bears S 70 deg. 06 min. E, 0.80 chs centre shaft 45 ft deep, 14.41 chs, whence bears S 70 deg. 49 min. W 0.10 chs centre mouth of tunnel, 16.66 chs, whence bears S 70 deg. 49 min. W 0.12 chs centre shaft 6 ft deep 1448 ft, or 21.94 chs to L. L. P., No. 2, of Claim.

Magnetic variation 15 deg. 37 min. E containing 19.95 acres.

The LOCATION of this mine is recorded in the Recorder's office of Coso Mining District in Book C of page 136. The adjoining claimant is the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. mine.

Any and all persons claiming adversely any portion of said Bernon Quartz mine or surface ground are required to file their adverse claims with the Register of the United States Land Office at Independence in the State of California during the sixty days period of publication hereof, or they will be barred by virtue of the provisions of the Statute.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD,
Register.
o-n24

INDEPENDENCE

SHAVING SALOON.

Shaving, Hair-Cutting, etc., done in the best manner.

WM. H. HUFF, Prop'r

MISCELLANEOUS.

J. R. ELDRED,
Sheriff and Tax-Collector.
INYO CO., CAL.

P. H. MACK,
COUNTY CLERK,
—AND—
Ex-officio Auditor and Recorder,
INYO CO., CAL.

GEO. M. GILL,
District Attorney,
INYO CO., CAL.

J. J. MOORE,
County Treasurer,
INYO CO., CAL.

S. P. M'KNIGHT, C. E.
COUNTY SURVEYOR
—AND—
U. S. Deputy Mineral Surveyor
For California and Nevada.
—BISHOP CREEK, INYO CO., CAL.—
The obtaining of United States mineral patents a specialty.
All kinds of surveying given the most careful and accurate attention.

JUSTICE OF PEACE,
C. MULHOLLAND.
Office in the "INDEPENDENT" Building, Independence, Inyo County, Cal.

A. R. CONKLIN,
Attorney-at-Law.
Independence, Cal.
Will practice in all the Courts of the States of California and Nevada.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
Independence, Cal.

P. W. FORBES,
ATTORNEY AT LAW.
NOTARY PUBLIC.
☞ Cases in U. S. Land Office a Specialty. ☜
BISHOP, INYO COUNTY, CALIFORNIA.

IRVING J. WOODIN, M D.,
Physician & Surgeon,
(COUNTY PHYSICIAN)

Louise L. Woodin, M. D.
PHYSICIAN & SURGEON.
☞ NIGHT CALLS ATTENDED. ☜
Office and residence at the Reddy place, Independence.

W. H. GEORGE, M. D.,
Physician and Surgeon,
Bishop Creek, Cal.,
Offers his professional services to the people of Bishop Creek and vicinity. Office and residence opposite Andrew Clark's.

F. E. Bunting, M. D.
Physician & Surgeon
LONE PINE, CAL
OFFICE IN GELCICH BUILDING
All calls attended to immediately.

Lodge 221, F. & A. M.
Regular meetings of Lodge No. 221, F. & A. M., for the year 1889, will be held at the Lodge room at Independence as follows:

Saturday ..... February 1st
" ..... March 1st
" ..... March 29th
" ..... May 3rd
" ..... May 31st
" ..... June 28th
" ..... July 26th
" ..... August 30th
" ..... September 27th
" ..... October 25th
" ..... November 22nd
" ..... December 20th

P. H. MACK, W. M.
C. MULHOLLAND Sec.

P. W FORBES. P. H. MACK.
MACK & FORBES.
Real Estate Agents,
Address, P. H. MACK, Independence, Cal.
P. W. FORBES, Bishop, Cal.

FRED BURCKHARDT
Watchmaker & Jeweler,
LONE PINE, CAL.
Time pieces of all descriptions repaired and regulated, satisfaction guaranteed. Jewelry made to order. Firearms repaired and loaded.
☞ All orders from any part of the country will be promptly attended to, at the most reasonable charges. At the old stand "Mechanics' Hall," Lone Pine.
FRED BURKHARDT.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CROCKER'S HOTEL.
BIG PINE - CAL
New House,
New Furniture,
Low Rates
☞ Splendid hunting and fishing near by, in act, it is a veritable paradise for tourists and pleasure seekers.
Special attention given to the wants of every guest.
CROCKER BROS., Props.
sep1-tf

ANTONS SALOON
KEELER, CAL.
BEER, WINES, LIQUORS and CIGARS
All kinds of Fancy Drinks, including pure water. A comfortable and pleasant Hall.
JOHN C. ANTON, Prop.

Pioneer
Livery & Feed Stables.
INDEPENDENCE, CAL.
Having returned and resumed the management of the above well known feed and livery stables, patrons can be assured of finding there the best of Buggy Teams, Saddle Horses, and
Livery Accommodations
in general. Also, Hay and Grain for sale by the pound or ton.
O. I. MAIRS, Proprietor.

E. H. Edwards,
—DEALER IN—
General Merchandise,
LONE PINE,
INYO COUNTY - - - CALIFORNIA.

Inyo
Freighting Company.
REGULAR LINE
Mojave To Bishop.
Teams leave Mojave and Bishop weekly.
Goods delivered with regularity at all points on the line. Consign goods to the Company at Mojave.

J. W. Murphy.
BLACKSMITHING
—AND—
General Iron Work.
Wagons and Carriages Repaired.
HORSESHOEING, $2.00 for CASH
Shop on Edwards St., opposite the Court House, Independence.

BLACKSMITHING,
Horseshoeing, General Iron
—AND—
WAGON WORK.
PIONEER BLACKSMITH SHOP
Cor. Main St. & Depot Ave.,
INDEPENDENCE, CAL.
W. F. MATLACK.....PROPRIETOR.
Horseshoeing .....$2.00 for Cash
For particulars, call and see
W. F. MATLACK.

LONE PINE
Blacksmith Shop.
R. C. Spear, Prop'r
—ALL WORK ON—
MINING TOOLS,
FARMING IMPLEMENTS
& FREIGHTING OUTFITS
—PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO—
HORSE SHOEING,
CARRIAGE WORK,
GENERAL REPAIRING
☞ All work attended to with neatness and despatch. Prices to suit the times.

BOOTS AND SHOES
MADE AND REPAIRED.
THE BEST MATERIAL.
FIRST-CLASS WORK.
Repairs done Promptly.
Prices Reasonable.
A. J. DAVIS,
nov 30-tf Independence.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Railroad Time Table.

CARSON & COLORADO R R

TAKING EFFECT,

Sunday, May 10th, 18 9.

STATIONS.	From Mound House. No. 1		To Mound House. No. 2.
	Leave—		Arrives—
Mound House.....		12:30 p m	5.55 p. m
Dayton		1:00 p. m.	5.15 p. m.
Wabuska		3.05 p m	3.00 p. m
Hawthorne		6.50 p. m.	11.20 a. m
Lanning		7.30 p. m.	10.05 a. m
Soda Springs.....		9.15 p m.	9.05 a. m
Belleville.....		10.25 p. m.	7.45 a. m.
Candelaria.....	Ar.	11 10 p. m	Lv. 7.10 a. m
	No. 3.		No. 4.
	Leave—		Arrives—
Belleville.....		8 10 a. m	5.25 p. m
Benton		11.40 a m
Bishop Creek		1.50p. m.	11:00 a. m
Alvord		2.55 p. m	10.00 a. m
Independence.....		4 10 p. m.	8.30 a. m
Lone Pine.....		5.00 p. m	7.40 a. m
Keeler.....	Ar	5.45 p. m.	Lv. 7.00 a. m

Trains 1 and 2 run daily.
Train 3 runs Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays
Train 4 runs Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays

Passenger trains make close connection at Mound House with express trains of V. & T. R. R., which connect at Reno with east and west bound trains of Central Pacific Railroad.

Stage Connections:

AT HAWTHORNE with United States Stage Company's coaches for Aurora (26 miles); Bodie (37 miles); Lundy and Bridgeport.

AT LANDING (125 miles from Mound House) with Gilmer, Salsbury & Co's. tri weekly stages (leaving Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays) for Downieville, Grantsville and Belmont.

AT CANDELARIA with U. S. Stage Co's. stages for Columbus (8 miles), Silver Peak, Montezuma Allda Valley, Gold Mountain, etc.

H. M. YERINGTON,
General Superintendent.
R. J. LAWS, Assistant Superintendent.
D. A. BENDER,
General Freight and Passenger Agent.

LUMBER. LUMBER.
SPRATT & CREASER,
BIG PINE.
—DEALERS IN—
ALL KINDS OF LUMBER.
Square timber of all dimensions for buildings and bridges.
CEILING,
FLOORING,
FENCING,
RUSTIC.
All kinds of tongued and grooved lumber.
Surfaced lumber of all kinds.
All orders filled promptly. Lumber delivered on board the cars at Alvord.
SPRATT & CREASER,
sep1-tf Big Pine, Inyo Co., Cal.

EDWARD CHENOT
Independence, Cal.,
INVITES PUBLIC ATTENTION TO HIS extensive Stock of
GENERAL MERCHANDIS
....Consisting of....
GROCERIES.
PROVISIONS
Tobacco, Cigars,
WINES AND LIQUORS
FLOUR & GRAI
Together with an Assortment of
DRY GOODS AND CLOTHING
ETC., ETC
☞ Buyers and consumers should call and examine my stock and prices before purchasing elsewhere.
E. CHENOT.
Independence, Cal., March 29, 1884.
n476tf

R. J. WHITTAKER
—PAINTER,—
BIG PINE, - - - - CAL.
HOUSE PAINTING,
SIGN WRITING,
PAPER HANGING,
GRAINING,
GILDING ON WOOD AND GLASS
Wagons Painted
The best of materials used and satisfaction guaranteed.

Wm. Muth-Rasmussen.
Bee Keeper.
Manufacturer of Comb Foundation.
Independence, Inyo Co. Cal

NATHAN RHINE.

NATHAN RHINE,
(Successor to Harris & Rhine.)
MERCHANT,
INDEPENDENCE
Inyo Co. Cal.
Wholesale & Retail
—DEALER IN—
General Merchandise
MY STOCK
CONSISTING OF
Almost every needed article is well calculated to satisfy the wants of everybody; and, as in the past, it will be our aim in the future to retain the extensive patronage enjoyed heretofore.
NATHAN RHINE.

NATHAN RHINE
BANKER
Independence, Cal.
SELL EXCHANGE
—ON—
SAN FRANCISCO
Draw Direct
—ON—
NEW YORK,
LONDON, England.
BERLIN, FRANKFORT-on-the-Main, GERMANY.
I AM PREPARED TO TRANSACT ALL Kinds,
—OF—
GENERAL
BANKING
&
EXCHANGE,
BUSINESS.
Wechsel in beliebigen Summen auf Berlin und Frankfurt am de Main.
Deutsche Vollmachten geben ligt.
Geldsendungen von und nach Deutschland besorgt.

AGENT FOR
WELLS FARGO & CO'S.
EXPRESS
MUTUAL
Life Insurance Co.
OF NEW YORK
CAPITAL - - - - $5,000,000
LIVERPOOL
AND LONDON AND GLOBE
INSURANCE - COMPANY
Capital - - - - - $21,000,000
NATHAN RHINE.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY, MAY 2 1890

MARKET REPORT.

Bar silver, 105½
Lead, 4 03
Copper, 14 20
Tin, 19 80
Sugar, .05⅛
Coffee, 17 @ 19¾
Wool, foothill, 16 @ 18.

Religious Services.

Rev. J. H. De La Matyr will preach at Lone Pine on Sunday at 11 o'clock, a. .m. at Georges Creek at 2:30 p. m. and at Independence at 7:30 o'clock evening; Sunday School at Independence and Lone Pine at 11 o'clock a. m.

Mr. John Lucas was up from Lone Pine on Tuesday.

Miss A. Kohler will open a private school on Monday.

There was a pleasant social dance in Mairs' Hall last night.

Hon. Trenmore Coffin was down from Carson early in the week.

There was a very pleasant party at Crocker's hotel, Big Pine, last Friday evening.

J. W. Lacey and A. W. Simonson got home last Sunday from a long trip through Nevada.

Ben. Butler says he will die fighting. That would be all right, but his real fight will begin after that.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Russell came down from Benton last Monday to attend the Oddfellows' celebration at Bishop.

Mr. W. C. Chapin left town yesterday morning for San Francisco; he expects to return here about a month hence.

Mr. Enos has been asked by several parties at Bishop to take his trotting stallion, Albenton, up there for a short season.

David Levy, of Cohn & Co., Bishop, W. Phillippay and Owen Nealon are preparing to work a borax claim in Saline Valley.

The apple crop around Bishop will be very light this year. Many of the trees did not bloom and some were injured by frost.

The next State Republican Convention is to be held at Sacramento and will meet next August 12th. It will consist of 677 members.

Under Sheriff Yancy is taking much pains to improve the ground about the Court House. He has many flowers growing and in bloom.

Hon. P. Reddy went north yesterday morning on his way to San Francisco. He was at Darwin a week looking after his mining interests there.

Hon. P. Reddy has applied for a patent for the Barnon mine as will be seen by the notice published this week. This mine is adjoining the Defiance, at Darwin.

Woodford D. Harlan, Inspector of Surveyors General and U. S. Land Offices, arrived at Independence last Monday. He was engaged several days in the Land Office here.

Mr. T. Williams of Round Valley held over his last crop of corn, oats and barley and sold it all recently for two cents per pound. Higher figures than this are now demanded for grain.

Gus McGovern, John Albers and William Pierson are putting up boilers and tanks on a borax claim in Saline Valley and they are to have a good location and will soon be turning out borax.

In all probability a big foot-race will come off at Bishop on July 4th between Rosenthal of Hawthorne and Ober of Independence. The race will be 100 yards for a purse of $300 and $500 a side.

Archie Farrington had men at work for some weeks past prospecting the Gavilan mine. The men were stopped from work last Tuesday as nothing is in sight that would warrant doing more.

T. Madden met with a painful though not serious accident last Sunday. In cleaning out an old gun barrel Louie Frevert sent a charge of powder and iron rust in Tim's face. His eyes were not injured.

The Odd Fellows' celebration at Bishop last Tuesday was a grand affair. Elaborate preparation was made for the reception of visitors and the affair was conducted throughout in a most creditable manner.

Nothing but prospecting is reported from Cerro Gordo. No ore is being taken out, except by a very few tributers who are working on claims belonging to the Company, and these are not taking out much.

The friends of silver are becoming very hopeful. The proposition of the Senate Committee to coin $4,500,000 monthly, is meeting with favor. Silver is the poor man's friend, and the more silver dollars that are put in circulation, the better.

John Hale, section foreman on the C. and C. road at Alvord, got severely squeezed between cars last Saturday morning. When the up train was at the station Mr. Hale went between two cars to make a coupling and when the cars came together he got caught at the hips. He was severely bruised but no bones were broken.

W. C. Chapin got back to town last Tuesday from Saline Valley. He spent about two weeks over there examining mines. He is well satisfied with several prospects he examined. Mr. Chapin spent some time at the borax works of Conn & Trudo and is fully satisfied that they have a property of great value.

Henry Malone and C. L. Fuller have sunk fifty feet on the ledge recently discovered by them at Fish Spring Hill. A cross cut of twenty-five feet has not reached the hanging wall of the ledge. An old miner who visited the mine lately says the great body of ore in sight will average fifteen dollars per ton in gold. The ore can be worked very cheaply.

About nine years ago A. A. Riddle, A. J. Wren and N. N. Taylor made locations of borax claims in Saline Valley. Samples of the crude stuff were sent to Thomas Price of San Francisco for analysis, and he reported to the prospectors that it contained but 3½ per cent of borax. On this report the ground was considered worthless and the claims were abandoned. Now Conn & Trudo are gathering crude stuff from the same ground that yields 90 per cent of borax. It appears that the first locators made very bad selections of samples, or Professor Price had much to learn at that time about borax.

The Jigging Process.

The process of jigging low grade lead-silver ores, though long practiced in other regions, is only beginning to be generally used in Inyo county. An improved machine was delivered at Keeler last Wednesday for use in the Defiance mine, at Darwin. At this mine there is ore enough on the dump and in sight in the mine to supply thirty tons of good jigging ore every day for an entire year. The ore after leaving the machine will average one hundred and twenty dollars per ton. After deducting all expenses of mining, jigging, shipping to San Francisco and working, the ore will leave a net profit of sixty dollars per ton. Hitherto only the richest of the ores have been taken from Inyo county mines, and this was picked by hand, thus greatly increasing the expense. In ledges ten, or ever twenty feet thick, a vein of a few inches of high grade ore was all that was taken out for shipment, the vast mass that remained was all lost. By the jigging process hand picking is all done away with; all the ore is taken out and the metal saved. This will make a very great change in our whole system of mining. Many more men will be employed, making much greater demand for all kinds of farm produce, and mines will be worked that under the old wasteful way would not pay expenses, not to speak of leaving any profit. This improvement will lead to much greater development of mines and so increase the probabilities of finding immense bodies of rich ore, such as that found at Cerro Gordo years ago. Mr. Reddy says he will use all the profits from the jigging process at the Defiance in further development of the mine. This is the spirit and enterprise that goes successfully through seasons of depression and brings prosperity in its train.

Agreeably Surprised.

Mr. J. Newton Evans of Reno left Independence for home on Tuesday morning. He was here long enough to carefully look over most of Owens Valley. Mr. Evans has long been an extensive land and cattle owner and is well acquainted with the country east of the Sierras from Carson Valley to Oregon. This was his first visit to Owens Valley. He said that no amount of testimony could have convinced him of the extent of land and water resources of this valley; nothing short of seeing with his own eyes could have made him believe that such resources exist here. His settled conviction, based upon his knowledge of the country way up to the north, was that the farther south he traveled the scarcer would he find water. To his surprise he found the very reverse. The vast elevation of the Sierras in this locality and the enormous amount of snow that falls upon them makes of each canyon and high valley a great reservoir where water is stored in the form of snow until the warm season, when it is most needed. The better development of these great resources would benefit Reno, and Mr. Evans is well convinced of that fact. The Gazette should interview Mr. Evans and get his own report of what he saw here. Then there will be no ground for suspicion of exaggeration of his views by others.

Great improvement has deen made in the country about Bishop in the past year or two. A drive through that region now reveals many fine farms in a high state of cultivation. Good fences and improved buildings prove that the settlers have got beyond the bare struggle for a living, and are now beginning to accumulate wealth in the form of property. It is a beautiful section of Owens Valley and far ahead of all other parts in land improvements. Mr. Sam. Newland has lately built a residence that would do credit to any part of the State as a farmer's home. It will do good to settlers in all other parts of the Valley to go to Bishop and look around.

Some fine blocks of marble are being taken out at the quarry. One of these weighs 15¾ tons; it is a beautiful stone without a flaw. Much larger blocks could be taken out if it were possible to ship them. There is a block of moss-agate marble ready for shipment that weighs ten tons. The beauty of this stone cannot be duly appreciated without being seen. The mill for working the marble will be provided with the very best machinery and most improved appliances of all kinds. It is a serious loss to Owens Valley that the mill is not located here, instead of at Verdi, three hundred and fifty miles away from the quarry.

The ore body recently struck in the Minnietta mine, Modoc district, by J. J. Gunn is reported to be opening up better every day. A miner who came in yesterday was at the mine last Tuesday and says it is a fine looking body of ore. Frank Fitzgerald is shipping an average of a carload of ore each week. The ore is reported to net one hundred dollars a ton. In the mine at Lookout Mr. Fitzgerald is reported to have a fine looking body of ore in sight. At both these camps more men are wanted; twelve or more good miners would at once be employed and at least an equal number of men are wanted to work outside.

So far as dollars and cents are concerned, the most important of our county roads is that from Keeler to Darwin and Lookout. It is over this road that the ore is hauled that brings nearly every dollar of money the country receives from exports. This road is very much in need of repair; rocks should be removed, sandy places filled with sagebrush and other like improvements made. The road could be put in much better condition for a small sum of money and the matter is of so much importance to the whole county that it should be done without delay.

The mail route from Keeler to Mojave has been let to a firm at Salt Lake, presumably Saulsbury & Gilmore. Their bid is reported to be $2,955; this is less than half what it will actually cost to do the work. Passenger travel over the route will be very light. A party who knows every foot of the way and thoroughly understands the business put in a bid of $9,200 and would not take the contract for less.

The Big Pine school closed last Friday with appropriate exercises.

F. E. Bosworth,
Watchmaker
& Jeweler.
BISHOP, CAL.
Fine and Complicated Watch Repairing a Specialty.
Guns, Sewing Machines, Organs and Music Boxes Put in Perfect Condition and Warranted.
I Prefer to do all work at your house and will call if you will write to me at Bishop.

OFFICIAL.

FINAL HOMESTEAD PROOF.

H A No. 432

LAND OFFICE AT INDEPENDENCE, CAL., April 30, 1890.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT THE following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before the Register and Receiver at Independence, Cal., on Saturday, June 14th, 1890, viz.: JOHN S. GORMAN, Homestead Application No. 432, for the W ½ of lot No. 1 in NW ¼ Sec 5 Lot No. 1 in NE ¼ and E ½ of lot No. 1 in NW ¼ of Sec 6, in Twp 13 S. Range 35 East, M D M.

He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon, and cultivation of, said land, viz.: Hiram C. Hamilton, Helaire P. Cartier, Alvah R. Conklin and William M. Boyd, all of Independence, Cala.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD, Register.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE.

INYO MARBLE COMPANY.

Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Keeler, Inyo county.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of a Board of Directors, held on the 17th day of April, 1890, an assessment (No. 9) of Ten (10) cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary at the office of the company, 205 Front street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 3d day of June, 1890 will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Thursday, the 26th day of June, 1890 to pay the delinquent assessment together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.

G. W. LUCE, Secretary.

Office, 205 Front St., San Francisco, California.

PROPOSALS FOR 18th DISTRICT FAIR.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT THE Board of Directors of the 18th District Agricultural Association of California have decided to locate the Fair of said Association for the year 1890, at such town within any of the counties of Alpine, Mono and Inyo as shall offer to the Association the largest money premium for said privilege; and will also provide a speed track and necessary buildings and will give the use of the same for holding the Fair free of cost to the Association.

Sealed Proposals to be forwarded to the Secretary of the Association on or before May 17th, 1890, at Independence, Inyo county, California.

C. MULHOLLAND, Secretary.

PROPOSALS FOR BOARDING INYO COUNTY PRISONERS.

Notice is hereby given that sealed proposals will be received by the Board of Supervisors of Inyo county, at the office of the County Clerk until Tuesday, May 5, 1890, at 12 o'clock M., for the boarding of Inyo county prisoners, for the term of one year, beginning May 10th 1890 and ending May 10th, 1891, said bids to designate the price per diem for each prisoner, and said board to be paid for by warrants drawn upon the General Expense Fund, upon bills duly verified and presented at the regular meetings of said Board of Supervisors.

Proposals must be endorsed "Proposals for Boarding County Prisoners," and the same will be opened between the hours of ten o'clock and twelve o'clock A. M. on the 6th day of May, 1890, and the Board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

P. H. MACK, Clerk.

Proposals for Care of Indigent Sick of Inyo County.

Notice is hereby given that sealed proposals will be received by the Board of Supervisors of Inyo county, at the office of the County Clerk until 12 o'clock M., on Tuesday, May 5th, 1890, to contract for the care of said indigent sick for the term of one year from May 10th 1890 to May 10th, 1891, said bids to designate the amount for which parties contracting will care for said indigent sick on the basis of an average of four patients per day throughout the year, and to include all medicine, nursing, board, lodging and washing. Said bids to include the burial and funeral expenses of any indigent sick person or persons who may die while under such care.

Said contractor to care for all the indigent sick properly admitted to the contractor's care. And said bids to designate the price per head at which all excess of patients over the average of four each day throughout the year will be cared for, said excess to be paid for by extra allowance on presentation of bills duly sworn to, at the regular meeting of said Board immediately after said contract has expired. The average four per day to be paid for at the regular meetings of the Board on presentation of bills duly verified. All payments to be made by warrants drawn upon the Hospital Fund of said county.

The person or persons to whom said contract shall be awarded shall give a good and sufficient bond in double the sum of the contract price, for the faithful performance of said contract.

The care and management of said indigent sick by such contractor shall be at all times subject to the inspection of said Board of Supervisors, or any member thereof, or any person appointed by the Board for such purpose.

Said proposals must be endorsed, "Proposals for Care of Indigent Sick," and the same will be opened between the hours of ten o'clock and twelve o'clock A. M., on the 6th day of May, 1890, and the Board reserves the right to reject any and all bids.

P. H. MACK, Clerk.

BELL'S
Flouring Mills,
A. N. BELL, Prop.
TRY BELL'S
EXTRA PATENT ROLLER FLOUR.
Having added Patent Rolls and other improvements to our Mills, I am now turning out Flour that is fully
Equal to the Best.
Corn, Oats and Barley Cracked on Short Notice.
A. N. BELL,
Independence, Cal.

Fresno and Merced County
Lands To Rent and For Sale.
75,000 Acres of Wheat and Sugar Beet Land in the above Counties, to rent for a term of years. Also,
100,000 Acres of Fine Raisin, Fruit, Alfalfa, and Sugar Beet Land, with water for irrigation, for sale in tracts of from 20 acres to large tracts suitable for Colony purposes.
For particulars, apply to
E. B. PERRIN,
402 Kearney Street, San Francisco.
n-9-2m

MARRIAGE GUIDE
260 PAGES. Illustrated. In Cloth and Gilt Binding, 50c. Money or a stamp. Same, paper cover, 25c. This Book contains ALL the curious, doubtful or inquisitive want to know. Fullest very interesting and valuable information. HEALTH BEAUTY and HAPPINESS are promoted by its advice—we may Marry, who not, why; Medical Aid, when necessary, brought home to you. 50 Wonderful PEN PICTURES, ring to life. Young or old, married or single, sick or well, should read. Sent sealed by Dr. W. WHITTIER, St. Louis, Mo. COUPON AND SEND WITH ORDER.

WEINSTOCK & LUBIN:

The Largest General Retail Trade west of the Rocky Mountains is done by Weinstock, Lubin & Co., Sacramento, Cal. They sell everything one needs to wear or to use at home. They deal largely with manufacturers in Europe and America, thus bringing producer and customer in almost direct contact. This helps to make their prices low.

Small orders are filled as carefully as large ones. Goods not as ordered are returnable at their expense.

For whatever you need, wherever you are, send to them. THEY DON'T INTEND THAT ANY ONE ANYWHERE SHALL SUPPLY YOUR WANTS SO WELL AS THEY.

Polished Wood Pencils, with rubber caps, per dozen, 9c. If sent by mail as a single package, 4c extra will be required for postage. These pencils are suitable for business, school and home use.

Illustrated Catalogue and Samples free. Weinstock, Lubin & Co., 400 to 412 K Street, Sacramento, Cal.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Lake View Hotel
Keeler, Cal.
John Barnes, Prop'r.
First-class hotel in every respect. The table always supplied with the best in the market. Clean, nicely furnished rooms. Transient visitors will receive every courtesy and attention.
THE BAR
—Is constantly supplied with the finest—
Wines,
Liquors,
& Cigars.

NORMAN HOUSE,
Independence, - - Cal.
New House,
New Furniture,
Low Rates.
Special attention will be given to secure the comfort of guests.
O. I. MAIRS, Prop.
feb12tf

IRWIN'S SALOON
Cor. Edwards and Market Streets,
Independence . Cal.
THE PUBLIC GENERALLY ARE RESPECTFULLY invited to call and inspect my establishment, which has been entirely rebuilt and furnished in a style second to none on this side of the mountains. A SPLENDID NEW BILLIARD TABLE provided for the amusement of patrons.
THE BAR
Is supplied with the most celebrated brands of pure Wines and Liquors and the Finest Havana Cigars.
JOHN C. IRWIN, Proprietor.
feb12tf

Palace Saloon.
WALTER OBER, Lessee.
—THE BAR—
Is constantly supplied with the best kinds of
WINES, LIQUORS, & CIGARS.
The most careful attention given to the the amusement and comfort of patrons.
A FINE BILLIARD TABLE
Is always at the disposal of visitors to the Palace Saloon
Dec. 20 89

PIONEER BREWERY
INDEPENDENCE
BEER ICE COLD.
The Bar is supplied with the Best of all kinds of Liquors and Cigars.
The Coolest Hall in the town. Call in and see what comfort you can have this hot weather.
PHILIP GEHRIG, PROPRIETOR

MISCELLANEOUS.

A. K. EUGLEY,
BIG PINE, INYO CO. CAL.

PROVISIONS,
&c., &c., &c.
Postmaster and Deputy Co Clerk.
A. K. EUGLEY,
Big Pine, Cal.

Sulphur & Borax Baths
AT SODA SPRINGS, NEVADA
On Sou & Colorado Railroad
These valuable Springs offer special
INDUCEMENT TO INVALIDS
THE WATER CONTAINS
SULPHUR, MAGNESIA AND BORAX.
And Is Very Strengthening and Cleansing
When used for bathing purposes.
THE BATH HOUSES HAVE BEEN RE-BUILT
—And a large—
SWIMMING : BATH
Added, where those wishing to do so can take an invigorating plunge.
Excellent Accommodations
—AND—
Board by the Day, Week, or the Month

BISHOP ADVERTISEMENTS.

A. COHN
& CO.
—DEALERS IN—
General
Merchandise.
—ALL KINDS OF—
Farm Implements
—AND—
--MACHINERY--
Farm Produce
—OF ALL KINDS BOUGHT—
Orders for all kinds of supplies needed in mining camps promptly filled.

GIVEN & INGALLS.
—DEALERS IN—
FARM PRODUCE.

J. E. DUNLAP.
Harness Maker.
Harness of all kinds, from the lightest to the heaviest. Any kind of new work made promptly and of the best material. Repairing done on the shortest notice. A full line of saddles and harness.

H. E. WRIGHT.
DRUGGIST.
Medicines, Drugs, Toilet and Fancy Articles. Physicians' prescriptions carefully and promptly filled. All drugs and medicines fresh and of the best quality. All orders by mail receive immediate attention

Valley View Hotel.
O. H. Hill, Prop'r.
A New House Newly Furnished Throughout. Guests will receive every courtesy and attention.

NEVADA STABLE
BISHOP.
Opposite Valley View Hotel, Main St
In the Livery Department nothing is kept but safe and good traveling carriage and saddle horses. Conveyances of all kinds first-class. Good attendance and the best of hay and grain for all animals boarding at the stable
S. P. SMITH, Prop.

BISHOP CREEK
BREWERY,
MUNZINGER, PHILLIPPAY & CO.,
Proprietors.
All the appliances and conveniences of First Class Brewery, including a beautiful grove for out-door parties.
Customers supplied on all points
Of the C. & C. Railroad.
Send orders to
MUNZINGER, PHILLIPPAY & CO.
Bishop Creek, Cal.

A NEW DEAL!
BISHOP CREEK
Livery. Feed & Sale
Stable.
ROBERT O'NEIL, Prop'r.
Horses are boarded by the day, week or month. Stock bought and sold.
Bishop Creek, Cal., Nov. 20, 1883.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Newest Styles
OF
Fashionable Clothing
Dry Goods, Ladies'
Wear, etc., etc
AT
L. WOOD'S
CASH STORE
A small stock of fresh groceries & canned goods constantly renewed.
Fresh Produce, and Grain
Flour, etc., constantly on hand.
CANDIES,
PEANUTS,
WALNUTS,
TOYS!
THE CASH STORE
Is Where You Get
WORTH OF YOUR MONEY

THOMAS & HILL,
—DEALERS IN—
GENERAL MERCHANDISE
BIG PINE, INYO COUNTY, CAL.
We keep constantly on hand goods of all kinds needed in a country home. We order only First-Class Goods and ask no more than a reasonable profit. Give us a trial.
THOMAS & HILL

J. FORBES. W. D. TOBEY.
FORBES & TOBEY,
HAWTHORNE, NEV.,
—DEALERS IN—
LUMBER
OF ALL KINDS.
DOORS,
SHINGLES,
SASH AND BLINDS,
LATH,
RUSTIC
MOULDINGS,
DRESSED LUMBER.
Matched and Dressed
Flooring.
sept 11-tf

COLONEL QUARITCH, V.C.

By H. RIDER HAGGARD.

Presently she stopped crying with a start and looked up, for she felt that she was no longer alone. Her instincts had not deceived her, for there, not more than two paces from her, in the shadow of the fir trees, was the figure of a man. Just then he took a step to the left, which brought his figure against the sky, and Ida's heart stood still, for now she saw who it was. It was Harold Quaritch, the man over whose loss she had been weeping.

"It's deuced odd," she heard him say, for she was to leeward of him, "but I could have sworn that I heard somebody sobbing; I suppose it was the wind."

Ida's first idea was flight, and she made a movement for that purpose, and in doing so tripped over a stick and nearly fell.

In a minute he was by her side. She was caught, and perhaps she was not altogether sorry, especially as she had tried to get away.

"Who is it? What's the matter?" said the colonel, lighting a fusee under her nose. It was one of those flaming fusees and burned with a blue light, showing Ida's tall figure and her beautiful face all stained with grief and tears, her wet mackintosh, and the gate post against which she had been leaning—showing everything.

"Why, Ida," he said, in amaze, "what are you doing here, crying too?"

"I am not crying," she said, with a sob; "it's the rain has made my face wet."

Just then the light burned out and he dropped it.

"What is it, dear, what is it?" he said in great distress, for the sight of her alone in the wet and dark, in tears, moved him beyond himself, and indeed he would have been no man if it had not.

She tried to answer, but, poor thing, she could not, and in another minute, to tell the honest truth, she had exchanged the gate post for Harold's broad shoulder, and was finishing her "cry" there.

Now, to see a young and pretty woman weeping (more especially if she happens to be weeping on your shoulder) is a very trying thing. It is trying even if you do not happen to be in love with her at all. But if you are in love with her, however little, it is dreadful; whereas, if, as in the present case, you happen to worship her, more perhaps, than it is good to worship any fallible human creature, then the sight is positively overpowering. And so, indeed, it proved in the present instance. The colonel could not bear it, but lifting her head from his shoulder, he kissed her sweet face again and again. Now, nature has generally a remedy for most ills if only the physician knows where to look for it, and there is no doubt that this sort of treatment has before now proved efficacious in many similar cases. At any rate it answered here, for presently Ida grew quieter.

"Don't," she said feebly—a phrase common to people in such circumstances, from duchesses to milkmaids, and one full of human nature.

"What is it, darling?" he said; "what is the matter?"

"Leave go of me. I will tell you," she answered.

He obeyed, though with some unwillingness.

She hunted for her handkerchief and wiped her eyes, and then at last she spoke:

"I am engaged to be married," she said, in a low voice, "to Mr. Cossey."

Then, for about the first time in his life, Harold Quaritch swore violently in the presence of a lady.

"Oh, d——n it all," he said.

She took no notice of the strength of the language, perhaps, indeed, she re-echoed it in some feminine equivalent.

"It is true," she said, with a sigh. "I knew that it would come, those dreadful things always do—and it was not my fault—I am sure that you will always remember that. I had to do it—he advanced the money on the express condition, and even if I could pay back the money, I suppose that I should be bound to carry out the bargain. It is not the money that he wants, but his bond."

"Curse him for an infernal Shylock," said Harold again, and groaned in his bitterness and jealousy. "Is there nothing to be done?" he asked presently in a harsh voice, for he was very hard hit.

"Nothing," she answered, sadly. "I do not see what can help us unless the man died," she said; "and that is not likely. Harold," she went on, addressing him for the first time in her life by his Christian name, for she felt that after crying upon a man's shoulder it is ridiculous to scruple about calling him by his name. "Harold, there is no help for it. I did it myself, remember, because, as I told you, I do not think that any one woman has a right to place her individual happiness before the welfare of her family. And I am only sorry," she added, her voice breaking a little, "that what I have done should bring suffering upon you."

He groaned again, but said nothing.

"We must try to forget," she went on wildly. "Oh, no! no! I know that it is not possible that we should forget. You won't forget me, Harold, will you? And though it must be all over between us, and we must never speak like this again—never—you will always know that I have not forgotten you, will you not, but that I think of you always?"

"There is no fear of my forgetting," he said, "and I am selfish enough to hope that you will think of me at times, dear."

"Yes, indeed I will. We all have our burdens to bear—it is a hard world—and we must bear them. And it will be all the same in the end, in just a few years. I dare say these dead people here have felt the same, and how quiet they are! and perhaps there may be something beyond, where things are not so. Who can say? You won't go away from this place, Harold, will you? Not until I am married, at any rate; perhaps you had better go then. Say that you won't go till then, and you will let me see you sometimes; it is such a comfort to see you."

"I should have gone, certainly," he said, "to New Zealand probably; but if you wish it I will stop for the present."

"No, thank you; and now good-by, my dear, good-by. No, don't come with me; I can find my own way home. And now, why do you wait? Good-by, good-by forever in this way. Yes, kiss me once and swear that you will never forget me. Marry if you wish to, but don't forget me, Harold. Forgive me for speaking so plainly, but I speak as one about to die to you, and I wish things to be clear."

"I shall never marry, and I shall never forget you," he answered. "Good-by, my love, good-by."

In another minute she had vanished into the storm and rain, out of his sight and out of his life, but not out of his heart.

And he, too, turned and went his way into the wild and lonely night.

An hour afterward Ida came down into the drawing room dressed for dinner, looking rather pale, but otherwise quite herself. Presently the old squire arrived. He had been attending a magistrates' meeting, and had only just got home.

"Why, Ida," he said, "I could not find you anywhere. I met George as I was driving from Boisingham, and he told me that he saw you walking through the park."

"Did he?" she answered, indifferently. "Yes, I have been out. It was so stuffy indoors. Father," she went on, with a change of tone, "I have something to tell you. I am engaged to be married."

He looked at her curiously, and then said, quietly—the squire was always quiet in any matter of real emergency: "Indeed, my dear! That is a serious matter. However, speaking off-hand, I think that notwithstanding the disparity of age, Quaritch"——

"No, no," she said, wincing visibly; "I am not engaged to Col. Quaritch; I am engaged to Mr. Cossey."

"Oh," he said, "oh, indeed! I thought from what I saw, that—that"——

At this moment the servant announced dinner.

"Well, never mind about it now, father," she said; "I am tired, and want my dinner. Mr. Cossey is coming to see you to-morrow, and we can talk about it afterward."

And though the squire thought about it a good deal, he made no further allusion to the subject that night.

CHAPTER XXIV.

THE SQUIRE GIVES HIS CONSENT.

Edward Cossey, returning to Boisingham on the evening of his engagement, at once wrote and posted a note to the squire, saying that he would call on the following morning about a matter of business. Accordingly, at half past 10 o'clock, he arrived and was shown into the vestibule, where he found the old gentleman standing with his back to the fire and plunged in reflection.

"Well, Mr. de la Molle," said Edward, rather nervously so soon as he had shaken hands, "I do not know if Ida has spoken to you about what took place between us yesterday."

"Yes," he said, "yes, she told me something to the effect that she had accepted a proposal of marriage from you, subject to my consent, of course; but really the whole thing is so sudden that I have hardly had time to consider it."

"It is very simple," said Edward; "I am deeply attached to your daughter, and I have been so fortunate as to be accepted by her. Should you give your consent to the marriage, I may as well say at once that I wish to make the most liberal money arrangements in my power. I will make Ida a present of the mortgage bonds that I hold over this property, and she may put them in the fire. Further, I will covenant on the death of my father, which cannot now be long delayed, to settle two hundred thousand pounds upon her absolutely. Also, I shall be prepared to agree that if we have a son, and he should wish to do so, he should take the name of De la Molle."

"I am sure," said the squire, turning round to hide his natural gratification at these proposals, "your offers on the subject of settlements are of a most liberal order, and of course, so far as I am concerned, Ida will have this place, which may one day be again more valuable than it is now."

"I am glad that they meet with your approval," said Edward; "and now there is one more thing I want to ask you, Mr. de la Molle, and which I hope, if you will give your consent to the marriage, you will not raise any objection to. That is, that our engagement should not be announced at present. The fact is," he went on, hurriedly, "my father is a very peculiar man, and has a great idea of my marrying somebody with a large fortune. Also his state of health is so uncertain that there is no possibility of knowing how he will take anything. Indeed he is dying; the doctors told me that he might go off any day, and that he cannot last for another three months. If the engagement is announced to him now, at the best I shall have a great deal of trouble, and at the worst he might, if he happened to take a fancy against it, make me suffer in his will."

"Umph," said the squire, "I don't quite like the idea of a projected marriage with my daughter, Miss de la Molle of Honham castle, being hushed up as though there were something discreditable about it, but still there may be peculiar circumstances in the case that would justify me in consenting to that course. You are both old enough to know your own minds, and the match would be as advantageous to you as it could be to us, for even nowadays, family, and I may even say personal appearance, still go for something where matrimony is concerned. I have reason to know that your father is a peculiar man, very peculiar. Yes, on the whole, though I don't like hole and corner affairs, I shall have no objection to the engagement not being announced for the next month or two."

"Thank you for considering me so much," said Edward, with a sigh of relief. "Then am I to understand that you give your consent to our engagement?"

The squire reflected for a moment. Everything seemed quite straight, and yet he suspected crookedness. His latent distrust of the man, which had not been decreased by the scene of the two nights before—for he never could bring himself to like Edward Cossey—arose in force and made him hesitate when there was no visible ground for hesitation. He had, as has been said, an instinctive insight into character that was almost feminine in its intensity, and it was lifting a warning finger before him now.

"I don't quite know what to say," he replied at length. "The whole affair is so sudden—and to tell you the truth, I thought that Ida had bestowed her affections in another direction."

Edward's face darkened. "I thought so, too," he answered, "until yesterday when I was so happy as to be undeceived. I ought to tell you, by the way," he went on, running away from the covert falsehood in his last words as quickly as he could, "how much I regret that I was the cause of that scene with Col. Quaritch, more especially as I find that there is an explanation of the story against him. The fact is, I was foolish enough to be put out because he beat me out shooting, and also because, well I—I was jealous of him."

"Ah, yes," said the squire rather coldly, "a most unfortunate affair. Of course, I don't know what the particulars of the matter were, and it is no business of mine, but, speaking generally, I should say never bring an accusation of that sort against a man at all unless you are driven to it, and if you do bring it, be quite certain of your ground. However, that is neither here nor there. Well, about this engagement. Ida is old enough to judge for herself, and seems to have made up her mind, so, as I know no reason to the contrary, and as the business arrangements proposed are all that I could wish, I cannot see that I have any ground for withholding my consent. So all I can say, sir, is that I hope you will make my daughter a good husband, and that you will both be happy. Ida is a high spirited woman, and in some ways a very peculiar woman; but in my opinion she is greatly above the average of her sex, as I have known it, and provided you have her affection, and don't attempt to drive her, she will go through thick and thin for you. But I dare say you would like to see her. Oh, by the way, I forgot, she has got a headache this morning, and is stopping in bed. It isn't much in her line, but I dare say that she is a little upset. Perhaps you would like to come up to dinner to-night?"

This proposition Edward, knowing full well that Ida's headache was a device to rid herself of the necessity of seeing him, accepted with gratitude and went.

As soon as he was gone Ida herself came down.

"Well, my dear," said the squire, cheerfully, "I have just had the pleasure of seeing Edward Cossey, and I have told him that, as you seemed to wish it"——

Here Ida made a movement of impatience, but remembered herself, and said nothing.

"That as you seemed to wish that things should be so, I had no grounds of objection to your engagement. I may as well tell you that the proposals which he makes as regards settlements are of the most liberal nature."

"Are they?" answered Ida, indifferently. "Is Mr. Cossey coming here to dinner?"

"Yes, I asked him. I thought that you would like to see him."

"Well, then, I wish you had not," she answered, with animation, "because there is nothing for dinner except some cold beef. Really, father, it is very thoughtless of you," and she stamped her foot and went off in a huff, leaving the squire full of reflection.

"I wonder what it all means?" he said to himself. "She can't care about the man much or she would not make that fuss about his being asked to dinner. She isn't the sort of woman to be caught by the money, I should think. Well, I know nothing about it; it is no affair of mine, and I can only take things as I find them."

And then he fell to reflecting that this marriage would be an extraordinary stroke of luck for the family. Here they were at the last gasp, mortgaged up to the eyes, when suddenly fortune, in the shape of a, on the whole, perfectly unobjectionable young man, appears; takes up the mortgages; proposes settlements to the tune of hundreds of thousands, and even offers to perpetuate the old family name in the person of his son, should he have one. Such a state of affairs could not but be gratifying to any man, however unworldly, and the squire was not altogether unworldly. That is, he had a keen sense of the dignity of his social position and his family, and it had all his life been his chief and laudiable desire to be sufficiently provided with the goods of this world to raise the De la Molles to the position which they had occupied in former centuries. Hitherto, however, the tendency of events had been all the other way; the house was a sinking one, and but the other day its ancient roof had nearly fallen about their ears. Now, however, as though by magic, the prospect changed. On Ida's marriage all the mortgages, those heavy accumulations of years of growing expenditure and narrowing means, would roll off the back of the estate, and the De la Molles, of Honham castle, would once more take the place in the county to which they were undoubtedly entitled.

It is not wonderful that the prospect proved a pleasing one to him, or that his head was filled with visions of splendors to come.

As it chanced, on that very morning it was necessary for Mr. Quest to pay the old gentleman a visit in order to obtain his signature to a lease of a bakery in Boisingham, which, together with two or three other houses, belonged to the estate.

He arrived just as the squire was in the full flow of his meditations, and it would not have needed a man of Mr. Quest's penetration and powers of observation to discover that he had something on his mind which he was longing for an opportunity to talk about.

The squire signed the lease without paying the slightest attention to Mr. Quest's explanations, and then suddenly asked him when the first interest on the recently effected mortgages came due.

The lawyer mentioned an approaching date.

"Ah," said the squire, "then it will have to be met, but it does not matter, it will be for the last time."

Mr. Quest pricked up his ears and looked at him.

"The fact is, Quest," he went on by way of explanation, "that there are—well—family arrangements pending which will put an end to these embarrassments in a natural and a proper way."

"Indeed, said Mr. Quest, "I am very glad to hear it."

"Yes, yes," said the squire, "unfortunately, I am under some restraints in speaking about the matter at present, or I should like to ask your opinion, for which, as you know, I have a great respect. Really, though, I do not know why I should not consult my lawyer on a matter of business; I only consented not to trumpet the thing about."

"Lawyers are confidential agents," said Mr. Quest, quietly.

"Of course they are. Of course, and it is their business to hold their tongues. I may rely upon your discretion, may I not?"

"Certainly," said Mr. Quest.

"Well, the matter is this: Mr. Edward Cossey is engaged to Miss de la Molle. He has just been here to obtain my consent, which, of course, I have not withheld, as I know nothing against the young man—nothing at all. The only stipulation that he made is, I think, a reasonable one under the circumstances, namely, that the engagement is to be kept quiet for a little while on account of the condition of his father's health. He says that he is an unreasonable man, and that he might take a prejudice against it."

During the announcement Mr. Quest had remained perfectly quiet, his face showing no signs of excitement, only his eyes shone with a curious light.

"Indeed," he said, "this is very interesting news."

"Yes," said the squire. "That is what I meant by saying that there would be no necessity to make any arrangements for the future payment of interest, for Cossey has informed me that he proposes to put the mortgage bonds in the fire before his marriage."

"Indeed," said Mr. Quest; "well, he could hardly do less, could he? Altogether, I think you ought to be congratulated, Mr. de la Molle. It is not often that a man gets such a chance of clearing the incumbrances off a property. And now I am very sorry, but I must be getting home, as I promised my wife to be back for luncheon. As the thing is to be kept quiet, I suppose that it would be premature for me to offer my congratulations to Miss de la Molle."

"Yes, yes, don't say anything about it at present. Well, good-by."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

—Salts of lemon will take spots out of linen and also remove stains from wood.

—The cores should be left in apples out of which dumplings are made, as the pips impart a delicious flavor.

—Egg Biscuit: One pint of flour, three eggs, one pint of milk, a salt spoonful of salt; bake in well greased cups.—Boston Herald.

—Samuel S. Downey, Captain of the Lancaster Bicycle Club, recently rode his wheel from Lancaster to Philadelphia and back, a distance of 136 miles, between 5:30 in the morning and 11:45 in the evening. He stayed nearly four hours in Philadelphia and stopped for supper on his way back.—Philadelphia Press.

—A curious sale of skeletons is about to take place in Paris. These ghastly treasures belonged to a French doctor, who devoted his existence to studying distorted human nature, and haunted the hospitals to buy up the corpses of deformed persons. Accordingly he formed a perfect museum of horrors, for which his heirs now ask £1,200.

—The bent of the young American mind was strongly illustrated in the St. Louis high school, where the scholars were directed to prepare a list of the five greatest journalists dead and the five greatest living. The boys were nearly unanimous in heading their lists of greatest living journalists with the name of a well known baseball reporter.—St. Louis Post.

—A correspondent of a San Francisco society paper declares that in making a call he never knows what to do with his hands and feet, and asks advice on the subject. The shrewdly judging editor thereupon suggests that he take his hat with the former and his departure with the latter. If all writers on etiquette were as practical as this one they would not be the useless persons they are now.—San Franciscan.

—Mr. John Rogers, of Mansfield, Mass., had a throat-gargle compounded at a druggist's the other day. When carrying it home the bottle exploded, and everything that the compound touched was burned. It turned out that the clerk had used aquafortis instead of aqua pura, or pure water, and that the aquafortis, in composition with glycerine in the prescription, made something about like nitro-glycerine.—Boston Journal.

—Several negroes recently captured a large sturgeon in Big creek, Georgia. It had been seen swimming around in the creek for more than a week, and that day they went prepared with spikes and axes to capture the monster. The water was three or four feet deep, and it took considerable work to bring him to shore. It was taken to Waynesboro, and weighed eighty-five pounds and measured six and one-half feet in length. It is the first sturgeon ever captured in the creek.—N. O. Times.

A VOICE FROM THE RAIL.

Sierra Chemical Co.

GENTLEMEN:—Having been in the railroad business, a conductor for years, I contracted very serious disorders of my kidneys and bladder called catarrh of the bladder. I was getting weaker daily and did not leave my bed for three months, also was despaired of by my doctors. I was lucky enough to hear of your Great Sierra Kidney and Liver Cure and sent for one bottle, as you well know. I have used five bottles and am now out, around and able to attend to my work. Your valuable remedy has saved my life, and to you I owe my heartfelt thanks. Truly yours,

EUGENE GUY,

With Leak Glove Co., 521 Market street, San Francisco, Cal.

"Which would you rather be, a knave or a fool?" asked Idioticus. "I don't know," replied Cynicus. "What has been your experience?"

LUCKY CARTER.

The Janitor at the Nevada Block Wins Five Thousand Dollars.

The winner of the one-twentieth portion of ticket 41,158 in the last drawing of The Louisiana State Lottery, amounting to $5,000, is a resident of this city. He is employed as a janitor in the Nevada block, is as pleasant a colored man as one could wish to meet and thoroughly deserves his luck.

When questioned by a reporter George B. Carter, for that is his name, stated that he had been purchasing tickets in The Louisiana State Lottery for the past two and a half years, buying five coupons every month. He admitted that he had been a very lucky man, having won small prizes over and over again, and he felt sure that one day he would make just such a haul as he has made.

The money was paid to him very promptly through the Nevada Bank, and thus far remains intact. He still maintains his position as janitor and has no intention of giving it up. As soon as the weather clears up he will invest his capital in city real estate. He has a large family to support and the $5,000 could not have been better placed than in his hands.

The conversation was held with the winner of the prize as he was busily engaged cleaning out one of the many offices under his care. Success has not turned his head and all of his fellow workers speak well of him as a hard-working, good-natured, honest and respectable man, none of them begrudging him his good fortune.—San Francisco (Cal.) Chronicle March 5.

Joseph Taylor has sued the San Rafael Tocsin for $5,000 for saying he had been arrested for trying to defraud San Francisco in the delivery of basalt blocks.

WAKED UP EFFECTUALLY.

A lethargic, dormant condition of the liver is hardly to be overcome with drastic cathartics and nauseous cholagogues. A gentler, pleasanter and far more effective means exists of arousing the organ when somnolent. This is Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, vouched for by the medical fraternity, tested by the public for many years. A resumption by the biliary organ of its secretive function, with the activity attendant upon health, a return to regularity of the bowels and a renewal of digestion, are the no less happy and certain results of using the Bitters systematically. Its laxative effect is never painful and drenching, its tendency being rather to perpetuate regularity than to produce a copious action. Malaria, nervousness, debility, kidney troubles and neuralgia it subdues effectually.

The street car fiend will surely go
To Hades for his grievous sins,
For he crosses his legs and wines his boots
Upon his opposite neighbor's shins.

HAPPY RECOVERY.

There is nothing I now enjoy that I do not owe to having used Dr. David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy, of Rondout, N. Y., at a time when I was suffering all that a human being could endure. My troubles began in my kidneys, from which I never expected to recover. My physicians said I had Bright's disease. I after had a bad attack of G. a. v. l. Six years ago last June—how well I remember that day—I saw Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy advertised in our paper. After using three bottles I was well. I have never had a return of the disease, and though I am over sixty years of age I am vigorous and strong, as I was in my prime. What physicians and the many remedies I had taken could not do Dr. Kennedy's Favorite Remedy did; it stayed the disease and made me a well woman.—Mrs. Emiline P. Mizner, Burg Hill, O.

DR. KENNEDY'S FAVORITE REMEDY, made at Rondout, N. Y. $1; 6 for $5.

Send for book, how to cure Kidney, Liver and Blood disorders.

Distinction—"Isn't Madge a wonderful girl?" "What can she do?" "Do! Why she can wear an 18-inch corset on a 26-inch waist."

Fifteen contestants clad for the fray,
Armed with good steel and in battle array—
Striving for there, as brave Knights of old
Strove or their honors and medals of gold.
Driving each shining pen over the paper,—
Seeking to sound, as the most proper caper,
The praises of remedies known the world over—
From Paris to Calais, from Calais to Dover;
But each Knight vainly strives—language fails in description
Of the manifold virtues of "Favorite Prescription."

When ill or depressed with that "dragging-down" feeling, consequent upon weakness, suffering from headache, weak or lame back and the many ills common to the weaker sex, take Dr. Pierce's Prescription, which is guaranteed to give satisfaction or price ($1.00) returned. See printed guarantee on bottle-wrapper.

Dr. Pierce's Pellets—gently laxative or actively cathartic according to dose. 25 cents.

A box safety matches free to smokers of "Tansill's Punch 5c. Cigar.

One on the Professor—Professor (to pupil, whom he has caught mimicking him)—Mr. Jones, if you don't stop acting like a fool I shall send you from the class.

SURE CURE FOR PILES.

Sure cure for blind, bleeding and itching Piles. One box has cured the worst cases of ten years' standing. No one need suffer ten minutes after using Kirk's German Pile Ointment. It absorbs tumors, allays the itching, acts as a poultice, gives relief. Dr. Kirk's German Pile Ointment is prepared only for Piles and itching of the private parts, and nothing else. Every box is warranted.

Sold by druggists and sent by mail on receipt of price, $1.00 per box. J. J. Mack & Co., Wholesale Agents, San Francisco.

Beware of imitations of the genuine Seal of North Carolina Plug Cut Tobacco.

If afflicted with Sore Eyes, use Dr. Isaac Thompson's Eye Water. Druggists sell it. 25c.

Try Germea for Breakfast.

Now
Is the Time

To purify your blood and fortify your system against the debilitating effects of spring weather. At no other season is the bitter taste in the mouth more prominent, the breath so offensive, the drowsy dizziness so frequent, or that extreme tired feeling so prevalent. Hood's Sarsaparilla is just the medicine to build up the system, purify the blood, cure biliousness and headache, overcome that tired feeling and create a good appetite.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Apothecaries, Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar

G
Cures in 1 TO 5 DAYS. Guaranteed not to cause Stricture.
Mfd. only by the Evans Chemical Co. Cincinnati, O.
Trade Mark
I prescribe and fully endorse Big G as the only specific for the certain cure of this disease.
G. H. INGRAHAM, M. D., Amsterdam, N. Y.
We have sold Big G for many years, and it has given the best of satisfaction.
D. R. DYCHE & CO., Chicago, Ill.
$1.00. Sold by Druggists.

PISO'S CURE FOR
CURES WHERE ALL ELSE FAILS.
Best Cough Syrup. Tastes good. Use in time. Sold by druggists.
CONSUMPTION
25 CTS.

JUST ISSUED FOR 1890.

Our Illustrated Catalogue; a Price-list of General Merchandise, containing 200 pages, which will be forwarded free to any address. C. H. GILMAN, Red House, Sacramento, Cal.

It makes the mind free when we give up wishing and only think of bearing what is laid upon us and doing what is given us to do.

PILES! PILES! PILES!

Dr. William's Indian Pile Ointment is the only sure cure for Blind, Bleeding or Itching Piles ever discovered. It never fails to cure old chronic cases of long standing.

Judge Coffinbury, Cleveland, Ohio, says: "I have found by experience that Dr. William's Indian Pile Ointment gives immediate relief."

Do not suffer an instant longer. Sold by William's Manufacturing Co., Props., Cleveland, Ohio. 50c & $1.

Somebody says, "True happiness is found in pursuing something, not in catching it." The man who pursues the last car at night knows better.

Six Novels Free, will be sent by Cragin & Co., Philada., Pa., to any one in the U. S. or Canada, postage paid, upon receipt of 25 Dobbins' Electric Soap wrappers. See list of novels on circulars around each bar. Soap for sale by all grocers.

"You don't seem to be getting along very well," said the man in the operating chair. "No," replied the dentist, "I have struck a snag."

AN ELEGANT PACKAGE OF FINE CARDS.

Including 15 rare novelties, shapes and artistic imported oleographic and chromatic cards. This large and beautiful collection sent by mail to anyone who will do this:—Buy a box of the genuine Dr. C. McLane's Celebrated Liver Pills from any druggist, price 25 cents, and mail us the outside wrapper with your address, plainly written and 4 cents in stamps. The genuine McLane's Pills are prepared only by Fleming Bros., Pittsburg, Pa., and have been in constant use for over sixty years. They are superior to all others in purity and effectiveness. A certain cure for indigestion and sick headache. Address, Fleming Bros. Pittsburgh, Pa.

The average waiter holds a tray, but the boarder generally finds him playing the deuce.

When in San Francisco stop at Straub's restaurant and Saloon, 327 and 329 Bush street. Best to eat and drink. No fancy prices.

FULL WEIGHT PURE
DR. PRICE'S CREAM BAKING POWDER
MOST PERFECT MADE

Its superior excellence proven in millions of homes for more than a quarter of a century. It is used by the United States Government. Indorsed by the heads of the Great Universities as the Strongest, Purest and Most Healthful. Dr. Price's the only Baking Powder that does not contain Ammonia, Lime or Alumn. Sold only in Cans.

PRICE BAKING POWDER CO.,
NEW YORK. CHICAGO SAN FRANCISCO

For Gout, Rheumatism, Neuralgia. Sciatica, bathe the parts affected freely with Perry Davis' PAIN KILLER taking also a teaspoonful in sugar and water 3 times a day, and you'll get relief at once and a Cure after faithful use of this remedy. Pain Killer Cures Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Diphtheria, Frost Bite.

SHOES FOR NOTHING.

We often close out whole lines of shoes in Eastern factories, or here, that have been hard to sell at ¼ their original price. Our customers get the benefit. We now offer 60 cases of men's low shoes, solid calf and warranted at $1.50 per pair, made to sell for cash at $3.50. They are plain or capped toe, broad or narrow, for old or young. Then we have infants soft sole boots or ankle ties, in light colors, from the best maker in Philadelphia, size 1 at 20c, 2 at 25c and 3 at 30c. Then we have infants high cut lace boots from same maker warranted at 5c per pair, more in black kid and fine goods. Then we have a pretty heavy kid or goat infants shoes, with heel, some tipped and others plain, size 2 at 30c, size 3 at 35c, size 4 at 40c, size 5 at 50c; would cost $1.00 to $1.25 regular. Then we have Misses 11 to 2 in cloth and kid foxed at 75 cents, lace shoes, but well made, and men's handsome plush or worked slippers, sizes 6 and 8 only, at 88 cents, and ladies beautiful felt slippers, 3 to 7, for 95 cents, that we get $1.50 for as a rule. Men's Sunday shoes, 5 to 10, for $1.79, plain or capped toe. If you order by mail send plenty for postage and we will return if too much. We never offered as good value in shoes in any of our "job lots," but we want a portion of your shoe trade. Shall we have it? Address Smith's Cash Store, 418 Front St., San Francisco, Cal.

10,000 AGENTS WANTED AT ONCE
To sell the complete history of the murder of Dr. CRONIN. Giving a full and complete account of the conspiracy, murder, discovery of the body, arrests, coroner's inquest, the trial and verdict. The book contains over 100 illustrations. One large 12 mo. volume of about 500 pages, price only $1.50. OUTFITS NOW READY. Send, at once, 75 cents for an outfit; first come, first served. This is the chance of your life-time; big commissions. Address, LAIRD & LEE, Publishers, 203-205 Jackson Street, Chicago, Ill.

PENSIONS!
For Soldiers' Widows, Mothers and fathers of deceased Soldiers of all Wars.
MEXICAN SOLDIERS AND THEIR WIDOWS
Entitled at any age if any way sick. Address, CAPT. J. H. SHEPARD, Registered U. S. Pension Att'y., 1068 East 15th St., Oakland, Cal. Member of Lyon Post, No. 8, G. A. R., Dep't of Cal. Send the names of all Widows, Mothers and Fathers of Soldiers not receiving Pensions.

USE NEW WELLINGTON COAL.

THE OLD ENEMY.

It is known as a painful inflammation affecting the muscles and joints of the human body, the symptoms of which are swelling of the joints, acute pains and aches. St. Jacobs Oil cures promptly and permanently this enemy which is:

RHEUMATISM.

Sandyville, Ohio, June 18, 1888.
Was taken with rheumatism in 1861; suffered at times ever since and used crutches. St. Jacobs Oil relieved me about two years ago. GEO. L. NIXON.

AT DRUGGISTS AND DEALERS.
THE CHARLES A. VOGELER CO., Baltimore, Md.

Reliable SEEDS
The famous Hovey Seed Store of Boston, and Hovey Nurseries of Cambridge, Mass., have been moved to East Pasadena, California, where the business will be conducted as The Raymond Flower and Seed Store. C. H. HOVEY, Manager, East Pasadena, Cal. Send for complete catalogue.

INVENTORS are invited to consult the old established Patent Firm of Mason, Fenwick & Lawrence, Wash. D.C.

DR. SYKES' CURE FOR CATARRH
ESTABLISHED CHICAGO 1870
1888 Removed TO CINCINNATI.
Has cured many cases pronounced hopeless by physicians. Send for Free Book 'Common Sense Talk' and numerous testimonials. They will convince you.
Dr. SYKES' SURE CURE CO., 330 Race St., Cincinnati, O.

Dr. L. GOLDSCHMIEDT,
Twenty years New York private and Hospital Experience. All Chronic and Special Diseases. Call or address, No. 5 Stockton Street, San Francisco, Cal.

$4 a Day Sure You must admit that a sure chance to make $4.00 a day above all expenses, and you can surely do it, is an opportunity that you cannot afford to lose. No capital required. We will start you. Send us your name and address on a postal card for full particulars. Pacific Coast Supply Co., 103 Post St., San Francisco, Cal.

THE WORKMAN'S SOLACE.

"I tell you, my boy, I get a heap more comfort out of a package of 'SEAL OF NORTH CAROLINA PLUG CUT' than Jay Gould does out of all his millions."

HAWKEYE GRUB & STUMP MACHINE.
Works on either STANDING TIMBER or STUMPS. Will pull an ordinary Grub in 1½ MINUTES. MAKES A CLEAN SWEEP of two Acres at a sitting. A man, a boy and a horse can operate it. No heavy Chains or rods to handle. The crop on a few acres the first year will pay for the Machine. It will only cost you a postal card to send for an Illustrated Catalogue, giving price, terms and testimonials. Address the Manufacturers, JAMES MILNE & SON, SCOTCH GROVE, IOWA.

CHICHESTER'S ENGLISH
PENNYROYAL PILLS
RED CROSS DIAMOND BRAND.
Safe and always reliable. Ladies, ask Druggist for Diamond Brand, in red, metallic boxes, sealed with blue ribbon. Take no other. All pills in pasteboard boxes, pink wrappers, are dangerous counterfeits. Send 4c. (stamps) for particulars, testimonials and "Relief for Ladies," in letter, by return mail. Name Paper. Chichester Chem'l Co., Madison Sq., Phila., Pa.

S. F. N. U., No. 406 New Series No. 13.

Statement Jan. 1st, 1890.
R. H. McDONALD PRES'T. F. V. McDONALD, CASHIER.
ESTABLISHED 1863.
Oldest Chartered Bank on the Pacific Coast.
PACIFIC BANK
Capital Stock $1,000,000.00.
SURPLUS $ 750,000.00
AV. RESOURCES $4,500,000.00
During the past year we have paid our regular dividends and have added another $50,000 to our surplus fund.
Thanking our friends for past favors we respectfully ask a continuance of the same.
San Francisco, Cal. R. H. McDONALD, Prest.

Deposits Received from $1 upwards.
Money Saved is Money Earned.
Deposit in a good Savings Bank.
PEOPLE'S HOME SAVINGS BANK
808 Market St., cor. 4th St. IN FLOOD BUILDING
San Francisco, California.
Guarantee Capital, $1,000,000
Interest apportioned from date of deposit. Deposits from any part of the Pacific Coast States may be sent by registered letter, post office money order, bank draft or express.
Copy of By-laws and list of shareholders in Guarantee Capital sent free on application.
The People's Home Savings Bank has exceptional facilities for safe, profitable and satisfactory investment of funds at good rates of interest.
Thankful for past favors and asking for continuance of the same. Respectfully,
Columbus Waterhouse, Prest.

THE BEST SEEDS are those put up by D. M. FERRY & CO. Who are the largest Seedsmen in the world.
D. M. FERRY & Co's Illustrated, Descriptive and Priced SEED ANNUAL for 1890 will be mailed FREE to all applicants, and to last season's customers. It is better than ever. Every person using Garden, Flower or Field Seeds should send for it. Address D. M. FERRY & CO. DETROIT, MICH.

TRADE MARK
Damiana Bitters.
The great Mexican Remedy for Disorders of the Kidneys and Bladder, Damiana is recognized by all physicians as the best Nervous Stimulant, gives health and strength to the Generative and Procreative Organs. For sale everywhere.
NABER, ALFS & BRUNE,
323 & 325 Market St., S. F., Agents.

STEINWAY. KRANICH, PEASE & BACH, Gabler, Roenish Pianos; Burdett Organs, Band Instruments. Largest stock of Sheet Music and Books. Bands supplied at Eastern Prices. MATTHIAS GRAY CO., 206 Post Street, San Francisco.

GILES' CREOSOZONE
FOR THE DESTRUCTION OF

VERMIN and PARASITES
AFFECTING POULTRY AND BIRDS.
Price, FULL QUART, 75c. FULL DIRECTIONS ON EACH CAN.
SOLD BY ALL GROCERS AND DRUGGISTS.
Prepared only by Nelson Giles, Jr., Manufacturing Co., National City Cal.

ENORMOUS SHIPMENTS.

Frequent shipments of car-load lots of Dr. Pierce's Medicines, to all the principal commercial centers of this country, are necessary to supply the unprecedented demand for these world-famed remedies. No other medicines ever attained anything like the popularity which they enjoy. No other medicines possess such superior and positive curative properties as to warrant their manufacturers in selling them, as the proprietors of Dr. Pierce's Medicines are doing, through druggists, under a positive guarantee of benefit or cure in every case, on fair trial, or money refunded.

There are scores of sarsaparillas and other blood medicines advertised, but the "Golden Medical Discovery" of Dr. Pierce is the only one ever backed up by a positive guarantee from a well-known and thoroughly responsible house. The conditions are, that, given a fair trial, it will do all that is claimed for it, or money paid for it will be promptly refunded. A Certificate of Guarantee wraps every b

INYO INDEPENDENT.

COUNTY OFFICIAL PAPER.

C. MULHOLLAND, - - - Proprietor.

Independence, Cal.,

FRIDAY, - - - MAY 9, 1890.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

VOL. XXI. NO. 48. INDEPENDENCE, INYO CO., CAL., MAY 9, 1890. WHOLE NO. 1019.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

COUNTY OFFICIAL PAPER.

C. MULHOLLAND, - - - Proprietor.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One Year (post paid)	$4.00
Six Months	2.25
Three Months	1.50
One Month	50
Single Copies	20

MY LITTLE ONE AND I.

Outside, wind and cloudy sky,
Inside, warmth and comfort lie.
Fire and light
Gleam to-night
For my little one and I.

Pussy purrs—so happy she,
Curled up on her cushion see,
Where she lies—
Sleepy eyes—
Watch the flames leap merrily.

Ponto in his sleep will bark,
Thinks he still must watch and bark
Lest some foe,
Ere we know,
Leap upon us from the dark.

Dicky-bird has chirped "Good-night,"
Tucked his head far out of sight,
Little one,
Day is done
For you both till morning light.

For my birdie's drowsy head,
See, her dainty couch is spread,
Swinging low—
To and fro—
Rocks the tiny cradle bed.

Outside, wind and cloudy skies,
Inside, watched by angel eyes,
Soft and warm,
Free from harm,
Fast asleep my baby lies.
—Ruth Argyle, in Good Housekeeping.

THE LOST LOVE-LETTER.

How Jessie's Forgetfulness Nearly Wrecked Two Lives.

"Tag," "Tag," "Tag," in quick succession from a number of tiny throats, and a group of children were scampering all over the garden of a suburban residence of New York.

"Little girl, little girl," said a voice from the other side of the hedge, "will you please do me a favor?"

"Yes, sir," replied the little maid.

"Now tell me, are you not visiting for a few weeks at this house?"

"Yes, sir, I am"—rather curiously this time.

"Then, of course, you know Miss Ellsler, the governess?"

"Oh, yes, sir, she just went into the house. Shall I tell her you want her?"

"Oh, no, but would you please give her this letter?"

"Certainly, sir; I'll take it right in to her," and she was moving away.

"No, dear, don't do that; wait till she comes into the garden—she will like it better," he added, blushing very red, as he turned away.

Now, little Jessie could not play tag with a letter in her hand, and as she could not deliver it at once, began thinking where she could put it for safe keeping.

"Oh, there's a place," she thought, and without more ado she squeezed it under the loosened bark of an old elm tree which grew close to the house and returned to her game. Childish sports have not usually an all-important impression on the affairs of their elders, but that afternoon's game of tag was fraught with destiny, changing the currents of two lives almost to their utter ruin, for Jessie in the excitement of her play forgot the letter entirely.

Miss Ellsler, the governess, had been happy during the early part of the day, even till late in the afternoon, but as darkness fell and bedtime came a heaviness at the heart possessed her and she was thankful when she found herself alone in her room.

"Oh, birdie!" she cried, addressing the only confidante she had—a golden canary, now quietly asleep—"he has broken his word; he has not come. What shall I do? Must I live this drudgery all my life, made doubly heavy by him? Oh, why did he speak to me at all? He knew I was only a governess. Why tell me of his wealth and ambitions—why draw from me my story of daily humiliation if he had no comfort to offer?"

And all the while the leaves of an old elm tree were brushing the mosquito bars as if to say:

"Come and play with us, we know something; search our old trunk where the bark is loose and find a reason why."

Let us accept the invitation and just read the letter:

"MY OWN DARLING: May I call you so? I promised to let you hear from me to-day how you could better yourself in the world, and I think you must have guessed, dearest, the way I should suggest. If your life is half as burdensome as you say, I entreat you to give me the sweet joy of ministering to your comfort. Be my wife and make me happy, as I shall strive to make you. I hasten this avowal, as I sail for the South in a week or two, to be away many, many years. Your 'No' will be the death of me. Consider well, but let me hear not later than in three days' time of my great good fortune. If 'No,' let your silence tell me; it would pain me less. In deepest love and anxiety, yours devotedly ROBERT HICKMAN."

A few days later at breakfast Miss Ellsler dropped her knife and fork on her plate and reeled senseless from her chair to the floor when Mr. Maywood read from the paper that Mr. Robert Hickman had sailed on the Cambria for South America, to be absent many years.

* * * * * * *

A doomed ship, battered and swept by enormous waves, confusion everywhere, in men's souls as in the air above them, curses and prayers, shrieks and cries, all go to make up the terrible scene which is taking place within a few hundred yards from the Jersey shore.

"Lower the boats! Lower the boats! Lively, lads!" shouts the captain. "The women first!"

Only a gunshot from land, but what open boat can live in such a sea?

However, the ship has struck on a reef, and every wave lifts her and crashes her down, ripping the keel and sides at every stroke.

In all the mad despair and rush for the boats there stands one man who is doing an angel's work in preventing absolute panic seizing all.

The captain has noticed his quiet speech but firm restraint, and can not help remarking:

"You are a cool one; you have done your share; now save yourself."

"No hurry," replies the stoic; "these people love life—I don't. I have nothing left to live for."

Just then a cheer goes up and the cry of hope is: "The life-boat—the life-boat! Hurrah!"

Two of the ship's boats have made the shore within a few feet when one fills with water, half of the occupants getting to shore, the others being lost.

The life-boat, loaded full, starts for the beach, when the ship splits in two, rolls over and disappears.

"Give way, boys! we may find one or two yet," says the coxswain of the life-boat as, having landed their passengers, they prepare for a new errand of mercy.

As they bend to their oars one of the men feels his strike something, and glancing in the direction recognizes a man.

"There's one; may be there's life in him. Haul him aboard, lads; that's the style. Why, bless my daylights if it ain't the chap that stood by the captain. He's a good 'un. Give him a drop. He's got life in him yet."

But when they got to land they deemed it advisable to find some comfortable shelter at once for him if his life was to be preserved.

"It is three miles to town. Who lives in that cottage?" inquires the captain of the crew.

"Don't know her name, but she's a widow lady with a daughter."

"Follow me, lads, and bring him carefully."

In a very few seconds he taps sharply at the door, and is met by a kindly-looking old lady.

"A poor fellow, ma'am, nearly drowned just off the wreck. Will you take him in? His life depends upon it."

"Heaven help him; put him on the sofa."

"Thank you, ma'am, warmth is what he needs."

And while the men who remained changed his wet clothes for the blankets they had been supplied with Mrs. Ellsler busied herself in preparing a bed for him in the adjoining room.

But recovery was not immediate; indeed, for many days the doctor despaired of saving his life, and credited the progress he eventually made to the tender and contant nursing of the poor widow.

"Ah, doctor," she said one day, in rebuttal of his compliments, "I have to thank strangers for caring for my own daughter, who has been grievously sick, though they told me nothing till all danger was past. Some love affair, I fancy. She will be here in a few days as she is not fit to work yet awhile."

"You deserve the best of daughters. Meanwhile, remember this young man needs every care; there is an apathy in his speech which may result from his weakness, but has led me to think that his mind is a little unhinged," and with these words of caution the doctor went his way.

One week from that day dear Mrs. Ellsler's heart was fluttering wildly in the expectation of her daughter's arrival.

She was not disappointed in this, but the tears started to her eyes when she beheld the pale face and wasted form of Martha, who really needed assistance to alight from the buggy—she who had often prided herself upon her dexterity in jumping over the wheels and all to the ground.

"Oh, mother, mother," sobbed the poor wanderer, "there's no place like home. Would I might never have to leave this haven of peace and rest. I could lie down and die here, mother, without a pang."

"My dearie, don't talk of dying; you are ill, child, come in. No, let us take the back door, my patient is in that room, and you had better not disturb him. He is stronger than he was, but the shock of the shipwreck has left him cloudy in the brain."

That evening Martha Ellsler stole quietly to the little, upright piano and ran her nimble fingers over the keys.

Her thoughts were still of Robert Hickman and his desertion of her, and in spite of the certain evidence she had that he had cared but little for her, she found comfort in the melody as in the words of "Some Day."

She was singing the second verse when the door of the patient's room opened gently, and a figure, all expressive of veneration and wonder, watched and listened.

The last strain was floating in the air, the last words: "I love you now," when Martha's heart filled too full, and her face fell forward buried in her handkerchief, as she cried:

"Oh, Robert, Robert, my darling, how could you leave me without a word?"

"You did not want me. I had to go!"

It was a hoarse whisper the words were uttered in, and Martha rose as she turned, but stood dumfounded as she recognized in her mother's patient the man she loved.

"Martha, why did you not answer my letter if you loved me?"

"What letter? I know of none."

"Did not Jessie deliver my note the day after our last chat at the gate?"

She had not, as the reader knows, and on learning this he was not slow to repeat its contents, and beg her to be his wife.

When Mrs. Ellsler came to bring her daughter to supper she found she had company, and scarcely recognized her late patient, whose dull, meaningless expression had given place to one of bright intelligence and radiant hope.

"Mother, darling, this is Mr. Robert Hickman, my future husband."

It was not until many happy months had passed over their heads that they had an opportunity of questioning Jessie, when, with a sudden flash of recollection, she confessed her negligence, and led them to the old elm tree, where, safe in its nook, they found the lost love-letter.—Family Story Paper.

Making Up a Newspaper.

Of the toil which a daily newspaper demands, of the unceasing attention it exacts, of the judicious care it requires, the great public of readers take no account. It might lead a dissatisfied purchaser to revise his judgment if he could stand between two and three o'clock in the morning in the composing-room of a great journal and witness the intense excitement, all kept well under in properly regulated offices, which characterize the "making up" of the sheet he sometimes dismisses so contemptuously. The printer, if then in a state to speak calmly, might tell him the great point was not so much what should go in, as what should be left out.—Printer's Register.

—A second garrison church, accommodating 1,500 and costing $225,000, is to be erected in the city of Berlin.

UNTIDINESS AT HOME.

The Importance of Keeping Things Clean and in Order.

It is really astonishing how many girls one can find in a community who are brought up without a due regard to personal neatness. They do not care how they look at home, thinking it necessary to make themselves presentable only when going out or when expecting company. And this matter is not confined to girls of the poorest class, who have scanty and insufficient clothing, but may be frequently observed among those who have all their reasonable wants supplied. Often, indeed, among the poorest, will be found those whose lady-like refinement is proclaimed by the scrupulous cleanliness and neat mending of their few garments. It is not poverty, then, which causes the difficulty, for people of small means can keep things clean and in order; it must, therefore, be due rather to laziness than a lack of proper home training.

Did you ever knock at a door and hear a scurrying of feet, accompanied by smothered exclamations, which betokened the presence in the house of several people, and be admitted only after waiting some time, either by the mother of the family or one of the boys, who generally stand their ground? It is not supposed to make much difference about them; it is only the reputation of the young woman that is at stake, principally from its value in a matrimonial way. If you have had this experience, you remember that the daughters of the family began to reappear in from five to ten minutes, quite fresh in appearance, which you were readily able to account for mentally, the hasty opening and shutting of bureau drawers and the creaking of closet doors having been audible witnesses of the progress of their toilettes. They did not deceive you in the least. You knew perfectly well the cause of their flight and what was going on during their absence. Neither do they deceive any one, and they soon become known to all as the slatternly daughters of a slovenly home.

This loss of reputation, however, is only the least part of their condemnation. That is bad enough, but they also suffer a moral injury which is far worse. No young woman can keep her self-respect and go about half a day or more with uncombed hair, shoes flapping about her ankles, a ragged dress and no collar; and so far as the effect on her moral character is concerned, it makes no difference whether she is alone or in the presence of others. In the latter case, she is guilty of added disrespect to them, that is all. And the same is true if she permit her room to go untidy, or any part of the house for the care of which she is responsible. It is hardly possible, in such a case, that the mother of the slatternly girl has done her full duty. Ten to one, she herself furnished the example. Still, young young women who are old enough to be ashamed of the habit and try to cover it up, are old enough to correct it for themselves.—Housekeeper.

THE SHAH OF PERSIA.

His Natural Kindness of Heart Is Constantly Manifested.

The Shah is not a young man, he is some sixty years old; but he has always led a temperate and healthy life, delighting in out-door exercise, a great hunter and a good shot, and he consequently to-day enjoys excellent health, and is active alike in mind and body. His humanity has already been mentioned in connection with the cessation of arbitrary executions, and his natural kindness of heart is manifested, and was notably so on several occasions during his visit to England, and particularly in his expressions of regret at the death of a poor woman who was killed in the crush on his arrival at Bradford, and in his anxiety to make some suitable provision for her bereaved family.

Notwithstanding a certain severity of countenance and manner, the Shah is of a very cheerful disposition, and is quick to note any amusing incident and laughs heartily thereat. He is very reserved and distant in his intercourse with officials, either his own or foreigners, but such incidents as his shaking hands indiscriminately with the crowd who suddenly surrounded his carriage when his special train unexpectedly stopped in Rugby Station, sufficiently prove his bonhomie and good nature. No doubt he is somewhat suspicious, but he has seldom known a disinterested friend, and he is a good judge of character, a shrewd observer of men and things. His remarks and questions during his inspection of our industrial establishments were thoroughly practical, and showed a just appreciation of what were the important points of his observation.

When, after some troublesome interpretation, he was made to understand that the operation about to be performed by a highly scientific testing machine was the breaking of a steel bolt, he turned on his heel with the observation that it was unnecessary to break it; but in the same establishment he was eager in his questions as to the quantity of arms and different military appliances produced, what were the prices and to whom were the manufactures delivered. These were practical points, but the mathematical testing of the breaking strain of a steel bolt was clearly purely technical, and of no practical interest to a Persian monarch.—Nineteenth Century.

—In connection with the immediate cause of George L. Fox's death it is a strange coincidence that several American clowns, and at least one English pantomimist, have all died insane. Hitherto the belief among professionals has been that the quantity of bismuth used in "making up," particularly in America, where the hair is cropped close and the bismuth rubbed into the side of the head, had a great deal to do with the disease. But one old pantomimist still living solemnly attests that, so far as his experience went, the bismuth not only left his faculties unimpaired but had the merit of healing sores and cracks in the skin.—Gentleman's Magazine.

—"I wonder why so many people commit suicide in the spring, doctor?" "I don't know. I think myself that a well or river would be better," was the doctor's quiet reply.—Elmira Gazette.

THE AMERICAN COWBOY

He Is Always Picturesque and the Personation of Healthy Freedom.

Imaginative writers and illustrators portray the Texas cowboy as wholly romantic and half ferocious. Long-haired and wiry, astride a diminutive pony, with revolvers stuck ostentatiously in a leathern belt or crimson sash, he is depicted as domineering over the weak, using inoffensive citizens as marks for unerring pistol practice, drinking, gambling and "raising a row" generally.

Such is the ideal—better suited to the illiterate Mexican herder and the frontier "rough," than to the class it pretends to delineate.

The real cowboy presents a more interesting figure. He is ever picturesque—whether in groups, riding over the ranch, or flying full speed after straying cattle, or standing alone on some stretch of prairie, watching a train flash by—a visible message from distant civilization. Tall and strong, with bronzed cheeks in which the prairie breeze brings color, he is the personation of healthful freedom.

He wears the broad-brimmed hat, necessary to prairie life, of light-colored felt, banded with heavy silk cord, finished with acorns or balls; or perhaps the silver snake of Mexico is twisted about it, and an eagle and cactus embroidered on the side. His breeches are buckskin, fringed down their seams, or with only a double stitching. His flannel shirt, loose in the throat, rolls over a bright neckerchief. His short, open jacket shows a belt and pistol bolster. His Winchester and coiled lariat are slung from the pommel of his Mexican saddle. His untiring mustang is swift of gait; untied, it stands like a statue, awaiting its master's call. It knows his every tone and obeys his every word, and the cowboy loves it as part of himself.

Many a gentleman's son adopts ranch life; sometimes for his health, often for the exhilaration attending perfect freedom. They become strongly attached to their horses and cattle, to the long level stretches of country, to the glowing days and soft mysterious nights, when the fire-flies swarm in the grass and the cattle lie cool and quiet in the dew. The stars are brighter, and Heaven watches tenderly as the cowboy, wrapped in his blanket, slumbers on the breast of his Mother Earth.

They are, as a class, gay and full of life; gambling is the exception, and no rancher employs an habitual drinker. Whisky and cards being banished, there is no small temptation for disorderly conduct; but after a drive, on reaching a city and off duty, then the mischievous propensities of a free, untrammeled life assert themselves, and they indulge in a genuine spree.

But even at their worst, these men are chivalrous, yielding a beautiful homage to women; nor will they countenance imposition on the weak. This trait seems inherent in their character—as much a part of their moral nature as it is of their physical to have small feet. It is seldom that a genuine Texas cowboy is seen without this distinguishing mark, and he is proud of it. He will deny himself pleasures, even necessaries; wear dilapidated headgear and shabby garments, but his boots must be of the best and neatest make the country affords—high heel and curved instep, a fine upper and flexible sole, fitting like a glove and showing to perfection every beautiful line of the foot. One can pardon him the vanity, for it is pleasant to look upon.

Nothing else is small about them—for their faults do not belong to the vicious nor mean. They are bold, fearless and generous; skillful and daring riders; a careless, warm-hearted, manly set, who believe in being steadfast friend or deadly foe.

His life is not one of hardship. The ranch owner furnishes every thing, meets every expense, sees that "the boys" are provided with the best, and pays good wages beside—asking only that his cattle shall not stray and his lines of fence be kept in repair—for the cowboy is expected to note and mend every break in the lines of barbed wire which now surround most ranches.

The round-ups take place twice a year for branding purposes, and the drives to market but once in twelve months. So the vaquero, as the Mexicans call him, leads his careless, contented life, free as the birds of the air, ready to dance as to fight, to lasso a bull or court a pretty girl; always picturesque and always, every inch of him, a man and a most manly man at that.—Lee C. Harby, in Once a Week.

ABOUT ARMY RATIONS.

How Uncle Sam's Soldiers Are Made to Pay For Regimental Bands.

Adjutant-General Kelton the other day told some facts not generally known about the army ration.

"A daily saving is made from it," he said, "for two purposes. A certain amount is deducted from every ration for the support of the army bands. Strange to say, there is no appropriation for bands in the military service of this country, with the single exception of the band at West Point. To provide regimental bands the soldiers themselves are taxed by a daily saving from their rations. For the past forty-five years this saving has amounted to $2,300,000. A daily saving is also made for a fund to purchase plates, knives and other articles that are not provided for in the army appropriation. Of course, cheap metal plates and knives are furnished, but there is no provision for such ware or articles as give a table the appearance of cheer and comfort. The saving for this fund for the forty-five years amounts to $7,000,000.

"There are," General Kelton continued, "improvements constantly being made in the service, and the soldier's lot is much more comfortable and satisfactory now than it was ten or twelve years ago. These improvements will continue as rapidly as practicable, we hope, until the life of a soldier will be as much pleasanter than it is as will be consistent with good discipline."—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

—Mrs. Gazzam—"I can't understand how robbers see to go through a house at night." Gazzam—"With their burglarize, of course."

BURDETTE ON HOTELS.

The Humorist Delivers a Discourse on the Doctrine of Discomfort.

Did you ever notice—of course you have—the attention paid to the art of making hotel rooms systematically unhomelike and uncomfortable? I have been observing it for thirteen years. I suppose the object is to keep the guest out of his room as much as possible, so that he won't use the furniture, the soap and towels, the gas or the lamp. In the average country hotel—by that I mean a hotel in a town of 5,000 or less—a guest has to keep up a constant struggle in order to occupy his room at all. While he is at breakfast a girl comes in, takes away all the linen and tosses the bed up into a volcanic bit of chaos, throws the pillows on the lounge or sofa, if there be one, hangs the bolster on the lone chair or table, and takes away all the towel. There is but one; I use the word all out of courtesy. The idea that anybody washes his hands or face at any time during the day, save immediately after rising, seems never to occur to some landlords. Unless you raise a row about it, after the towel (those towel) are (is) taken away during breakfast hour, no more are (is) brought in until after supper. Of course you never use the soap in a cheap hotel, so the fact of its presence or absence does not worry you, unless you should want something to sharpen your pen-knife on, and then a cake of cheap hotel soap rises to the situation. It beats an oil stone all to pieces. And in a hotel of what you may call the third and often of the second class, it is a part of the landlord's creed that no living man ever, ever, ever wants to write a letter in his own room. A table is not a part of the furniture. When it is it is either a good saddler with a gentle canter, or a "single footer" with a gait like a Kentucky "sand sifter," and you have to hold it with your knees when you try to write. I have quit using them. I take out a bureau drawer, turn it upside down, push it back in place about two inches, and defying the landlord, have a table it would break his heart to see.

But come to the first-class hotels. Now and then you get a room with a drop-light in it. You can then sit in your own room in the evening and read. But as a rule there is no drop-light. The bureau and mirror are on one side of the room; heavy, rich, massive, no sparing of expense. Now, it is just as easy to have the long gas-jet close to the mirror. Then one can shave, see the parting of his hair and dress. But no; either there is a bracket-jet away over on the other side of the room or a dim chandelier hanging so high that a man of my height has to stand on a chair to light it. And you might just as well try to read by the moon. And since the smaller towns have got to using electric lights I have had a time. The light in your room is a pear-shaped thing hanging on the end of a string, from the center of the ceiling. I chased the beggarly thing all around the room some times before I can get a grip on it and turn it on. When it is turned on it is about two candle power, and you can neither read nor dress nor sit still and think by it. The hotel bed-room is exclusively a bed-room. It's good to sleep in and nothing else. If there was any economy in making it uncomfortable and inconvenient, I wouldn't kick. But any man who has ever traveled knows that the landlord often goes to great expense of money and trouble to arrange his bed-rooms to the greatest inconvenience of the guest who may have an insane notion that he would like to read and write in his own room.—Brooklyn Eagle.

THE BIXBY PAPERS.

Plain Living and High Thinking Are Good Enough for Mr. B.

"We've got to watch the corners mighty closely this year and retrench in every direction possible," said Mr. Bixby the other morning after a breakfast of porterhouse steak, Mocha coffee, honey and rolls, "and I think, my dear, we'd better have a little plainer table hereafter. I never did believe in this thing of putting so much money into one's stomach in the way of rich and expensive food. Plain living and high thinking ought to be our motto, so we'd better have a plainer table after this."

"All right," replied Mrs. Bixby, "I am quite willing." And when Bixby came home to dinner he sat down to dried beef in a milk batter, boiled potatoes and a dessert of boiled rice.

"Harriet Amanda Bixby!" he said sternly, "what in thunder does this mean? Do you suppose I am going to work like a slave and then be fed on such fodder as this? Not much I won't."

"You said this morning that you believed in plain living and high—"

"Plain fiddlesticks! People who want to make starved jackasses of themselves on that tom-fool principle can do it! I believe in good living. Its about all the comfort a man gets in this life anyhow. I'm going down to the hotel for my dinner now, and it'll cost me a dollar and a half, and I'll take all my meals there if you ever try to come your plain living and high thinking dodge on me again!"—Time.

Well Acquainted With Hiram.

"No, Hiram," said the young girl, sadly; "I can not be your wife. We are too compatible."

"Compatible!" he exclaimed. "Isn't that the very reason why——"

"Not in our case. I should probably insist from motives of economy on dispensing with a servant and doing my own housework, and you would probably let me do it, Hiram."—Chicago Tribune.

Why They Do Not Speak.

Miss Hauteur—I am going to the De Trow's ball to-morrow night.

Miss Pert (who has not received an invitation)—Indeed? Whom do you chaperon?—Lawrence American.

—Dr. Hammond says that drinking ice-water chills the solar-plexus. What makes this statement more deplorable is the fact that hundreds of thousands of water-drinkers never before knew that they had a solar-plexus. Such startling information is calculated to perplex-us.—Norristown Herald.

AROUND THE WORLD.

Diary of a Traveler Who Made the Trip in Sixty Minutes.

Chicago, Jan. 14, 2090, 11 a. m.—Am just starting for a trip around the world. My baggage consists of an opera-glass, a couple of oranges and a ten-cent cigar.

New York, 11:02—Reached this city by pneumatic tube. Only special feature of the whirl across the country was a momentary smell of coal oil while passing through the State of Pennsylvania.

London, 11:10—Lost nineteen seconds in New York on account of having to stop and subscribe to the Grant monument fund, the memorial arch fund and the Greeley monument fund. The fellows said it was the custom for every body—outside of New York—to drop a few nickels in the slot for those funds and get a card of thanks. They were confident the monuments and the arch would be built within the next two hundred and forty years at farthest. I came to this city by the well-known Sky-rocket route. Got here four seconds behind time, having had to dodge two cyclones and a pair of trousers belonging to an English tourist. The trousers had dropped from a rocket-train just ahead of us and were gyrating wildly through the air on their way down from the clouds.

Paris, 11:19—Am four minutes and a half behind time. The "lazy tongs" tramway that runs to this city by tunnel under the English Channel and overland the rest of the way was not sufficiently greased and it took us nearly five minutes to make the last fifty miles. This lack of grease shows that the French couldn't run a political campaign in Ohio to save their lives.

Rome, 11:27—Nearly ten minutes behind time. The passenger bomb in which I traveled to this point scraped against the sides of the sheet-iron vacuum rainbow it was fired through, and we had to put on brakes to prevent hot boxes. I have just hired an Italian brigand to go out behind the Coliseum and swear as long and as hard as he feels justified in doing for $2.65.

Calcutta, 11:30—My time is half gone and I am not yet half way round. Come from Rome by the Electric Inclined-Plane route. The cars are huge lignum-vitæ balls that roll down the hollow tube through which a blast of air is forced by powerful dynamos. The sensation of traveling in this way is novel, but not particularly enjoyable.

Hong Kong, 11:40—Ten minutes behind schedule time. Came from Calcutta to this place by the famous Catapult line. There was a delay of several minutes in cutting the cable that held the spring down at the western end of the line. A sacred white elephant was standing on the trap and nobody liked to take the liberty of asking him to move off.

Sitka, Alaska, 11:50—The Chinese at Hong Kong have their old-time hatred of foreign devils. They fired me out of there by the Projectile route to Kamchatka where I took the Electric Toboggan slide. Came from Petropaulovski to this place in a large hollow icicle, the slide being laid across Behring Strait, which is fortunately frozen over. The icicle was very much worn and haggard by the time it got here. Only ten minutes now to get to Chicago.

Sitka, 11:50—Haven't got away from here yet. Went out and caught a seal and a bad cold while waiting. Have just made a bet of $100 I'll go through on time.

Chicago, 12 m.—Was delayed at Sitka till 11:59 in consequence of a slight change in the time table. Stepped into the air-tight tube of the Great Overland Rubber-Band Air-Line route at that exact moment, the catch was loosed, and the gigantic elastic rope, made of the best Para rubber and stretched to its utmost tension, whisked me across the country, more than 2,500 miles in a direct line, in the twinkling of an eye. Reached here with more than half a minute to spare.

It isn't a difficult job to go around the globe in sixty minutes. All you need beside your ticket is a fan, an overcoat, a bottle of lung balsam and a small bottle of the other kind of balsam to counteract the effect of sudden changes of climate.

Any body can go round the world in sixty minutes.

In the old fogy days of 1890, two hundred years ago, it was thought a wonderful thing to make the trip in seventy-two days, six hours and eleven minutes. This only shows that the people of that bygone age were not really sensible of their misery. They thought they were pretty smart. Let us regard them, my countrymen, with feelings of sincere compassion rather than contempt.

My little jaunt has made me hungry I must go to lunch.—Y. Knott, in Chicago Tribune.

WELSH PROVERBS.

They Do Not Differ Materially from the Old English Saws.

As might be expected, very many of the proverbs here given are familiar in English also, and in many cases in other languages as well. For instance, nobody will have much difficulty in supplying the English prototypes of the following: "Every dung-hill dog is bold when on his own dung-hill rolled;" "The moment when the cat departs, give back to mice their merry hearts;" "Let dogs that sleep their slumbers keep;" "No risk has he run; no prize has he won;" "Brothers in trade, or good, or ill, are seldom brothers in good-will;" "Out of sight; forgotten quite;" "Examine not the horse's eye, which with your thanks alone you buy;" "Three things do no good till they're knocked on the crown, a wedge, tether stake, and a lubberly clown;" "Who makes most haste, time most doth waste;" "A rolling stone no moss can own;" "The hap which I rue, is good fortune to you;" "He who to church the nearest lies, will furthest be from Paradise;" "One bird in hand is twice as good as the two plumpest in the wood;" "Who loveth me, my dog love he;" "If on two stools a man will sit, ere long his limbs the floor will hit;" or "Rome's building was a work not done between sunrise and set of sun." It would be easy to go on multiplying examples.—Saturday Review.

THE BRITISH ARMY.

England's Military Power, and Why She Needs a Great Statesman.

The present establishment of the British army is as follows: cavalry, 19,094; infantry, 140,278; artillery, 35,728; engineers, 7,005; colonial troops, 2,989; and departmental corps, 6,113; This gives a total of 211,207 of all ranks. The First Class Army Reserve numbers 51,584 men, which, added to this total, gives a grand total for our active army of, say, in round numbers, 260,000 men. The number of horses and mules—officer's chargers not included—is 25,578, of which a very small proportion are mules. The law forbids us ever to exceed by one man or horse at any time throughout the year the establishment fixed annually by Parliament; so, with an army scattered all over the world, it is practically impossible to keep it actually up to that fixed number. As a matter of fact, we are generally now about one thousand under our establishment. Our number of field guns on peace establishment is 600, to which 36 guns would be added upon the mobilization of the army.

Of this army 72,408 British soldiers, 10,336 horses, and 318 guns are in India; 30,595 men and 905 horses are abroad elsewhere; the balance being at home.

In addition to this, we have an Indian regular army of 21,700 native cavalry, 109,000 native infantry, and 2,000 native artillery, all under the command of 1,411 British officers. With the exception of 48 mounted guns, all the artillery in India is now English. From these figures it will be seen that of the army with which we hold India, not more than 36 per cent. are English, whilst 64 per cent. are natives.

This article deals only with our regular army, but still it would be absurd to make no allusion in it to the yeomanry, militia and volunteer forces. I shall not attempt any description of them, but will content myself with giving their numbers. The actual strength—all ranks included—of the military forces of the crown on the 1st July, 1888, was:

REGULAR ARMY.

At home	108,288
Abroad	101,886
Native army of India	194,100

RESERVE FOR REGULAR ARMY.

First Class Army Reserve	51,800
Second Class Army Reserve	2,922
Militia Reserve	29,786
Yeomanry cavalry	11,246
Militia, exclusive of Militia Reserve	89,759
Volunteers	227,891
Grand total of all ranks	757,698

Besides the numbers here given there are about 800,000 men who have been trained as volunteers, one quarter of whom, it is calculated, would be available for the defence of the country if the emergency were great. I do not profess to enter upon the strength of the military forces maintained by Canada, Australia and our other colonies, but they are of great importance. Their importance will be fully recognized by the world whenever God in His mercy is pleased to send us a statesman wise enough and great enough to federate and consolidate into one united British Empire all the many lands and provinces which acknowledge Queen Victoria as their sovereign.—General Viscount Wolseley, K. P., etc., in Harper's Magazine.

An Australian Experiment That Is Giving Universal Satisfaction.

Victoria is an Australian colony with the size and the population of Kansas in 1880, or an area of 8,000 square miles and a population of 1,000,000.

But instead of letting corporations build the railroads and giving land away to get them to do this, Victoria has kept its land and built its own railroads. The result is that this thriving little community of about 1,000,000 souls, or the population of Philadelphia, had last year an income of $41,000,000, and of this sum $16,500,000 was in the shape of profits on the State railroads. Seven years ago the income from the railroads was only $9,000,000; in 1886-8 it was $12,265,000, and for the year just closed it has gone up to nearly double the income of seven years ago, and as no one can build roads but the State, and the State is an enterprising builder and a good manager, the profits on the railroads will in time pay all the expenses of the government. In addition, Victoria owns not only the post-office, as the people do here, but all the express business and all the telegraph business, and the profit on these for this wise, thrifty little State last year was $2,140,000.

Victoria has a heavy debt of $165,595,000, but as all but $5,500,000 was incurred for railroads and water-works, which pay a heavy profit, taxpayers feel tolerably happy over it, and the remaining fraction went into school buildings, which pay a profit in their way, too. As all the horse-car lines are owned by the people also, the cities in Victoria get more and more profit from them the bigger they get, and the taxpayer again finds that it pays to own these means of communication, even if he has to run in debt for them.

The natural result is that the surplus last year was $4,400,000, the revenue outrunning estimates by this amount. In the year just coming it will be bigger, and the "budget speech" of the Minister of Finance was principally taken up with telling the direct and indirect taxes which could be repealed.—Philadelphia Press.

LITTLE'S
CHEMICAL FLUID
NON-POISONOUS
SHEEP DIP.
One gallon, mixed with 60 gallons of cold water will dip thoroughly 180 sheep, at a cost of 1 cent each. Easily applied; a nourisher of Wool; a certain cure for SCAB. Also,
Little's Patent Powder Dip,
(Poisonous.)
Mixes instantly with water. Prevents the fly from striking. In a 2 pound package there is sufficient to dip twenty sheep, and in a 7 pound package there is sufficient to dip one hundred sheep.
CATTON, BELL & CO.
SUCCESSORS TO FALKNER, BELL & CO.
Office, 406 California St. and Wool Agency Warehouse, cor. 6th and Townsend Sts
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

C. Mulholland,
EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.
PUBLISHED EVERY FRIDAY

INDEPENDENCE, CAL

FRIDAY MAY 9 1890

County Official Paper.

In view of the recent course of silver in the markets of the world, the Mint estimate of production, which was published in the Call of Tuesday, is a document of importance. Silver has been steadily advancing in gold value for a twelvemonth; it now stands at $1.05 an ounce as against 94 cents some months ago. The rise of 11 cents an ounce means life to mines which could not be worked at a profit when the price was below 95 cents. It has already caused the reopening of a number of mines in Northern Mexico and a shipment in the year 1889 of not less than 5,000,000 ounces of silver bullion from Mexico to this country.

The Director of the Mint reckons the total product of silver in the United States in the year 1889 at $46,750,000 gold value, being an increase of some $3,750,000 over 1888. He estimates the world's product in that year at $117,650,000, so that 40 per cent. of the whole world's yield came from the United States. But when silver fell to 94 cents a number of mines producing low-grade silver ore had to shut down. They will now be reopened, so that there is a prospect of the output of 1890 being larger than that of 1889. Whether a largely increased yield of silver would cause a reaction from the recent advance in the price will depend on Congressional legislation.

The design of the silver men, when they appealed to Congress for action, was to provide a market, at remunerative figures, for all the silver that was produced in the country. But it is evident that the proposed legislation, if it goes into effect, will do more than this. If the Mint is required to coin silver to the amount of four or four and a half millions a month, it will require from $48,000,000 to $52,000,000 to supply the demand, independently of the consumption of silver in the arts, which must be reckoned at $15,000,000 more. This would involve importations of silver from South America and Europe. Monometallists, foreseeing this condition of things, have described tde pending silver bills as schemes to make the United States the dumping ground for the surplus silver of Europe. But they forget that there is no premium on gold in the metallic-currency countries of Europe, and consequently no surplus of silver. They have no silver to spare for export to this country; and if, owing to Congressional legislation, an advance in the price here over the price in Europe led to shipments to the United States, it would be quickly followed by a silver famine in Europe, and the metal would go back whence it came as fast as steamships could carry it.

In sober truth, the world is short of both gold and silver. Commerce has outgrown the supply of both metals. There is not enough of either to satisfy the wants of the commercial countries in respect to a metallic currency. For many years it has been evident that thd first general commercial crisis will demonstrate the necessity for the use of silver. The world is now coining nearly $300,000,000 a year of the two metals and is only producing about $230,000,000. The moment a general failure of confidence impels bankers to convert their capital into coin, and to hoard it in their vaults, a crisis will occur of which it is difficult to foresee the consequences.

It is not easy to determine the conclusion which Congress will reach on the subject. But those who are best able to judge are of the opinion that something is going to be done, and it is obvious that whatever is done will be done in the direction of increased coinage. The broad interests of the nation would, perhaps, be better served if persons directly identified with the silver mining industry, and whose views are naturally open to the suspicion of being colored by selfish aims, did not take so prominent a part in the discussion.

Senator James R. Beck, of Kentucky, dropped dead in the railroad station at Washingtan, last Sunday afternoon. Mr. Beck has been in poor health for two years past and his death resulted from heart disease. He was brought prominently before the people of this section in introducing the silver bill. In the death of Senators Ingalls and Beck the Democracy loses two of its ablest leaders and the nation two irreproachable and wise statesmen.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE.

INYO MARBLE COMPANY.

Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Keeler, Inyo county.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of a Board of Directors, held on the 17th day of April, 1890, an assessment (No. 9) of Ten (10) cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary at the office of the company, 205 Front street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 34 day of June, 1890 will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Thursday, the 26th day of June, 1890 to pay the delinquent assessment together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.
G. W. LUCE, Secretary.
Office, 205 Front St., San Francisco, California.

BELL'S
Flouring Mills,
A. N. BELL, Prop.

TRY BELL'S
EXTRA PATENT ROLLER FLOUR.

Having added Patent Rolls and other Improvements to our Mills, I am now turning out Flour that is fully
Equal to the Best.

Corn, Oats and Barley Cracked on Short Notice.

A. N. BELL,
Independence, Cal.

F. E. Bosworth,
Watchmaker & Jeweler.
BISHOP, CAL.
Fine and Complicated Watch Repairing a Specialty.
Guns, Sewing Machines, Organs and Music Boxes Put in Perfect Condition and Warranted.
I Prefer to do all work at your house and will call if you will write to me at Bishop.

BUHACH
THE UNRIVALED
Insect Exterminator
Manufactured solely from Pyrethrum flowers, grown in California, in a locality where the soil and climate are peculiarly adapted to the production of flowers rich in the essential oil which makes them so remarkably destructive to insect life.
Avoid the Worthless and Spurious Preparations, sold as Insect Powders, and use Buhach from original packages, and clear your premises of all Annoying and Destructive Insect Pests.
None Genuine Without the Trade Mark.
If your dealer doesn't keep it, order directly from the
Buhach Producing & Manufacturing COMPANY,
SOLE MANUFACTURERS,
STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA.

S. H. BIGLAND,
—DEALER IN—
Owens Valley Lands
39 SUTTER STREET.
SAN FRANCISCO.
1-26

A $20 A Day Man!
A VOICE from Ohio. Here is a portrait of Mr. Garrison, of Salem, Ohio. He writes: "Was at work on a farm for $20 a month; I now have an agency for L. C. Allen & Co's albums and publications and often make $20 a day." (Signed) W. H. GARRISON.
William Kline, Harrisburg, Pa., writes: "I have never known anything to sell like your album. Yesterday I took orders enough to pay me over $25." W. J. Elmore, Bangor, Me., writes: "I take an order for your album almost every house I visit. My profit is often as much as $20 for a single day's work." Others are doing quite as well; we have not space to give extracts from their letters. Every one who takes hold of this grand business rises up grand profits. Shall we start YOU in this business, reader? Write to us and learn all about it for yourself. We are starting many; we will start you if you don't delay until another gets ahead of you in your part of the country. If you take hold you will be able to pick up gold fast. Read—On account of a forced manufacturer's sale 125,000 ten dollar Photograph Albums are to be sold to the people for $3 each. Bound in Royal Crimson Silk Velvet Plush. Charmingly decorated insides. Handsomest albums in the world. Largest Size. Greatest bargains ever known. Agents wanted. Liberal terms. Big money for agents. Any one can become a successful agent. Sells itself on sight—little or no talking necessary. Wherever shown, every one wants to purchase. Agents take thousands of orders with rapidity never before known. Great profits await every worker. Agents are making fortunes. Ladies make as much as men. You, reader, can do as well as any one. Full information and terms free, to those who write for same, with particulars and terms for our Family Bibles, Books and Periodicals. After you know all, should you conclude to go no further, why no harm is done. Address E. C. ALLEN & CO., AUGUSTA, MAINE.

IF YOU WISH A GOOD REVOLVER PURCHASE ONE OF SMITH & WESSON'S
Finest small arms ever manufactured and the first choice of all experts. In calibres 32, 38 and 44-100. Single or double action, Safety Hammerless and Target models. Best quality wrought steel, carefully inspected for workmanship and stock. Unrivaled for finish, durability and accuracy. Do not be deceived by cheap malleable iron imitations often sold for the genuine article. They are unreliable and dangerous. The SMITH & WESSON REVOLVERS are stamped upon the barrels with firm's name, address and dates of patents, and are guaranteed perfect. Insist upon having them, and if your dealer cannot supply you, an order sent to address below will receive prompt attention. Descriptive catalogue and prices upon application.
SMITH & WESSON,
Springfield, Mass.

MARRIAGE GUIDE
260 PAGES. Illustrated. In Cloth and Gilt Binding, 50c. money or stamps. Same, paper cover, 25c. This Book contains ALL the curious, doubtful or inquisitive want to know. Full of very interesting and valuable information. HEALTH BEAUTY and HAPPINESS are promoted by its advice—who may Marry, who not, why. Medical Aid, when necessary, brought home to you. 50 Wonderful PEN PICTURES, true to life. Young or old, married or single, sick or well, should read. 3cnt seal (by M. WHITTIER, St. Louis, Mo. ...AND SEND WITH ORDER.

OFFICIAL.

Application for Patent.

Mining Application No. 247.

UNITED STATES LAND OFFICE,
INDEPENDENCE, CAL.,
April 25, 1890.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT PATRICK REDDY, whose post office address is San Francisco, California, has this day filed his application for a patent for fourteen hundred and forty-eigh and seven-tenths linear feet of the Bernon Quartz Mine or vein bearing galena, lead and silver, with surface ground six hundred feet in width, situated in Coso Mining District, County of Inyo and State of California and designated by the field notes and official plat on file in this office as Lot No. 42, in Township 19 South, Range No. 40 East, of Mt. Diablo Base and Meridian.

Said Lot No. 42 being described as follows, to wit:

Survey of Connecting Line:

Commencing at corner common to Sections 14, 15, 22 and 23 of T 19 S., R. 40 E., M. D. B. and M., and running with Mag. Var. of 15 deg. 37 min. E. as follows:

N. 73 deg. 52 min. E., Needle varying along the line from N. 58 1-8 deg. E. to N. 58 3-8 deg. E. Magnetic. 71.99 chs to the S W cor. post of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine, being the S. E. cor. of the Bernon claim.

Survey of the Exterior Boundaries:

Commencing at a stake in high stone Mont. having pencil marks too dim to be read, being the S. W. cor. of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine, and the S. E. cor. of the Bernon claim, thence deflecting L. 180 deg. 86 deg. 57 min. from connecting line extended N. 73 deg. 52 min. E. as assumed standard bearing of the survey, upon West boundary line of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine and East boundary line of the Bernon claim, and running as follows: 1. N. 19 deg. 11 min. W., upon East boundary of claim, local variation of declination of 0 deg. 18 min. E.; 0.90 chs to summit of limestone reef; 1.65 chs crossing high reef of limestone, 1.93 chs; whence bears S. 70 3-4 deg., W. 0.46 chs., face of open cut five feet wide. 1. N. 19 deg. 11 min., W. 4.09 chs, centre of ravine bearing Easterly 7.42 chs, summit of high croppings of lime rock; whence bears N. 59 degrees 11 min. W 4.53 chs centre incline prospect shaft 15 ft deep, no marks, 10.14 chs to centre of wash bearing Easterly from summit towards Defiance Works; 10.90 chs to old stake in high stone Mont. marked in pencil as follows: — of Bernon and Defiance Ledge—surveyed by Joseph Seely, U. S. M. Surveyor; being the side line Mont. of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine; 749.7 ft., or 11.36 chs., Set 3 by 4 post in mound of stone marked Defiance West line and Bernon East line; whence bears N. 35 deg. 19 min. E. 1 28 chs. centre of incline prospect cut 12 ft. deep; whence bears N. 70 deg. 49 min E 0.76 chs centre of small prospect cut, whence bears N 79 deg. 07 min. E 3.37 chs centre of mouth of Defiance and Bernon Tunnel; whence bears N. 70 deg. 45 min. W. 2 43 chs. the face of Defiance and Bernon Tunnel; 14.39 chs centre of wash leading Easterly; 15.61 chs; whence bears N 70 deg. 49 min. E 0 03 chs an old stake in stone Mont. having Seely's name in pencil and other marks too dim to be read, being a side-line Mont. of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine; 1. N 19 deg. 11 min. W 16.18 chs summit of ridge bearing Easterly; 20.31 chs, whence bears S 42 deg. 01 min. W. 1.76 chs a stake in stone Mont. marked Kerso Ledge, S W cor. Post No. 6; whence bears N 42 deg. 04 min. E. 6.91 chs a stake in stone Mont. marked Kerso Ledge N E Post; whence bears N 35 deg. 45 min E 2.41 chs a stake in stone Mont. marked Kerso centre point 1448.7 ft., or 21.95 chs to stake in stone Mont., no marks, being the N W cor. of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine, set 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon N E cor. No. 1, and Defiance N W cor. No. 4; thence deflecting L. 90 deg. from Co. 1 extended N. 19 deg. 11 min. W making interior angle 90 deg. ran; 2 S. 70 deg. 49 min. W upon the North boundary line of the Bernon claim; local variation of declination of 0 deg. 18 min. E, 2, S 70 deg. 49 min, W 0.30 chs centre old sled road from summit of hill, 1.09 chs, whence bears N 60 deg. 07 min., W 3.06 chs a stake in stone Mont. being the Northerly end of Lode line and centre of Hidalgo claim, 2.19 chs whence bears N 79 deg. 57 min. W 0.61 chs the centre of Hidalgo incline shaft, 4.07 chs, crossing summit of Darwin Range, whence bears S 19 deg 31 min. E 2.91 chs. centre small shaft 300 ft or 4.545 chs, set 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked, Bernon L. L. P. No. 1; being the Northerly end of Lode Line and centre of Bernon claim, 7.86 chs centre mouth of tunnel bearing Northerly 660 ft, or 9.09 chs, set a 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon N W Cor. No. 4, being the N W Cor. of the Bernon claim; thence deflecting L 90 deg. from Co. 2. extended S 70 deg. 49 min. W making the interior angle 90 deg. and ran 3, S 19 deg. 11 min. E upon West boundary line of Bernon Claim, local variation of declination of 0 deg. 18 min. E, 0.15 chs centre wash bearing Westerly 4.07 chs, summit of ridge bearing Westerly, 9.01, center deep gulch bearing Westerly 10.15 chs, whence bears S 28 deg. 47 min. W 9.19 chs a stone Mont. being the S E cor. of the Hidalgo Claim; whence bears S 56 deg. 51 min. W 11.17 chs a stone Mont. being the Southerly end of Hidalgo Lode Line; whence bears S 76 deg. 25 min. W 12.46 chs a stone Mont. being the S W Cor. of the Hidalgo Claim 3, S 19 deg. 11 min. E 14.25 chs, summit of spur bearing Westerly, 14.61 chs, crossing head of wash bearing Westerly 16.28 chs, summit of spur bearing Westerly 18.09 chs, whence bears N 86 deg. 28 min. E 3.32 chs to centre of mouth of Carry Tunnel, No. 1, whence bears N 83 deg. 20 min. E 4.22 chs the centre of mouth of Carry Tunel No. 2, whence bears N 56 deg. 46 min. E 2.71 chs the centre of mouth of Carry Tunnel, No. 3, 21.65 chs, centre of ravine bearing Westerly, 21.47 chs, intersection with connecting line; whence bears S 73 deg. 52 min. W 62.89 chs the corner common to Sections 14, 15, 22 and 23 of T 19 S, R 40 E, M D B and M, 1448.7 ft, or 21.95 chs, in South side of ravine, set 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon S W Cor. No. 3, being the S W Cor. of the Bernon Claim; thence deflecting L. 90 deg. from Co. 3, ex ended S 19 deg. 11 min. E, making interior angle 90 deg. and ran; 4, N 70 deg. 49 min. E, upon South boundary line of Bernon, local variation of declination of 0 deg. 03 min. E, 1.26 chs, edge of ravine, 2.51 chs, ridge of spur bearing Westerly 3.00 ft, or 4.545 chs, set 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon L. L., P. No. 2, being the Southerly end of Lode Line and centre of claim, 7.06 chs, crossing high reef of lime rock, 4, N 70 deg. 49 min. E, 600 ft, or 9.09 chs back to place of beginning, and set a 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon S E Cor., No. 2, and Defiance S W Cor., No. 3.

Containing 19.95 acres.

Survey of Lode Line.

Commencing at the L. L., P., No. 1, of Claim and deflecting thence L. 90 deg. from Co. 2, extended S 70 deg. 49 min W, making the interior angle 90 deg. ran, 5, 8, 10 deg. 11 min. E, upon lode line; ascending 3.94 chs, whence bears S 74 deg. 41 min. W 2.91 chs a stone Mont. claimed to be the centre of Hidalgo Claim; whence bears S 72 deg. 36 min. E, 0.71 chs centre small shaft; descending; 10.30 chs, whence bears S 70 deg. 49 min. W 0.30 chs centre prospect hole 11.82 chs, whence bears N 70 deg. 49 min. E 0.50 chs centre incline shaft 60 ft deep. Ascending; 13.03 chs, summit of spur bearing Westerly. Descending; 13.36 chs, whence bears S 70 deg. 06 min. E, 0.80 chs centre shaft 45 ft deep, 14.41 chs, whence bears S 70 deg. 49 min. W 0.10 chs centre mouth of tunnel, 16.66 chs, whence bears S 70 deg. 49 min. W 0.12 chs centre shaft 6 ft deep 1448 ft, or 21.94 chs to L. L. P., No. 2, of Claim.

Magnetic variation 15 deg. 37 min. E containing 19.95 acres.

THE LOCATION of this mine is recorded in the Recorder's office of Coso Mining District in Book C of page 136. The adjoining claimant is the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. mine.

Any and all persons claiming adversely any portion of said Bernon Quartz mine or surface ground are required to file their adverse claims with the Register of the United States Land Office at Independence in the State of California during the sixty days period of publication hereof, or they will be barred by virtue of the provisions of the statute.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD,
o-n24 Register.

INDEPENDENCE
SHAVING SALOON.
Shaving, Hair-Cutting, etc., done in the best manner.
WM. H. HUFF, Prop'r

MISCELLANEOUS.

J. R. ELDRED,
Sheriff and Tax-Collector.
INYO CO., CAL.

P. H. MACK,
COUNTY CLERK,
—AND—
Ex-officio Auditor and Recorder,
INYO CO., CAL.

GEO. M. GILL,
District Attorney,
INYO CO., CAL.

J. J. MOORE,
County Treasurer,
INYO CO., CAL.

S. P. M'KNIGHT, C. E.
COUNTY SURVEYOR
—AND—
U. S. Deputy Mineral Surveyor
For California and Nevada.
—BISHOP CREEK, INYO CO., CAL.—
The obtaining of United States mineral patents a specialty.
All kinds of surveying given the most careful and accurate attention.

JUSTICE OF PEACE,
C. MULHOLLAND.
Office in the "INDEPENDENT" Building, Independence, Inyo County, Cal.

A. R. CONKLIN,
Attorney-at-Law,
Independence, Cal.
Will practice in all the Courts of the States of California and Nevada.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
Independence, Cal.

P. W. FORBES,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW.
NOTARY PUBLIC.
Cases in U. S. Land Office a Specialty.
BISHOP, INYO COUNTY, CALIFORNIA.

IRVING J. WOODIN, M D.,
Physician & Surgeon,
(COUNTY PHYSICIAN)
Louise L. Woodin, M. D.
PHYSICIAN & SURGEON.
NIGHT CALLS ATTENDED.
Office and residence at the Reddy place, Independence.

W. H. GEORGE, M. D.,
Physician and Surgeon,
Bishop Creek, Cal.,
Offers his professional services to the people of Bishop Creek and vicinity. Office and residence opposite Andrew Clark's.

F. E. Bunting, M. D.
Physician & Surgeon
LONE PINE, CAL.
OFFICE IN GELCICH BUILDING
All calls attended to immediately.

Lodge 221, F. & A. M.
Regular meetings of Lodge No. 221, F. & A. M., for the year 1889, will be held at the Lodge room at Independence as follows:

Saturday	February 1st
"	March 1st
"	March 29th
"	May 3rd
"	May 31st
"	June 28th
"	July 26th
"	August 30th
"	September 27th
"	October 25th
"	November 22nd
"	December 20th

P. H. MACK, W. M.
C. MULHOLLAND Sec.

P. W FORBES. P. H. MACK.
MACK & FORBES.
Real Estate Agents,
Address, P. H. MACK, Independence, Cal.
P. W. FORBES, Bishop, Cal.

FRED BURCKHARDT
Watchmaker & Jeweler,
LONE PINE, CAL.
Time pieces of all descriptions repaired and regulated, satisfaction guaranteed. Jewelry made to order. Firearms repaired and loaded.
All orders from any part of the country will be promptly attended to, at the most reasonable charges. At the old stand "Mechanics' Hall," Lone Pine.
FRED BURKHARDT. nov 30-tf

MISCELLANEOUS.

CROCKER'S HOTEL.
BIG PINE - CAL
New House,
New Furniture,
Low Rates
Splendid hunting and fishing near by, in act, it is a veritable paradise for tourists and pleasure seekers.
Special attention given to the wants of every guest.
CROCKER BROS., Props.
sep1-tf

ANTONS SALOON
KEELER, CAL.
BEER, WINES, LIQUORS and CIGARS
All kinds of Fancy Drinks, including pure water. A comfortable and pleasant Hall.
JOHN C. ANTON, Prop.

Pioneer
Livery & Feed Stables.
INDEPENDENCE, CAL.
Having returned and resumed the management of the above well known feed and livery stables, patrons can be assured of finding there the best of Buggy Teams, Saddle Horses, and
Livery Accommodations
in general. Also, Hay and Grain for sale by the pound or ton.
O. I. MAIRS, Proprietor.

E. H. Edwards,
—DEALER IN—
General Merchandise,
LONE PINE,
INYO COUNTY - - - CALIFORNIA.

Inyo
Freighting Company.
REGULAR LINE
Mojave To Bishop.
Teams leave Mojave and Bishop weekly.
Goods delivered with regularity at all points on the line. Consign goods to the Company at Mojave.

J. W. Murphy.
BLACKSMITHING
—AND—
General Iron Work.
Wagons and Carriages Repaired.
HORSESHOEING, $2.00 for CASH
Shop on Edwards St., opposite the Court House, Independence.

BLACKSMITHING,
Horseshoeing, General Iron
—AND—
WAGON WORK.
PIONEER BLACKSMITH SHOP
Cor. Main St. & Depot Ave.,
INDEPENDENCE, CAL.
W. F. MATLACK.....PROPRIETOR.
Horseshoeing .....$2.00 for Cash
For particulars, call and see W. F. MATLACK.

LONE PINE
Blacksmith Shop.
R. C. Spear, Prop'r
—ALL WORK ON—
MINING TOOLS,
FARMING IMPLEMENTS & FREIGHTING OUTFITS
—PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO—
HORSE SHOEING,
CARRIAGE WORK,
GENERAL REPAIRING
All work attended to with neatness and despatch. Prices to suit the times.

BOOTS AND SHOES
MADE AND REPAIRED.
THE BEST MATERIAL.
FIRST-CLASS WORK.
Repairs done Promptly.
Prices Reasonable.
A. J. DAVIS,
Independence,

MISCELLANEOUS.

Railroad Time Table.

CARSON & COLORADO R R

TAKING EFFECT,

Sunday, May 10th, 18 9.

STATIONS.		From Mound House. No. 1		To Mound House. No. 2.
		Leave—		Arrives—
Mound House		12.30 p. m.		5.55 p. m
Dayton		1:00 p. m.		5.15 p. m.
Wabuska		3:05 p. m.		3.00 p. m
Hawthorne		6.50 p. m.		11:20 a. m.
Luning		7:30 p. m.		10:05 a. m
Sodа Springs		9.15 p. m.		9.05 a. m
Belleville		10:25 p. m.		7.45 a. m.
Candelaria	Ar.	11 10 p. m	Lv.	7.10 a. m
		No. 3.		No. 4.
		Leave—		Arrives—
Belleville		8 10 a. m		5:25 p. m
Benton		11 40 a. m		-
Bishop Creek		1:50 p. m.		11:00 a. m
Alvord		2:35 p. m		10.00 a. m
Independence		4 10 p. m.		8:30 a. m.
Lone Pine		5:00 p. m		7 40 a. m
Keeler	Ar	5:45 p. m.	Lv.	7.00 a. m

Trains 1 and 2 run daily.
Train 3 runs Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays.
Train 4 runs Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays

Passenger trains make close connection at Mound House with express trains of V. & T. R., which connect at Reno with east and west bound trains of Central Pacific Railroad.

Stage Connections:

AT HAWTHORNE with United States Stage Company's coaches for Aurora (26 miles); Bodie (37 miles); Lundy and Bridgeport.

AT LUNING (125 miles from Mound House) with Gilmer, Salsbury & Co's. tri weekly stages (leaving Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays) for Downeyville, Grantsville and Belmont.

AT CANDELARIA with U. S. Stage Co's. stages for Columbia (8 miles), Silver Peak, Montezuma, Alida Valley, Wood Mountain, etc.

H. M. YERINGTON,
General Superintendent.
R. J. LAWS, Assistant Superintendent.
D. A. BENDER,
General Freight and Passenger Agent.

LUMBER. LUMBER.
SPRATT & CREASER,
BIG PINE.
—DEALERS IN—
ALL KINDS OF LUMBER.
Square timber of all dimensions for buildings and bridges.
CEILING,
FLOORING,
FENCING,
RUSTIC.
All kinds of tongued and grooved lumber.
Surfaced lumber of all kinds.
All orders filled promptly. Lumber delivered on board the cars at Alvord.
SPRATT & CREASER.
sep1 tf BIG PINE, Inyo Co., Cal.

EDWARD CHENOT
Independence, Cal.,
INVITES PUBLIC ATTENTION TO HIS Extensive Stock of
GENERAL MERCHANDIS
....Consisting of....
GROCERIES.
PROVISIONS
Tobacco, Cigars,
WINES AND LIQUORS
FLOUR & GRAI
Together with an Assortment of
DRY GOODS AND CLOTHING
ETC., ETC
Buyers and consumer should call and examine my stock and prices before purchasing elsewhere.
E. CHENOT.
Independence, Cal., March 9, 1884.
11-1tf

R. J. WHITTAKER
—PAINTER,—
BIG PINE, - - - - CAL.
HOUSE PAINTING,
SIGN WRITING,
PAPER HANGING,
GRAINING,
GILDING ON WOOD AND GLASS
Wagons Painted
The best of materials used and satisfaction guaranteed.

Wm. Muth-Rasmussen.
Bee Keeper.
Manufacturer of Comb Foundation.
Independence, Inyo Co. Cal

NATHAN RHINE.

NATHAN RHINE,
(Successor to Harris & Rhine.)
MERCHANT,
INDEPENDENCE
Inyo Co. Cal.
Wholesale & Retail
—DEALER IN—
General Merchandise
MY STOCK
CONSISTING OF
Almost every needed article is well calculated to satisfy the wants of everybody; and, as in the past, it will be our aim in the future to retain the extensive patronage enjoyed heretofore.
NATHAN RHINE.

NATHAN RHINE
BANKER
Independence, Cal.
SELL EXCHANGE
—ON—
SAN FRANCISCO
Draw Direct
—ON—
NEW YORK,
LONDON, England.
BERLIN, FRANKFORT-on-the-Main, GERMANY.
I AM PREPARED TO TRANSACT ALL KINDS,
—OF—
GENERAL
BANKING & EXCHANGE,
BUSINESS.
Wechsel in beliebigen Summen auf Berlin und Frankfurt am der Main, Deutsche Vollmachten geleistet. Geldsendungen von und nach Deutschland besorgt.
AGENT FOR
WELLS FARGO & CO'S.
EXPRESS
MUTUAL
Life Insurance Co.
OF NEW YORK
CAPITAL - - - - $5,000,000
LIVERPOOL
AND LONDON AND GLOBE
INSURANCE - COMPANY
Capital - - - - - $21,000,000
NATHAN RHINE.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY, MAY 9 1890

MARKET REPORT.

Bar silver, 101⅞
Lead, 4 07½
Copper, 14 20
Tin, 20 25
Sugar, .06¾
Coffee, 17 @ 19¾
Wool, foothill, 16 @ 18.

Religious Services.

Rev. J. H. De La Matyr will preach at Lone Pine on Sunday at 11 o'clock, a. m. at Georges Creek at 2:30 p. m. and at Independence at 7:30 o'clock evening; Sunday School at Independence and Lone Pine at 11 o'clock a. m.

COURT NOTES.

Superior Court of Inyo County, California
Hon. John A. Hannah, Judge.

MONDAY, May 5th.

In the matter of the estate of Eliza Ann Smith, deceased—Will admitted to probate. W. S. Morton, Executor.

DIED.

DEARBORN—At Lone Pine, May 10th, 1890, Luther H. Dearborn, a native of New York, aged 55 years.

Ad. Smith of Big Pine was in town yesterday.

Lead is steadily rising. The price has gone from 3.88 to 4.07½ in the last month.

Miss Laura McMurry came down from Big Pine on Wednesday, returning next day.

J. E. Reynolds came in from Darwin yesterday, returning to-day. His school closed last Friday.

Sunol, Palo Alto and other flyers from Senator Stanford's Palo Alto ranch went East last Monday.

Last Saturday John F. Millner shipped four car loads of lead-silver ore from a mine near Benton Station.

The Sheriff has been allowed $300 for the collection of sheep licenses. J. R. Moffitt has charge of the collection.

J. J. Gunn came in from Lookout a few days ago for medical treatment. He makes a most favorable report of mining affairs in that section.

J. C. Franks has been retired as U. S. Marshall, his term having expired, and W. G. Long, of Tuolumne, has been appointed to succeed him.

A telegram received from Bakersfield yesterday states that the jury in the Elliott case was secured the first day. Also that the trial would probably be concluded about the 15th.

The people of Georges Creek intend giving a pic-nic at the School house on the 17th; a week from Saturday. A cordial invitation to attend is extended by the people of Georges Creek.

A bench warrant for J. O. Eddy was telegraphed from Bakersfield on Tuesday afternoon. Mr. Eddy was subpoenaed as a witness on the Elliott case and refused to attend. Under-Sheriff Yaney went to Darwin and served the warrant and accompanied Eddy to Bakersfield, going north on Thursday's train.

The bill of A. R. Conklin and all bills relating to the Elliott case were rejected at the present meeting of the Board of Supervisors and will be taken up and acted upon at a special meeting to be held immediately upon the conclusion of the trial. Also P. H. Mack's in regard to the bond business will be acted upon in the same manner.

Walter Ober says that he has written to the backers of Rosenthal at Hawthorne stating that he will make a race for $300 a side to be run at Bishop on July 4th, if that town will give a purse of $300. Should Bishop not give the purse Independence could offer no better inducement to visitors than by doing so. The race will cause much excitement and will bring visitors from all the towns along the railroad from Carson down.

Turned Loose.

The Indian under arrest for the murder of another Indian near Lone Pine was released last Monday on a writ of habeas corpus. J. W. P. Laird, attorney for the accused, took the ground that under the ruling in the Nevada case the State Courts, and in fact no other Court, has any jurisdiction in the matter. He claimed that the Act of March 3, 1885, had no bearing on the matter, as the crime was committed within a State and not on a Reservation. The Judge sustained the writ and the Indian was turned loose. Under this ruling no matter what crime may be committed by one Indian against another he shall be free from any punishment by the whites. The Indians were much exercised about the case and the Indian doctor business is now settled. There is an unfortunate case at the Fort whose throat was in safety while the result remained in doubt. Another funeral may be looked for at any time while the Indians are fully aware of the fact that there is perfect immunity for the murderer. Mr. Laird claims that the only remedy is an Act of the Legislature.

Disappearance.

Gustave J. McGregor, twenty years of age, connected with one of the large wholesale houses on Sutter street, San Francisco, mysteriously disappeared and has not been seen by any of his friends since 11 A. M. Monday, April 7, at which time he left the place he was employed to go to lunch. His employer states that the young man is trustworthy and is at as much loss to account for his disappearance as any one and still holds the position vacant should he return. His mother and sister pray for his safety as do his friends. The young man is a prominent member of Alcalde Parlor, No. 154, N. S. G. W., and Alcalde Drill Corps, No. 3, and in both organizations was an earnest worker. At the time of his disappearance he was a Vice President of the Parlor and Second Lieutenant of the Drill Corps. Alcalde Parlor offers a reward of $50 to any one finding him dead or alive. The description of the young man at the time of his disappearance is as follows: Height, 5 feet 7½ inches; weight, 130 pounds; small features and dark hair. He wore a black sack coat and vest and bluish-colored trousers, black derby hat, negligé shirt, and and lace shoes. There is a mole on his left cheek.

SUPERVISORS' PROCEEDINGS.

MONDAY, May 3d.

On the above named day the Board of Supervisors of Inyo county met in regular session at 5 o'clock p. m. Present, Supervisors Harger, Sneden, Robinson and Stewart. Minutes of preceding meeting read and approved. Board adjourned until 9 o'clock a. m. of Tuesday.

TUESDAY, May 6th.

Board met at 9 o'clock a. m., same members present. Minutes of preceding day read and approved. The minutes of the meeting of the 5th of May, 1890, read and approved.

The Board proceeded to examine and the following claims were allowed and warrants ordered drawn:

A. E. Janvier, Board of Education	$ 7 24
D. Stubblefield, wood	24 00
O. I. Mairs, freight	20 00
Independence Water Co.	12 00
J. H. Shannon, B'd of Ed. & mil.	35 75
W. A. Chalfant, printing	7 00
T. B. Scovil, cutting wood	6 00
Mrs. Kepler, Janitress	30 00
J. W. Murphy, labor	4 00
J. D. Harger, fare for patient	3 00
J. G. Dodge, conveying patient	8 00
D. Crough, B'd of Education	13 40
Bancroft, Whitney & Co., book	6 50
A. Carlisle & Co., bonds etc	165 00
E. Chenot, mdse, allowed	4 00
A. W. Eibeshutz, mdse	21 13
Nathan Rhine, mdse	33 53
H. Levy, boarding prisoners	13 70

On motion bill of Thos. Parker for coroners' fees in Indian case allowed in sum of $13.50, Harger voting, No.

On motion bill of I. J. Woodin for holding inquest in Indian case allowed in sum of $41, Harger voting, No.

P. A. Chalfant, postage etc., $5 80.

The Board proceeded to open proposals for care of indigent sick. The bid of Mrs. Lewis, being the lowest, was allowed as follows: To caring for indigent sick for one year, from May 10, 1890, to May 10, 1891, at an average of four patients per day, $700; and for each additional patient over said average, 60 cents per day.

The bids for boarding County prisoners were opened and examined. The contract was awarded to Henry Levy as follows: For boarding County prisoners for one year from May 10, 1890, to May 10, 1891, at the rate of 30 cents per day.

Ordered that I. J. Woodin be appointed County Physician at a salary of $600 per year, and that he be required to give a bond in the sum of $600 for the faithful performance of such duties.

Whereupon the Board adjourned until 2 o'clock p. m., at which hour it reconvened, same members present as at morning session.

Claim of C. Mulholland allowed in sum of $291 75.

Petition of F. Faure for rebate on sheep license was rejected.

Bill of P. H. Mack for expenses in refunding bonded indebtedness rejected.

The following bills were examined and allowed and warrants ordered drawn:

J. R. Eldred, sunds	$15 30
L. Wood, mdse	9 50
G. M. Gill, sunds	4 00
D. Cofer, sunds	11 00

The bill of A. R. Conklin for services in case of People vs. Elliott was rejected.

Whereupon the Board adjourned until 10 o'clock a. m. of Wednesday.

WEDNESDAY, May 7th.

The Board met at 10 o'clock a. m. pursuant to adjournment. Present, Harger, Sneden, Robinson and Stewart. Minutes of preceding day read and approved.

On motion ordered that the bill of C. Mulholland be reconsidered and allowed in sum of $323 75 and warrant ordered drawn for that amount.

The following bills were examined and allowed and warrants ordered drawn:

J. W. P. Laird, B'd of Education	$ 5 00
C. Walter, fees	5 50
I. J. Woodin, allowed	155 00
Mrs. L. L. Woodin, allowed	5 00
Mrs. M. Lewis, Hospital	125 00

Whereupon the Board adjourned until 2 o'clock p. m., at which hour it reconvened, the same members present as at the morning session.

Petition for road in Road District No. 5 laid over till next regular meeting.

Petition for road in Road District No. 6 filed February 4th 1889, laid over till next regular meeting.

Petition for reduction of water rates filed February 3, 1890, was ordered rejected for informality, there not being a sufficient number of names.

Claim of E. H. Ober for $15 for services as interpreter allowed $3.

The petition to fix rates for the Deep Spring Valley Toll Road was ordered granted as prayed for.

T. W. Rathbun was appointed a member of the Board of Education, vice G. H. Hardy, resigned.

J. W. P. Laird and D. Crough were reappointed members of the Board of Education.

Moved by Sneden and seconded that J. R. Eldred, Tax-Collector of Inyo County, be allowed the sum of $300 in the collection of sheep license tax for the present year, 1890. Carried by the following vote: Ayes: Sneden, Robinson and Stewart. No. Harger.

Petition of citizens for the appointment of James R. Moffit as License Collector for Inyo county rejected.

Petition of P. A. Chalfant for $400 for a deputy rejected unanimously. Same petition granted unanimously in the sum of $300.

Application of J. R. Eldred to be allowed a deputy rejected.

Whereupon the Board adjourned until 10 o'clock a. m. of Thursday.

THURSDAY, May 8th.

The Board met at 10 o'clock a. m., pursuant to adjournment. Present, Harger, Sneden, Robinson and Stewart. Minutes of preceding day read and approved.

Claim of John Baxter examined and approved and warrant ordered drawn in sum of $15.

The reports of Road Overseers of Districts Nos., 2, 3, 4, 5 and 6 were examined, accepted and approved.

The following bills were allowed and warrants ordered drawn:

G. H. Palmer, R'd Dist. No 6	$143 00
M. S. McLeod, R'd Dist. No. 3	249 24
W. J. Dunn, R'd Dist. No. 3	25 44
Walter James, R'd Dist. No. 5	199 00
S. J. McMurry, R'd Dist. No. 4	31 00
W. H. Powers, R'd Dist. No. 2	153 00

Whereupon the Board adjourned until 2 o'clock p. m., at which hour it reassembled, same members present as at morning session.

Petition of citizeds of Bishop Creek to declare a public highway from Bishop due east to railroad laid over till next regular meeting.

Whereupon the Board adjourned until 9 o'clock a. m. of May 9, 1890.

FRIDAY, May 9th.

The Board met at 9 o'clock a. m. pursuant to adjournment. Present, Harger, Sneden, Robinson and Stewart. Minutes of preceding day read and approved.

Moved by Harger and seconded by Stewart that the following bills be allowed for the care of W. P. George, an indigent sick person, and that warrants be drawn for the several amounts:

A. Cohn	$ 7 25
Given & Ingalls	12 45
O. H. Hill	13 00
J. H. Bulpitt	6 60
Eliza Smith	46 20
D. M. Smith	39 00
Sophia Brown	12 00
Charles Hedges	94 00

Carried by the following vote: Ayes: Harger, Stewart and Robinson. Sneden not voting.

The Board adjourned until 1 o'clock p. m., at which hour it reconvened, the same members present as at the morning session.

Quarterly reports of Auditor and Treas- accepted and approved.

Several transfers were made in the various funds.

The following claims of members of the Board were allowed on the Salary Fund:

J. D. Harger	$44 10
S. G. Sneden	43 80
E. Robinson	30 30
J. J. Stewart	34 80

Board Adjourned.

On The Way.

The train rolled out from Independence on Saturday morning having on board Co. Clerk Mack, A. R. Conklin Esq. and wife, C. Mulholland and Ed. Ober, bound for Bakersfield to attend the Elliott trial. At Big Pine the depot looked as though all the inhabitants of that region were on the move. Trunks were piled up all over the platform and valises and gripsacks innumerable. Great though the hardship is upon the many farmers and business men to be taken away so far from home and kept so long idle, everybody submitted cheerfully. Mr. J. G. West, who had been sent down from Carson as special agent to take charge of the party, rushed through the business of issuing tickets, and in a very short time considering the large number, this business was finished and the train was again speeding along. At Laws the arrangements for feeding the party were so defective that many had to wait at the hotel tables three-quarters of an hour and then get up and go away without getting a mouthful to eat. The train arrived at Belleville on time, all on board in good humor. Mr. Stock had made excellent arrangements for feeding the party and the whole number were treated to an excellent supper soon after the train arrived. There were not beds enough to accommodate half the number of people as there many others in addition to the witnesses, but they rolled in, two and three in a bed. Quilts and blankets were plenty, and as most of the party were accustomed to camping out they readily adjusted themselves to the situation.

Meteorological Summary for April, 1890.
Keeler, Cal.

Mean Barometer	29.886
Mean Temperature	59°
Highest Temperature	80°
Lowest Temperature	35°
Greatest daily range of temperature	35°
Prevailing direction of wind, S. W.
Extreme velocity of wind, direction and date, 38 miles N. E. 23d.
Total precipitation	0.10
Number of cloudless days	21
Number of partly cloudy days	9
Number of cloudy days	0
Dates of frost, none.

D. C. GRUNOW,
Private, Signal Corps.

Candelaria is decidedly improving; there is a great deal more work being done in the mines than a few weeks ago. Yet there are many idle miners there, men who have flocked in recently before the mines are sufficiently opened to give them employment, and these men are now waiting for jobs.

A number of bills were passed by the Supervisors presented by parties at Bishop for taking care of W. P. George. The District Attorney will enjoin their payment and a test case will be carried before the Supreme Court.

FINAL HOMESTEAD PROOF.

H A No. 432

LAND OFFICE AT INDEPENDENCE, CAL. April 30, 1890.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT THE following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before the Register and Receiver at Independence, Cal., on Saturday, June 14th, 1890, viz.: JOHN S. GORMAN, Homestead Application No. 432, for the W ½ of lot No. 1 in SW ¼ Sec 5 Lot No 1 in NE ¼ and E ½ of lot No. 1 in NW ¼ of Sec 6, in Twp 13 S, Range 35 East, M D M

He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon, and cultivation of, said land, viz.: Hiram C. Hamilton, Helaire P. Cartier, Alvah R. Conklin and William M. Boyd, all of Independence, Cala.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD, Register.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.

Estate of ELIZA ANN SMITH, deceased.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN BY THE UNdersigned, Executor of the last Will and Testament of Eliza Ann Smith, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Executor, at his residence, at Block Rock, Inyo county, California.

WILLIAM S. MORTON.

Executor of the last Will and Testament of said Eliza Ann Smith, deceased.

Dated May 9th, 1890.

PROPOSALS FOR 18th DISTRICT FAIR.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT THE Board of Directors of the 18th District Agricultural Association of California have decided to locate the Fair of said Association for the year 1890, at such town within any of the counties of Alpine, Mono and Inyo as shall offer to the Association the largest money premium for said privilege; and will also provide a speed track and necessary buildings and will give the use of the same for holding the Fair free of cost to the Association.

Sealed Proposals to be forwarded to the Secretary of the Association on or before May 17th, 1890, at Independence, Inyo county, California.

C. MULHOLLAND,
Secretary.

WEINSTOCK & LUBIN:

Gradually Growing Greater

Small wonder that our business is growing. We have the goods, the prices, and a very faithful worker in the Illustrated Catalogue which we send out Spring and Autumn. It "hangs on a peg" in thousands of homes, and is consulted as often as the almanac. It is a truthful book,—not a line put in to mislead. It is a happy, cheerful book, full of pictures and descriptions of things that will make life easier and pleasanter. It is an independent book, publishing its prices without fear of criticisms or comparisons. It is a just book, giving everyone the chance to get the same goods and prices as everybody else, and favoring neither the rich nor the poor, the high nor the low. It is a handy book, useful for reference or information, whether you buy of us or not. It is a book for people who want to know "what's going on" in the world of dress. The newest conceits, styles and inventions find places in its handsome pages.

And it costs nothing! Sent free to any address on application. Weinstock, Lubin & Co., Sacramento, Cal. Clothing, Dry Goods, Shoes, Hats, Millinery, Notions, Household Supplies, etc. The Largest General Retail House on the Pacific Coast.

READY MADE DRESSES.

We keep ladies' dresses ready made in cashmere, wool and silk, at prices ranging from $7.50 to $27.50 for the complete costumes. The styles are changed twice each year; and full descriptions and illustrations of them are given in our Illustrated Catalogue. WEINSTOCK, LUBIN & Co., Sacramento.

MEN'S $3.50 TROUSERS.

We are making a great specialty of these goods, and are able to give unusual value for the money. The trousers are neatly cut, thoroughly well made and of medium-weight cloth. We change the patterns each season, and this year offer fine stripes in medium and dark effects. State which you prefer.

11

MISCELLANEOUS.

Lake View Hotel
Keeler, Cal.
John Barnes, Prop'r.

First-class hotel in every respect. The table always supplied with the best in the market. Clean, nicely furnished rooms. Transient visitors will receive every courtesy and attention.

THE BAR
—Is constantly supplied with the finest—
Wines, Liquors, & Cigars.

NORMAN HOUSE,
Independence, - - Cal.
New House.
New Furniture.
Low Rates.

Special attention will be given to secure the comfort of guests.
O. I. MAIRS, Prop.
feb12tf

IRWIN'S SALOON
Cor. Edwards and Market Streets,
Independence . Cal.

THE PUBLIC GENERALLY ARE RESPECTFULLY invited to call and inspect my establishment, which has been entirely rebuilt and furnished in a style second to none on this side of the mountains. A SPLENDID NEW BILLIARD TABLE provided for the amusement of patrons.

THE BAR
Is supplied with the most celebrated brands of pure Wines and Liquors and the Finest Havana Cigars.

JOHN C. IRWIN, Proprietor.
feb12tf

Palace Saloon.
WALTER OBER, Lessee.
—THE BAR—
Is constantly supplied with the best kinds o
WINES, LIQUORS, & CIGARS.
The most careful attention given to the the amusement and comfort of patrons.
A FINE BILLIARD TABLE
Is always at the disposal of visitors to the Palace Saloon Dec. 20 89

PIONEER BREWERY
INDEPENDENCE
BEER ICE COLD.
The Bar is supplied with the Best of all kinds of Liquors and Cigars.
The Coolest Hall in the town. Call in and see what comfort you can have this hot weather.
PHILIP GEHRIG, PROPRIETOR

MISCELLANEOUS.

A. K. EUGLEY,
BIG PINE, INYO CO. CAL.

PROVISIONS, &c., &c., &c.
Postmaster and Deputy Co Clerk.
A. K. EUGLEY,
Big Pine, Cal.

Sulphur & Borax Baths
AT SODA SPRINGS, NEVADA
On Son & Colorado Railroad
These valuable Springs offer special
INDUCEMENT TO INVALIDS
THE WATER CONTAINS
SULPHUR, MAGNESIA AND BORAX.
And Is Very Strengthening and Cleansing
When used for bathing purposes.
THE BATH HOUSES HAVE BEEN REBUILT
—And a large—
SWIMMING : BATH
Added, where those wishing to do so can take an invigorating plunge.
Excellent Accommodations
—AND—
Board by the Day, Week, or the Month

about the fiftieth part of its bulk. It is a grand, double size telescope, as large as is easy to carry. We will also show you how you can make from $5 to $10 a day at least, from the start, without experience. Better write at once. We pay all express charges. Address, H. HALLETT & CO., Box 880, PORTLAND, MAINE.

BISHOP ADVERTISEMENTS.

A. COHN & CO.
—DEALERS IN—
General Merchandise.
—ALL KINDS OF—
Farm Implements
—AND—
--MACHINERY--
Farm Produce
—OF ALL KINDS BOUGHT—
Orders for all kinds of supplies needed in mining camps promptly filled.

GIVEN & INGALLS.
—DEALERS IN—
FARM PRODUCE.

J. E. DUNLAP.
Harness Maker.
Harness of all kinds, from the lightest to the heaviest. Any kind of new work made promptly and of the best material. Repairing done on the shortest notice. A full line of saddles and harness.

H. E. WRIGHT.
DRUGGIST.
Medicines, Drugs, Toilet and Fancy Articles. Physicians' prescriptions carefully and promptly filled. All drugs and medicines fresh and of the best quality. All orders by mail receive immediate attention

Valley View Hotel.
O. H. Hill, Prop'r.
A New House Newly Furnished Throughout. Guests will receive every courtesy and attention.

NEVADA STABLE
BISHOP.
Opposite Valley View Hotel, Main St
In the Livery Department nothing is kept but safe and good traveling carriage and saddle horses. Conveyances of all kinds first-class. Good attendance and the best of hay and grain for all animals boarding at the stable
S. P. SMITH, Prop.

BISHOP CREEK
BREWERY,
MUNZINGER, PHILLIPPAY & CO., Proprietors.
All the appliances and conveniences of First Class Brewery, including a beautiful grove for out-door parties.
Customers supplied on all points
Of the C. & C. Railroad.
Send orders to
MUNZINGER, PHILLIPPAY & CO.
Bishop Creek, Cal.

A NEW DEAL!
BISHOP CREEK
Livery, Feed & Sale Stable.
ROBERT O'NEIL, Prop'r.
Horses are boarded by the day, week or month. Stock bought and sold.
Bishop Creek, Cal., Nov. 20, 1883.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Newest Styles
OF
Fashionable Clothing, Dry Goods, Ladies' Wear, etc., etc
AT
L. WOOD'S
CASH STORE
A small stock of fresh groceries & canned goods constantly renewed.
Fresh Produce, and Grain Flour, etc., constantly on hand.
CANDIES,
PEANUTS,
WALNUTS,
TOYS!
THE CASH STORE
Is Where You Get
WORTH OF YOUR MONEY

THOMAS & HILL,
—DEALERS IN—
GENERAL MERCHANDISE
BIG PINE, INYO COUNTY, CAL,
We keep constantly on hand goods of all kinds needed in a country home. We order only First-Class Goods and ask no more than a reasonable profit. Give us a trial.
THOMAS & HILL.

J. FORBES. W. D. TOBEY.
FORBES & TOBEY,
HAWTHORNE, NEV.,
—DEALERS IN—
LUMBER
OF ALL KINDS.
DOORS,
SHINGLES,
SASH AND BLINDS,
LATH,
RUSTIC
MOULDINGS,
DRESSED LUMBER.
Matched and Dressed Flooring.
sept 11-tf

COLONEL QUARITCH, V.C.

By H. RIDER HAGGARD

CHAPTER XXV.

BELLE PAYS A VISIT.

Mr. Quest got into his dog cart and drove homeward, full of feelings which it would be difficult to describe.

The hour of his revenge was come. He had played his cards and he had won the game, and fortune with it, and his enemy lay in the hollow of his hand. He looked behind him at the proud towers of the castle, reflecting as he did so that in all probability they would belong to him before another year was over his head. At one time he had earnestly longed to possess this place, but now this was not so much the object of his desire. What he wanted now was the money. With £30,000 in his hand he would, together with what he had, be a rich man, and he had already laid his plans for the future. Of the Tiger he had heard nothing lately. She was cowed, but he well knew that it was only for awhile. By and by her rapacity would get the better of her fear, and she would recommence her persecutions. This being so he came to a determination—he would put the world between them. Once let him have this money in his hand and he would start his life afresh in some new country; he was not too old for it, and he would be a rich man, and then perhaps he might get rid of the cares which had rendered so much of his life valueless. If Belle would go with him, well and good—if not, he could not help it. If she did go there must be a reconciliation first, for he could not any longer tolerate the life they lived. In due course he reached The Oaks and went in. Luncheon was on the table, at which Belle was sitting. She was, as usual, dressed in black and beautiful to look on; but her round, babyish face was pale and pinched, and there were black lines beneath her eyes.

"I did not know that you were coming back to luncheon," she said; "I am afraid there is not much to eat."

"Yes," he said, "I finished my business up at the castle, so I thought I might as well come home. By the way, Belle, I have a bit of news for you."

"What is it?" she asked, looking up sharply, for something in his tone attracted her attention and awoke her fears.

"Your friend, Edward Cossey, is going to be married to Ida de la Molle."

She blanched till she looked like death itself, and put her hands to her heart as though she had been stabbed.

"The squire told me so himself," he went on, keeping his eyes remorselessly fixed upon her face.

She leaned forward, and he thought that she was going to faint, but she did not. By a supreme effort she recovered herself, and drank a glass of sherry which was standing by her side.

"I expected it," she said, in a low voice.

"You mean that you dreaded it," answered Mr. Quest, quietly. He rose and locked the door, and then came and stood close to her and spoke.

"Listen, Belle. I know all about your affair with Edward Cossey. I have proofs of it, but I have forborne to use them, because I saw that in the end he would weary of you and desert you for some other woman, and that would be my best revenge upon you. You have all along been nothing but his toy, the light woman with whom he amused his leisure hours."

She put her hands back over her heart, but said never a word, and he went on.

"Belle, I did wrong to marry you when you did not want to marry me, but, being married, you have done wrong to be unfaithful to your vows. I have been rewarded by your infidelity, and your infidelity has been rewarded by desertion. Now I have a proposal to make to you, and if you are wise you will accept it. Let us set the one wrong against the other; let both be forgotten. Forgive me, and I will forgive you, and let us make peace—if not now, then in a little while, when your heart is not so sore—and go right away from Edward Cossey and Ida de la Molle and Honham and Boisingham, into some new part of the world, where we can begin life again, and try to forget the past."

She looked up at him, and shook her head mournfully, and twice she tried to speak and twice she failed. The third time her words came.

"You do not understand me," she said. "You are very kind, and I am very grateful to you, but you do not understand me. I cannot get over things so easily as I know most women can; what I have done I never can undo. I do not blame him altogether, and it was as much or more my fault than his, but having once loved him I cannot go back to you or any other man. If you like I will go on living with you as we live, and I will try to make you comfortable, but I can say no more."

"Think again, Belle," he said, almost pleadingly; "I dare say that you have never given me credit for much tenderness of heart, and I know that you have as much against me as I have against you. But I have always loved you, and I love you now, really and truly love you, and I will make you a good husband if you will let me.

"You are very good," she said, "but it cannot be. Get rid of me if you like and marry somebody else. I am ready to take the penalty of what I have done."

"Once more, Belle, I beg you to consider. Do you know what kind of a man this is for whom you are giving up your life? Not only has he deserted you, but do you know how he has got hold of Ida de la Molle? He has, as I know well, bought her. I tell you he has bought her as much as though he had gone into the open market and paid down a price for her. The other day Cossey & Son were going to foreclose upon the Honham estates, which would have ruined the old gentleman. Well, what did your young man do? He went to the girl—who hates him, by the way, and is in love with Col. Quaritch—and said to her, 'If you will promise to marry me when I ask you I will find the thirty thousand pounds and take up the mortgages.' And on those terms she agreed to marry him. And now he has got rid of you and he claims her promise. That is the history. I wonder that your pride will bear such a thing. By heaven, I would kill the man."

She looked up at him curiously. "Would you?" she said; "it is not a bad idea. I dare say it is all true. He is worthless. Why does one fall in love with worthless people? Well, there is an end to it, or a beginning of the end. As I have sown, so must I reap," and she got up, and, unlocking the door, left the room.

"Yes," he said, aloud, when she had gone, "there is a beginning of the end. Upon my word, what between one thing and another, unlucky devil as I am, I had rather stand in my own shoes than in Edward Cossey's."

Belle went to her room and sat thinking, or rather brooding, sullenly. Then she put on her bonnet and cloak and started out, taking the road that ran past Honham castle. She had not gone a hundred yards before she found herself face to face with Edward Cossey himself. He was coming out of a gunsmith's shop, where he had been ordering some cartridges.

"How do you do, Belle?" he said, coloring and lifting his hat.

"How do you do, Mr. Cossey?" she answered, coming to a stop and looking him straight in the face.

"Where are you going?" he asked, not knowing what to say.

"I am going to walk up to the castle to call on Miss de la Molle."

"I don't think that you will find her. She is in bed with a headache."

"Oh! So you have been up there this morning?"

"Yes, I had to see the squire about some business."

"Indeed." Then looking him in the eyes again: "Are you engaged to be married to Ida?"

He colored again, he could not prevent himself from doing so.

"No," he answered; "what makes you ask such a question?"

"I don't know," she said, laughing a little; "feminine curiosity, I suppose. I thought that you might be. Good-by," and she went on, leaving Edward Cossey to the enjoyment of a very peculiar set of sensations.

"Good-by," and she went on.

"What a coward!" said Belle to herself. "He does not even dare to tell me the truth."

Nearly an hour later she arrived at the castle, and, asking for Ida, was shown into the drawing room, where she found her sitting reading.

Ida rose to greet her, not without warmth, for the two women, although they were at the opposite poles of character, had a friendly feeling for each other.

In a way they were both strong, and strength always recognizes and respects strength.

"Have you walked up?" asked Ida.

"Yes, I came on the chance of finding you. I wanted to speak to you."

"Yes," said Ida, "what is it?"

"This. Forgive me, but are you engaged to be married to Edward Cossey?"

Ida looked at her in a slow, stately kind of way, which seemed to ask by what right she came to question her. At least so Belle read it.

"I know that I have no right to ask such a question," she said, with humility, "and, of course, you need not answer it, but I have a reason for asking."

"Well," said Ida, "I was requested by Mr. Cossey to keep the matter secret, but he appears to have divulged it. Yes, I am engaged to be married to him."

Belle's beautiful face turned a shade paler, if that was possible, and her eyes hardened.

"Do you wonder why I ask you this?" she said. "I will tell you, though probably when I have done so you will never speak to me again. I am Edward Cossey's discarded mistress," and she laughed bitterly enough.

Ida shrunk a little and colored, as a pure and high minded woman naturally does when she is for the first time suddenly brought into actual contact with impurity and passion.

"I know," went on Belle, "that I must seem a shameful thing to you; but, Ida, good and cold and stately as you are, pray God that you may never be thrown into temptation; pray God that you may never be married almost by force to a man whom you hate, and then suddenly know what a thing it is to fall in love, and for the first time feel your life awake."

"Hush," said Ida, gently; "what right have I to judge you?"

"I loved him," went on Belle, "I loved him passionately, and for a little while it was as though heaven had opened its gates, for he used to care for me a little, and I think he would have taken me away and married me afterward, but I would not hear of it, because I knew it would ruin him. He offered to once, and I refused, and within three hours of that I believe that he was bargaining for you. Well, and then it was the old story, he fell more and more in love with you, and, of course, I had no hold upon him."

"Yes," said Ida, moving impatiently; "but why do you tell me all this? It is very painful, and I had rather not hear it."

"Why do I tell you? I tell you because I do not wish you to marry Edward Cossey. I tell you because I wish him to feel a little of what I have to feel, and because I have said he should not marry you."

"I wish that you could prevent it," said Ida, with a sudden outburst. "I am sure you are quite welcome to Mr. Cossey, so far as I am concerned, for I detest him, and I cannot imagine how any woman could ever have done otherwise."

"Thank you," said Belle, "but I have done with Mr. Cossey, and I think I hate him too. I know that I did hate him when I met him in the street just now, and he told me that he was not engaged to you. You say that you detest him; why then do you marry him? You are a free woman."

"Do you want to know?" said Ida, wheeling round and looking her visitor full in the face. "I am going to marry him for the same reason that you say caused you to marry—because I must. I am going to marry him because he lent us money. On that condition I promised to marry him, and as I have taken the money I must give him his price, even if it breaks my heart. You think that you are wretched, how do you know that I am not fifty times as wretched? Your lot is to lose your lover, mine is to have one forced upon me and endure him all my life. The worst of your pain is over, all mine is to come."

"Why? why?" broke in Belle. "What is such a promise as that? He cannot force you to marry him, and it is better for a woman to die than to have to marry a man she hates, especially," she added, meaningly, "if she happens to love another man. Bead-vised by me; I know what it is."

"Yes," said Ida, "perhaps it is better to die, but death is not so easy. As for the promise, you do not seem to understand that no gentleman or lady can break a promise in consideration of which money has been received. Whatever he has done, and whatever he is, I must marry Mr. Cossey, so I do not think that we need discuss the subject any more."

Belle sat silent for a minute or more, and then, rising, said that she must go. "I have warned you," she added, "although to warn you I have had to put myself at your mercy. You can tell the story and destroy me if you like. I do not much care if you do. Women, such as I, get reckless."

"You must understand me very little, Mrs. Quest" (it had always been Belle before, and she winced at the change of name), "if you think me capable of such conduct. You have nothing to fear from me."

She held out her hand, but in her humility and shame Belle went without taking it, and through the angry sunset light walked slowly back to Boisingham, and as she walked there was a look upon her face that Edward Cossey would scarcely have cared to see.

CHAPTER XXVI.

MR. QUEST HAS HIS INNINGS.

All that afternoon and far into the evening Mr. Quest was employed in drafting, and with his own hand engrossing on parchment certain deeds, to the proper execution of which he seemed to find constant reference necessary to a tin box of papers labeled "Honham Castle Estates."

By 11 that night everything was finished, and, having carefully collected and docketed his papers, he put the tin box away and went home to bed.

Next morning, about 10 o'clock, Edward Cossey was sitting at breakfast in no happy frame of mind. He had gone up to the castle to dinner on the previous evening, but it cannot be said that he had enjoyed himself. Ida was there, looking very handsome in her evening dress, but she was cold as a stone and unapproachable as a statue. She scarcely spoke to him, indeed, except in answer to some direct remark, reserving all her conversation for her father, who seemed to have caught the contagion of restraint, and was, for him, unusually silent and depressed.

But once or twice he found her looking at him, and then there was upon her face a mingled expression of contempt and irrepressible aversion which chilled him to the marrow.

These qualities toward him were indeed so much more plainly developed than they had been before, that at last a conviction which he had at first rejected as incredible, forced itself into his mind. That conviction was, that Belle must have disbelieved his denial of the engagement, and in her eagerness for revenge have told Ida the whole story. The thought made him feel faint, but there was but one thing to be done, and that was to face it out. Once when the squire's back was turned he ventured to attempt some little tenderness in which the word "dear" occurred, but Ida did not seem to hear it, and looked straight over his head into space, and this he felt was trying. So trying did he find the whole entertainment indeed, that about half past 9 he rose and came away, saying that he had some bank papers which must be attended to that night.

Now most men would in all human probability have been dismayed by this state of affairs into relinquishing an attempt at matrimony which it was evident could only be carried through in the face of the quiet but none the less vigorous dislike and contempt of the other contracting party. But this was not so with Edward Cossey. Ida's coldness exercised upon his tenacious and obstinate mind much the same effect that may be supposed to be produced upon the benighted seeker for the north pole by a frozen ocean of icebergs. Like the explorer, he was convinced that if he could get over those cold and frowning heights he would find a smiling and sunny land beyond, and perchance many other delights, and like the explorer again, he was, metaphorically, ready to die in the effort. For to tell the truth, he loved her more every day, till now his passion dominated his physical being and his mental judgment, so that whatever loss was entailed, whatever obstacles arose, he was determined to endure and overcome them if by so doing he might gain his end.

He was reflecting upon all this on the morning in question, when Mr. Quest, looking very cool and composed and gentleman like, was shown into his room, much as Col. Quaritch had been shown in two mornings before.

"How do you do, Quest?" he said, in a from high to low kind of tone, which he was in the habit of adopting toward his official subordinates. "Sit down. What is it?"

"It is some business, Mr. Cossey," the lawyer answered in his usual quiet tones.

"Honham castle mortgages again, I suppose," growled he. "I only hope you don't want any more money on that account at present, that's all, because I can't raise another cent while the governor lives, for they don't entail cash and bank shares, you know; and, though my credit's pretty good, I am not far from the bottom of it."

"Well," said Mr. Quest, with a faint smile, "it has to do with the Honham castle mortgages, but as I have a good deal to say perhaps we had better wait till the things are cleared away."

"All right. Just ring the bell, will you, and take a cigarette?"

Mr. Quest smiled again and rang the bell, but did not take the cigarette. When the breakfast things had been removed he took a chair, and, placing it on the further side of the table in such a position that the light, which was to his back, struck full upon Edward Cossey's face, commenced to deliberately untie and sort his bundle of papers. Presently he came to the one he wanted—a letter. It was not an original letter, but a copy.

"Will you kindly read this, Mr. Cossey?" he said quietly, as he pushed the letter toward him across the table.

Edward finished lighting his cigarette, and then took the letter up and glanced at it carelessly. At the first line, however, his expression changed to one of absolute horror, his face blanched, the perspiration sprang out upon his forehead, and the cigarette dropped from his fingers to the carpet, where it lay smoldering. And no wonder, for the letter was a copy of one of Belle's most passionate epistles to himself. He had never been able to restrain her from writing these compromising letters. Indeed, this one was the very same that, some time before, Mr. Quest had abstracted from the pocket of his lounging coat in the room in London.

He read on for a little way and then put the letter down upon the table. There was no need for him to go on, it was all in the same strain.

"You will observe, Mr. Cossey, that this is a copy," said Mr. Quest; "but if you like you can inspect the original document."

He made no answer.

"Now," went on Mr. Quest, handing him a second paper, "here is the copy of another letter, of which the original is in your handwriting."

Edward glanced at it. It was an intercepted letter of his own, dated about a year before, and its contents, though not of so passionate a nature as the other, were still of a sufficiently incriminating character.

He put it down upon the table by the side of the first, and waited for Mr. Quest to go on.

"I have other evidence," said his visitor presently; "but you are probably sufficiently versed in such matters to know that these letters alone are almost enough for my purpose, which is to commence a suit for divorce against my wife, in which you will, of course, in accordance with the provisons of the act, be joined as co-respondent. Indeed, I have already drawn up a letter of instruction to my London agents directing them to take the preliminary steps, and he pushed a third paper toward him.

Edward Cossey turned his back to his tormentor, and, resting his head upon his hand, tried to think.

"Mr. Quest," he said presently in a hoarse voice, "without admitting anything, there are reasons which would make it ruinous to me if such an action were commenced at present."

"Yes," he answered, "there are. In the first place, there is no knowing what view your father would take of the matter, and how his view would affect your future interests, and in the second, your engagement to Miss de la Molle, upon which your heart is so strongly set, would certainly be broken off."

"How do you know that I am engaged?" asked Edward, in surprise.

"It does not matter how I know it," said the lawyer. "I do know it, so it will be useless for you to deny it. As you remark, this suit will probably be your ruin in every way, and therefore it is, as you will easily understand, a good moment for a man who wants his revenge to choose to bring it."

"Without admitting anything," answered Edward Cossey, "I wish to ask you a question. Is there no way out of this? Supposing that I have done you a wrong, wrong admits of compensation."

"Yes, it does, Mr. Cossey, and I have thought of that. Everybody has his price in this world, and I have mine; but the compensation for such a wrong must be a heavy one."

"At what price will you agree to stay the action forever?" he asked.

"The price that I will take to stay the action is the transfer into my name of the mortgages you hold over the Honham castle estates," answered Mr. Quest, quietly.

"Great heavens!" said Edward, "why, that is a matter of thirty thousand pounds!"

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

The man who has no charity in his heart gives no quarter to the hotel waiter.

A GIANT OF MODERN WARFARE.

In these days of education and civilization, we hear very little of the tyrannical work of the so-called Giant as of old. Such stories were the vague imagination of writers for the amusement of children, and calls to mind "Jack the Giant Killer, Fe Fi Fo Fum, be he alive or be he dead I grind his bones to make me bread," and many other nursery rhymes. But it is a fact that a Giant was born to the world that is making his power felt. A Giant instead of being a terror to all proves a friend to every family. The Great Sierra Kidney and Liver Cure is the Giant of all remedies, as the public are testifying daily. A sure cure for the many disorders of our bodies caused by diseased kidneys and liver. In nine cases out of ten one bottle proves sufficient. Purely vegetable, delightful to the taste, a beautiful all-the-year-round remedy.

All druggists sell it.

Of all the dark traits that disfigure the human race that of wishing to belittle or degrade the character of another is the lowest.

LUCK AND THRIFT.

A Sensible Investment of a Big Louisiana State Lottery Prize.

Henry Kappeler and his wife, Clara, a thrifty German couple are not only very lucky people, but they are as wise as they are fortunate. They have been in this city for about a year and a half and have worked most industriously, Kappeler as a tailor and his wife as his chief assistant. They now reside in the basement of 542½ Natoma street, between sixth and Seventh.

In the drawing of The Louisiana State Lottery Company of February last the Kappeler family funds were enriched to the amount of $15,000 by their investment of $1 in the purchase of a coupon.

Yesterday afternoon Mr. and Mrs. Kappeler were seen by a Call reporter and questioned about their lucky venture. They are quite young and were rather averse to discuss the matter at first. Finally Mr. Kappeler, speaking for himself and partner, said: "Yes, we were fortunate to win a $15,000 prize in The Louisiana State Lottery, and we have got our money safely in bank. For the past seven years we have bought a ticket every month. We did so even when we were East. We never drew anything before, though in the last January drawing we thought we had won $5,000, but it was a mistake through an error in a published newspaper list. No, our luck has not rattled us. We have not spent any of the money foolishly. We stopped working for a few days, but will commence again soon. At present we are looking for a suitable piece of property to invest the money in, so that we will have something to fall back on in our old age or sickness. Besides we have three young children, and we want to leave something for them when they grow up. In the future we shall continue to buy a lottery ticket every month and keep on trying our luck."—San Francisco (Cal.) Call, March 15.

Opportunities are very sensitive things; if you slight them on their first visit, you seldom see them again.

NATURE IN CONVULSION

is terrific. Volcanic eruptions, cyclones, earthquakes are awfully and tremendously picturesque, but scarcely desirable to emulate in action and effect by the administration of remedies which produce convulsion and agony in the abnormal portion of the human frame. Such is the effect of the old-fashioned violent purgatives happily falling more and more into disuse, and of which Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is the wholesome, pleasant and far more effective succedaneum. They weakened the intestines—the Bitters invigorates them. They left the bowels inactive, because incapacitated by ensuing feebleness. The Bitters on the contrary, and because it enables, not forces, them to act—a vast and fortunate difference—perpetuates their activity and regularity. The liver is beneficially stimulated, as the kidneys also are, by this medicine, which easily conquers, also, malaria, nervousness and rheumatism.

It is better to lose a jest than a friend, to miss an opportunity of saying a "good thing" than to make an enemy.

Miss Larkins was bilious and feeble and sick,
And it seemed as if nothing would ever relieve her,
Her liver was clogged with impurities thick,
And her stomach was constantly burning with fever,
Of the great G. M. D. she bought a supply,
And directions for taking pursued to the letter
'Twas the best thing on earth she could possibly try,
And soon, very soon, Miss Larkins was better.

The G. M. D. which she took was Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, the great remedy for bronchial, throat and lung diseases, sick headache, scrofula, dyspepsia, and all diseases that have origin in impure blood and a disordered liver.

The cleansing, antiseptic and healing qualities of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy are unequaled.

A man really and practically looking onward to an immortal life, on whatever grounds, exhibits to us the human soul in an ennobled attitude.

A Sore Throat, Cough, or Cold, if suffered to progress, results in serious pulmonary affections, often-times incurable. "Brown's Bronchial Troches" reach directly the seat of the disease, and give instant relief.

Religion is the perfection of wisdom, practice the best instructor, thanksgiving the sweetest recreation.

Six Novels Free, will be sent by Cragin & Co., Philada., Pa., to any one in the U. S. or Canada, postage paid, upon receipt of 25 Dobbins' Electric Soap wrappers. See list of novels on circulars around each bar. Soap for sale by all grocers.

"I see that your 'pure candy' merchant has failed. Who are the chief creditors?" "A glucose company."

We recommend "Tansill's Punch" Cigar.

Never say anything wrong of any one if you are not quite sure about it, and if you are, ask yourself, "Why do I say it?"

SHAKESPEARE SAID:

"Put money in thy purse." Were the sage living in this age, he would say: "Put money in the PACIFIC BANK," as it is the oldest chartered commercial bank on the Pacific Coast, being incorporated over twenty-five years ago.

Try Germea for Breakfast.

Spring Medicine

Is a necessity with nearly everybody. The run down, tired condition at this season is due to impurities in the blood which have accumulated during the winter, and which must be expelled if you wish to feel well. Hood's Sarsaparilla thoroughly purifies and vitalizes the blood, creates a good appetite, cures biliousness and headache, gives healthy action to the kidneys and liver, and imparts to the whole body a feeling of health and strength. Try it this spring.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar

HAZELTON BROS., AND HEMME & LONG PIANOS

Sold on Easy Installments. Also dealer in Sheet Music and Musical Merchandise. CHAS. S. EATON, General Agent, 735 Market St., S. F., Cal. Send for Catalogues of Pianos and Sheet Music.

Dr. L. GOLDSCHMIEDT,

Twenty years New York private and Hospital Experience. All Chronic and Special Diseases. Call or address, No. 5 Stockton Street, San Francisco, Cal.

PALMER & REY.
DEALERS IN TYPE, PRESSES, PRINTING MATERIAL,
Patent Outsides,
405-407 SANSOME STR
San Francisco.

SURE CURE FOR PILES.

Sure cure for blind, bleeding and itching Piles. One box has cured the worst cases of ten years' standing. No one need suffer ten minutes after using Kirk's German Pile Ointment. It absorbs tumors, allays the itching, acts as a poultice, gives relief. Dr. Kirk's German Pile Ointment is prepared only for Piles and itching of the private parts, and nothing else. Every box is warranted.....

Sold by druggists and sent by mail on receipt of price, $1.00 per box. J. J. Mack & Co., Wholesale Agents, San Francisco.

The happiness of life is made up of minute fractions—countless infinitesimals of pleasurable thought and genial feeling.

AN ELEGANT PACKAGE OF FINE CARDS.

Including 15 rare novelties, shapes and artistic imported oleographic and chromatic cards. This large and beautiful collection sent by mail to anyone who will do this:—Buy a box of the genuine Dr. C. McLane's Celebrated Liver Pills from any druggist, price 25 cents, and mail us the outside wrapper with your address, plainly written and 4 cents in stamps. The genuine McLane's Pills are prepared only by Fleming Bros., Pittsburg, Pa., and have been in constant use for over sixty years. They are superior to all others in purity and effectiveness. A certain cure for indigestion and sick headache. Address, Fleming Bros. Pittsburgh, Pa.

So far from duty and happiness being antagonistic, they are necessary each to each for their perfect development.

Beware of imitations of the genuine Seal of North Carolina Plug Cut Tobacco.

ST. JACOBS OIL
CURES PERMANENTLY
NEURALGIA.

Instant Relief, First Application.

Boonville, Mo., Dec. 28, 1885.
I suffered dreadfully with neuralgic pains in head which affected face and eyes. I could not attend work. I obtained instantaneous relief from first application of St. Jacobs Oil.
H. M. CLARK.

Suffered 4 Days Severely.

4626 Penna. Ave., Pittsburg, Pa., Feb. 18, 1889.
I suffered very severe pains from neuralgia for four days, but was cured by St. Jacobs Oil.
Mrs. JOHN KLEPPLE.

AT DRUGGISTS AND DEALERS.
THE CHARLES A. VOGELER CO., Baltimore, Md.

BRAIN DISEASE.

A Doctor's Severe Criticism of the Medical Profession's Treatment of Their Patients.

In a recent issue of a well-known medical journal, the eminent Dr. L. F. Locke takes his professional brethren to task for their neglect of the early symptoms of brain disease. After saying that it is a deplorable fact that the early symptoms are almost invariably overlooked by the sufferers and permitted to pass uncared for, until the time when medical interference is of no avail, he makes this severe remark:

"To dismiss patients presenting head-symptoms with the statement that their troubles are due to disorder of the stomach or liver, is a very convenient way to cover up ignorance."

He then mentions this case: "Not long since, a gentleman of this city, of wealth and high social position, one accustomed to using his brain inordinately when necessary, presented himself to his physician with the complaint that he could not sleep, and was suffering intensely from headache. These symptoms had been present for several months and were accompanied by dimness of vision, difficulty of speech, burning pain in the abdomen and momentary lapses of conciousness. The physician—a man eminent in the profession—subjected him to a thorough examination, and finally dismissed him, saying, that all his symptoms were due to disordered digestion for the relief of which he prescribed an ordinary tonic mixture. He continued his ordinary avocations, and within a fortnight was paralyzed in his left side."

It is a sad but true fact that had this man understood his symptoms, and used the great remedy for brain and nerve disorders, Paine's Celery Compound, he would have been saved for a life of usefulness. This wonderful medicine was providentially revealed to its eminent discoverer, and if you feel careworn, nervous or brain-weary, you do yourself an injustice if you do not try it to-day.

MONEY Can be made easy by raising Chickens. A large 32-page Illustrated Catalogue describing Incubators, Brooders, Brooding Houses, How and What to Feed, How long to keep them in the Brooder, Drinking Fountains, Diseases and their Cure, in fact more information than is given in many 25-cent books. Sent to any address on receipt of 2c. stamp. Wire Netting, Bone Mills, Bone Meal and all kinds of Poultry Supplies.
Address,
Petaluma Incubator Co., Petaluma, Cal.

DR. PARDEE'S REMEDY,
(The Only Reliable Blood Purifier.)
A SPECIFIC FOR RHEUMATISM,
Scrofula, Salt Rheum, Neuralgia, Ring Worm
And all other Skin and Blood Diseases.
IT REGULATES THE LIVER AND KIDNEYS.
Cures Indigestion and all diseases arising from an enfeebled condition of the system.
☞Ask your Druggist for DR. PARDEE'S REMEDY and take no other. Price $1. per bottle or six bottles for $5. Manufactured by the PARDEE MEDICINE CO.,
Rochester, N. Y.

EVERYONE SPEAKS WELL OF IT.

Rochester, N. Y., March 18, '86.
For many years I have been troubled with severe pains in the back of my head and neck, the pain being so sevese at times that I was nearly insane, and my friends feared that I would be. Lumps as large as a hickory-nut, would swell up on my forehead and neck. I tried many different kinds of medicines and physicians, but none seemed to reach my case, until I commenced the use of Dr. Pardee's Rheumatic Remedy, and before I had used it four days, the pain left my neck and shoulders and went to my hips and limbs. I continued taking the remedy, and the disease seemed to work downward, but there was but little pain. I am still using the remedy, and I feel confident it will entirely cure me; for I am so much better and stronger than I have been for years. I cheerfully recommend it to all.
Very respectfully yours,
MRS. PHŒBE WHEATON.
110 Mt. Hope Avenue.

INVENTORS are invited to consult the old established Patent Firm of Mason, Fenwick & Lawrence, Wash, D.C.

DR. PRICE'S CREAM BAKING POWDER
MOST PERFECT MADE.

From the Professor of Chemistry, California College of Pharmacy.
SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 21, 1889.
I have made a careful analysis of a sample of DR. PRICE'S CREAM BAKING POWDER, purchased by me in open market. The results of my analysis show that the Cream of Tartar used in its manufacture is pure, and that it does not contain any foreign substances, such as Alum, Ammonia, Lime or other impurities. I consider it to be pure and wholesome, and in every way a superior article.
W. T. WENZELL, M. D., Ph. M., Ph. C.
Professor of Chemistry in the Cala. Col. Pharm., University of California.

SHOES FOR NOTHING.

We often close out whole lines of shoes in Eastern factories, or here, that have been hard to sell at ½ their original price, our customers get the benefit. We now offer 60 cases of men's low shoes, solid calf and warranted at $1.50 per pair, made to sell for cash at $3.50. They are plain or capped toe, broad or narrow, for old or young. Then we have infants soft sole boots or ankle ties, in light colors, from the best maker in Philadelphia, size 1 at 20c, 2 at 25c and 3 at 30c. Then we have infants high cut lace boots from same maker warranted at 50c per pair, more in black kid and fine goods. Then we have a pretty heavy kid or goat infants shoes, with heel, sone tipped and others plain, size 2 at 30c, size 3 at 35c, size 4 at 40c, size 5 at 50c; would cost $1.00 to $1.25 regular. Then we have Misses 11 to 2 in cloth and kid foxed at 75 cents, lace shoes, but well made, and men's handsome plush or worked slippers, sizes 6 and 8 only, at 88 cents, and ladies beautiful felt slippers, 3 to 7, for 95 cents, that we get $1.50 for as a rule. Men's Sunday shoes, 5 to 10, for $1.79, plain or capped toe. If you order by mail send plenty for postage and we will return if too much. We never offered as good value in shoes in any of our "job lots," but we want a portion of your shoe trade. Shall we have it? Address Smith's Cash Store, 418 Front St., San Francisco, Cal.

BARGAIN IN REAL ESTATE.

For sale, in the town of Alameda, Alameda County, a large lot situated in the business centre, with two story house containing two stores and six rooms. Street cars pass house. Price, $3,250. Apply at once.
C. RANDEGGER,
1616 Webster St., Alameda, Cal.

Reliable SEEDS
The famous Hovey Seed Store of Boston, and Hovey Nurseries of Cambridge, Mass., have been moved to East Pasadena, California, where the business will be conducted as
The Raymond Flower and Seed Store,
C. H. HOVEY, Manager.
East Pasadena, Cal.
Send for complete catalogue.

BIG G. Cures in 1 TO 5 DAYS. Guaranteed not to cause Stricture. Mfd only by the Evans Chemical Co. Cincinnati, O. Trade Mark. $1.00. Sold by Druggists.
I prescribe and fully endorse Big G as the only specific for the certain cure of this disease.
G. H. INGRAHAM, M. D., Amsterdam, N. Y.
We have sold Big G for many years, and it has given the best of satisfaction.
D. R. DYCHE & CO., Chicago, Ill.

DR. SYKES' SURE CURE FOR CATARRH. ESTABLISHED CHICAGO 1870. 1888 Removed TO CINCINNATI.
Has cured many cases pronounced hopeless by physicians. Send for Free Book 'Common Sense Talk' and numerous testimonials. They will convince you.
Dr. SYKES' SURE CURE CO., 330 Race St., Cincinnati, O.

USE NEW WELLINGTON COAL.

CHICHESTER'S ENGLISH
PENNYROYAL PILLS
RED CROSS DIAMOND BRAND.
Safe and always reliable. Ladies, ask Druggist for Diamond Brand, in red, metallic boxes, sealed with blue ribbon. Take no other. All pills in pasteboard boxes, pink wrappers, are dangerous counterfeits. Send 4c. (stamps) for particulars, testimonials and "Relief for Ladies," in letter, by return mail. Name Paper.
Chichester Chem'l Co., Madison Sq., Phila., Pa.

Damiana Bitters.
TRADE MARK
The great Mexican Remedy for Disorders of the Kidneys and Bladder, Damiana is recognized by all physicians as the best Nervous Stimulant gives health and strength to the Generative and Procreative Organs. For sale everywhere.
NABER, ALFS & BRUNE,
323 & 325 Market St., S. F., Agents.

STEINWAY. SHANICH, PEASE & BACH, Gabler, Roenisch Pianos; Burdett Organs, Band Instruments. Largest stock of Sheet Music and Books. Bands supplied at Eastern Prices. MATTHIAS GRAY CO., 206 Post Street, San Francisco.

GILES' CREOSOZONE
FOR THE DESTRUCTION OF
VERMIN and PARASITES
AFFECTING POULTRY AND BIRDS.
Price, FULL QUART, 75c. FULL DIRECTIONS ON EACH CAN.
SOLD BY ALL GROCERS AND DRUGGISTS.
Prepared only by Nelson Giles, Jr., Manufacturing Co., National City Cal.

THE WORKMAN'S SOLACE.

"I tell you, my boy, I get a heap more comfort out of a package of 'SEAL OF NORTH CAROLINA PLUG CUT' than Jay Gould does out of all his millions."

So confident are the manufacturers of Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy in their ability to cure Chronic Catarrh in the Head, no matter how bad or of how long standing, that they offer, in good faith, the above reward, for a case which they cannot cure.

SYMPTOMS OF CATARRH.

Headache, obstruction of nose, discharges falling into throat, sometimes profuse, watery, and acrid, at others, thick, tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody and putrid; eyes weak, ringing in ears, deafness, difficulty of clearing throat, expectoration of offensive matter; breath offensive; smell and taste impaired, and general debility. Only a few of these symptoms likely to be present at once. Thousands of cases result in consumption, and end in the grave.

By its mild, soothing, antiseptic, cleansing, and healing properties, Dr. Sage's Remedy cures the worst cases. This infallible remedy does not, like the poisonous irritating snuffs, "creams" and strong caustic solutions with which the public have long been humbugged, simply palliate for a short time, or drive the disease to the lungs, as there is danger of doing in the use of such nostrums, but it produces perfect and permanent cures of the worst cases of Chronic Catarrh, as thousands can testify. "Cold in the Head" is cured with a few applications. Catarrhal Headache is relieved and cured as if by magic. It removes offensive breath, loss or impairment of the sense of taste, smell or hearing, watering or weak eyes, and impaired memory, when caused by the violence of Catarrh, as they all frequently are. Sold by druggists, at 50 cents. Manufactured by WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

Dr. Pierce's Pellets regulate and cleanse the liver, stomach and bowels. One a dose. Sold by druggists.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

COUNTY OFFICIAL PAPER.

C. MULHOLLAND, - - - Proprietor.

Independence, Cal.,

FRIDAY, - - - MAY 16, 1890.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

VOL. XXI. NO. 49. INDEPENDENCE, INYO CO., CAL., MAY 16, 1890. WHOLE NO. 1020.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

COUNTY OFFICIAL PAPER.

C. MULHOLLAND, - - - Proprietor.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One Year (post paid)	$4.00
Six Months	2.25
Three Months	1.50
One Month	50
Single Copies	20

THE GIRL OF THE PERIOD.

When the winter morn is breaking
Over landscapes white with snow,
And the cold has sent the mercury
Down to ten or twelve below;

When the boarders shivering rise from bed
And quickly don their clothes
And hurry to the parlor stove
To thaw their freezing toes;

When people who must be at work
At seven o'clock or so
With gloved hands shield their ears as through
The icy streets they go;

When cans of milk are frozen
That are standing by the door,
And every body says it never
Was so cold before;

When the fair and gentle maiden
From her slumber sound awakes,
But no attempt to leave the couch,
So snug and warm, she makes.

She feels she's not quite rested—
All yesterday she shopped,
And tripped it at the hop last nigh
Until she nearly dropped.

"I'll take another nap," she says—
The beautiful young lady—
"And meantime ma will light the f
And get the breakfast ready."

—Boston Courier.

A NIGHT WITH STANLEY.

Roger Casement, an Ivory Trader Meets Him at Stanley Pool.

The Great Explorer in His Tent—The Start for the Aruwimi Swamps—Stanley Talks Pleasantly About His Travels with Our Correspondent.

[COPYRIGHT, 1890.]

In April, 1887, I was on my way through the cataract region of the lower Congo, leading a caravan of Zulus from Matadi to Stanley Pool, with a party of natives of the Ba-Kongo tribe acting as carriers of my personal loads—tent, private boxes, etc.—altogether numbering about one hundred persons.

The Zulus (sixty-four in number) were employed carrying two heavy cylinders of five hundred pounds each and some smaller pieces of machinery, all belonging to the steamer Florida, then in course of construction at Kinchasa Station, on the Pool, and only awaiting the very loads I was bringing up to be launched on the waters of the upper Congo and begin her journeyings through the untraveled regions of the interior in search of ivory for the Sanford exploring expedition, of which I was a member.

Towards the middle of April I reached the native village of Lutete, only sixty miles from my destination on Stanley Pool, and here the news that H. M. Stanley, at the head of a great expedition for the relief of Emin Pasha, consisting of eight white officers, 600 Zanzibaris, and Tippo Tib, the renowned Arab slave trader from Stanley Falls, was on his way up country close behind me, caused me to use every exertion to hasten my march, so that I might be able to cross the Nkissi river, which falls into the Congo some fifteen miles beyond Lutete, before Stanley and his expedition should arrive on its banks; for I knew Stanley's journey was of far greater importance than mine, and that he would require all the canoes on the Nkissi to convey his caravan across, during which time I should be compelled to stand aside with a band of 100 semi-starving men.

Leaving Lutete I camped next day in Nzungi market place, about ten miles from the Nkissi.

Here I was overtaken by Mr. Jephson, one of Stanley's officers, who, preceding the main column, was charged with putting the portable boat together which accompanied the expedition—forming about thirty loads—so that every thing might be ready for the passage of the Nkissi when Stanley himself should arrive on its banks. Jephson hurried off at three a. m. next morning in pitch dark, we having learned in the night that the expedition had arrived at a spot only an hour's march behind us, where Stanley had halted for the night.

I followed Jephson at half-past four, hoping against hope that I might reach the Nkissi before Stanley, but it was still a long way off—three hours march, and my men could only travel at a snail's pace. They did their best, poor fellows, and at seven a. m. we had crossed the Lunzadi river by a frail bridge of felled trees, just sufficiently strong to bear the weight of the loads and men together, and were toilfully climbing up the steep hill on the far side when looking back I saw only half a mile behind us, across the valley of the Lunzadi, a long stream of people pouring down the hill towards the river, at their head a white man (I could see that by the clothes) on a white donkey, followed by two or three white-robed figures, which I judged to be Tippo Tib and his suite, and behind these long files of Zanzibaris and natives.

ROGER CASEMENT.

I knew it was Stanley at the head of his column, and that he would soon be upon us at the rate we were progressing.

I urged the Zulus up the hill and got them into a jog-trot almost with their heavy loads, while I hastened on with my camp equipage and the lighter loads to the Nkissi, where I arrived in about two hours, and found Jephson busily engaged piecing the portable boat together on the bank of the stream. The Nkissi runs through a gorge with steep banks of 250 to 300 feet, rising almost from the water's edge.

All my camp loads, tent, bed, food, etc., were passed over to the opposite shore of the river about 150 yards across in two small native canoes.

Entering the deserted village of Selo, which crowns the hill overlooking the river, I found it rapidly filling with Zanzibaris and Soudanese in long white shirts and blue uniforms, who, as they arrived in the shelter of the huts and trees, threw down their loads or piled their guns and crept away into corners and quiet spots out of the blaze of the mid-day sun.

I observed a young white man in shirt and flannel trousers moving about what had been the chief's house, and he, catching sight of me, came forward and, answering my greeting, said:

"Mr. Stanley is in there," pointing to the hut in the inclosure. "Would you like to see him?"

"Very much," I replied, "if he isn't too tired after his march."

Leading the way, he showed me into the hut, where I found myself face to face with Stanley. He was sitting on a box or old camp chair—I forget which—making a frugal breakfast off a cold roast Congo fowl, some hard, brown ship biscuit and a cup of tea without milk. His bronzed features, lit up by a pair of bright blue eyes and set off by the white mustache he wears and the gray hair which encircles his forehead, produced a very pleasing impression on me as I introduced myself and told him why I was traveling on the road to the Pool.

I asked him if he noticed much change or any improvement in the country since he had quitted it in 1884.

"Well," he replied, "I don't see much improvement anywhere. There are more white men out now, of course, but it strikes me they have too many books at headquarters in Boma, and too much office work and writing of dispatches, when men might be better employed doing something through the country. There are plenty of bridges to be built over these small streams which rise suddenly after a night's rain and hinder a caravan's crossing for two or three days sometimes. Why, there's the Lunzadi just back there, which when I left the Congo had a bridge over it, and now this morning I could hardly get my donkeys across by the log or two remaining."

CASEMENT'S MAP.

I told him the natives along the route were very much afraid of his Zanzibaris and had been running away from the villages a day or two in advance of his coming, and of the difficulty I experienced in finding enough food for my men.

"Yes," he said, "I am particularly surprised at the absence of food in the country and the change in the manner of the people. When I went down country in '84, before going home to Europe, every village I passed through the chiefs presented me with something, and by the time I reached Matadi I had twenty-five goats saved to give to Vivi Station, where food was always scarce. Why, I remember in this very village of N'Selo," looking round on the deserted huts, "where now there is not a soul, I had a couple of goats given me then and plenty of food brought for my men."

Bidding Stanley good-bye I hastened after my men, who were now descending the steep hill in a rush, and left him.

I got my two cylinders over the Nkissi safely in the canoes, and at seven in the evening was able to see my camp-fires blazing merrily away for the night, while Jephson's shone across the water from the opposite shore; and up on the hill-top I could see the lights through the trees round N'Selo, where Stanley's men had taken up their quarters.

Next morning at noon Stanley came down to the far bank, and the work of embarking his men was rapidly commenced, and, steering the boat himself, with Uledi, his Zanzibari coxswain, giving orders to the crew, the first detachment was conveyed across the river.

Every man was safely over by evening; branches were cut, linen cloths strung from them tent-like, and all around us an encampment sprung up as if by magic, where the Zanzibaris ensconced themselves for the night.

At daybreak the camp was raised, tents were struck, loads redistributed to their carriers, and by six a. m. not a soul remained among the sticks and impromptu huts of the Zanzibar encampment. Every one was streaming along in the wake of Stanley on his white donkey. Soudanese soldiers, weakened by fever contracted since their arrival in the damp air of Congo, dragged their long limbs wearily over the unequal path; sick Zanzibaris struggled to keep up with their stronger companions, or despairingly threw themselves down by the bank of some stream, and, in answer to the appeals of their comrades, only shook their heads or despairingly looked at the thin, narrow strip of road winding over some hill-top in front, dipping into the recesses of a wooded valley, only to reappear a mile further on, where the leaders of the column were now beginning to emerge.

On the third day of this weary march we reached the Lulla river, having kept close behind Stanley's march each day, amid the ruck of native carriers with ammunition loads and straggling or sick members of the expedition.

The Lulla was in flood, and it was found necessary to put the boat together to cross this stream, ordinarily only knee-deep, a proceeding which delayed the march almost an entire day.

The next day Stanley reached the Pool and camped on the hill above Leopoldville station, where I found him on my arriving the subsequent evening with the Egyptian flag floating near his tent.

He pointed to it and said: "You see we are an Egyptian expedition, going to relieve an officer of the Khedive's Government"—and then some native chiefs, old friends from Ngalyiema's village near by, came to greet their well-remembered Bula Matadi and see how he looked after four years' absence from the Congo in Mputu—the white man's land.

On the morrow I continued my journey to Kinchasa, where I found the hull of the Florida ready for launching, only requiring the engines to be fitted in her.

Stanley had, however, requisitioned her as she stood from the chief of the Sanford expedition, for the entire flotilla of steamers on Stanley Pool were incapable of holding all the men and loads of the relief expedition, and he wished to use the shell of the Florida as a barge, to fill her with men and loads, and tow her alongside the State steamer Stanley.

For several days during the end of April all was bustle and excitement round the shores of Stanley Pool, loading the various little stern-wheel steamers of the State, and the two missions and at our station, endeavoring to construct a hasty slip to effect the launch of the Florida. All our efforts were in vain; the beams cracked and bent beneath her weight, and the upright supports beneath her sank deep in the mud as we tried to induce the unwieldy frame of steel to glide down the inclined plane of greased logs into the river.

On the following morning Stanley appeared with about two hundred Zanzibaris and accompanied by Stairs, Nelson and Jephson, and after some tremendous shoving and hauling the Florida commenced to move down the slip. Redoubling our exertions, all of us white men lending a hand wherever we could get in an arm or a shoulder to shove, while Stanley stood on the bank and urged on his men by words of encouragement, we at length got the steamer on the run; and, while the beams cracked and bent and the logs sank into the mud as she slid over them, the Florida shot gracefully into the waters of the Congo, where the Stanley speedily took her in tow down to where the expedition loads were being embarked at the Baptist mission station.

On the 30th of April every thing was ready. Swinburne, Troup and I walked down to the mission grounds, about a mile off, to bid good-bye to the members of the expedition and watch their departure for the Aruwimi and the unknown lands which lay beyond it.

At last every thing was complete; the donkeys had with difficulty been got on board the steamship Stanley and her companion, the Florida; the men, Zanzibaris, Soudanese and Somaulis were all in their places on each of the little steamers of the fleet.

Stanley was the last to leave, accompanied by Herbert Ward, in the little Baptist steamer Peace, the only screw-boat then on the Pool, and bidding each of us good-bye as he grasped our hands he stepped on board and waved his cap ere he set his face up river resolutely to think of the great task which lay before him.

Swinburne, Troup and I returned to Kinchasa half an hour later, wondering if we should ever see any of the men again we had parted from that morning.

On reaching Kinchasa, what was our astonishment to find the black crew of the Peace and many Zanzibaris about the station, while we could see the little steamer herself alongside our beach. Hurrying to our dining-room we found Stanley giving some instructions to the engineer of the steamer, and in answer to our:

STANLEY POOL.

"Why, Mr. Stanley, how is this? We thought you were a couple of miles up the Pool." He replied:

"So we ought to have been, but when we just got opposite the station here in the bad water off the islands something broke, and the rudder wouldn't act. We were at the mercy of the stream, and almost drifted on the rocks of the island there.

"I thought we should have to swim for it, and turned to Ward, saying it was time to jump, but luckily we escaped the rocks and were able to get into your beach, Swinburne, and so here we are until to-morrow, I fear.

"The engineers will have to work all night at repairing the damage."

Our little dinner that night was one of the pleasantest of my experiences during my five years in Africa. How well I remember Stanley's bright, agreeable conversation during the meal, how active our little black servant boys were to attend upon the feast, the real—the true Bula Matadi—none of your spurious imitations, but the genuine being who had thrashed their chiefs in many a fight and then "made blood-brothers" with them who had journeyed in lands far up the great river, where fabled dwarfs with top-heavy heads dwelt; or who, in his own land, the distant Mputu, whence the white men came far across the sea, was the King and father of them all! Ah! well, poor little chaps, they were accustomed to hear us talk of Bula Matadi as our leader and settler of our disagreements on the Congo as to how our work should be done, and they naturally thought we must owe allegiance in our own land to this big white chief.

Dinner over, during our coffee and cigars (for we sometimes possess these luxuries down on Stanley Pool) Stanley most graphically described his descent of the great cataract below the Pool—how he had dragged his camels two miles nearly over an island at the mouth of the Gordon-Bennett tributary to avoid the Livingstone rapids, which raged and howled outside the island.

"I wandered for two days along the north bank seeking a place to descend," he said, "but all was a hideous roar of waters tossing their huge waves up one hundred feet from the surface—such a sea of broken billows that the Great Eastern herself would be like a chip of firewood thrown upon it. Lying flat on my face on an overhanging cliff which rose high above this raging, roaring mass of water, I watched it foaming and boiling along far below me. No one else has stood on that cliff, I am sure. It lies hidden away somewhere below the Gordon-Bennett entrance into the Congo, and from it the most magnificent view of the rapids is obtainable."

"GOOD BYE, SNARLEYOW."

I was deeply interested in his graphic description of his descent of the river on that "Dark Continent" journey, and ventured to ask him if he thought a white man could travel through tropical Africa without means, men or armed followers, as Rene Callie did through the Soudan about 1820. He looked at me and replied:

"People have tried that since Callie. There was that German who attempted a somewhat similar journey on the east coast, but did not succeed." Then I saw a smile stealing round the corners of his mouth as he continued.

"You might perform the journey from Matadi to the Pool on stilts, Mr. Casement, and I have no doubt you could accomplish the remainder of the distance on your head, if you liked to devote enough time to it, but what good you would derive from it, or any one else, when you emerged at Zanzibar I don't really know."

With this parting shot Stanley left us for the night, telling Ward to be up early for the morning start.

Next day we were up before the sun, and the repairs on the Peace having been executed during the night, all was once more ready for a start, and by the time we had finished our coffee Ward had marshaled the Zanzibaris, distributed their rations to them through their headmen, and they were getting on board the Peace.

Her whistle blew, the engineer came up to say they were waiting for him, and Mr. Stanley rose to say good-bye, and I accompanied him down the steps of the verandah to the path which led to the river.

Again shaking our hands, he walked some paces towards the steamer, then, as if suddenly remembering something, he turned round, and, shooting a sly glance at me, bowed to my bull-dog, Paddy, who was blinking on the steps, and holding out his hand to him said:

"And good-bye, too, Snarleyow!"

A moment or two later the Peace was shooting out through the rapids round Kinchasa islands, and every quick swirl of her propeller through the water carried the little steamer further and further away out on to the calm, placid expanse of the Pool, whence soon only a thin wreath of smoke served to mark the spot where she struggled to overtake her consorts now steaming with a full day's start up the broad bosom of the Congo.

As the smoke slowly faded away on the horizon we turned away from the beach and were soon busily employed, Swinburne and I, arranging for our coming journey to the upper waters of the Congo.

I waited at Kinchasa until an opportunity offered of traveling up to the Equator Station, some three hundred and fifty miles beyond the Pool, where I took up my quarters while awaiting the arrival of the steamer in which I hoped to be able to penetrate the tributaries of the Congo lying above that point, of which strange stories almost daily reached me of cannibal orgies and raiding tribes who signalized each fresh triumph over their enemies by feasting on the bodies of the prisoners they had captured in the fight.

ROGER CASEMENT.

The Little Men of Africa.

The Akkas are described by Dr. Junker as the only voluntary nomads of the Central African regions. They construct their little cone-shaped grass huts in the shelter of the trees of the woods, and live in a district as long as the chase lasts. They prefer to abide among some tribes and avoid others. The rulers welcome them, and they, being practiced archers and gunning warriors, are employed in the invasion of the territories of neighboring tribes. They possess no industry, and buy even their arrowheads in exchange for meat, the produce of the chase. They are timid and suspicious, and Dr. Junker only once saw about one hundred and fifty of them together. They can not properly be described as dwarfs, but only as relatively very small men.—Phrenological Journal.

AMERICAN RESEARCH.

What the Smithsonian Institution Is Doing for Science.

Although our General and State governments do little or nothing for the practical advancement of art, the report of the secretary of the Smithsonian Institution at Washington shows that our Government is not deaf to the demands of science. In 1846 this institution was established through the bequest was formally accepted by Congress, and still years later before a definite plan of organization was adopted. Since that time the original bequest has increased by natural action and by two small bequests to something over $700,000. This is the total amount of the permanent fund of the Smithsonian Institution, which is deposited in the Treasury of the United States, and bears interest at the rate of six per cent. per annum. When one becomes aware of the great work and extensive investigations in channels of practical science which the institution performs, this endowment, in comparison with that of some of the colleges of our country, seems pitifully small. Were it not, therefore, for the fact that the institution is regarded by our Government as its ward, and provides by annual appropriations for its maintenance, the cause which it promotes would be but a slight gainer through its endeavors. The last Congress appropriated for the continuance of the scientific researches of the institution and for its maintenance, for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1880, various sums, amounting in the aggregate to $233,000. Although these appropriations do not approach in liberality those made by the British Government for the cause of art, yet by their judicious use the secretary and regents of the institution have been enabled to do much during the past year for the cause of science. The museum, through the energy of the management, and by a judicious system of exchanges, has grown to be one of the most valuable in existence. The department of zoology has of late years received much attention, and to-day an interesting and valuable collection of living animals of this and other countries is available for the inspection of the public and for purposes of scientific study. Under the patronage of the institution, although not wholly at its expense, explorations have been undertaken in various distant parts of the world, with a view of studying the botany, geology and archæology of those regions and of collecting specimens for the enrichment of the National Museum. Perhaps the most interesting of these explorations has been undertaken by Talcott Williams, of Philadelphia, who has visited the northern countries of Africa and made inquiries, in the interest of the Smithsonian Institution, in regard to the civilization of the modern Arabs and the history of that region. Under the auspices of the institution Dr. J. M. Crawford, the lately-appointed Consul-General of the United States at St. Petersburg, is to conduct special researches into the traditions and antiquities of the Finnish race and related peoples. It was with especial reference to Dr. Crawford's ability to conduct these researches with success that his appointment was made; an additional evidence of the interest of our Government in the cause of science. The rapidly-growing interest of the people of our country in the work of the Smithsonian Institution is evinced by the remarkable demand which has risen for its publications.—Boston Traveler.

THE LION-TAMER'S [illegible]T.

Nerve Is the Sole Cause of His Authority Over His Beasts.

The boldest individuals, who put their heads two or three times a day into the lion's mouth, have told me that the best way to withdraw it from the gulf is, first of all, not to open the acquaintanceship with this experiment, and, secondly, to perform it with great nerve. Nerve, that is the great secret of the lion-tamer, the sole cause of his authority over his beasts. When he has studied a subject for some time, endeavoring to master its character—and among the higher animals the character is very individual, very accentuated—one morning the man quietly walks into the cage. He must astonish the beast and overawe him at once. As to the training, it consists—and here I quote the words of an expert in such matters—in commanding the lion to perform the exercises which please him; that is to say, to make him execute from fear of the whip those leaps which he would naturally take in his wild state.

There is one fact which no one would suspect—that it is easier to train an adult lion taken in a snare than an animal born in a menagerie. The lion of the booth is in the same position as sporting dogs which play much with children; they are soon spoiled for work. Pezon possesses five or six lions which he has brought up by hand. As a rule they live with the staff of the menagerie on terms of perfect familiarity, but this frequently leads to tragic accidents. Lions, even lions in a fair, will devour a man in fine style. Can I say that the fear of such an accident is ever sufficiently strong to make me pause on the threshold of a menagerie? No. I cherish, and like me, you also cherish, the hope that some day perhaps we may see a lion-tamer eaten. This contingency sometimes occurs, in fact more often than is usually supposed. For instance, without leaving the Pezon menagerie, it is not a year since the proprietor narrowly escaped being devoured by his bear Groom, at Chalons-sur-Marne. He would have perished if his son Adrian Pezon had not thrown himself, saber in hand, between the two combatants and killed the bear on the spot.—Acrobats and Mountebanks.

Why He Thought So.

Landlord (to tenant who is very delinquent in paying rent)—I am very sure you played foot-ball while at college.

Mr. Owehim—What makes you imagine that, sir?

Landlord—Simply because you are always a quarter-back.—Harvard Lampoon.

DEAD TO THE WORLD.

Nunneries Which Are Closed Even to Priests and Bishops.

A severe order near enough to Brooklyn to have its workings observed by visitors is the Sisters of St. Dominic, of the convents at Newark, N. J., and Hunt's Point, N. Y.

This order is one of the strictest in the church and the Hunt's Point House will be a branch of the convent established in Newark, N. J., by Archbishop Corrigan when he was Bishop of that see. The sisters are strictly cloistered and see visitors through a double grill, there being at least a foot and a half space between the two lattices, and they keep their faces vailed while talking. Their dress consists of a white flannel habit and a black vail. They wear the habit day and night. They sleep in a narrow cell, the furniture of which consists of a wooden bed with a husk mattress and a pillow, a wooden table, a large crucifix and statue of the Blessed Virgin and a wooden washbowl. They go to bed at 8:30 o'clock and rise at midnight to sing the matins of the office, in Latin, until two a. m.; then they go back to bed until 5:40 a. m., when they attend mass and sing another part of the office until eight o'clock. Breakfast is next served. It consists of a cup of black coffee and a piece of bread. This disposed of they retire to their cells until 8:40 o'clock, when they assemble in the community-room to work until 11:30. A dinner of vegetables, fish or eggs, and bread is next eaten. They never use meat. The table furniture is of wood—both forks and spoons. Every thing they eat must be begged by the lay sisters. From one to two p. m., they keep silence, and then work and the chanting of the office take up the rest of the afternoon. After supper they sing vespers and then go to bed at half-past eight o'clock. No outsiders, not even the lay sisters, are allowed inside the cloister, and the Bishop can enter only once a year. The doors all have double locks, one on the inside and the other on the outside of the inclosure. Any Catholic who enters the cloister without permission incurs excommunication. The chaplain or priest can not enter the part of the chapel where the nuns are. Even the Bishop when the inmates are electing their superior must take the votes at the grill. In case of sickness, when it is necessary to call a priest or doctor to the cell, they have to be accompanied by two of the elder sisters. Otherwise no one ever crosses the line of the cloister. The visitation nuns of the Clinton avenue convent in this city observe these strict prohibitions of the cloister in a modified manner, so as to be able to teach. The Dominican nuns keep up a perpetual adoration of the Blessed Sacrament in their chapel, two of them kneeling before the altar in prayer day and night. This takes thirty-five sisters. In addition to this perpetual prayer the work these nuns do consist in embroidering vestments and making altar linen. They wear a peculiar kind of shoe made of hemp, which they manufacture themselves.

As in dress and objects of the several orders their methods of receiving postulants also differ, but they are essential features common to all. The cutting of the hair is done in all orders, and in a most ancient custom. From the primitive times when a virgin consecrated herself to God, her hair was cut off. This ceremony is mentioned in the lives of St. Syncletica (fourth century) and St. Gerthrude of Nivelle (seventh century). Nuns take solemn vows binding for life, but members of the modern communities, like the Sisters of Charity, St. Joseph, etc., take vows only for a year and renew them annually on some special day. In the ceremony of profession the novice is covered with a pall to signify her death to the world, while the choir and attending nuns chant the De Profundis and a Te Deum. That is what probably gave rise to the question about the coffin. In Rome there is a contemplative order so strictly cloistered that they are called Sepulta Viva—the buried alive—so dead are they to every thing in the outside world.—Brooklyn Eagle.

URBAN POPULATION.

The Growth of Cities Compared with That of the Whole Country.

Mr. Albert B. Hart has an interesting and instructive article on American cities in the current number of the Quarterly Journal of Economics. The article shows that the rapid development of cities in this country lies chiefly within the last forty years. The population of the United States since 1790 has been increased by sixteen times; and during the same period, taking 8,000 persons under a single local government as the definition of a city, the number of cities has been increased by sixty times, and the urban population by one hundred and sixty times. In 1850 the number of cities having an average population of 35,000 was only 85; in 1860 the number was 141; in 1870 it was 226; and in 1880 it was 286 with an average population of 39,500. In 1790 the urban population of the country was about one-thirtieth of the whole; in 1860 it was about one-sixth; and in 1880 it was nearly one-fourth of the whole.

These figures show a remarkable growth of cities and city populations, as compared with the growth of the whole country. One of the causes of this result has been the large immigration to the United States within the last forty years, and the general tendency of immigrants to crowd into cities rather than disperse themselves in rural districts and devote themselves to agriculture. This rapid increase of cities carries along with it a corresponding increase in their political power, and makes the problem of good city government for local purposes one of increasing difficulty. The key to the future in respect to city government, as Mr. Hart thinks, is a thorough system of popular education by which "right examples and right principles" shall be widely instilled "into the minds of children." Our public school system aims to attain this end, and is the best practical agency for the purpose. More stringent naturalization laws, as called for by the President, are also of great importance.—N. Y. Independent.

THE LOVE OF HUMBUG.

How the Human Family Is Beguiled by Shams and Pretenders.

If one may be indulged in the use of a little slang, it makes a wise man tired to see how persistently his compeers run after and are beguiled by the latest shams, and seem never so happy as when they are being deceived. Especially is this trait noticeable in the matter of physical ailments. The family physician may measure out his prescribed doses of quinine or senna, give the patient a plain, practical talk, and depart with the consciousness of duty done and the certainty that the subject will leave the powders untouched on the mantel, unless he becomes frightened, and that his reputation as a physican will suffer in consequence. But let some traveling fakir come along, pitch his tent, swing out his flag, with ringing of bells and blowing of horns, and lo! the public is at his feet ready to be healed, willing to swallow the most nauseous mixtures, if only they be christened with unpronounceable and untranslatable names, anxious to pay double the fees of a respectable, responsible physician, and bold to assert after a week's diet of bread pills and rain water sweetened with molasses, that they are perfectly cured of imagined ailments, and are urgent that their friends shall share in their good fortune.

Science doesn't always receive the support of the universal public; humbuggery does. The street wizard, with tangled hair and picturesque garb, can extract teeth painlessly by the same process which nearly murders the patient if performed by an educated dentist, dressed in nineteenth century clothes and located in a well-appointed office. The noble aborigine, in war paint and feathers, dealing out mystic oils, will carry off all the spare change of a community, while the village physician grows poverty-stricken. The dealers in patent medicines roll in wealth; the vailed sibyl who prescribes to her mystified devotees from a darkened closet, gathers in the shekels; and if the commonplace physician means to hold his own he will soon be compeled to label his vials with cabalistic characters, consecrate them with mystic passes and mutter "abracadabra" over them as he gives them into the patient's hand. The common sense which a man uses in the selection of a suitable coat or hat seems to desert him utterly when any trifling ailment attacks him. His intellect wavers, and superstition, that cunning fiend always lying in wait for humanity, betrays him unresisting into the toils of the mountebank. We can not change human nature with our exordiums, but we can at least make it alive to its own weaknesses and inconsistencies.—Milwaukee Sentinel.

Lounges for the Representatives.

The lounges of the house are to many congressmen the most important part of its furniture. They get together in twos and threes upon them, and I have seen members during a prosy session opening their mouths wide and snoring as they lay there. There are twelve of these lounges, six on each side of the house chamber, back in the corner and near the fire. They are of black walnut and oak, with spring beds, upholstered in green leather, which is well worn with the bodies of the many statesmen who lie and sit upon them daily.

—The fast fishes, according to Prof. G. B. Goode, are of pointed build with close-lying fins, and are frequently predacious. Food fishes, on the other hand, are often slow, and easily caught, but are correspondingly prolific. The actual speed of fishes is not as yet well known; but as dolphins have been observed to swim round and round a steamer going at full speed, their pace is estimated at twenty miles an hour or more.

—Quicksilver ore in layers was discovered in the year 1879 at a place called Nikitowka, in Russia. It is a station on the Kursk-Charkow-Asow railway. In 1885 a company was formed for working this ore, and work commenced in the following year. Thus, since April, 1886, or thereabouts, the production of quicksilver has become a new branch of mining industry in that country, which promises to give fairly satisfactory results.

—Every one knows that daltonism consists in color blindness in regard to certain hues, says the Transatlantic. According to the researches of Dr. Albertini, this daltonism is accompanied by a corresponding deafness toward certain musical notes. Those persons who have not the sensation of red can not distinguish the note sol; those blind to green can not recognize re: and to this lack of perception in hearing is added the incapacity to produce the notes mentioned by means of the vocal apparatus.

—In Chemnitz, Germany, weavers of ticking get $1.50 per week, fustian weavers $2, sewers $1.25, corsetmakers twenty to twenty-five cents per day. At Bremen male weavers earn from $3 to $3.73 a week, women at $1.25 to $2. In Silecia the average falls to twenty-nine cents per day. Berlin engineers make from seventy-five cents to $1 per day. Workers in glassware and porcelain make less than seventy cents per day. These figures are from a report of the Chemnitz Chamber of Commerce.

LITTLE'S
CHEMICAL FLUID
NON-POISONOUS
SHEEP DIP.

One gallon, mixed with 00 gallons of cold water will dip thoroughly 180 sheep, at a cost of 1 cent each. Easily applied; a nourisher of Wool; a certain cure for SCAB. Also,

Little's Patent Powder Dip,
(Poisonous.)

Mixes instantly with water. Prevents the fly from striking. In a 2-pound package there is sufficient to dip twenty sheep, and in a 7-pound package there is sufficient to dip one hundred sheep.

CATTON, BELL & CO.
SUCCESSORS TO FALKNER, BELL & CO.
Office, 406 California St. and Wool Agency Warehouse, cor. 6th and Townsend Sts.
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

C. Mulholland,
EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.
PUBLISHED EVERY FRIDAY

INDEPENDENCE, CAL

FRIDAY MAY 16..... 1890

County Official Paper.

The general bebate on the Tariff bill has ended, to the relief of the country. The kind of speeches which were delivered during the four days discussion were excellent campaign thunder, but they convince nobody. When the Mills bill was under consideration the Democrats allowed twenty-three days for general debate. The Republicans allowed only three days on the McKinley bill, but there will not be much complaint about that. The country is anxious to see the real fun, and that is now to begin. When Mr. McKinley and his allies begin to explain the fearful and wonderful schedules of their bill in detail there will be music in the air. Beating the party gong will not be sufficient then. There will be Republicans to satisfy then as well as Democrats. Mr. McKenna will want to know about sugar; the Kansas delegation will have some questions to ask concerning silver lead ores and Mr. Carter of Montana will have some remarks to make about hides. The House began this week to discuss the subject of chemicals, and on the very first day Mr. McKinley had to tell why he put a duty of a quarter of a cent a pound on sulphuric acid, a substance that is essential in the preparation of artificial fertilizers, and that must be kept cheap if the Eastern farmers are to keep even the little money they make now. The chemical schedule contains ninety-six items and every one of them will require more or less agonized explanation. When this is disposed of Mr. McKinley's troubles will only have begun. Earthenware and glassware will come next, and the author of the Chicago platform will have to explain his reasons for increasing the duty on cheap window glass used by the poor, almost doubling that on a grade used by people in moderate circumstances, and running upon the tax on lamp chimneys from 45 to 450 per cent., all for the benefit of a trust that is making 20 per cent. clear profit on its capital. There are 475 items in the dutiable schedules of the bill. If dissatisfied Republicans carry out half the threats they have been freely making Mr. McKinley's hair will be white before he gets to the 475th. Perhaps he can whip the recalcitrants into line, but the country is likely to have plenty of fun in the process.

Coon, Chinese inspector at San Diego, has reported to the Secretary of the Treasury that he regards it as an impossibility to prevent the continuance of smuggling Chinamen across the Mexican border, and that it is backed up by capital in China and San Francisco.

OFFICIAL.

Auditor's Report.

Quarterly report of the County Auditor of Inyo county, Cal., for the Quarter ending Apr. 30th 1890

Apr. 30	Exhibit showing the amount of warrants drawn and registered and upon what funds since Jan. 31, 1890, date of last report (Inyo county, (sum total of warrants) drawn.....	$10,867 15
	Bishop Creek S D B Fund 169 86
	Warm Springs " " 14 26
	Union S D B Fund..... 275 02
	Big Pine S. D. B. Fund.. 2 53 50
	General Exp. Fund..... 1,082 53
	Salary Fund..... 3,370 74
	School Fund..... 4,436 47
	Bridge Fund..... 387 00
	Hospital Fund..... 325 00
	Rd. Dist. No. 2 Fund.... 45 00
	" " " 3 " 48 00
	" " " 4 " 83 75
	" " " 5 " 292 02
	" " " 6 Fund.... 27 00
	" " " 7 " 27 00
	$10,867 15 $10,867 15
Apr. 30	Exhibit showing the amount of indebtedness of Inyo county, interest not included and how distributed among the various Funds.
	Inyo County.....	$73,579 17
	Inyo Co. Bonds 1884 70,500 00
	Salary Fund..... 1,156 98
	School Fund..... 819 84
	General Expense 111 80
	General Fund .....old 948 25
	Expense Fund.....old 42 30
	$73,579 17 73,579 17
Apr. 30.	Exhibit showing present financial condition of Inyo county, Interest not included Inyo county (total indebtedness)	$73,579 17
	Less cash, in County Treasurer's hands subject to pay indebtedness $31,542 64
	Rem'n'g Indebtedness 42,035 53
	$73,579 17 $73 579 17

Respectfully submitted to the Board of Supervisors of Inyo County.

P. H. MACK,
County Auditor.

Examined, accepted and approved this 9th day of May, 1890, by the Board of Supervisors.

E. ROBINSON,
Chairman.

OFFICIAL.

Treasurer's Report.

Office of County Treasurer.

To the Hon. Board of Supervisors of Inyo county, California:

Gentlemen—I herewith hand you my report of County Financial Affairs for the Quarter commencing Feb. 1st, 1890 and ending with Apr. 30th, 1890.

	Cash Balance last report	$39,648 09
1890	Receipts—
	State Coml Ber..... $ 579 35
	C & C. R. R. taxes.. 2821 38
	State school money.. 4805 01
	Independence Sch B F 60 00
	J R Eldred Tax Col.. 640 12
	Recorder's fees..... 53 00
	Clerk's fees..... 11 75
	Sheriff's fees..... 15 00
	Tax Collector 13 88
	J H Shannon 8 00
	Road P Tax Dist No 6. 51 00
	John Bamber, interest on school land 44 80
	M s L Saylor, redemp prop sold State..... 19 64
	Road P Tax Dist N 4. 5 10
Mar. 3	J R Eldred, taxes 2851 57
	Clerk's fees 20 50
	Recorder's fees 57 25
	Auditor's fees..... 2 00
	Tax Collector..... 134 39
	W. H. Graham, State land..... 44 80
20	J H. Powers, State land..... 11 20
Apr. 1	Tax Collector..... 1234 67
	Assessor 2 28 01
	State school lands.... 149 86
	Office fees..... 397 54
	Total receipts	$53 817 93
Feb 1	Disbursements—
	Settlement with State..... $11,483 79
	" " R g S l..... 9 00
	Independence Schl Bd Fund, Bonds Nos. 4, 5, 5 ..... 750 00
	16 Int coupons, $17 50 each. 280 00
	Warm Springs Schl Bd Fund Bond No. 2 ..... 300 00
	4 Int. coupons, $21 each..... 84 00
	Warrant to John Daly..... 14 26
	Sundry Schl Dist Fund..... 17 82
	Gen Exp Fund—
	Mrs Keppler 30 00
	Independence Water Co 12 00
	J. W. Murphy..... 17 50
	A W E beltutz..... 324 45
	O. I. Mairs..... 26 78
	A. W. Eberhutz..... 38 79
	J J. Moore..... 1 80
	Nathan Rhine..... 45 53
	L. Wood..... 13 25
	P H Mack 9 50
	G. M Gill..... 5 00
	J R. Eldred..... 24 25
	John Keegan..... 18 00
	J. W Claussed 56 00
	C. S. Swan..... 24 21
	T B Scovil..... 23 50
	Tyler Parker..... 15 00
	W. A. Chaffant..... 42 50
	A. Carlisle & Co..... 84 05
	P. A. Chaffant..... 25 24
	C. Mulholland..... 130 38
	Hospital Fund—
	I J. Goodin..... 160 00
	Mrs M. Lewis..... 125 00
	T. J. Richards..... 40 00
	Salary fund..... 1,148 78
	P. H Mack.....$216 66
	J. J Moore 83 33
	J. R Eldred..... 416 66
	P. A Chaffant.... 75 00
	G. M Gill..... 75 00
	J. H Shannon ... 33 33
	J. D Harger..... 32 10
	S G Sneden..... 43 80
	J. J Stewart..... 34 80
	J. C Eddy 34 80
	E Robinson..... 18 30
	Jno A Hannah.. 125 00
	Various Road Districts..... 522 77
	No 2, W H Powers $ 45 00
	" 3, M S McLeod 48 00
	" 4, S M Murry 83 75
	" 5, W James.. 292 02
	" 6, G H Palmer 27 00
	" 7, J C Eddy.. 24 00
	" 7, C A Anthony 3 00
	Bishop Schl Dist. Bldg fund . 169 86
	Big Pine " " " " .. 214 00
	Union " " " " .. 285 02
	County School fund..... 12 00
	Bond fund, 23 coupons..... 402 50
	School District funds—
	Union 155 88
	Lone Pine 243 62
	Independence..... 150 00
	Milton..... 160 00
	Fish Spring..... 191 50
	Big Pine..... 136 62
	Warm Springs 105 35
	Station 170 73
	Bishop Creek..... 295 20
	Irving..... 207 00
	Round Valley..... 204 10
	Darwin..... 90 01
Mar.	Salary fund..... 1,024 98
	P. H. Mack $216 66
	J. J. Moore..... 83 33
	J R Eldred..... 416 66
	Geo M Gill..... 75 00
	P A Chaffant.... 75 00
	J H Shannon 33 33
	John A. Hannah.. 125 00
	Sundry School Dist funds.... 1,491 85
	Bridge & S hool Bldg fund.... 69 50
	Bridge fund..... 395 10
	Sundry School Lib fd for journl 12 00
Apr.	salary fund..... 1,156 98
	P. H. Mack.....$216 66
	J. J. Moore..... 83 33
	J R Eldred..... 416 66
	Geo. M. Gill..... 75 00
	P A Chaffant.... 150 00
	J. H. Shannon.... 33 33
	J. D Harger 29 10
	S G Sneden..... 19 80
	E Robinson..... 6 30
	J. J. Stewart..... 10 80
	John A Hannah.. 125 00
	Gen Exp Fund..... 121 80
	Sundry School Library funds.. 43 34
	Sundry School Dist. funds.... 904 96	$24 440 09
	Balance Cash on hand May 1..	$29 337 84

Total Balance for Quarter ending Apr. 30, 1890

To the State General Fund.....	$1 519 52
Salary "	7,073 45
General Expense "	4,813 06
Hospital "	951 84
Bond "	3 922 45
County Road, "	30 01
Floating Debt "	112 29
General Road "	755 57
To the various Road District Funds:
No 1	$110 44
No 2	152 22
No 3	185 85
No 4	65 08
No 5	82 24
No. 6	227 38
No 7	68 16	891 35
County School fund.....		89 92
To the various School Dist. Funds:
Round Valley	$363 69
Irving	221 38
Bishop Creek	703 88
Station	170 30
Warm Springs	167 94
Big Pine	200 24
Milton	138 81
Independence	158 89
Fish Spring	158 45
Union	326 37
Lone Pine	415 92	2985 88
To the various school Dist. Library Funds:
Milton	$104 77
Round Valley	49 89
Irving	59 14
Bishop	49 00
Station	44 40
Warm Springs	48 11
Big Pine	130 50
Independence	118 12	597 93
Darwin School Dist. Fund.....		148 00
Darwin Library "		48 45
Bishop Creek S D Bld "		285 94
Fish Springs Library "		27 24
Bishop S D B Fund, new.....		1246 78
Big Pine " "		1233 61
Irving " "		02
Union " "		196 78
To the Bridge Fund.....		409 21
Institute "		37 00
Teachers Library Fund.....		6 00
Coroner's " "		53 60
Rebate Fund		152 56
Unapportioned Property Tax Fund.....		62 56
Swamp Land Fund.....		1195 38
Union School Dist. Library Fund..		11 44
Lone Pine " " " " ..		49 92
Warm Spring " " " ..		421 77
Independence " " " ..		54 23
Cash account, Bal. on hand.....		$29 377 84
		$29,377 86 $29,377 86

J. J. MOORE,
County Treasurer.

Subscribed and sworn to before me this 5th day of May, 1890

P. H. MACK,
County Auditor.
By H. C. WHIPPLE, Deputy.

Examined, accepted and approved by the Board of Supervisors this 9th day of May 1889

E. ROBINSON,
Chairman.

OFFICIAL.

Application for Patent.

Mining Application No. 247.

UNITED STATES LAND OFFICE,
INDEPENDENCE, CAL.,
April 25, 1890.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT PATRICK Reddy, whose post office address is San Francisco, California, has this day filed his application for a patent for fourteen hundred and forty-eigh and seven-tenths linear feet of the Bernon Quartz Mine or vein bearing galena, lead and silver, with surface ground six hundred feet in width, situated in Coso Mining District, County of Inyo and State of California and designated by the field notes and official plat on file in this office as Lot No. 42, in Township 19 South, Range No. 40 East, of Mt. Diablo Base and Meridian.

Said Lot No. 42 being described as follows, to wit:

Survey of Connecting Line:

Commencing at corner common to Sections 14, 15, 22 and 23 of T 19 S., R. 40 E., M. D. B. and M., and running with Mag. Var. of 15 deg. 37 min. E. as follows:

N. 73 deg. 52 min. E., Needle varying along the line from N. 58 1-8 deg. E. to N. 58 3-8 deg. E, Magnetic. 71.99 chs to the S W cor. post of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine, being the S. L. cor. of the Bernon claim.

Survey of the Exterior Boundaries:

Commencing at a stake in high stone Mont. having pencil marks too dim to be read, being the S. W. cor. of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine, and the S. E. cor. of the Bernon claim, thence deflecting L. 180 deg. 86 deg. 57 min. from connecting line extended N. 73 deg 52 min. E. as assumed standard bearing of the survey, upon West boundary line of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine and East boundary line of the Bernon claim, and running as follows: 1. N. 19 deg. 11 min. W., upon East boundary of claim, local variation of declination of 0 deg. 18 min. E., 9.99 chs to summit of limestone reef; 1.95 chs crossing high reef of limestone, 1.93 chs; whence bears S. 70 34 deg., W. 0.45 chs., face of open cut five feet wide. 1. N. 19 deg. 11 min., W. 4.09 chs, centre of ravine bearing Easterly 7.42 chs, summit of high croppings of lime rock; whence bears N. 59 degrees 11 min. W 4.51 chs centre incline prospect shaft 15 ft deep, no marks, 10.14 chs to centre of wash bearing Easterly from summit towards Defiance Works; 10.90 chs to old stake in high stone Mont. marked in pencil as follows: — of Bernon and Defiance Ledge—surveyed by Joseph Seely, U. S. M. Surveyor; being the side line Mont. of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine; 719.7 ft., or 11 36 chs., S 1 2 by 4 post in mound of stone marked Defiance West line and Bernon East line; whence bears N. 35 deg. 19 min. E. 1.28 chs. centre of incline prospect cut 12 ft. deep; whence bears N. 70 deg. 49 min E 0.76 chs centre of small prospect cut, whence bears N 79 deg. 07 min. E 5.57 chs centre of mouth of Defiance and Bernon Tunnel; whence bears N. 79 deg. 45 min. W. 2 43 chs. the face of Defiance and Bernon Tunnel; 14.59 chs centre of wash leading Easterly; 15.61 chs; whence bears N 70 deg. 49 min. E 0 03 chs an old stake in stone Mont. having Seely's name in pencil and other marks too dim to be read, being a side-line Mont. of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine; 1. N. 19 deg. 11 min. W 16.18 chs summit of ridge bearing Easterly; 20.31 chs, whence bears S 42 deg. 04 min. W. 1.76 chs a stake in stone Mont. marked Kerso Ledge, S W cor. Post No. 6; whence bears S 42 deg. 04 min. E. 6.31 chs a stake in stone Mont. marked Kerso Ledge N E Post; whence bears N 35 deg. 45 min E 2.41 chs a stake in stone Mont. marked Kerso centre point 1448.7 ft., or 21.95 chs. to stake in stone Mont., no marks, being the N W cor. of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine, set 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon N E cor. No. 1, and Defiance N W cor. No. 4; thence deflecting L. 90 deg. from Co. 1 extended N. 19 deg. 11 min. W making interior angle 90 deg. ran; 2 S. 70 deg. 49 min. W upon the North boundary line of the Bernon claim; local variation of declination of 0 deg. 18 min. E, 2, S 70 deg. 49 min, W 0.30 chs centre old sled road from summit of hill, 1.09 chs, whence bears N 60 deg. 07 min., W 3.06 chs a stake in stone Mont. being the Northerly end of Lode line and centre of Hidalgo claim, 2.10 chs whence bears N 79 deg. 57 min. W 0.61 chs the centre of Hidalgo incline shaft, 4.07 chs, crossing summit of Darwin Range, whence bears S 19 deg 31 min. E 2.91 chs. centre small shaft 300 ft or 4.545 chs, set 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked, Bernon L. L. P. No. 1; being the Northerly end of Lode Line and centre of Bernon claim, 7.86 chs centre mouth of tunnel bearing Northerly 600 ft, or 9.09 chs, set a 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon N W Cor. No. 4, being the N W Cor. of the Bernon claim; thence deflecting L 90 deg. from Co. 2 extended S 70 deg. 49 min. W making the interior angle 90 deg. and ran 3, S 19 deg. 11 min. E upon West boundary line of Bernon Claim, local variation of declination of 0 deg. 18 min. E, 0.15 chs centre wash bearing Westerly 4.07 chs, summit of ridge bearing Westerly, 9.01, center deep gulch bearing Westerly 10.14 chs, whence bears S 28 deg. 47 min. W 9.19 chs a stone Mont. being the S E cor. of the Hidalgo Claim; whence bears S 56 deg. 51 min. W 11.17 chs a stone Mont. being the Southerly end of Hidalgo Lode Line; whence bears S 16 deg. 25 min. W 12.46 chs a stone Mont. being the S W Cor. of the Hidalgo Claim 3, S 19 deg. 11 min. E 15 25 chs, summit of spur bearing Westerly, 14.61 chs, crossing head of wash bearing Westerly 16.28 chs, summit of spur bearing Westerly 18.09 chs, whence bears N 86 deg. 28 min. E 3.32 chs the centre of mouth of Carry Tunnel, No. 1, whence bears N 84 deg. 20 min. E 4.22 chs the centre of mouth of Carry Tunnel No. 2, whence bears N 56 deg. 46 min. E 2.71 chs the centre of mouth of Carry Tunnel, No. 3, 21 65 chs, centre of ravine bearing Westerly, 21.47 chs, intersection with connecting line; whence bears S 73 deg. 52 min. W 62.89 chs the corner common to Sections 14, 15, 22 and 23 of T 19 S, R 40 E, M D B and M, 1448.7 ft, or 21 95 chs, in south side of ravine, set 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon S W Cor. No. 3, being the S W Cor. of the Bernon Claim; thence deflecting L 90 deg. from Co. 3, extended S 19 deg. 11 min. E, making interior angle 90 deg. and ran; 4, N 70 deg. 49 min. E, upon South boundary line of Bernon, local variation of declination of 0 deg. 03 min. E, 1.26 chs, edge of ravine, 2.41 chs edge of spur bearing Westerly 3.00 ft, or 4.545 chs, set 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon L. L. P. No. 2, being the Southerly end of Lode Line and centre of claim, 7.46 chs, crossing high reef of lime rock, 4, N 70 deg. 49 min. E, 600 ft, or 9.09 chs back to place of beginning, and set a 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon S E Cor., No. 2, and Defiance S W Cor., No. 3.

Containing 19.95 acres.

Survey of Lode Line.

Commencing at the L. L., P., No. 1, of Claim and deflecting thence L. 90 deg. from Co. 2, extended S 70 deg. 49 min W, making the interior angle 90 deg. ran, 5, S, 19 deg. 11 min. E, upon lode line; ascending 3.94 chs, whence bears S 74 deg. 41 min. W 2.91 chs a stone Mont. claimed to be the centre of Hidalgo Claim; whence bears S 72 deg. 36 min. E, 0.71 chs centre small shaft; descending; 10.30 chs, whence bears S 70 deg. 49 min. W 0.30 chs centre prospect hole 11.82 chs, whence bears N 70 deg. 49 min. E 0.50 chs centre incline shaft 60 ft deep. Ascending; 13.03 chs, summit of spur bearing Westerly. Descending; 13.36 chs, whence bears S 70 deg. 06 min. E, 0.80 chs centre shaft 45 ft deep, 14.41 chs, whence bears S 70 deg. 49 min. W 0.10 chs centre mouth of tunnel, 16.66 chs, whence bears S 70 deg. 49 min. W 0.12 chs centre shaft 6 ft deep 1448 ft, or 21.94 chs to L. L. P., No. 2, of Claim.

Magnetic variation 15 deg. 37 min. E containing 19 95 acres.

THE LOCATION of this mine is recorded in the Recorder's office of Coso Mining District in Book C of page 136. The adjoining claimant is the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. mine.

Any and all persons claiming adversely any portion of said Bernon Quartz mine or surface ground are required to file their adverse claims with the Register of the United States Land Office at Independence in the State of California during the sixty days period of publication hereof, or they will be barred by virtue of the provisions of the Statute.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD,
o-n24 Register.

INDEPENDENCE

SHAVING SALOON.

Shaving, Hair-Cutting, etc., done in the best manner.

WM. H. HUFF, Prop'r

MISCELLANEOUS.

J. R. ELDRED,
Sheriff and Tax-Collector.
INYO CO., CAL.

P. H. MACK,
COUNTY CLERK,
—AND—
Ex-officio Auditor and Recorder,
INYO CO., CAL.

GEO. M. GILL,
District Attorney,
INYO CO., CAL.

J. J. MOORE,
County Treasurer,
INYO CO., CAL.

S. P. M'KNIGHT, C. E.
COUNTY SURVEYOR
—AND—
U. S. Deputy Mineral Surveyor
For California and Nevada.
—BISHOP CREEK, INYO CO., CAL.—
The obtaining of United States mineral patents a specialty.
All kinds of surveying given the most careful and accurate attention.

JUSTICE OF PEACE,
C. MULHOLLAND.
Office in the "INDEPENDENT" Building, Independence, Inyo County, Cal.

A. R. CONKLIN,
Attorney-at-Law.
Independence, Cal.
Will practice in all the Courts of the States of California and Nevada.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
Independence, Cal.

P. W. FORBES,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW.
NOTARY PUBLIC.
Cases in U. S. Land Office a Specialty.
BISHOP, INYO COUNTY, CALIFORNIA.

IRVING J. WOODIN, M D.,
Physician & Surgeon,
(COUNTY PHYSICIAN)
Louise L. Woodin, M. D.
PHYSICIAN & SURGEON.
NIGHT CALLS ATTENDED.
Office and residence at the Reddy place, Independence.

W. H. GEORGE, M. D.,
Physician and Surgeon,
Bishop Creek, Cal.,
Offers his professional services to the people of Bishop Creek and vicinity. Office and residence opposite Andrew Clark's.

F. E. Bunting, M. D.
Physician & Surgeon
LONE PINE, CAL
OFFICE IN GELCICH BUILDING
All calls attended to immediately.

Lodge 221, F. & A. M.
Regular meetings of Lodge No. 221, F. & A. M., for the year 1889, will be held at the Lodge room at Independence as follows:
Saturday ..... February 1st
" .....March 1st
" .....March 29th
" .....May 3rd
" .....May 31st
" .....June 28th
" .....July 26th
" .....August 30th
" .....September 27th
" .....October 25th
" .....November 22nd
" .....December 20th
P. H. MACK, W. M.
C. MULHOLLAND Sec.

P. W FORBES. P. H. MACK.
MACK & FORBES.
Real Estate Agents,
Address,
P. H. MACK, Independence, Cal.
P. W. FORBES, Bishop, Cal.

FRED BURCKHARDT
Watchmaker & Jeweler,
LONE PINE, CAL.
Time pieces of all descriptions repaired and regulated, satisfaction guaranteed. Jewelry made to order. Firearms repaired and loaded.
All orders from any part of the country will be promptly attended to, at the most reasonable charges. At the old stand "Mechanics' Hall," Lone Pine.
FRED BURKHARDT.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CROCKER'S HOTEL.
BIG PINE - CAL
New House.
New Furniture.
Low Rates
Splendid hunting and fishing near by, in act, it is a veritable paradise for tourists and pleasure seekers.
Special attention given to the wants of every guest.
CROCKER BROS., Props.
sep1-tf

ANTONS SALOON
KEELER, CAL.
BEER, WINES, LIQUORS and CIGARS
All kinds of Fancy Drinks, including pure water. A comfortable and pleasant Hall.
JOHN C. ANTON. Prop.

Pioneer
Livery & Feed Stables.
INDEPENDENCE, CAL.
Having returned and resumed the management of the above well known feed and livery stables, patrons can be assured of finding there the best of Buggy Teams, Saddle Horses, and
Livery Accommodations
in general. Also, Hay and Grain for sale by the pound or ton.
O. I. MAIRS, Proprietor.

E. H. Edwards,
—DEALER IN—
General Merchandise,
LONE PINE,
INYO COUNTY - - - CALIFORNIA.

Inyo
Freighting Company.
REGULAR LINE
Mojave To Bishop.
Teams leave Mojave and Bishop weekly. Goods delivered with regularity at all points on the line. Consign goods to the Company at Mojave.

J. W. Murphy.
BLACKSMITHING
—AND—
General Iron Work.
Wagons and Carriages Repaired.
HORSESHOEING, $2.00 for CASH
Shop on Edwards St., opposite the Court House, Independence.

BLACKSMITHING,
Horseshoeing, General Iron
—AND—
WAGON WORK.
PIONEER BLACKSMITH SHOP
Cor. Main St. & Depot Ave.,
INDEPENDENCE, CAL.
W. F. MATLACK.....PROPRIETOR.
Horseshoeing .....$2.00 for Cash
For particulars, call and see
W. F. MATLACK.

LONE PINE
Blacksmith Shop.
R. C. Spear, Prop'r
—ALL WORK ON—
MINING TOOLS,
FARMING IMPLEMENTS
& FREIGHTING OUTFITS
—PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO—
HORSE SHOEING,
CARRIAGE WORK,
GENERAL REPAIRING
All work attended to with neatness and despatch. Prices to suit the times.

BOOTS AND SHOES
MADE AND REPAIRED.
THE BEST MATERIAL.
FIRST-CLASS WORK.
Repairs done Promptly.
Prices Reasonable.
A. J. DAVIS,
nov 26-tf Independence,

MISCELLANEOUS.

Railroad Time Table.

CARSON & COLORADO R R

TAKING EFFECT,

Sunday, May 10th, 18 9.

STATIONS.	From Mound House. No. 1 Leave—	To Mound House. No. 2 Arrives—
Mound House.....	12:30 p. m.	5.55 p. m
Dayton	1:00 p. m.	5.15 p. m.
Wabuska	3:55 p. m.	3 00 p. m
Hawthorne	6 50 p. m.	11:20 a. m.
Luning	7.30 p. m.	10.05 a. m
Soda Springs.....	9:15 p. m.	9.05 a. m
Belleville.....	10:25 p. m.	7.45 a. m.
Candelaria..... Ar.	11.10 p. m	Lv. 7.10 a. m
	No. 3. Leave—	No. 4. Arrives—
Belleville.....	8 10 a. m	5:25 p. m
Benton	11:40 a m
Basaop Creek	1 50p. m.	12:00 a. m
Alvord	2:55 p. m	10 00 a. m.
Independence.....	4 10 p. m.	8 30 a. m
Lone Pine.....	5 00 p. m.	7 40 a. m
Keeler..... Ar	5:45 p. m.	Lv. 7.00 a. m.

Trains 1 and 2 run daily.
Train 3 runs Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays
Train 4 runs Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays

Passenger trains make close connection at Mound House with express trains of V. & T. R., which connect at Reno with east and west bound trains of Central Pacific Railroad.

Stage Connections:

At HAWTHORNE with United States Stage Company's coaches for Aurora (26 miles); Bodie (35 miles); Lundy and Bridgeport.

At LUNING (125 miles from Mound House) with Gilmer, Salsbury & Co's. tri-weekly stages (leaving Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays) for Downieville, Grantsville and Belmont.

At CANDELARIA with U. S. Stage Co's. stages for Columbus (8 miles), Silver Peak, Montezuma, Alida Valley, Gold Mountain, etc.

H. M. YERINGTON,
General Superintendent.
R. J. LAWS, Assistant Superintendent.
D. A. BENDER,
General Freight and Passenger Agent.

LUMBER. LUMBER.
SPRATT & CREASER,
BIG PINE.
—DEALERS IN—
ALL KINDS OF LUMBER.
Square timber of all dimensions for buildings and bridges.
CEILING,
FLOORING,
FENCING,
RUSTIC.
All kinds of tongued and grooved lumber.
Surfaced lumber of all kinds.
All orders filled promptly. Lumber delivered on board the cars at Alvord.
SPRATT & CREASER,
sep1-tf Big Pine, Inyo Co., Cal.

EDWARD CHENOT
Independence, Cal.,
INVITES PUBLIC ATTENTION TO HIS Extensive Stock of
GENERAL MERCHANDIS
....Consisting of....
GROCERIES.
PROVISIONS
Tobacco, Cigars,
WINES AND LIQUORS
FLOUR & GRAIN
Together with an Assortment of
DRY GOODS AND CLOTHING
ETC., ETC
Buyers and consumer should call and examine my stock and prices before purchasing elsewhere.
F. CHENOT.
Independence, Cal., March 9, 1884.
n476tf

R. J. WHITTAKER
—PAINTER,—
BIG PINE, - - - - CAL.
HOUSE PAINTING,
SIGN WRITING,
PAPER HANGING,
GRAINING,
GILDING ON
WOOD AND GLASS
Wagons Painted
The best of materials used and satisfaction guaranteed.

Wm. Muth-Rasmussen,
Bee Keeper.
Manufacturer of Comb Foundation.
Independence, Inyo Co. Cal

NATHAN RHINE.

NATHAN RHINE,
(Successor to Harris & Rhine.)
MERCHANT,
INDEPENDENCE
Inyo Co. Cal.
Wholesale & Retail
—DEALER IN—
General Merchandise
MY STOCK
CONSISTING OF
Almost every needed article is well calculated to satisfy the wants of everybody; and, as in the past, it will be our aim in the future to retain the extensive patronage enjoyed heretofore.
NATHAN RHINE.

NATHAN RHINE
BANKER
Independence, Cal.
SELL EXCHANGE
—ON—
SAN FRANCISCO
Draw Direct
—ON—
NEW YORK,
LONDON, England.
BERLIN, FRANKFORT-on-the-Main, GERMANY.
I AM PREPARED TO TRANSACT ALL KINDS
—OF—
GENERAL
BANKING
&
EXCHANGE,
BUSINESS.
Wechsel in beliebigen Summen auf Berlin und Frankfurt am der Main.
Deutsche Vollmachten geregelt.
Geldsendungen von und nach Deutschland besorgt.
AGENT FOR
WELLS FARGO
& CO'S.
EXPRESS
MUTUAL
Life Insurance Co.
OF NEW YORK
CAPITAL - - - $5,000,000
LIVERPOOL
AND LONDON AND GLOBE
INSURANCE - COMPANY
Capital - - - - - $21,000,000
NATHAN RHINE.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY, MAY 19 1890

MARKET REPORT.

Bar silver, 104
Lead, 4 02½
Copper, 14 20
Tin, 20.25
Sugar, .06¾
Coffee, 17 @ 19¾
Wool, foothill, 16 @ 18.

DIED.

PEELER—At Bishop, May 9th, Barna Peeler, aged 56 years.

Alfalfa is rapidly blossoming out.

Strawberries are ripe at Lone Pine.

Andrew Dell was down from Bishop last Monday.

John Anton came up from Keeler on Tuesday.

Abe Diaz came up from Lone Pine this morning.

The weather has been cold and disagreeable for a week past.

There is still a depth of eight feet of snow all over Webber Lake.

The Democratic State Convention will probably be held at San Jose.

California was the first State to apply for space at the World's Fair to be held at Chicago.

Mrs. John Dormer and her sister, Mrs. R. Wimberly, are visiting at their former home at Bishop.

The pic-nic at Georges Creek to morrow will be largely attended. Lots of town folks are going.

Senator Gorman has been chosen to succeed Senator Beck as chairman of the Democratic caucus.

There is a culvert washed out at Georges Creek below Hunter's place and the crossing is dangerous at night.

The testimony of A. J. McAfee, who was not called at the trial here, is said to be very damaging to Elliott.

D. C. Grunow has returned from San Francisco, where he went to re-enlist in the Signal Service Corps.

These is more water this season than for many years past. At Georges Creek waste water is running everywhere.

California is having her final spring showers. The East is having its final snowstorms and its opening chorus of cyclones.

W. Cameron came in from Lookout on Thursday morning and will remain in town a few days to get the lead out of his system.

Over in Tulare county they are making a big kick in regard to the sheep license ordinance passed by the Supervisors of that county.

P. H. Mack went to San Francisco last Tuesday to attend the meeting of the Grand Lodge of Odd Fellows. He will be home Monday.

O. H. Hill, landlord of the Valley View Hotel, and John Burns came down from Bishop on Wednesday's train, returning next day.

A private telegram states that the prosecution in the Elliott case closed last Saturday and that most of the witnesses will be home on Monday.

Every pumpkin-vine in California is humping itself for the Chicago fair. A house built of our jiant pumpkins would drive New England wild.

There's one good thing in General Bidwell's candidacy for Governor. He advocates a principle and declares it frankly, without being made a coward by policy and expediency.

Sam Davis, of the Carson Appeal, is visiting in Owens Valley. Wonder if he brought any of those prime oats along? He won't want the barley after he sampies the local beer.

The special train to Keeler last Saturday had on board Col. Sutherlin, John Ludwig, Evan Williams and L. Hamilton, well known mining men. They visited the mines at Cerro Gordo and vicinity.

Rev. J. H. De La Matyr went to Reno on Thursday to be absent about two weeks. Consequently there will be no services in his charge during that time. The Sunday schools will be held at regular hours.

The deadly sling-shot has been getting in its work on the schoolhouse windows to the tune of about $7.00 There are wooden shutters for all the windows in the building and they should be put in place as soon as the school term is closed.

To-morrow is the date fixed for receiving bids for the location of the 18th District Fair for the present year. No bids have yet been received and as far as can be ascertained there is no town making any move toward soliciting subscriptions for that purpose.

Under-Sheriff Yaney returned from Bakersfield on Wednesday. In a conversation with District-Attorney Fay, of Kern county, the latter said that he considered the evidence strong against Elliott. Had a letter of Mr. Eddy's reached Bakersfield a day earlier no bench warrant would have been issued and the county saved that much expense.

Henry Rhine has received word that many of the Elliott witnesses were on the way home and would be here to night. A telegram states that they were excused on Wednesday. As the defense lasted but two days many of the witnesses could not have been called at all. The result proves what an outrage it was to drag so many people away from their homes who knew nothing whatever about the case.

Barna Peeler died at Bishop last Friday. His funeral obsequies took place from the Academy building on Saturday and was largely attended. Mr. Peeler has long been identified with the interests of Inyo county, particularly in the improvement of horses. He came to this county in the early '70's and was well known throughout the country. Last December he was attacked by the prevailing la grippe; he became convalescent, but about three weeks ago he suffered a relapse, which resulted in his death.

Death of Judge Sabin.

The telegraph brings the news that Judge George M. Sabin, United States District Judge of Nevada, died in San Francisco last Monday morning. He had been ill only about two weeks, and it was not until the last three or four days that his malady assumed a serious turn. At the beginning of his illness he suffered from rheumatic gout and stomach disorder, and later the stomach refused to perform its functions and he gradually grew weaker until he quietly passed away. Judge Sabin was a native of Ohio, 56 years of age. After graduating from the Western Reserve College at Hudson, Ohio, he moved to Madison, Wisconsin, where he was admitted to the bar. He served in the volunteer department of the Federal army throughout the civil war and attained the rank of Colonel. He served for a time as Assistant Adjutant General of the Sixteenth Wisconsin Volunteer Infantry, and after the Vicksburg campaign was appointed Judge Advocate. After the war he removed to Nevada, locating at Eureka, where he formed a law partnership with W. W. Bishop. In 1881 he was appointed U. S. District Judge for Nevada, and spent some time assisting Judges Hoffman and Sawyer in the District Court at San Francisco. He was a bachelor and leaves a sister-in-law in San Francisco, a brother in Winzor, Dane county, Wisconsin, and a nephew and niece in Portland, Oregon. The funeral took place last Wednesday. Upon receipt of the news at Carson City the flags were half-masted over the United States Court-room, Mint and Capitol buildings. Judge Sabin was a member of Custer Post, G. A. R., and will be buried under its auspices. State Controller Hallock went to the City to escort the remains to Carson. The U. S. Circuit and District courts adjourned Monday out of respect to the memory of Judge Sabin.

At Bakersfield.

Last Monday night fifty-four persons arrived here from Inyo county. They were all concerned as witnesses, or otherwise, in the case of People vs. W. T. C. Elliott, accused of the crime of murder. It appears that Elliott had been convicted in Inyo county, but obtained a new trial and change of venue. Among the more distinguished of the party were Hon. A. R. Conklin, for the prosecution, Gen. Kittrell of Modesto, for the defense, C. Mulholland, editor and proprietor of the Inyo INDEPENDENT, and Messrs. J. C., E. M. and Milton Crocker. A jury was obtained Tuesday and the trial commenced the next morning. It promises to be a long one. Messrs. Conklin and Mulholland are taking a good deal of interest in the country. They have already taken several long drives and intend to see everything of interest, or that affords useful suggestions, while here.—Californian.

School Report.

Following is the report of the Big Pine school for the past year: Number of days taught, 160; number of children enrolled, 65; average number belonging, 47; average daily attendance, 45; percentage of attendance, 95. The following named pupils were placed upon the roll of honor, having a percentage in deportment, attendance, advancement and standing on examination of over 85 per cent: Eva Bodie, Addison McAfee, Lena Reinhackle, Tina McDonald, Carrie Gregg, George Hall, Libbie Wilson, Eton Baker, Laurence Bodie, Thomas Bell, Maggie Peterson, Grace Wilson, Lillie Wilson, Ida Hall, H. & S. Meredith, Ernest Blake, Nancy Blake, John Tibbetts, Josie Turner, Cecilia Ober, Bertha Crocker Louis Bodie, Malby Middleton, Johnnie Shaw.

Captain Bronson came up from the Marble Works and spent Sunday at Independence. Mr. Bronson travels on a hand-car which he has rigged up with a sail and in the gale on Saturday afternoon he made about thirty miles an hour between Swansea and Lone Pine. He bumped the special and had to wait at Lone Pine station to give it a start and then arrived at Independence when the special left. The sail is a large one taken from the cantamaran at the Lake.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE.

INYO MARBLE COMPANY.

Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Keeler, Inyo county.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of a Board of Directors, held on the 17th day of April, 1890, an assessment (No. 9) of Ten (10) cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary at the office of the company, 205 Front street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 3d day of June, 1890 will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Thursday, the 26th day of June, 1890 to pay the delinquent assessment together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.
G. W. LUCE, Secretary.
Office, 205 Front St., San Francisco, California.

FINAL HOMESTEAD PROOF.

H A No. 432

LAND OFFICE AT INDEPENDENCE, CAL.,
April 30, 1890.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT THE following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before the Register and Receiver at Independence, Cal., on Saturday, June 14th, 1890, viz.: JOHN S. GORMAN, Homestead Application No. 432, for the W ½ of lot No. 1 in NW ¼ Sec 5 Lot No. 1 in NE ¼ and E ½ of lot No. 1 in NW ¼ of Sec 6, in Twp 13 S. Range 35 East, M D M

He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon, and cultivation of, said land, viz.: Hiram C. Hamilton, Helaire P. Cartier, Alvah R. Conklin and William M. Boyd, all of Independence, Cala.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD, Register.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.

Estate of ELIZA ANN SMITH, deceased.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN BY THE UNdersigned, Executor of the last Will and Testament of Eliza Ann Smith, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Executor, at his residence, at Block Rock, Inyo county, California.

WILLIAM S. MORTON.
Executor of the last Will and Testament of said Eliza Ann Smith, deceased.
Dated May 9th, 1890.

PROPOSALS FOR 18th DISTRICT FAIR.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT THE Board of Directors of the 18th District Agricultural Association of California have decided to locate the Fair of said Association for the year 1890, at such town within any of the counties of Alpine, Mono and Inyo as shall offer to the Association the largest money premium for said privilege; and will also provide a speed track and necessary buildings and will give the use of the same for holding the Fair free of cost to the Association.

Sealed Proposals to be forwarded to the Secretary of the Association on or before May 17th, 1890, at Independence, Inyo county, California.

C. MULHOLLAND,
Secretary.

MISCELLANEOUS.

BELL'S Flouring Mills,

A. N. BELL, Prop.

TRY BELL'S

EXTRA PATENT ROLLER FLOUR.

Having added Patent Rolls and other Improvements o our Mills, I am now turning out Flour that is fully

Equal to the Best.

Corn, Oats and Barley Cracked on Short Notice.

A. N. BELL,

Independence, Cal.

BUHACH

THE UNRIVALED

Insect Exterminator

Manufactured solely from Pyrethrum flowers, grown in California, in a locality where the soil and climate are peculiarly adapted to the production of flowers rich in the essential oil which makes them so remarkably destructive to insect life.

Avoid the Worthless and Spurious Preparations, sold as Insect Powders, and use Buhach from original packages, and clear your premises of all Annoying and Destructive insect Pests.

None Genuine Without the Trade Mark.

If your dealer doesn't keep it, order directly from the

Buhach Producing & Manufacturing COMPANY,
SOLE MANUFACTURERS,
STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA.

F. E. Bosworth,

Watchmaker & Jeweler.

BISHOP, CAL.

Fine and Complicated Watch Repairing a Specialty.

Guns, Sewing Machines, Organs and Music Boxes Put in Perfect Condition and Warranted.

I Prefer to do all work at your house and will call if you will write to me at Bishop.

A $20 A Day Man:

A VOICE from Ohio. Here is portrait of Mr. Garrison, of Salem, Ohio. He writes: "Was at work on a farm for $20 a month. I now have an agency for E. C. Allen & Co's albums and publications and often make $20 a day." (Signed) W. H. GARRISON.

William Kline, Harrisburg, Pa., writes: "I have never known anything to sell like your album. Yesterday I took orders enough to pay me over $25." W. J. Elmore, Bangor, Me., writes: "I take an order for your album at almost every house I visit. My profit is often as much as $20 for a single day's work." Others are doing quite as well; we have not space to give extracts from their letters. Every one who takes hold of this grand business gives us grand profits. Shall we start YOU in this business, reader? Write to us and learn all about it for yourself. We are starting many, we will start you if you don't delay until another gets ahead of you in your part of the country. If you take hold you will be able to pick up gold fast. ☞ Read—On account of a forced manufacturer's sale 125,000 ten dollar Photograph Albums are to be sold to the people for $2 each. Bound in Royal Crimson Silk Velvet Plush, Charmingly decorated inside. Handsomest album in the world. Largest Size. Greatest bargains ever known. Agents wanted. Liberal terms. Big money for agents. Any one can become a successful agent. Sells itself on sight—little or no talking necessary. Wherever shown, every one wants to purchase. Agents take thousands of orders with rapidity never before known. Great profits await every worker. Agents are making fortunes. Ladies make as much as men. You, reader, can do as well as any one. Full information and terms free, to those who write for same, with particulars and terms for our Family Bibles, Books and Periodicals. After you know all, should you conclude to go no further, why no harm is done.

Address E. C. ALLEN & CO., AUGUSTA, MAINE.

S. H. BIGLAND,

—DEALER IN—

Owens Valley Lands

39 SUTTER STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO.

1-26

SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN

is the oldest and most popular scientific and mechanical paper published and has the largest circulation of any paper of its class in the world. Fully illustrated. Best class of Wood Engravings. Published weekly. Send for specimen copy. Price $3 a year. Four months' trial, $1. MUNN & CO., PUBLISHERS, 361 Broadway, N.Y.

ARCHITECTS & BUILDERS Edition of Scientific American.

A great success. Each issue contains colored lithographic plates of country and city residences or public buildings. Numerous engravings and full plans and specifications for the use of such as contemplate building. Price $2.50 a year, 25 cts. a copy. MUNN & CO., PUBLISHERS.

PATENTS may be secured by applying to MUNN & Co., who have had over 40 years' experience and have made over 150,000 applications for American and Foreign patents. Send for Handbook. Correspondence strictly confidential.

TRADE MARKS.

In case your mark is not registered in the Patent Office, apply to MUNN & Co., and procure immediate protection. Send for Handbook.

COPYRIGHTS for books, charts, maps etc., quickly procured. Address

MUNN & CO., Patent Solicitors.
GENERAL OFFICE 361 BROADWAY, N. Y

IF YOU WISH A GOOD REVOLVER PURCHASE ONE OF SMITH & WESSON'S

Finest small arms ever manufactured and the first choice of all experts. In calibres 32, 38 and 44-100. Single or double action, Safety Hammerless and Target models. Best quality wrought steel, carefully inspected for workmanship and stock. Unrivaled for finish, durability and accuracy. Do not be deceived by cheap malleable iron imitations often sold for the genuine article. They are unreliable and dangerous. The SMITH & WESSON REVOLVERS are stamped upon the barrels with firm's name, address and dates of patents, and are guaranteed perfect. Insist upon having them, and if your dealer cannot supply you, an order sent to address below will receive prompt attention. Descriptive catalogue and prices upon application.

SMITH & WESSON,
Springfield, Mass.

WEINSTOCK & LUBIN:

Trousers at $3.50

We are making a specialty of Men's Trousers at this price. We buy and sell by hundreds of pairs, and are therefore able to give extra value for the money. The trousers are neat, shapely and durable, and come in desirable medium and dark patterns. In ordering, state which you prefer. Price $3.50; by mail, 30c. extra. Give waist measure and length of inside seam of leg.

Our Great $3.00 Shoes

We have sold over ten thousand pairs of these shoes and with the greatest satisfaction to buyers. Probably the best men's shoe for three dollars in America. Neat, easy-fitting and desirable. May be had in either hook and lace, Congress (elastic sides) or button toes, and with or without toe caps. Price, $3.00; by mail, 30c. extra.

This same shoe for boys, in sizes 3 to 5, price, $2.50; sizes 11 to 2, price, $2.00. The best of school shoes. Postage, 25c. extra.

The great success of the above lines has led us to introduce a ladies' kid button shoe at $3.00; by mail, 20c. extra. This shoe has low heels, medium toes, and is, withal, such a neat and sensible production that it promises to have a great sale. Sizes, 2½ to 8; widths, A to EE.

Writing the Order.

Weinstock, Lubin & Co.

400 to 412 K St., Sacramento, Cal.

Illustrated Catalogue of all kinds of Wearing Apparel, Household Supplies, etc., free to any address.

12

MISCELLANEOUS.

Lake View Hotel

Keeler, Cal.

John Barnes, Prop'r.

First-class hotel in every respect. The table always supplied with the best in the market. Clean, nicely furnished rooms. Transient visitors will receive every courtesy and attention.

THE BAR

—Is constantly supplied with the finest—

Wines, Liquors, & Cigars.

NORMAN HOUSE,

Independence, - - Cal.

New House,
New Furniture,
Low Rates.

Special attention will be given to secure the comfort of guests.

O. I. MAIRS, Prop.
feb12tf

IRWIN'S SALOON

Cor. Edwards and Market Streets,

Independence . Cal.

THE PUBLIC GENERALLY ARE RESPECTFULLY invited to call and inspect my establishment, which has been entirely rebuilt and furnished in a style second to none on this side of the mountains. A SPLENDID NEW BILLIARD TABLE provided for the amusement of patrons.

THE BAR

Is supplied with the most celebrated brands of pure Wines and Liquors and the Finest Havana Cigars.

JOHN C. IRWIN, Proprietor.
feb12tf

Palace Saloon.

WALTER OBER, Lessee.

—THE BAR—

Is constantly supplied with the best kinds o

WINES, LIQUORS, & CIGARS.

The most careful attention given to the the amusement and comfort of patrons.

A FINE BILLIARD TABLE

Is always at the disposal of visitors to the Palace Saloon Dec. 20 89

PIONEER BREWERY

INDEPENDENCE

BEER ICE COLD.

The Bar is supplied with the Best of all kinds of Liquors and Cigars.

The Coolest Hall in the town. Call in and see what comfort you can have this hot weather.

PHILIP GEHRIG, PROPRIETOR

MISCELLANEOUS.

A. K. EUGLEY,

BIG PINE INYO CO. CAL.

PROVISIONS, &c., &c., &c.

Postmaster and Deputy Co Clerk.

A. K. EUGLEY,
Big Pine, Cal.

Sulphur & Borax Baths

AT SODA SPRINGS, NEVADA
On son & Colorado Railroad

These valuable Springs offer special

INDUCEMENT TO INVALIDS

THE WATER CONTAINS

SULPHUR, MAGNESIA AND BORAX.

And Is Very Strengthening and Cleansing

When used for bathing purposes.

THE BATH HOUSES HAVE BEEN REBUILT

—And a large—

SWIMMING : BATH

Added, where those wishing to do so can take an invigorating plunge.

Excellent Accommodations

—AND—

Board by the Day, Week, or the Month

FREE

One of the BEST Telescopes in the world. Our facilities are unequaled, and to introduce our superior goods we will send FREE to ONE PERSON in each locality, as above. Only those who write to us at once can make sure of the chance. All you have to do in return is to show our goods to those who call—your neighbors and those around you. The beginning of this advertisement shows the small end of the telescope. The following cut gives the appearance of it reduced to about the fiftieth part of its bulk. It is a grand, double size telescope, as large as is easy to carry. We will also show you how you can make from $5 to $10 a day at least, from the start, without experience. Better write at once. We pay all express charges. Address, H. HALLETT & CO., Box 880, PORTLAND, MAINE.

BISHOP ADVERTISEMENTS.

A. COHN & CO.

—DEALERS IN—

General Merchandise.

—ALL KINDS OF—

Farm Implements

—AND—

--MACHINERY--

Farm Produce

—OF ALL KINDS BOUGHT—

Orders for all kinds of supplies needed in mining camps promptly filled.

GIVEN & INGALLS.

—DEALERS IN—

FARM PRODUCE.

J. E. DUNLAP.

Harness Maker.

Harness of all kinds, from the lightest to the heaviest. Any kind of new work made promptly and of the best material. Repairing done on the shortest notice. A full line of saddles and harness.

H. E. WRIGHT.

DRUGGIST.

Medicines, Drugs, Toilet and Fancy Articles. Physicians' prescriptions carefully and promptly filled. All drugs and medicines fresh and of the best quality. All orders by mail receive immediate attention

Valley View Hotel.

O. H. Hill, Prop'r.

A New House Newly Furnished Throughout. Guests will receive every courtesy and attention.

NEVADA STABLE BISHOP.

Opposite Valley View Hotel, Main St

In the Livery Department nothing is kept but safe and good traveling carriage and saddle horses. Conveyances of all kinds first-class. Good attendance and the best of hay and grain for all animals boarding at the stable

S. P. SMITH, Prop.

BISHOP CREEK BREWERY,

MUNZINGER, PHILLIPPAY & CO., Proprietors.

All the appliances and conveniences of First Class Brewery, including a beautiful grove for out-door parties.

Customers supplied on all points on Of the C. & C. Railroad.

Send orders to
MUNZINGER, PHILLIPPAY & CO.
Bishop Creek, Cal.

A NEW DEAL!

BISHOP CREEK

Livery. Feed & Sale Stable.

ROBERT O'NEIL, Prop'r.

Horses are boarded by the day, week or month. Stock bought and sold.
Bishop Creek, Cal., Nov. 20, 1883.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Newest Styles

OF

Fashionable Clothing, Dry Goods, Ladies' Wear, etc., etc

AT

L. WOOD'S

CASH STORE

A small stock of fresh groceries & canned goods constantly renewed.

Fresh Produce, and Grain Flour, etc., constantly on hand.

CANDIES,
PEANUTS,
WALNUTS,
TOYS!

THE CASH STORE

Is Where You Get

WORTH OF YOUR MONEY

THOMAS & HILL,

—DEALERS IN—

GENERAL MERCHANDISE

BIG PINE, INYO COUNTY, CAL.

We keep constantly on hand goods of all kinds needed in a country home. We order only First-Class Goods and ask no more than a reasonable profit. Give us a trial.

THOMAS & HILL.

J. FORBES. W. D. TOBEY

FORBES & TOBEY,

HAWTHORNE, NEV.,

—DEALERS IN—

LUMBER

OF ALL KINDS.

DOORS,

SHINGLES,

SASH AND BLINDS,

LATH,

RUSTIC

MOULDINGS,

DRESSED LUMBER.

Matched and Dressed Flooring.

sept 11-tf

COLONEL QUARITCH, V.C.

By H. RIDER HAGGARD

"I know it is, and I know also that it is worth your while to pay thirty thousand pounds to save yourself from the scandal, the chance of disinheritance, and the certainty of the loss of the woman whom you want to marry. So well do I know it that I have prepared the necessary deeds for your signature, and here they are. Listen, sir," he went on, sternly; "refuse to accept my terms and by to-night's post I shall send this letter of instruction. Also I shall send to Mr. Cossey, senior, and to Mr. de la Molle copies of these two precious epistles," and he pointed to the incriminating documents, "and a copy of the letter to my agents; and where will you be then? Consent, and I will bind myself not to proceed in any way or form. Now, make your choice."

"But I cannot; even if I will, I cannot," said he, almost wringing his hands in his perplexity. "It was on condition of my taking up those mortgages that Ida consented to become engaged to me, and I have promised that I will cancel them on our wedding. Will you not take money instead?"

"Yes," answered Mr. Quest, "I would take money. A little time ago I would not have taken it because I wanted that property, but I have changed my ideas. But as you yourself said, your credit is strained to the utmost, and while your father is alive you will not find it possible to raise another thirty thousand pounds. Besides, if this matter is to be settled at all it must be settled now. I will not wait while you make attempts to raise the money."

"But about the mortgages? I promised to keep them. What shall I say to Ida?"

"Say? Say nothing. You can meet them if you like after your father's death. Refuse if you like, but if you refuse you will be mad. Thirty thousand pounds will be nothing to you, but exposure will be ruin. Have you made up your mind? You must take my offer or leave it. Sign the documents, and I will put the originals of these two letters into your hands; refuse, and I will take my steps."

Edward Cossey thought for a moment, and then said: "I will sign. Let me see the papers."

Mr. Quest turned aside to hide the expression of triumph which flitted across his face and then handed him the deeds. They were elaborately drawn, for he was a skillful legal draughtsman, quite as skillful as many a legal chancery conveyancer, but the substance of them was that the mortgages were transferred to him by the said Edward Cossey in and for the consideration that he, the said William M. Quest, consented to abandon forever a pending action for divorce against his wife, Belle Quest, whereto the said Edward Cossey was to be joined as co-respondent.

"You will observe," said Mr. Quest, "that if you attempt to contest the validity of this assignment, which you certainly could not do with any prospect of success, the attempt will recoil upon your own head, because the whole scandal will then transpire. We shall require some witnesses, so, with your permission, I will ring the bell and ask the landlady and your servant to step up. They need know nothing of the contents of the papers," and he did so.

"Stop," said Edward presently. "Where are the original letters?"

"Here," answered Mr. Quest, producing them from an inner pocket, and showing them to him from a distance. "When the landlady comes up, I will give them to her to hold in this envelope, directing her to hand them to you when the deeds are signed and witnessed. She will only think that it is part of the ceremony."

Presently the man servant and the landlady arrived, and Mr. Quest, in his most matter of fact way, explained to them that they were required to witness some documents, and at the same time handed the letters to the woman, saying that she was to give them to Mr. Cossey when they had all done signing.

Then Edward Cossey signed, and, placing his thumb on the familiar wafer, delivered the various documents as his act and deed, and the witnesses, with much preparation and effort, affixed their awkward signatures in the places pointed out to them, and in a few minutes the thing was done, and Mr. Quest was a richer man by thirty thousand pounds than when he had got up that morning.

"Now give Mr. Cossey the packet, Mrs. Jeffries," he said, as he blotted the signatures, "and then you can go," and she did so and went.

When the witnesses had gone, Edward looked at the letters, and then with a savage oath flung them into the fire and watched them burn.

"Good morning, Mr. Cossey," said Mr. Quest, as he prepared to depart with the deeds. "You have now bought your experience and had to pay dearly for it, but, upon my word, when I think of all you owe me, I wonder at myself for letting you off at so small a price."

When he had gone, Edward Cossey gave way to his feelings in language forcible rather than polite, and what they were may be more easily imagined than described. For now, in addition to all the money that he had lost and the painful exposure to which he had been subjected, he was face to face with a new difficulty. Either he must make a clean breast of it to Ida about the mortgages being no longer in his hands, or he must pretend that he still had them. In the first alternative, the consideration upon which Ida had agreed to marry him came to nothing. Moreover, she was thereby released from her promise, and he was well aware that under these circumstances she would certainly break off the engagement. In the second, he would be acting a lie, and the lie would sooner or later be discovered, and what then? Well, if it was after marriage, what would it matter? To a woman of gentle birth there is only one thing more irretrievable than marriage, and that is death. Anyhow, he had suffered so much for the sake of this woman that he did not mean to give her up now. He must meet the mortgages after marriage, that was all.

Facilisest descensus Averni. When a man of the character of Edward Cossey, or indeed of any character, allows his passions to lead him into a course of deceit, he does not find it easy to check his wild career. From dishonor to dishonor shall he go till at length, in due season, he reaps as he has sown.

CHAPTER XXVII.

HOW GEORGE TREATED JOHNNIE.

Some two or three days before the scene described in the last chapter the faithful George had suddenly announced his desire to visit London.

"What!" said the squire, in astonishment, for George had never been known to go out of his own county before. "Why, what on earth are you going to do in London?"

"Well, squire," answered his retainer, looking marvelously knowing, "I don't rightly know, but there's a cheap train goes up to this here exhibition on Tuesday morning, and comes back on the Thursday evening. Ten shillings both ways, that's the fare, and I see in The Chronicle, I do, that there's a wonderful show of these new fangled self tying and delivering reapers, sich as they use over sea in America, and I'm rarely fell on seeing them, and having a holiday look round London town. So as there ain't not northing particler a-doing, if you hain't got anything to say agin it, I think I'll go, squire."

"All right," said the squire; "are you going to take your wife with you?"

"Why, no, squire; I said that I wanted to go for a holiday, and that ain't no holiday to take the old missus, too," and George chuckled in a manner that evidently meant volumes.

And so it came to pass that on the afternoon of the day of the transfer of the mortgages from Edward Cossey to Mr. Quest the great George found himself wandering vaguely about the vast expanse of the Colinderies, and not enjoying himself in the least. He had been recommended by some traveled individual in Boisingham to a certain lodging near Liverpool street station, which he found with the help of a friendly porter. Thence he sat out for the exhibition, but, being of a prudent mind, thought that he would do well to save his money and walk the distance. So he walked and walked till he was tired, and then, after an earnest consultation with a policeman, he took a 'bus, which an hour later landed him—at the Royal Oak. His further adventures we need not pursue; suffice it to say that, having started from his lodgings at 3, it was past 7 o'clock at night when he finally reached the exhibition, more thoroughly wearied than though he had done a good day's harvesting.

Here he wandered for a while in continual dread of having his pocket picked, seeking reaping machines and discovering none, till at length he found himself in the gardens, where the electric light display was in full swing. Soon wearying of this, for it was a cold, damp night, he made a difficult path to a buffet inside the building, where he sat down at a little table and devoured some very unpleasant looking cold beef. Here slumber overcame him, for his weariness was great, and he dozed.

Presently, through the muffled roar and hum of voices, which echoed in his sleep dulled ears, he caught the sound of a familiar name, which awoke him up "all of a heap," as he afterward said. The name of "Quest." Without moving his body he opened his eyes. At the very next table to his own were seated two people, a man and a woman. He looked at the latter first. She was clad in yellow, and was very tall and thin and fierce looking; so fierce looking that George involuntarily jerked his head back, and brought it with painful force in contact with the wall. It was the Tiger herself, and her companion was the coarse, dreadful looking man called Johnnie, whom she had sent away in the cab on the night of Mr. Quest's visit.

"Oh," Johnnie was saying, "so Quest is the covey's name, is it, and he lives in a city called Boisingham, does he? Is he an oof bird?" (rich).

"Rather," answered the Tiger, "if only one can make the dollars trickle, but he's a nasty, mean boy, he is. Look here, not a cent, not a stiver have I got to bless myself with, and I daren't ask him for any more not till January. And how am I going to live till January? I got the sack from the Music hall last week because I was a bit jolly, and old Thompson, the conductor, wanted to drop 10 per cent. on my salary because he said I didn't draw as I used to, and that I was getting old and ugly. So I just caught him one with the handle of my brollie that made him see stars, and the beast had me up for assault, and it was forty shillings and costs. And now I can't get another billet any way, and I've got a bill of sale over the furniture, and I've sold all my jewels down to my ticker, or at least most of them, and there's that brute," and her voice rose to a subdued scream, "living like a fighting cock and rolling in 'oof' while his poor wife is left to starve."

"'Wife.' Oh, yes, we know all about that," said the gentleman called Johnnie.

A look of doubt and cunning passed across the woman's face. Evidently she feared that she had said too much.

"Well, it's as good a name as another," she said. "Oh, don't I wish that I could get a grip of him; I'd wring him," and she twisted her long, bony hands as washerwomen do when they wring a cloth.

"I'd back you to," said Johnnie. "And now, adored Edithia, I've had enough of this blooming show and I'm off. Perhaps I shall look in down Pimlico way this evening. Ta-ta."

"Well, you may as well stand a liquor first," said the adored one. "I'm pretty dry, I can tell you."

"Certainly, with pleasure; I will order one. Waiter, a brandy and soda for this lady—six of brandy, if you please; she's very delicate and wants support."

The waiter grinned and brought the drink, and the man Johnnie turned round as though to pay him, but really he went without doing so.

George watched him go and then looked again at the lady, whose appearance seemed to fascinate him.

"Well, if that ain't a master one," he said to himself, "and she called herself his wife, she did, and then drew up like a slug's horns. Hang me, if I don't stick to her till I find out a bit more of the tale."

Thus ruminated George, who, be it observed, was no fool, and who had a hearty dislike and mistrust of Mr. Quest. While he was wondering how he was to go to work, an unexpected opportunity occurred. The Tiger had finished her brandy and soda and was preparing to leave when the waiter swooped down upon her.

"Money, please, miss," he said.

"Money!" she said; "why you're paid."

"Come, none of that," said the waiter; "I want a shilling for the brandy and soda."

"A shilling, do you? Then you'll have to want, you cheating, white faced rascal, you; my friend paid you before he went away."

"Oh, we've had too much of that game," said the waiter, beckoning to a constable, to whom in spite of the "fair Edithia's" very vigorous and pointed protestations he went on to give her in charge, for it appeared that she had only twopence about her. This was George's opportunity, and he interfered.

"I think, marm," he said, "that the fat gent with you was a-playing of a little game. He only pretended to pay the waiter."

"Playing a little game, was he?" gasped the infuriated Tiger. "If I don't play a little game on him when I get a chance my name is not Edith d'Aubigne, the nasty mean beast—the"——

"Permit me, marm," said George, putting a shilling on the table, which the waiter took and went away. "I can't bear to see a real lady like you in difficulty."

"Well, you are a gentleman, you are," she said.

"Not at all, marm. That's my way. And now, marm, won't you have another?"

No objection was raised by the lady, who had another, with the result that she became, if not exactly tipsy, at any rate not far off it.

Shortly after this the building was cleared, and George found himself standing in Exhibition road with the woman on his arm.

"You're going to give me a lift home, ain't you?" she said.

"Yes, marm, for sure I am," said George, sighing as he thought of the cab fare.

Accordingly they got into a hansom, and Mrs. d'Aubigne having given the address in Pimlico, of which George instantly made a mental note, they started.

"Come in and have a drink," she said, when they arrived, and accordingly he paid the cab—half a crown it cost him—and was ushered by the woman with a simper into the gilded drawing room.

Here the Tiger had another brandy and soda, after which George thought she was about in a fit state for him to prosecute his inquiries.

"Wonderful place this London, marm; I never was up here afore, and had no idea that I should find folks so friendly. As I was a-saying to my friend Laryer Quest, down at Boisingham, yesterday"——

"Halloo, what's that?" she said. "Do you know the old man?"

"If you mean Laryer Quest; why in course I do, and Mrs. Quest too. Ah! she's a pretty one, she is."

Here the lady burst into a flood of incoherent abuse which tired her so much that she had a fourth brandy and soda; George mixed it for her, and he mixed it strong.

"Is he rich?" she asked, as she put down the glass.

"What! Laryer Quest? Well, I should say that he is about the warmest man in our part of the county."

"And here I am starving," burst out the horrible woman, with a flood of drunken tears. "Starving, without a shilling to pay for a cab or a drink, while my wedded husband lives in luxury with another woman. You tell him that I won't stand it; you tell him that if he don't find a 'thou.' pretty quick I'll let him know the reason why."

"I don't quite understand, marm," said George; "there's a lady down in Boisingham as is the real Mrs. Quest."

"It's a lie!" she shrieked, "it's a lie! He married me before he married her. I could have him in the dock to-morrow, and I would, too, if I wasn't afraid of him, and that's a fact."

"Come, marm, come," said George, "draw it mild from that tap."

"You won't believe me, won't you?" said the woman, on whom the liquor was now beginning to take its full effect; "then I'll show you," and she staggered to a desk, unlocked it, and took from it a folded paper, which she opened.

It was a marriage license, or purported so to be; but George, who was not too quick at his reading, had only time to note the name Quest, and the church, St. Bartholomew's, Hackney, when she snatched it away from him and locked it up again.

It was a marriage license.

"There," she said, "it isn't any business of yours. What right have you to come prying into the affairs of a poor lone woman?" And she sat down upon the sofa beside him, threw her long arm round his neck, rested her painted face upon his shoulder, and began to weep the tears of intoxication.

"Well, blow me!" said George to himself, "if this ain't a master one! I wonder what my old missus would say if she saw me in this fix. I say, marm"——

But at that moment the door opened, and in came Johnnie, who had evidently also been employing the interval in refreshing himself, for he rolled like a ship in a sea.

"Well," he said, "and who the deuce are you? Come, get out of this, you Methody, parson faced clod hopper, you. Fairest Edithia, what means this?"

By this time the fairest Edithia had realized who her visitor was, and the trick whereby he had left her to pay for the brandy and soda recurring to her mind, she sprung up and began to express her opinion of Johnnie in violent and libelous language. He replied in appropriate terms, as, according to the newspaper reports, people whose healths are proposed always do, and fast and furious grew the fun. At length, however, it seemed to occur to Johnnie that he, George, was in some way responsible for this state of affairs, for without word or warning he hit him on the nose—which proved too much for George's Christian forbearance.

"You would, you fat lubber, would you?" he said, and sprung at him.

Now, Johnnie was big and fat, but Johnnie was rather drunk, and George was tough and exceedingly strong. In almost less time than it takes to write it he grasped the abominable Johnnie by the scruff of the neck, and had with a mighty jerk hauled him over the sofa so that he lay face downward thereon. By the door, quite convenient to his hand, stood George's ground ash stick, a peculiarly good and well grown one which he had cut himself in Honham wood. He seized it. "Now, my lad," he said, "I'll teach you how we do the trick where I come from," and he laid on without mercy. Whack! whack! whack! went the ground ash on Johnnie's tight clothes. He yelled and swore and struggled in the grip of the sturdy countryman, but it was of no use, the ash came down like fate; never was a Johnnie so bastinadoed before.

"Give it the brute, give it him," shrilled the fair Edithia, bethinking her of her wrongs, and he did till he was tired.

"Now, Johnnie," he said at last. "I'm thinking I've pretty well whacked you to dead. Perhaps you'll be more careful how you handle your betters by and by," and seizing his hat he ran down the stairs without seeing anybody, and, slipping into the street, crossed over and listened.

They were at it again. Seeing her enemy prostrate, the Tiger had fallen on him, apparently with the fire irons, to judge from the noise.

Just then a policeman came up.

"I say, governor," said George, "the folk in that there house with the red pillars do fare to be a-murdering of each other."

The policeman listened to the din and then made for the house, and, profiting by his absence, George retreated as fast as he could, his melancholy countenance shining with a sober sati faction.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

His Name Was William.

"What are you doing there, daughter? It's time for breakfast," called a congressman to his only child as she stood by the front window in patient waiting.

"It's all right, papa; I'm only waiting for the Bill to pass," she replied sweetly, and the father called the roll and the beefsteak and proceeded to the business of the morning hour.—Washington Post.

A Stiff Necked Generation Ask for a Sign.

"Has she no pride—no self respect? How can she permit that fellow to smoke while they are promenading on the avenue?"

"Oh, that's Charlie Van Ninny, and she's afraid people wouldn't know it was a man."

Why They Pleased Him.

Suburban Railway Official (traveling incog. on his own line)—They say there has been some fault found with the lamps on these trains. Do you see anything wrong with them?

Passenger—No, sir. On the contrary, they are exactly the kind of lamps I like to see used in cars.

Railway Official—(highly pleased)—I presume you are a professional man?

Passenger—Yes, sir. I am an oculist.—Exchange.

Examination of History Class.

School Board Inspector—Now, boys, what is the diet of Worms? Can any of you tell me?

(Dead silence prevails.)

School Board Inspector—Surely one of you can answer so simple a question as this. Come now (coaxingly), what is the diet of Worms?

Small Boy (timidly)—Dead cats and corpseses, please, sir!—Yenowine's News.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 7th, 1889.

To whom it may concern:

This is to certify that I have made a chemical analysis of the Great Sierra Kidney and Liver Cure and find that it is of purely vegetable constituents and no traces of mineral in its composition; also that it is a perfectly harmless remedy, used as directed by the company.

Respectfully,
E. L. MULLIGAN, M. D.

Jan. 30th, 1889.

Sierra Chemical Co.:

GENTLEMEN:—I was troubled for years with severe pains in my back and side said to arise from diseased kidneys. Two bottles of your Great Sierra Kidney and Liver Cure cured me from all pain.

B. D. PIKE,
San Francisco, Cal.

The Graduated Athlete—"The poor man is a permanent cripple. How came he so?" "He took the full course at the gymnasium."

A smile is said to be a whisper of a laugh. We have seen men "smiling" and laughing at the same time.

NATURE IN CONVULSION

Is terrific. Volcanic eruptions, cyclones, earthquakes are awfully and tremendously picturesque, but scarcely desirable to emulate in action and effect by the administration of remedies which produce convulsion and agony in the abnormal portion of the human frame. Such is the effect of the old-fashioned violent purgatives happily falling more and more into disuse, and of which Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is the wholesome, pleasant and far more effective succedaneum. They weakened the intestines—the Bitters invigorates them. They left the bowels inactive, because incapacitated by ensuing feebleness. The Bitters on the contrary, and because it enables, not forces, them to act—a vast and fortunate difference—perpetuates their activity and regularity. The liver is beneficially stimulated, as the kidneys also are, by this medicine, which easily conquers, also, malaria, nervousness and rheumatism.

Chicago School Teacher—How many feet make a yard? Tommy Lakeside—One. Teacher—Correct.

A WOMAN TWO HUNDRED YEARS OLD.

A case is on record of a woman who lived to this advanced age, but it is scarcely necessary to state that it was in "the olden time." Now-a-days too many women do not live half their allotted years. The mortality due to functional derangements in the weaker sex is simply frightful, to say nothing of the indescribable suffering which makes life scarcely worth the living to so many women. But for these sufferers there is a certain relief. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription will positively cure leucorrhea, painful menstruation, prolapsus, pain in the ovaries, weak back; in short, all those complaints to which so many women are martyrs. It is the only guaranteed cure, see guarantee on bottle-wrapper.

Cleanse the liver, stomach, bowels and whole system by using Dr. Pierce's Pellets.

A leading role in life he'd take,
He'd be above the crowd,
And in the world a noise would make—
He therefore dresses loud.

A LUCKY MAN.

Wm. Klein Receives Fifteen Thousand Dollars—The Money Falls Into Good Hands and Will be Carefully Invested.

About a quarter of two yesterday afternoon, a medium sized workingman, with bearded face, presented himself to the paying teller of the First National Bank, and inquired if a check had arrived for him. On receiving an affirmative answer, he produced a bank book and received credit upon it for $15,000. He then quietly left the place accompanied by Mr. Henry Hartman, the well-known hardware merchant.

The gentleman was Wm. Klein, of 931 Enterprise alley, Capitol Hill, and he was the holder of one-twentieth of ticket No. 61,785, which drew the first capital prize of $300,000 in the drawing of the Louisiana State Lottery Company, on the 11th of this month. Mr. Hartman was an old and valued friend. Mr. Klein is a fireman in the National Rolling Mill. He came here about ten years ago, and while always earning small wages has accumulated enough to purchase a small piece of property on Capitol Hill, where he resided.

Mr. Klein is a man of excellent habits, very level-headed and while of course greatly rejoiced at the good luck, did not loose his head, but will immediately invest the money in real estate. He is a married man with several children. On learning that his ticket drew a prize, he gave it to the First National Bank, receiving a receipt for it. The bank sent it to the lottery people, and in about a week's time the check for the amount duly arrived.

Mr. Klein has been receiving many congratulations from his friends, and says he has to keep a sharp lookout for the party who wishes to borrow a couple of dollars for a few days.—McKeesport (Pa.) News, February 28.

Getting Out of the Way.—"Well, Bismarck is sensible." "Think so?" "Certainly; but he ought to have come in out of the reign when it began."

Six Novels Free, will be sent by Cragin & Co., Philada., Pa., to any one in the U. S. or Canada, postage paid, upon receipt of 25 Dobbins' Electric Soap wrappers. See list of novels on circulars around each bar. Soap for sale by all grocers.

"No, sir, I tell my wife everything—I conceal nothing." "What a miserable, unhappy woman she must be."

AN ELEGANT PACKAGE OF FINE CARDS.

Including 15 rare novelties, shapes and artistic imported oleographic and chromatic cards. This large and beautiful collection sent by mail to anyone who will do this:—Buy a box of the genuine Dr. C. McLane's Celebrated Liver Pills from any druggist, price 25 cents, and mail us the outside wrapper with your address, plainly written and 4 cents in stamps. The genuine McLane's Pills are prepared only by Fleming Bros., Pittsburg, Pa., and have been in constant use for over sixty years. They are superior to all others in purity and effectiveness. A certain cure for indigestion and sick headache. Address, Fleming Bros. Pittsburgh, Pa.

They have stood the test of time—"Tansill's Punch," America's finest 5c. Cigar.

Horseflesh is said to be the worst thing in the world to give people the nightmare.

Beware of imitations of the genuine Seal of North Carolina Plug Cut Tobacco.

Try Germea for Breakfast.

Don't Get Caught

This Springs, as you may have been before, with your blood full of impurities, your digestion impaired, appetite poor, kidneys and liver torpid, and whole system liable to be prostrated by disease—but get yourself into good condition, and ready for the changing and warmer weather, by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla. It stands unequalled for purifying the blood, giving an appetite, and for a regulating and general spring medicine. Be sure to get Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Scores of Eulogies.

"We consider Hood's Sarsaparilla the best blood purifier on the market, judging from the scores of eulogies on the same and also from the immense sale it has with us, which is greater than that of any other two blood purifiers. From personal observations of its actions we feel justified in recommending it as the best blood purifier and regulator of the system on the market." PATTERSON & McCANN, Druggist and Pharmacists, 285 Main St., Stockton, Cal.

N. B.—Be sure to get

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared only by C. I. HOOD & Co., Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar

Reliable SEEDS

The famous Hovey Seed Store of Boston, and Hovey Nurseries of Cambridge, Mass., have been moved to East Pasadena, California, where the business will be conducted as The Raymond Flower and Seed Store, C. H. HOVEY, Manager, East Pasadena, Cal. Send for complete catalogue.

CHICHESTER'S ENGLISH
PENNYROYAL PILLS
RED CROSS DIAMOND BRAND.
Safe and always reliable. Ladies, ask Druggist for Diamond Brand, in red, metallic boxes, sealed with blue ribbon. Take no other. All pills in pasteboard boxes, pink wrappers, are dangerous counterfeits. Send 4c. (stamps) for particulars, testimonials and "Relief for Ladies," in letter, by return mail. Name Paper. Chichester Chem'l Co., Madison Sq., Phila., Pa.

SURE CURE FOR PILES.

Sure cure for blind, bleeding and itching Piles. One box has cured the worst cases of ten years' standing. No one need suffer ten minutes after using Kirk's German Pile Ointment. It absorbs tumors, allays the itching, acts as a poultice, gives relief. Dr. Kirk's German Pile Ointment is prepared only for Piles and itching of the private parts, and nothing else. Every box is warranted. Sold by druggists and sent by mail on receipt of price, $1.00 per box. J. J. Mack & Co., Wholesale Agents, San Francisco.

How little and dried up the cheese appears to the rat after he is caught in the trap.

Coughs, Hoarseness, and Sore Throat. "Brown's Bronchial Troches" give immediate relief.

There are two classes of fools in the world—those who make fools of themselves and those who don't need to.

FULL WEIGHT PURE
DR. PRICE'S CREAM BAKING POWDER
MOST PERFECT MADE

Its superior excellence proven in millions of homes for more than a quarter of a century. It is used by the United States Government. Indorsed by the heads of the Great Universities as the Strongest, Purest and Most Healthful. Dr. Price's the only Baking Powder that does not contain Ammonia, Lime or Alum. Sold only in Cans.

PRICE BAKING POWDER CO.,
NEW YORK. CHICAGO. SAN FRANCISCO.

Colds Coughs Croup. are surely cured by Perry Davis'
Pain Killer
read the directions carefully.

FARMERS

If you must sell Corn, Wheat, Butter and Eggs at present prices you must buy Cheaper or expect hard times. We offer, tariff or no tariff, one of our leading Coffees, 20lbs. full weight $3.75; ground, ready for use, cheaper grades at 15c; Baking Powder, 5-lb tin $1; never heard of complaint, try it and report. Starch, best big lumps, 6lbs. 25c; 50-lb boxes, 4½c; 20 lbs $1. White Beans, No. 2, but fair quality, 2c. Tea Dust, 75 lbs, $3.75—good to use, but we would rather sell you Tea at 20c, 25c, 30c, or 35c. Canned Tomatoes, good pack, $1.75 case. Corn, $1.90, $2.40, $2.75 a case that has no equal. Table Fruit, three grades, per case, (2 dozen in a case mind) $3.50, $3.75 and $4.25; these are fine; have cheaper but not recommended. Flour, $1 sack, or $4 bbl; will you try this kind? Axle Grease at $1.75 a case. Chewing Tobacco, plug, 3 brands at 30c; 2 or 3, including Lorillards, 10c Nuggets, at 35c, full weight. Shoes and Stockings—Men's Button Shoes, 5 to 10, at $1.45, neat and worth buying; a better grade in Lace that have proved cheap at $1.75; then our $2.50 Sunday Shoe in Button, Congress or Bals, that is lace with hooks has no equal; it would be called cheap here at $3, and in some places brings $4.00. Men's low cut shoes all styles, widths and sizes from 5 to 9, at $1.50 were made to sell at $3.50 but have not found buyers at this figure. Ladies' Kid, Goat or Calf, button, in standard widths, only $1.50, is the cheapest we could recommend; have kid at $1.25, but not so good though neat and saleable; for higher cost shoes see regular list in Home Circle. Misses, one lot of over 300 pairs, cloth and kid lace, regular stock cost $1 to make, we sell 11, 11½ at 70c, 12 and 12½ at 60c, 13 and 1 ½ at 70c, or six pairs any size for $3.00; Children's stout goat, calf or kid lace Shoes, fit for every-day wear, size 2, 30c, size 3, 35c, size 4 at 40c, size 5 at 50c; the big sizes are all sold at double the money; they have heels. Infants' Shoes, light or dark in sizes 1, 2, 3, either ankle tie or lace boots at 28c to 35c, as to size and kind; the ankle ties are light color. Men's ½-hose in small and medium sizes fair quality, per doz. 65c, 75c, 90c; better quality and full to extra sizes $1.00, $1.25, and fine and heavy $1.35, all ribbed top and extra value. Women's Stockings, not our best or our worst at $1 dozen or 10c pair in stripe, plain, mixed white or balbriggan, some of the latter used to bring 25c pair; try them if you ever wear Stockings. It costs too much to advertise in the newspapers or we would tell you of 10,000 articles we offer at 30 to 100 per cent. lower than any credit store on the Coast. Send for Home Circle if you have not had it or do not get it regularly; it is issued every month. Address Smith's Cash Store, 418 Front Street, San Francisco, Cal.

The Oldest Medicine in the World is probably
DR. ISAAC THOMPSON'S CELEBRATED EYE-WATER.
This article is a carefully prepared physician's prescription, and has been in constant use for nearly a century. There are few diseases to which mankind are subject more distressing than sore eyes, and none, perhaps, for which more remedies have been tried without success. For all external inflammation of the eyes it is an infallible remedy. If the directions are followed it will never fail. We particularly invite the attention of physicians to its merits. For sale by all druggists. JOHN L. THOMPSON, SONS & CO., TROY, N. Y. Established 1797.

10,000 AGENTS WANTED AT ONCE
To sell the complete history of the murder of Dr. CRONIN. Giving a full and complete account of the conspiracy, murder, discovery of the body, arrests, coroner's inquest, the trial and verdict. The book contains over 100 illustrations. Onelarge 12 mo. volume of about 500 pages, price only $1.50. OUTFITS NOW READY. Send, at once, 25 cents for an outfit; first come, first served. This is the chance of your life-time; big commissions. Address, LEIGH & LEE, Publishers, 303-305 Jackson Street, Chicago, Ill.

$75.00 to $250.00 A MONTH can be made working for us. Persons preferred who can furnish a horse and give their whole time to the business. Spare moments may be profitably employed also. A few vacancies in towns and cities. B. F. JOHNSON & CO., 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va.

PATENTS NO DELAY. Circular free. W. E. SCULTER, WASHINGTON, D. C.

S. F. N. U., No. 408. New Series No. 15.

ST. JACOBS OIL
Sure Cure.
CURES PERMANENTLY
SPRAINS.
Suffered Years in Pain.
14 Sumner St., Cleveland, Ohio, Aug. 11, 1888.
In 1851 I sprained my arm clubbing chestnuts; suffered years in pain and could not lift my arm. It was finally cured by St. Jacobs Oil. JACOB ETZENSPERGER.
AT DRUGGISTS AND DEALERS.
THE CHARLES A. VOGELER CO., Baltimore, Md.

BARGAIN IN REAL ESTATE.

For sale, in the town of Alameda, Alameda County, a large lot situated in the business centre, with two story house containing two stores and six rooms. Street cars pass house. Price, $3,250. Apply at once.
C. RANDECGER,
1616 Webster St., Alameda, Cal.

TIGER FRONT-CUT MOWER!

The Best Mower in the Market,
—AND—
The Only Machine to Buy!

"The best Mower I have ever seen work."—David Hall, Cloverdale.

"The best Mower I have ever used, and my experience extends over thirty years, and with all the different kinds."—Augustus Moore, Sunol

"I will cheerfully recommend it to all."—William Armstrong, Petaluma.

"Lightest draft Mower I have ever used."—George C. Hanley, Livermore.

"Has given perfect satisfaction."—Thomas Richardson, Oakdale.

"Would not exchange it for any Mower I know of."—A. W. Collis, Brentwood.

"Best Mower I ever used."—Thomas Holden San Buenaventura.

"The Lightest Draft and Strongest-Cutting Mower in the market."—John Worswick, Grangeville.

Write for Special Circulars.

Baker & Hamilton,
San Francisco and Sacramento.

STEINWAY. KRANICH, PEASE & BACH, Gabler, Roenish Pianos; Burdett Organs, Band Instruments. Largest stock of Sheet Music and Books. Bands supplied at Eastern Prices. MATTHIAS GRAY CO., 206 Post Street, San Francisco.

INVENTORS are invited to consult the old established Patent Firm of Mason, Fenwick & Lawrence, Wash, D.C.

PARTIES HAVING TO SEND PACKAGES to EUROPE or to Import from there, will be benefited by employing the MORRIS EUROPEAN EXPRESS CO.
Limited, which is the oldest and most reliable European Express in the Country, established in 1858.
This Company has over 300 Agents in Europe and by these can purchase any kind of Goods.
Charges very moderate.
Consignments of best
Rhine, Burgundy and Tokay Wines, and of excellent Copy Books at Low Prices always in stock.
CUSTOM HOUSE BROKERS.
Send for full particulars. Agents Wanted.
L. W. MORRIS, President,
18 and 20 Broadway, New York City.

USE NEW WELLINGTON COAL.

Statement Jan. 1st, 1890.
R. H. McDonald PRES'T. F. V. McDonald, CASHIER.
ESTABLISHED 1863. Oldest Chartered Bank on the Pacific Coast.
PACIFIC BANK
Capital Stock $1,000,000.00.
SURPLUS $ 750,000.00
AV. RESOURCES $4,500,000.00
During the past year we have paid our regular dividends and have added another $50,000 to our surplus fund.
Thanking our friends for past favors we respectfully ask a continuance of the same.
San Francisco, Cal. R. H. McDonald, Prest.

Deposits Received from $1 upwards.
Money Saved is Money Earned. Deposit in a good Savings Bank.
PEOPLES HOME SAVINGS BANK
605 Market St., cor. 4th St. IN FLOOD BUILDING
San Francisco, California.
Guarantee Capital, $1,000,000
Interest apportioned from date of deposit. Deposits from any part of the Pacific Coast States may be sent by registered letter, post office money order, bank draft or express.
Copy of By-laws and list of shareholders in Guarantee Capital sent free on application.
The People's Home Savings Bank has exceptional facilities for safe, profitable and satisfactory investment of funds at good rates of interest.
Thankful for past favors and asking for continuance of the same. Respectfully,
Columbus Waterhouse, Prest.

DR. SYKES' SURE CURE FOR CATARRH
ESTABLISHED CHICAGO 1870 — 1886 Removed TO CINCINNATI.
Has cured many cases pronounced hopeless by physicians. Send for Free Book "Common Sense Talk" and numerous testimonials. They will convince you.
Dr. SYKES' SURE CURE CO., 330 Race St., Cincinnati, O.

GILES' CREOSOZONE
FOR THE DESTRUCTION OF

VERMIN and PARASITES
AFFECTING POULTRY AND BIRDS.
Price, FULL QUART, 75c. FULL DIRECTIONS ON EACH CAN.
SOLD BY ALL GROCERS AND DRUGGISTS.
Prepared only by Nelson Giles, Jr., Manufacturing Co., National City Cal.

THE WORKMAN'S SOLACE.

"I tell you, my boy, I get a heap more comfort out of a package of 'SEAL OF NORTH CAROLINA PLUG CUT' than Jay Gould does out of all his millions."

TO SHARPEN THE APPETITE, improve digestion, purify and enrich the blood, cleanse and strengthen the system and build up the flesh, if reduced below the standard of health, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery has no equal.

Do you feel dull, languid, low-spirited; experience a sense of fullness or bloating after eating, tongue coated, bitter or bad taste in mouth, irregular appetite, dizziness, frequent headaches, nervous prostration or exhaustion, hot flushes, alternating with chilly sensations, sharp, biting, transient pains here and there, cold feet, drowsiness after meals, wakefulness, or disturbed and unrefreshing sleep, constant, indescribable feeling of dread, or of impending calamity?

If you have any considerable number of these symptoms, you are suffering from Bilious Dyspepsia, or Torpid Liver, associated with Dyspepsia, or Indigestion. The more complicated your disease, the greater the number and diversity of the symptoms. No matter what stage it has reached, Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery will subdue it, if taken according to directions, for a reasonable length of time.

"Golden Medical Discovery" acts powerfully upon the Liver, and through that great blood-purifying organ, cleanses the system of all blood-taints and impurities, from whatever cause arising. It is equally efficacious in acting upon the Kidneys, and other excretory organs, cleansing, strengthening and healing their diseases. It cures all humors, from a common Blotch, or Eruption, to the worst Scrofula, Salt-rheum, "Fever-sores," Scaly or Rough Skin, in short, all diseases caused by bad blood. Great Eating Ulcers rapidly heal under its benign influence. Especially has it manifested its potency in curing Tetter, Eczema, Erysipelas, Boils, Carbuncles, Sore Eyes, Scrofulous Sores and Swellings, Hip-joint Disease, "White Swellings" and Enlarged Glands.

"Golden Medical Discovery" is the only Blood and Liver medicine, sold by druggists, guaranteed to benefit or cure in every case, on fair trial, or money paid for it will be promptly refunded. WORLD'

INYO INDEPENDENT.

COUNTY OFFICIAL PAPER.

C. MULHOLLAND, - - - Proprietor.

Independence, Cal.,

FRIDAY, - - - MAY 23, 1890.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

VOL. XXI. NO. 50. INDEPENDENCE, INYO CO., CAL., MAY 23, 1890. WHOLE NO. 1021.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

COUNTY OFFICIAL PAPER.

C. MULHOLLAND, - - - Proprietor.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One Year (post paid)	$4.00
Six Months	2.25
Three Months	1.50
One Month	50
Single Copies	20

The San Francisco Market

THE LOCAL GRAIN MARKETS.

The sample Wheat market continues quiet, and prices are unchanged. Offerings are liberal, but the demand light. The Call Board market is moderately active.

The Barley market was weaker yesterday. Offerings are liberal, but the demand was less urgent. Choice bright feed was offered at 92½c ₱ ctl, with 90c as the asking price for good but dark grades.

Oats are firm and moderately active. Stocks are heavy, but the demand is fair.

Yellow Corn is steady and moderately active; White is dull and very weak.

FRUITS AND VEGETABLES.

The Fruit market continues fairly active. There is still a good inquiry for Oranges of desirable size. Culls and "off sizes," to adopt the parlance of the trade, are dull and weak. Apples are in light supply, but meet with very little demand.

Several consignments of Strawberries are now arriving daily. Los Angeles Berries are of inferior quality and are difficult to sell even at 10@15c ₱ basket. The Berries coming from the Santa Clara valley are bringing readily 50c per basket.

Asparagus is coming forward freely.

DAIRY PRODUCE.

Cheese is weak at the recent decline. The receipts are heavy and stocks continue to accumulate.

The market is still heavily supplied with Fresh Butter.

There is a fair inquiry for strictly choice ranch Eggs. All other grades of stock are weak and neglected.

POTATOES AND ONIONS.

There is an advance in Onions.

Eastern Potatoes continue to arrive freely. New Potatoes are selling at 4½@5c per ℔.

POULTRY AND GAME.

There is little or no inquiry for Game. There is still a good active movement in all classes of Poultry and the market is as firm as ever.

FLOUR—Family Extra $4 10@$4 20 ₱ bbl; Superfine, $2 80@$3 10; Bakers' Extra, $4 05@$4 15; Oregon Extra, $3 65@$3 85.

WHEAT—No. 1 Shipping, $1 27½ ₱ ctl; Port Costa delivery; do choice, $1 28¾; good to choice Milling, $1 30@$1 32½.

BARLEY—No. 1 Feed, 90c ₱ ctl; choice bright lots, 92½c; common grades, 85@87½c; Brewing, No. 1, $1 05@$1 10; do, No. 2, 95c@$1; Chevalier, nominal, No 1 Bay, $1 10@$1 20; do, No. 2, 95c@$1 05.

OATS—Surprise, $1 45@$1 50 ₱ ctl; choice Feed, $1 37½; No. 1, $1 32½@$1 35; No. 2, do, $1 22½@$1 25; Black, $1 00@$1 15; do, for seed, $1 25; Gray, $1 25@$1 30; choice Milling, $1 40.

CORN—Small Yellow, $1 10@$1 12½; Large Yellow, $1 10@$1 12½; White, 95c@$1 00; Popcorn, $1 75@$2 00 ₱ ctl.

HOPS—10c@13c ₱ ℔.

RYE—Quotable at 92½c@95c ₱ ctl.

BUCKWHEAT—$2 00@$2 15 ₱ ctl.

MIXED FEED—$17 00 ₱ ton.

MIDDLINGS—From $18 50@$19 50 ₱ ton according to quality.

BRAN—Quotable at $15 00@$15 50 ₱ ton.

CRACKED CORN—$24 50@$25 50 ₱ ton.

ROLLED BARLEY—$20 50@$21 50 ₱ ton.

CORNMEAL—Feed from mill, $24 00@$25 00 ₱ ton.

OILCAKE MEAL—New or old process, $25 00 ₱ ton from mill.

GROUND BARLEY—$20 50@$21 50 ₱ ton.

MILLSTUFFS—Buckwheat Flour, 5c ₱ ℔; Graham Flour, 3c; Rye Flour, 3c; Rice Flour, 9c; Rye Meal, 2½c; Cornmeal, 2¾c. Oatmeal, 4¼; Oat Groats, 4¼c; Buckwheat, Groats, 8½c; Hominy, 4c; Cracked Wheat, 3½c; Farina, 4¾c; Pearl Barley 4¼@4¾c; Flaked Pearl Wheat, 3¼c; Oat Flakes, 5c; Split Peas, 6½c; California Cut Oatmeal, in bbls, $7 00; Pearl Hominy in bbls, $8 50; Rolled Oats, ₱ bbl, $7.

DRIED PEAS—Green, $3 00@$3 50; Niles $2 00@$2 25; Blackeye, $2 75@$3 00 ₱ ctl.

BEANS—Small White, $2 15@$2 25 ₱ ctl; Pea, $2 15@$2 25; Pink, $3 10@$3 20; Bayos, $3 00@$3 10; Butter, $2 00@$2 25; Lima, $4 00@$4 25; Red, $3 75.

SEEDS—Yellow Mustard, 2c@2.05; Brown, 3c@3½c; Canary, 3½c@4c; Hemp 4¾c@5c; Flax, 2½c@2¾c; Rape, 1.75c@2c; Timothy, 5c@6c; Alfalfa, 8¼ ₱ ℔.

HAY—Wheat, $7 00@$15 00; Oat, $6 00@$10 50; Alfalfa, $11 00@$13 00; Stock, $6 00@$7 00; Clover, $6 00@$9 50; Wild Oat $6 00@$11 50; Barley, $6 00@$10 00; Wheat and Oat, $8 00@$14 00; Compressed, $10 00@$14 00.

STRAW—45@60c ₱ bale.

FRUITS—Apples, ₱ box, $1 50@$3 00. Mexican Limes ₱ case, $4 00@$4 50; Lemons, Sicily, ₱ box, $5 50@$6 00; do Los Angeles, $1 00@$1 50; do Riverside, $2 00@$2 50; Bananas ₱ bunch, $1 50@$3 50. Oranges, Riverside Navels, $3 00@$4 25; do Riverside Seedlings, $1 75@$2 00; do Los Angeles Navels, $2 00@$2 50; do Los Angeles Seedlings, $1 50@$1 85; Mediterranean Sweets, Riverside, ₱ box, $2 50@$3 00; do Los Angeles ₱ box, $2 00@$2 25.

DRIED FRUITS—Apricots, bleached, ₱ ℔, 14c@16c; do, unbleached, 7c@8c. Plums, pitted, ₱ ℔, 4c@5c; do, unpitted, 2c@2½c; French Prunes, ₱ ℔, 9c@10c; German Prunes, ₱ ℔, 2c@2½c; Apples, evaporated, ₱ ℔, 10c@10½c; do sundried sliced, 6c@6½c; do quarters, 4½c@5c; Peaches, bleached, ₱ ℔ 14c@16c; do peeled, 25c@30c; do unbleached 9c@10c; Pears, bleached, sliced, 7c@8c; do sundried, quarters, 2c@3c; Figs, sacks, ₱ ℔, 2c; do boxes, ₱ ℔, 3c@4c; Smyrna Figs ₱ ℔, 14@16c; Nectarines, white ₱ ℔, 9c@11c; do red, 4c @6c; Blackberries, ₱ ℔, 10c@14c; Raisins, London layers, ₱ 20-℔ box, $1 50@$2 00; Fractions, 25c higher; Raisins, Loose Muscatels, $1 00@$1 25; do, in bulk, ₱ ℔, 5c@6c; do Seedless Muscatels, ₱ box, 85c@$1 10; do Seedless Sultanas, $1 00@$1 30; Stemless Grapes, ₱ ℔, 3@3½c.

VEGETABLES—Artichokes, ₱ dozen, 25c@50c; Cabbage, ₱ ctl, $1 50@$1 75; Celery ₱ dozen, 50c@65c; Cauliflower, ₱ dozen 75c@$1 00; Turnips, White, ₱ sack, $1 00; do Yellow, $1 00; Parsnips, ₱ ℔, 1½c@2c; Carrots, ₱ sack, 50@65c; Beets, ₱ sack, 60c@75c; Dried Peppers ₱ ℔, 6c@10c; Dried Okra ₱ ℔, 12½c@15c; Asparagus ₱ box, $1 00@$1 50; do Island, $2 00@$2 50; Green Peas, common, ₱ ℔ 2c@4c; do sweet, 5c@6c; Rhubarb, ₱ box, 75c@$1 50.

ONIONS—Good to choice, $5 00@$6 50 ₱ ctl.

POTATOES—Burbank Seedlings, California, ₱ ctl, $2 00@$2 25; do Oregon, $1 25@$2 25; do Garnet Chile, Oregon, $1 00@$1 50; Early Rose, sks, ₱ ctl, $1 25@$1 75; River Reds, ₱ ctl, $2 00@$2 25; Tomales Reds, $2 00@$2 25; Eastern, according to variety, 80c@2 00; Sweet Potatoes, ₱ ctl. $3 00@$3 62½.

BUTTER—Fancy, ₱ ℔, 16c; choice, 13½c@15c; fair to good, 12@13c; Store, 9c@11c; Eastern, 8@12½c; pickled roll, old, 12½c@14; new 17c@18c; firkin, old, 12½c@14c; do new, 15½@16.

POULTRY—Hens, ₱ dozen, $6 50@7 50; Roosters, old, ₱ dozen, $5 50@$6 00; do, young, $8 50@$10 00; Broilers, large, ₱ dozen, $6 50@$8 50; do small, 4 50@$6 00; Pigeons, young, ₱ dozen, $2 25@$2 50; do old, $2 25@$2 50; Turkeys, Hens, live, ₱ ℔, 18c@20c; do, Gobblers, 18c@20c; do dressed, 20c@21c; Geese, ₱ pair, $1 75@2 00; Goslings, ₱ pair, $2 50@$3 00; Ducks, old ₱ dozen, $5 50@$7 50; do young, $8 00@$9 50.

CHEESE—Choice to fancy mild, new, ₱ ℔ 8½@9c; fair to good new, 7½@8c; California Young America, choice to fancy, 9c@10c; New York, 14½c@15c.

EGGS—California choice ranch, ₱ dozen, 16½@17c; do store, 15c@16c; Eastern, 15c.

A Heaven on Earth.

Mrs. Gushing—Oh, I am so charmed with your home, Mrs. Quiverful. Such a beautiful house, and such pleasant surroundings! and then such daughters, too. I hope the young ladies realize that their home is a perfect paradise.

Uncle Joe (a mean old thing)—Oh, they live up to it, Mrs. Gushing. I assure you there is no marrying or giving in marriage here.—Munsey's Weekly.

Weather Changes.

George—How much colder it's getting!

Violet—Yes, but it will be warmer soon, for here comes papa.—Munsey's Weekly.

Unable to Come to an Understanding.

Footpad (presenting pistol)—Fork over your rhino, and be quick about it!"

Near Sighted Bostonian—Beg pardon?

(Sternly) "No monkeying! Unlimber! Produce the seads!"

"Pardon me, but I do not exactly apprehend the drift of your"——

"Cheese your patter! Don't you see I've got the drop? Unload your boodle!"

"I am totally at a loss, my dear sir, to perceive the relevancy of your observations or to"——

"Clap a stopper on your gab and whack up, or I'll let 'er speak! Turn out your bundle quick! Get a squirm on you!"

"Is there any peculiarity in the external seeming of my apparel or demeanor, sir, that impels you, a total stranger, to"——

"Once more, you dash bedashed bloke, will you uncork that swag?"

(Hopelessly bewildered) "My friend, I confess my utter inability to gather any coherent idea from the fragmentary observations you have imparted. There is something radically irreconcilable and incapable of correlation in the vocabularies with which we endeavor to make the reciprocal or correspondential interchange of our ideas intelligible. You will pardon me if I suggest that synchronization of purpose is equally indispensable with homogeneity of cerebral impression, as well as parallelism of idiom and"——

But the highwayman had fled in dismay.]—Chicago Tribune.

The Power of the Press.

"I don't want that young fellow to come around here any more," her father gave out decisively.

"All right, father. He is only a newspaper reporter, and"——

"A reporter! Oh, well, in that case I don't think it's any use. In the first place it wouldn't do any good, and we'd only be having him coming down the chimney or through the window, so I guess we had better yield gracefully."

And that evening, after she told him, it was a pleasure to them both to acknowledge the great power of the press.—Philadelphia Times.

The New Coachman.

Lady—And what is your Christian name?

Coachman—Nebuchadnezzar, mum.

Lady—What a dreadfully long name. I should never be able to pronounce it if I wanted you in a hurry.

Coachman—Yer don't need to pernounce nothin', mum. When yer wants me you've only to stick yer fingers in yer mouth and whistle, and I'll be around afore yer can say Jack Robinson.—Yenowine's News.

No Nonsense About Him.

They were talking of death when one man asked:

"What were his last words?"

"He didn't say anything," was the reply.

"That's just like him," said the first man with an approving nod; "there was no gas about him. He was all business."—Texas Siftings.

To Live on the Old Man.

"I understand young Briefless is about to marry the daughter of old Bonds, the millionaire."

"Yes, so I am told."

"Will he give up the law business?"

"Yes; he will give up the law business and go into the son-in-law business."—Lowell Citizen.

What He Found Fault With.

"What is your opinion of cranks?" asked Miss Brighton of Gus De Jay.

"Candidly," said the dainty Augustus, "I don't like cwanks much, you know."

"Why not?"

"I cahn't appwove of the way they weah theiah haiah."—Washington Post.

A Long Time Coming.

Winks—When did you get back from California?

Binks—Only this noon. I came by easy stages.

Winks—Is that so? I should think you would have come by rail.—Lowell Citizen.

A Rapid Age.

"May I kiss you?"

"No, Mr. Simpson, I don't feel well enough acquainted."

(Interesting pause). "There, now; do you feel well enough acquainted?"

"Yes, George."—Racket.

A Heart Sorrow.

"I should never have recognized this other photo of you, dear. It looks so careworn and old."

"Yes; that was taken when papa wouldn't buy me the Duke of Dirtwater."—Life.

Requires to Be Nourished.

Teacher of Political Economy—You may mention an infant industry.

Lively Young Student—Sitting still and sucking one's thumbs!—Chicago Times.

Appreciated Sympathy.

"Why are you here, my poor fellow?" asked the visitor of the prisoner.

"De walls is so thick I can't git out. Dats why, see?"—Racket.

A Question of Living.

"Do you really think life is worth living?"

"Oh, I don't know. It depends on what kind of a boarding place a man has."—Lowell Citizen.

STOVES AND FURNACES.

Hints and Suggestions on Their Daily Care and Keeping.

"Why is it that I burn out so many sets of stove lining?" some one asks. Let me tell you. Use a little more care than you have been using, watch and see that a clinker is not allowed to form on the linings, and if one does form, remove it carefully with the poker. At night, the fire-box should be even full of coal after raking out all the dead cinders and ashes in the range; never fill your stove with coal above the top of the linings. Never use a shaker when it is possible to avoid it; instead, use the poker freely and you will have a better fire and use less coal. Shaking the fire banks it down into a solid mass and the air can not circulate through. When the fire from any cause becomes dull, do not stir it over the top or put in wood, but rake out the cinders and open the drafts. At night do not close the drafts as soon as the coal for the night is put on, but let it burn for a short time, or as one man expresses it, "until you think the coal is warm all through." There is then very little danger of gas, even if the stove is a poor one. The ashes should never accumulate in the ash pan until they reach the grate. If this happens even once, the grate will usually be burned out. Always run the range so that you can get all the heat needed without having the top red hot, as this will warp the covers and centers, and if a little water should happen to fall on the stove while so hot the top of the range is very apt to crack. Keep the stove well blacked; if the lids got covered with grease turn them over and let the top of the lid come next the fire until the grease is all burned off. If the covers are red and the blacking does not adhere, let them get wet so that they will rust a little and then black them.

Some stoves require more draft and a stronger chimney than others. On days when the wind is in a certain direction the drafts usually left open, will have to be closed. Have the smoke pipes of the furnace and range taken down and cleaned out, and at the same time clean the inside of the chimney as far as possible. When soft coal is used this must be done very often. An ordinary chimney and range will need to be cleaned about every two months; the furnace just before commencing to use in the fall, and once or twice during the winter. Let the coal in the range or furnace burn long enough to get all the heat there is in it before refilling, not until almost burned out, but until if left longer the fire would commence to cool. A good housekeeper will know by the appearance when it is time to fill. Never use oil of any kind to kindle a fire, as it is not safe.

When buying a range buy one that is moderately heavy and made of the best quality of iron. All the joints of a heating stove or range should fit well; because if they do not, when the range has been used a short time you will notice gas escaping and will not be able to tell where it comes from.

The nickel on a heating stove can be kept bright by wiping often with a dry, clean cloth. In the spring when the stove is taken down for the summer, rub the nickel well with a dry, soft cloth and then wrap in newspaper; be careful not to let the hand touch the nickel after it is rubbed, as in the fall every place that has been touched will show a rusty spot. If it has not been touched, it will be found to be as bright as when put away. To clean zinc under a heating stove, never wet it if it can be avoided. When new, rub often with a dry, clean cloth and when more is necessary use tepid water and no soap.

In buying furnaces there are several things to be avoided—one is, a furnace that will allow the gas to escape. A furnace to be properly set should have all the joints well packed with a cement that will not burn out. Some cement used in packing furnaces will turn to dust the first time a fire is built and will no longer keep the gas from escaping. The best cement to be used is made of a mineral that hardens under the action of heat; such a cement will become so hard that it will take a chisel to remove it. The best furnace to buy is a return flue furnace or in other words one that carries the smoke down to the base before it is carried out of the chimney. This makes the furnace burn less coal for the amount of heat obtained than those in which the smoke is carried directly to the chimney. Buy an all cast iron furnace, it lasts so much longer and requires so much less repairing; and be sure the furnace has a water pan. Always fill the water pan with strictly fresh and pure water. The amount of water in the pan can be regulated by the amount of moisture you like in the house. If this is properly attended to, the objection a great many make to a furnace, namely, that the air is too dry, is removed. Furnaces are very easy to manage and are so much nicer than stoves that the wonder is that more people do not use them. If possible have the furnace set so as to take the cold air from outside; have the cold air box large enough to give at all times plenty of fresh air. There is never too much fresh air until the air comes cold through the registers and then the supply should be decreased. It does not take any more coal to run the furnace with pure air from the outside than with foul air from the inside. Be sure all the pipes between the floors and walls are made double. With proper care a furnace can always be made safe, healthful and pleasant.—Nellie Willey, in Good Housekeeping.

THE DYING JUGGERNAUT.

Coolies Hired to Draw the Car Once Drawn by Frantic Devotees.

The announcement that the once-famous festival of Juggernaut has so declined in popularity as to render it necessary for the priests to hire coolies to drag the car is a measure of the extent to which the destructive solvent of Western thought is being applied to Western creeds. The car of the great god of Pooree was one of the most sacred of Brahmanic "properties" and the rath jattra, a festival which, in importance, yielded to that of no other duty in the Hindoo Pantheon. From every part of the vast empire of Hindostan pilgrims flocked to share in it, and when the car of Juggernaut was dragged once a year from the temple in order to bathe the gods in the cool water of the tank a mile and a half distant the wildest enthusiasm seized the vast multitude of devotees. Thousands rushed to seize the cables, and so eager were the volunteers for this holy service that the best and greatest men of Orissa struggled with each other to obtain a hold upon the ropes. To use the language of an old writer who witnessed the rath jattra in its palmy days, "they are so greedy and eager to draw it that whosoever, by shouldering, crowding, shoving, heaving, thrusting, or in any insolent way, can but lay a hand upon the rope, they think themselves blessed and happy. And when it is going along the city there are many that will offer themselves as a sacrifice to the idol, and desperately lie down on the ground that the chariot wheels may run over them, whereby they are killed outright. Some get broken arms, some broken legs, so that many are destroyed, and think to merit Heaven."

At even a later date martyrs to Juggernaut, or Jaggauna'th, as he is more correctly termed, were not infrequent. When Francis Buchanan was in Pooree early in this century, he describes the harsh grating of the gigantic car as it moved along, the obscene songs of the priests in honor of the god, and the fierce glances which the fanatics bestowed on the beef-eating Englishmen, as a pilgrim announced himself ready to become a sacrifice to the idol. No one daring or caring to prevent the self-immolation, the man prostrated himself in the road before the tower as it moved along, lying on his face with his arms stretched forward. The multitude passed around him, leaving the space clear, until he was crushed to death by the wheels of the ponderous structure. Then a wild cry of praise was raised, and as the god was seen to "smile" at the libation of spouting blood, the devotees threw cowries and pieces of money on the body of the victim in approbation of the holy deed.

It is, therefore, suggestive of a strange revolution in Hindoo opinion to hear that not only are victims lacking, but that instead of thousands struggling for the honor of a place at the dragropes, laboring men, at so many annas per diem, have to be hired to perform the sacred function. The awe of the Indian people for "the Lord of the world" has been declining. For many years past the fame of the great god of Orissa has been on the wane, and the time when a human sacrifice was deliberately offered up to the hideous idol is fast getting beyond the power of the very oldest of old Indians to recall. Admitting that the number of devotees this year is smaller, owning to the loss of two pilgrim ships—and the prophecy that a third will be wrecked before the year is out—it is undeniable that Jagganna'th is doomed, and the wealth which it brought to the priests and the townspeople of Pooree is likely to vanish before many years elapse. Sometimes a poor decrepit wretch, weary of life, or drugged by the priests with Indian hemp or opium, will wildly throw himself in front of the wheels, though he is usually dragged out by the police, who have orders to prevent any attempts at suicide. Saddest abasement of all, from the standpoint of Brahmanism, it happened a few years ago, for the first time in history, that to the horror and chargin of the priests, the car of Jagganna'th stood still in the streets of Pooree, while the pilgrims looked on in impious apathy. Yet no harm befell them, although a subsequent famine has been attributed to their sacrilegious carelessness. However, the result has been, that though worshipers still come to Pooree, they just as frequently prefer to save themselves the trouble of hauling the gods, and, as happened on the present occasion, the priests afraid of the idols never reaching the tank, have contracts with irreverential coolies to perform the job for a stipulated number of rupees. Mortality there is, of course, still. The poor die for want of food, of disease, and of lack of proper accommodations. But there is no longer any need for interfering, for the wrong will soon right itself by Jagganna'th ceasing to "draw." The East, we fear, is already grown lax in its religious observances. The pilgrim takes a third-class circular ticket to the holy places. Infidel ship-owners issue passages to Djeddah, and a tourist contractor escorts the faithful over the forty miles between Mecca and the sea. The Egyptain dervishes are becoming extremely chary about making a payment of their persons for the Saadeeyeh Sheik to ride over, and now that the Indian exchequer is bemoaning the reduced returns from the "Jagganna'th trade," and coolies have to be hired to drag the car, we seem a long way from the time when Job Charnock, factor at Fort William, was converted to Hindooism, or when General Stewart engaged a Brahman to perform daily worship among the idols in his bungalow.—London Standard.

THE SWALLOW FAMILY.

A Few of the Habits Peculiar to the Swift-Winged Chirpers.

Most of the swallows of Europe and America belong to the genus hirunda. They are all noted for their speed. When after their food, which generally consists of insects, they fly after them with remarkable skill and grace, going at the rate of a mile a minute. They often drink while flying over a stream at a high rate of speed, and they often wash themselves by taking a sudden plunge. They live on the wing more than any other bird, and, it is claimed, feed their young in the air. Although quite graceful when on the wing, they are directly the opposite when on the ground, being very awkward and clumsy. This is caused by their wings being long and the legs short. The old belief that swallows foretell rain by flying low seems very logical. As their food consists of insects they would be liable to fly where insects are most abundant. Insects fly very low in damp weather, so it seems that it can not be very unwise to say that they foretell rain by flying low. It has been estimated that they eat 1,000 insects a day. This is a large number and seems too much, but the claim is made by those who have made the matter a study. Their nests are generally made of mud and clay, but throughout the South the people make them boxes. This is done more for protection than any thing and the novelty of the boxes warrants a description. The farmers cut a long smooth sapling, often being sixty feet long. He nails cross pieces on these saplings as on a telegraph pole. To each of these cross pieces he will add, say eight large gourds, which in their wild state in the South grow to be very large. He cuts these gourds so that the birds can get in, and before two weeks have past the gourds are filled with swallows. They always receive the best attention and protection, for they not only kill insects, but they are a foe of the hawk. No hawk ever appears where there are swallow boxes, for if he did, he would receive a good drubbing. The best known species of the swallow in the world is the chimney swallow. It is about six and one-half inches long, its back a bluish black with a band on the chest, and the throat ruddy. It generally has a white spot on the inner web of each tail feather except the two innermost. The tail is very long and forked. As the name indicates, it frequents chimneys, but it also builds its nest in old walls, shafts of mines and among the rafters of barns and sheds. The nest is very peculiar, being cup shaped and made of earth and straw, lined with feathers. This is attached to a wall or roof and makes a very strong nest. The parents are very attentive to the young and defend them bravely. They have two broods, but the second is sometimes left to perish, not being able to quit the nest in time of migration. The males are very courageous and are very sweet singers. The analogue of this species in America is not the one called the chimney swallow, but what is known as the barn swallow. It is seven inches long and thirteen inches between the tip of the wings. It inhabits nearly all parts of America, appearing in the Southern States from February to March. A few reach the New England States by May. Its nest is made of moist earth mixed with grasses and is attached to rafters of barns and buildings. The nest is about eight inches long and six inches in diameter. They have been found weighing as much as two pounds. Incubation lasts thirteen days, both sexes assisting, and both occupying the nest at night until the young are hatched. This is the species that so often collects together in large flocks on telegraph wires, barns and sheds and they keep up a continual chirping all the time. They start for the South about the last of August or the first of September, selecting some fair morning. They do not fly very high, and follow the course of rivers. The cliff swallow is about five inches long and twelve inches in alar extent. Its crown and back are steel blue, and are separated by a gray collar. The chin, throat and sides are of a dark chestnut, but the breast is white. The cliff swallow is found all over America, and is often called the republican swallow. The nest is generally built under eaves and cornices, where it is partly sheltered from the rain. The nest is made of earth and sand, and is lined with straw and grass. The sand swallow, which is the smallest of all, generally builds its nest in tubular gullies along the banks of rivers, often running them back three feet. The swallow, it must be admitted, does more good than harm, and it seems that it should be protected.—Springfield (O.) Times.

Not Sure on the Dodo.

"Kin I git a man arrested?" asked a colored man at the Sergeant's desk in police headquarters yesterday.

"What for?"

"Fur callin' me names."

"What names?"

"Well, sah, he called me a dodo."

"And what is a dodo?"

"I dunno, sah."

"Perhaps it means a great statesman."

"Mebbe it does, sah, an' so I'll let up on his callin' me names an' hev him arrested fur de way he jumped in an' giv me two kicks."—Detroit Free Press.

—The waste slag from the basic converters, especially in those districts where the ores are of a highly phosphoretic nature, is being extensively ground up for manure, and an English company is doubling its grinding plant in order to compete with the demand.—Boston Budget.

SUPERFLUOUS DUTIES.

How Many Women Make House-Keeping a Terrible Burden.

A woman's instinct of cleanliness is so strong that she will actually squander time in unnecessary work, just as a squirrel in a cage will store up nuts by force of his instinct of accumulation. If some house-keepers had double the time at their disposal that they have now, yet they would manage to occupy it with superfluous duties. But this is going farther than any semblance of a reason can attempt to excuse. There is no sense in working like this.

A woman can be a good house-keeper without taking all her time to do her housework. If she can not, let her after all be satisfied to be an ordinarily good one and take some of the time from her previously self-imposed drudgery for reading, education of children, self-improvement and for recreation. There is no reason why a long programme of work should be laid out for every day, nor why it should be carried through at all hazards. If each hour of the day is arranged for some kind of work, one hour at least ought to be set apart for recreation, and that hour of all others rigidly observed.

These housekeepers who are facing so much superfluous work every day, never think of doing such a thing as reading a newspaper or gathering information that will enable them to improve the quality of their work. They do not know what is taking place in the world, of which they are so small a part. They like to listen to other people's tales but never think of informing themselves by reading or observation. The children ask her questions that any one would be supposed to be able to answer, and are sent to somebody else for reply, or put off with no satisfaction at all. They soon come to the conclusion that mother isn't supposed to know any thing outside of housekeeping.

The reader has seen the more agreeable housewife who is not always furbishing up something and yet who has a house so clean that no sense detects any thing unclean, the housewife who is a companionable sort of person, at least fairly well informed regarding the events of the day as well as her special daily duties, and who finds time to get out of that everlasting grind of work that extinguishes a manifestation of those womanly and motherly instincts that may make her an adorable wife and mother if they are not laid aside for that perpetual cleaning and multiplying of work that make everyone uncomfortable at home. Such a housewife is by no means a rarity, and her opposite, the one who squanders time in superfluous duties, ought to cultivate her acquaintance.—Good Housekeeping.

THE QUEEN OF SPAIN.

Seaside Life of the Woman Who Rules the Spaniards for Her Baby Son.

If Queen Christina of Spain were pretty, she would carry all before her; unfortunately, she has the sort of complexion which English doctors term roseate—a complexion which would ruin the effect of the most perfectly-modeled features. It's a pity that her hands and feet are so long. Don't mind my saying so, but in their arms and the extremeties of both sets of limbs the House of Austria shows more than "traces" of descent from Darwin's common simian ancestor. I dare say it would be a vast relief to the Queen-Regent if she could wear gloves when she takes her public sea-bath. Fortunately for her, there are pockets in her tunic, into which she sticks her fingers, and so hides their extreme length and sinewy anatomy. She carries a sunshade that nearly hides her face. She gives it to the bather in the water, and he slings it by the strings on his arm.

The marine attire consists of lint shoes, stockings, pantalettes of the zouave kind, with deep frills hiding the ankles and a short tunic. For the promenade after the bath—and her Majesty is frequently to be met like an ordinary mortal walking along with a baby Infanta clinging to each hand—she wears usually a black cashmere skirt, with horizontal bands of crape and a casaque trimmed with crape. Her veil is very long. She has a figure that lends itself well to drapery, although the shoulders are rather high. We hear that she smokes cigarettes, having learned to do so as a girl at Vienna. Her cousin, the Archduchess Matilda, who was to have been Queen of Italy, was a confirmed smoker, and lost her life through thrusting the cigar behind her back, on seeing an uncle on the terrace under a window at which she was smoking. She forgot that she had on a muslin dress, which, coming in contact with it, at once caught fire and blazed up. This will explain why Queen Christina has no objection to Ministers smoking in her presence at Aranjuez.

The little King is a jolly sort of baby. He is the image of Queen Isabella, and enjoys being noticed and shown to the crowd, to which he blows kisses with a pair of little, fat hands. He goes through this form of salutation with all his heart, and his eyes jump out of his head with glee.—St. Sebastian Letter.

—Not a great while ago one man told another that he believed he had resorted to deception in the carrying out of his plans. This did not seem to excite the accused. But the speaker went on: "I say you either resorted to deception or you were outgeneraled." As soon as he made this charge the man was greatly roused. Alas! how many there are who would rather be recognized as scoundrels than considered to be fools.—Christian Advocate.

'KERCHIEFS FOR ALL.

Charming Goods Which Are Offered at Remarkably Low Prices.

Handkerchiefs now claim great attention from fashionable dressers. There never was a time when manufacturers produced such beautiful goods in this line as at the present, and prices were never so low. Only a few years ago we gave twenty-five cents for our commonest handkerchiefs, and if we found ourselves at church or calling upon a friend with one of these, we were positively ashamed lest its coarseness would be detected and thereby the refinement of our entire toilet destroyed. Handkerchiefs that would bring, five years ago, fifty cents each, can now be had at twenty-four cents. There are hundreds of new styles seen this season, and but few plain white handkerchiefs were noticed. They are embroidered in white or colors in fancy designs, many of them being marvels of artistic taste and workmanship. One lovely specimen of fine linen has yellow and black daisies embroidered in each corner, and each side shows large dots in yellow, black and white cottons, forming a double border around the handkerchief, each row separated by a wide hemstitching. This style is also depicted in pink and blue wash cottons with charming effect. Another handsome style is in linen lawn, with a deep border of small pin-head dots embroidered in blue and yellow. Another shows yellow and red dots over a hemstitched border, and other pretty styles have little squares of lawn set on the handkerchief and hemstitched around, thus forming a border. These are very fine and dainty, and can be bought at twenty-four cents each.

All white handkerchiefs show narrow hemstitched borders and above these are four rows of hemstitching, the space between being the width of the hem. A pretty style has a scalloped edge embroidered in dark blue and in each scallop is a yellow dot, above which is a vein of yellow and blue embroidery. A novelty border is of small embroidered leaves in autumn red, which form block patterns into the handkerchief above the scalloped edge.

An odd and pretty design on a white handkerchief has a two-inch border in black showing embroidered spots in red and pink, the edge finished in small points and buttonhole stitched with yellow. Another style has embroidered points in yellow with a yellow band above. Handsome novelties are in deep rose pink, embroidered in white, and dainty pinks in pink and heliotrope show pointed edges button-holed with white, and daisies embroidered in white, forming a deep border.

Lovely patterns are seen in printed handkerchiefs, and many of these are in novel designs and combinations in colors.

Beautiful indeed are those in fine linen lawn having a wide hem, hemstitched; the double lines taken out in alternate squares, the single square being embroidered in the finest manner. Another, extremely fine and ladylike, has an embroidered pointed edge, about an inch above which is a revers half an inch wide, then another row of the plain linen, then a narrow revers, and so on until five rows of revers are accomplished.

Large palm-leaf designs are found among embroideries on fine handkerchiefs, and other large designs are noted. There are many handkerchiefs with embroidered edges having fine patterns embroidered about an inch wide entirely around them, and such can be had at fifty cents each, just one-half the original price.

An exquisitely fine and delicate specimen is in the daintiest of linen lawn, showing a four-inch border of drawn work. These are especially beautiful. All these fine handkerchiefs are selling at $1.50 each. For nineteen cents you can secure a handsome linen handkerchief with three rows of hemstitching above a medium-width hem, each corner blocked with a large square of hemstitching; and another pretty style at the same price has a half-inch border of drawn work above the hem. Twelve and a half cents will secure a very nice linen handkerchief with hemstitched border, and fifteen cents will buy those with hemstitched border and large embroidered initial. An excellent quality in linen handkerchiefs for children, with fast-colored borders, is offered at five cents each.—Brooklyn Eagle.

—A full description of the great Southern comet of this year has been published by Dr. J. M. Thorne, of the South American observatory of Cordova. He says it was in effect all tail, being without nucleus or condensation of any sort. The tail was more than forty degrees long, narrow, clearly-defined, and very graceful in appearance.—N. Y. Ledger.

LITTLE'S

CHEMICAL FLUID

NON-POISONOUS

SHEEP DIP.

One gallon, mixed with 60 gallons of cold water will dip thoroughly 180 sheep, at a cost of 1 cent each. Easily applied; a nourisher of Wool; a certain cure for SCAB. Also,

Little's Patent Powder Dip,

(Poisonous.)

Mixes instantly with water. Prevents the fly from striking. In a 2 pound package there is sufficient to dip twenty sheep, and in a 7 pound package there is sufficient to dip one hundred sheep.

CATTON, BELL & CO.

SUCCESSORS TO FALKNER, BELL & CO.

Office 406 California St. and Wool Agency Warehouse, cor. 6th and Townsend Sts

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

C. Mulholland,
EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.
PUBLISHED EVERY FRIDAY

INDEPENDENCE, CAL

FRIDAY MAY 23 1890

County Official Paper.

HELP THE ENUMERATORS.

On the 1st day of June the Census Enumerators will begin their work. They have but a very limited time in which to complete their tasks, and it is essential that they have the hearty co-operation of all the people in the work. They may be greatly embarrassed and delayed by ignorance and false modesty, and the stubborness of some people. It is a remarkable fact that there is a distressingly large number of people who at first resist the efforts of Enumerators to ascertain the facts the law demands; they appear to think that the taking of the census is in some way an interference with their personal liberty; that it is in the nature of an inquisition into private affairs that should not be placed on record. But, in fact, the records of the Enumerators are forwarded to Washington and there is not one chance in a million that they will be examined in detail by any one outside of the clerks who foot the totals of the statistics. And if there was any likelihood of any prying inquiry there is little or nothing recorded that any one should be ashamed to have put on record, while disclosure of the record is made a crime.

It is in the power of the people to greatly aid the Enumerators by preparation for their visits, so that when an officer calls he will find the responses to his questions on the tongue's end of all whose duty it is to give them. It is the part of good citizenship, therefore, to look up family and household statistics, and make such notes as memory may not furnish off hand. The Enumerator will ask, and has the right to demand, and in case of resistance to call in the aid of the law to compel compliance with his requests, the Christian name of every member of the family; the initial name of each one; the occupation of the head of every family or household, and of all of its members; whether the head of the house was a soldier at any time in the service of the nation, or a sailor, and in what branch of the army or navy the service was rendered; whether there is in the family the widow of any such person; the name and age at the nearest birthday of every person who lives in the house, whether it is a family residence or a boarding house. On this point proprietors of boarding-houses and lodging-houses, can, by prearrangement with their guests, render efficient service to the Enumerator. The color of every person must be noted, whether white, black, mulatto, quadroon, octoroon, Chinese, Indian, half-breed, etc.; also, the fact must be stated if any member of the household is absent from the State or city on a visit, or with intention to return, and how many, if any, related to the house are residents of other States or parts of this State. Response must be made to the questions as to whether any of the household are naturalized citizens; where each one was born; the place of birth of the father and the mother of each one; the months each one is employed in the year, based upon the experience of the past year; how many attend school, and for how many months in the year; how many, if any, cannot read, how many cannot write, and how many can neither read nor write. It must be stated if any member of the family is suffering from any chronic or acute disease; whether any in the household are deprived of any of the five senses, and whether any were born blind or deaf or dumb, and whether any are crippled or maimed. There are some other questions of similar character that the good of society require should be correctly answered, and refusals to answer which are in the nature of offenses, punishable under the law.

It will be seen that there are many of these questions that cannot be answered readily on being first propounded; it is therefore important that the people prepare themselves intelligently to respond to the inquiries of the Enumerators. The Government regards all responses as strictly confidential, and Enumerators will be punished for disclosing them to any person, except officially in their reports. The data only is published, not the detailed facts, and hence the records in Washington are not open to the search of any except the census officials and the committees of Congress. There has never been an instance of these confidential relations having been violated, and there is very little likelihood that it will be—at least not one in a hundred thousand Enumerators will prove treacherous, for the inducement for violation is small and the punishment is severe for such offenses.

The Public Grain and Stock Exchange (Limited), said to be the largest bucket shop in the United States, went to the wall May 19. President Platt said he thought the business would be resumed very soon. The capital is $100,000, fully paid up.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE.

INYO MARBLE COMPANY.

Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Keeler, Inyo county.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of a Board of Directors, held on the 17th day of April, 1890, an assessment (No. 9) of Ten (10) cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary at the office of the company, 205 Front street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 24 day of June, 1890 will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Thursday, the 26th day of June, 1890 to pay the delinquent assessment together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.

G. W. LUCE, Secretary.

Office, 205 Front St., San Francisco, California.

FINAL HOMESTEAD PROOF.

H A No. 432

LAND OFFICE AT INDEPENDENCE, CAL., April 30, 1890.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT THE following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before the Register and Receiver at Independence, Cal., on Saturday, June 14th, 1890, viz.: JOHN S. GORMAN, Homestead Application No. 432, for the W ½ of lot No. 1 in NW ¼ Sec 5 Lot No. 1 in NE ¼ and E ½ of lot No. 1 in NW ¼ of Sec 6, in Twp 13 S. Range 35 East, M D M

He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon, and cultivation of, said land, viz.: Hiram C. Hamilton, Helaire P. Cartier, Alvah R. Conklin and William M. Boyd, all of Independence, Cala.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD, Register.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.

Estate of ELIZA ANN SMITH, deceased.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN BY THE UNdersigned, Executor of the last Will and Testament of Eliza Ann Smith, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Executor, at his residence, at Block Rock, Inyo county, California.

WILLIAM S. MORTON.

Executor of the last Will and Testament of said Eliza Ann Smith, deceased.

Dated May 9th, 1890.

PROPOSALS FOR 18th DISTRICT FAIR.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT THE Board of Directors of the 18th District Agricultural Association of California have decided to locate the Fair of said Association for the year 1890, at such town within any of the counties of Alpine, Mono and Inyo as shall offer to the Association the largest money premium for said privilege; and will also provide a speed track and necessary buildings and will give the use of the same for holding the Fair free of cost to the Association.

Sealed Proposals to be forwarded to the Secretary of the Association on or before May 17th, 1890, at Independence, Inyo county, California.

C. MULHOLLAND, Secretary.

BUHACH

THE UNRIVALED

Insect Exterminator

Manufactured solely from Pyrethrum flowers, grown in California, in a locality where the soil and climate are peculiarly adapted to the production of flowers rich in the essential oil which makes them so remarkably destructive to insect life.

Avoid the Worthless and Spurious Preparations, sold as Insect Powders, and use Buhach from original packages, and clear your premises of all Annoying and Destructive Insect Pests.

None Genuine Without the Trade Mark.

If your dealer doesn't keep it, order directly from the

Buhach Producing & Manufacturing COMPANY,
SOLE MANUFACTURERS,
STOCKTON, - - CALIFORNIA.

S. H. BIGLAND,

—DEALER IN—

Owens Valley Lands

39 SUTTER STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO.

1-26

A $20 A Day Man:

A VOICE from Ohio. Here is a portrait of Mr. Garrison, of Salem, Ohio. He writes: "Was at work on a farm for $20 a month. I now have an agency for E. C. Allen & Co's albums and publications and often make $20 a day." (Signed) W. H. GARRISON.

William Kline, Harrisburg, Pa., writes: "I have never known anything to sell like your album. Yesterday I took orders enough to pay me over $25." W. J. Elmore, Bangor, Me., writes: "I take an order for your album at almost every house I visit. My profit is often as much as $20 for a single day's work." Others are doing quite as well; we have not space to give extracts from their letters. Every one who takes hold of this grand business sees a grand profit.

Shall we start YOU in this business, reader? Write to us and learn all about it for yourself. We are starting many; we will start you if you don't delay until another gets ahead of you in your part of the country. If you take hold you will be able to pick up gold fast. Read—On account of a forced manufacturer's sale $125,000 ten dollar Photograph Albums are to be sold to the people for $2 each. Bound in Royal Crimson Silk Velvet Plush, Charmingly decorated inside. Handsomest albums in the world. Largest Size. Greatest bargains ever known. Agents wanted. Liberal terms. Big money for agents. Any one can become a successful agent. Sells itself on sight—little or no talking necessary. Wherever shown, every one wants to purchase. Agents take thousands of orders with rapidity never before known. Great profits await every worker. Agents are making fortunes. Ladies make as much as men. Youth, reader, can do as well as any one. Full information and terms free, to those who write for same, with particulars and terms for our Family Bibles, Books and Periodicals. After you know all, should you conclude to go no further, why no harm is done. Address E. C. ALLEN & CO., AUGUSTA, MAINE.

OFFICIAL.

Application for Patent.

Mining Application No. 247.

UNITED STATES LAND OFFICE, INDEPENDENCE, CAL., April 25, 1890.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT PATrick Reddy, whose post office address is San Francisco, California, has this day filed his application for a patent for fourteen hundred and forty-eigh and seven-tenths linear feet of the Bernon Quartz Mine or vein bearing galena, lead and silver, with surface ground six hundred feet in width, situated in Coso Mining District, County of Inyo and State of California and designated by the field notes and official plat on file in this office as Lot No. 42, in Township 19 South, Range No. 40 East, of Mt. Diablo Base and Meridian.

Said Lot No. 42 being described as follows, to wit:

Survey of Connecting Line:

Commencing at corner common to Sections 14, 15, 22 and 23 of T 19 S., R. 40 E., M. D. B. and M., and running with Mag. Var. of 15 deg. 37 min. E. as follows:

N. 73 deg. 52 min. E., Needle varying along the line from N. 58 1-8 deg. E. to N. 58 3-8 deg. E, Magnetic. 71.99 chs to the S W cor. post of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine, being the S. E. cor. of the Bernon claim.

Survey of the Exterior Boundaries:

Commencing at a stake in high stone Mont. having pencil marks too dim to be read, being the S. W. cor. of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine, and the S. E. cor. of the Bernon claim, thence deflecting L. 180 deg. 86 deg. 57 min. from connecting line extended N. 73 deg 52 min. E. as assumed standard bearing of the survey, upon West boundary line of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine and East boundary line of the Bernon claim, and running as follows: 1. N. 19 deg. 11 min. W., upon East boundary of claim, local variation of declination of 0 deg. 18 min. E.; 0.90 chs to summit of limestone reef; 1 65 chs crossing high reef of limestone, 1.93 chs; whence bears S. 70 3 4 deg., W. 0.45 chs., face of open cut five feet wide. 1. N. 19 deg. 11 min., W. 4.09 chs, centre of ravine bearing Easterly 7.42 chs, summit of high croppings of lime rock; whence bears N. 59 degrees 11 min. W 4.51 chs centre incline prospect shaft 15 ft deep, no marks, 10.14 chs to centre of wash bearing Easterly from summit towards Defiance Works; 10.90 chs to old stake in high stone Mont. marked in pencil as follows: — of Bernon and Defiance Ledge—surveyed by Joseph Seely, U. S. M. Surveyor; being the side line Mont. of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine; 749.7 ft., or 11 36 chs., set 3 by 4 post in mound of stone marked Defiance West line and Bernon East line; whence bears N. 35 deg. 19 min. E. 1.28 chs. centre of incline prospect cut 12 ft. deep; whence bears N. 70 deg. 49 min E 0.76 chs centre of small prospect cut, whence bears N 79 deg. 07 min. E 5.37 chs centre of mouth of Defiance and Bernon Tunnel: whence bears N. 75 deg. 45 min. W. 2 43 chs. the face of Defiance and Bernon Tunnel; 14.39 chs centre of wash leading Easterly; 15.61 chs; whence bears N 70 deg. 49 min. E 0 93 chs an old stake in stone Mont. having Seely's name in pencil and other marks too dim to be read, being a side-line Mont. of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine; 1. N. 19 deg. 11 min W 16.18 chs summit of ridge bearing Easterly; 20.31 chs, whence bears S 42 deg. 01 min. W. 1.76 chs a stake in stone Mont. marked Kerso Ledge, S W cor. Post No. 6; whence bears N 42 deg. 01 min. E. 6.91 chs a stake in stone Mont. marked Kerso Ledge N E Post; whence bears N 35 deg. 45 min E 2.41 chs a stake in stone Mont. marked Kerso centre point 1448.7 ft., or 21.95 chs. to stake in stone Mont., no marks, being the N W cor. of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine, set 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon N E cor. No. 1, and Defiance N W cor. No. 4; thence deflecting L. 90 deg. from Co. 1 extended N. 19 deg. 11 min. W making interior ang e 90 deg. ran; 2 S. 70 deg. 49 min. W upon the North boundary line of the Bernon claim; local variation of declination of 0 deg. 18 min. E, 2, S 70 deg. 49 min, W 0.30 chs centre old sled road from summit of hill, 1.09 chs, whence bears N 60 deg. 07 min., W 3.06 chs a stake in stone Mont. being the Northerly end of Lode line and centre of Hidalgo claim, 2.10 chs whence bears N 79 deg. 57 min. W 0.61 chs the centre of Hidalgo incline shaft, 4.07 chs, crossing summit of Darwin Range, whence bears S 19 deg 31 min. E 2.91 chs, centre small shaft 300 ft or 4.545 chs, set 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked, Bernon L. L. P. No. 1; being the Northerly end of Lode Line and centre of Bernon claim, 7.86 chs centre mouth of tunnel bearing Northerly 6.01 ft, or 9.09 chs, set a 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon N W Cor. No. 4, being the N W Cor. of the Bernon claim; thence deflecting L 90 deg. from Co. 2 extended S 70 deg. 49 min. W making the interior angle 90 deg. and ran 3, S 19 deg. 11 min. E upon West boundary line of Bernon Claim, local variation of declination of 0 deg. 18 min. E, 0.15 chs centre wash bearing Westerly 4.07 chs, summit of ridge bearing Westerly, 9.01, center deep gulch bearing Westerly 10.15 chs, whence bears S 28 deg. 47 min. W 9.19 chs a stone Mont. being the S E cor. of the Hidalgo Claim; whence bears S 56 deg. 51 min. W 11.17 chs a stone Mont. being the Southerly end of Hidalgo Lode Line; whence bears S 56 deg. 25 min. W 12.46 chs a stone Mont. being the S W Cor. of the Hidalgo Claim 5, S 19 deg. 11 min. E 13 25 chs, summit of spur bearing Westerly, 14.61 chs, crossing head of wash bearing Westerly 16.28 chs, summit of spur bearing Westerly 18.03 chs, when ce bears N 86 deg. 28 min. E 3.52 chs the centre of mouth of Carry Tunnel, No. 1, whence bears N 85 deg. 20 min. E 4.22 chs the centre of mouth of Carry Tunnel No. 2, whence bears N 56 deg. 46 min. E 2.71 chs the centre of mouth of Carry Tunnel, No. 3, 21.65 chs, centre of ravine bearing Westerly, 21.47 chs, intersection with connecting line; whence bears S 73 deg. 52 min. W 62 59 chs the corner common to Sections 14, 15, 22 and 23 of T 19 S, R 40 E M D B and M, 1448.7 ft, or 21 95 chs, in south side of ravine, set 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon S W Cor. No. 3, being the S W Cor. of the Bernon Claim; thence deflecting L. 90 deg. from Co. 3, ex ended S 19 deg. 11 min. E, making interior angle 90 deg. and ran; 4, N 70 deg. 49 min. E, upon south boundary line of Bernon, local variation of declination of 0 deg. 03 min. E, 1.26 chs, edge of ravine, 2.51 chs, ridge of spur bearing Westerly 3.09 ft, or 4.45 chs, set 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon L. L., P. No. 2, being the Southerly end of Lode Line and centre of claim, 7.06 chs, crossing high reef of lime rock, 4, N 70 deg. 49 min. E, 600 ft, or 9.09 chs back to place of beginning, and set a 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon S E Cor., No. 2, and Defiance S W Cor., No. 3.

Containing 19.95 acres.

Survey of Lode Line.

Commencing at the L. L., P., No. 1, of Claim and deflecting thence L. 90 deg. from Co. 2, extended S 70 deg. 49 min W, making the interior angle 90 deg. ran, 5, S, 19 deg. 11 min. E, upon lode line; ascending 3.94 chs, whence bears S 74 deg. 41 min. W 2.91 chs a stone Mont. claimed to be the centre of Hidalgo Claim; whence bears S 72 deg. 36 min. E, 0.71 chs centre small shaft; descending; 10.30 chs, whence bears S 70 deg. 49 min. W 0.30 chs centre prospect hole 11.82 chs, whence bears N 70 deg. 49 min. E 0.50 chs centre incline shaft 60 ft deep. Ascending; 13.03 chs, summit of spur bearing Westerly. Descending; 13.36 chs, whence bears S 70 deg. 06 min. E 0.80 chs centre shaft 45 ft deep, 14.41 chs, whence bears S 70 deg. 49 min. W 0.10 chs centre mouth of tunnel, 16.66 chs, whence bears S 70 deg. 49 min. W 0.12 chs centre shaft 6 ft deep 1448 ft, or 21.94 chs to L. L. P., No. 2, of Claim.

Magnetic variation 15 deg. 37 min. E containing 19 95 acres.

THE LOCATION of this mine is recorded in the Recorder's office of Coso Mining District in Book C of page 136. The adjoining claimant is the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. mine.

Any and all persons claiming adversely any portion of said Bernon Quartz mine or surface ground are required to file their adverse claims with the Register of the United States Land Office at Independence in the State of California during the sixty days period of publication hereof, or they will be barred by virtue of the provisions of the Statute.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD, Register.

o n24

INDEPENDENCE

SHAVING SALOON.

Shaving, Hair Cutting, etc., done in the best manner.

WM. H. HUFF, Prop'r

MISCELLANEOUS.

J. R. ELDRED,
Sheriff and Tax-Collector.
INYO CO., CAL.

P. H. MACK,
COUNTY CLERK,
—AND—
Ex-officio Auditor and Recorder,
INYO CO., CAL.

GEO. M. GILL,
District Attorney,
INYO CO., CAL.

J. J. MOORE,
County Treasurer,
INYO CO., CAL.

S. P. M'KNIGHT, C. E.
COUNTY SURVEYOR
—AND—
U. S. Deputy Mineral Surveyor
For California and Nevada.
—BISHOP CREEK, INYO CO., CAL.—
The obtaining of United States mineral patents a specialty.
All kinds of surveying given the most careful and accurate attention.

JUSTICE OF PEACE,
C. MULHOLLAND.
Office in the "INDEPENDENT" Building, Independence, Inyo County, Cal.

A. R. CONKLIN,
Attorney-at-Law.
Independence, Cal.
Will practice in all the Courts of the States of California and Nevada.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
Independence, Cal.

P. W. FORBES,
ATTORNEY AT LAW.
NOTARY PUBLIC.
Cases in U. S. Land Office a Specialty.
BISHOP, INYO COUNTY, CALIFORNIA.

IRVING J. WOODIN, M D.,
Physician & Surgeon,
(COUNTY PHYSICIAN)

Louise L. Woodin, M. D.
PHYSICIAN & SURGEON.
NIGHT CALLS ATTENDED.
Office and residence at the Reddy place, Independence.

W. H. GEORGE, M. D.,
Physician and Surgeon,
Bishop Creek, Cal.
Offers his professional services to the people of Bishop Creek and vicinity. Office and residence opposite Andrew Clark's.

F. E. Bunting, M. D.
Physician & Surgeon
LONE PINE, CAL.
OFFICE IN GELCICH BUILDING
All calls attended to immediately.

Lodge 221, F. & A. M.

Regular meetings of Lodge No. 221, F. & A. M., for the year 1889, will be held at the Lodge room at Independence as follows:

Saturday ..... February 1st
" ..... March 1st
" ..... March 29th
" ..... May 3rd
" ..... May 31st
" ..... June 28th
" ..... July 26th
" ..... August 30th
" ..... September 27th
" ..... October 25th
" ..... November 22nd
" ..... December 20th

P. H. MACK, W. M.
C MULHOLLAND Sec.

P. W FORBES. P. H. MACK.
MACK & FORBES.
Real Estate Agents,
Address, P. H. MACK, Independence, Cal.
P. W. FORBES, Bishop, Cal.

FRED BURCKHARDT
Watchmaker & Jeweler,
LONE PINE, CAL.
Time pieces of all descriptions repaired and regulated, satisfaction guaranteed. Jewelry made to order. Firearms repaired and loaded.
All orders from any part of the country will be promptly attended to, at the most reasonable charges. At the old stand "Mechanics' Hall," Lone Pine.
FRED BURKHARDT.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CROCKER'S HOTEL.
BIG PINE - CAL
New House,
New Furniture,
Low Rates
Splendid hunting and fishing near by, in act, it is a veritable paradise for tourists and pleasure seekers.
Special attention given to the wants of every guest.
CROCKER BROS., Props.
sep1-tf

ANTONS SALOON
KEELER, CAL.
BEER, WINES, LIQUORS and CIGARS
All kinds of Fancy Drinks, including pure water. A comfortable and pleasant Hall.
JOHN C. ANTON, Prop.

Pioneer Livery & Feed Stables.
INDEPENDENCE, CAL.
Having returned and resumed the management of the above well known feed and livery stables, patrons can be assured of finding there the best of Buggy Teams, Saddle Horses, and
Livery Accommodations
in general. Also, Hay and Grain for sale by the pound or ton.
O. I. MAIRS, Proprietor.

E. H. Edwards,
—DEALER IN—
General Merchandise,
LONE PINE,
INYO COUNTY - - - CALIFORNIA.

Inyo Freighting Company.
REGULAR LINE
Mojave To Bishop.
Teams leave Mojave and Bishop weekly.
Goods delivered with regularity at all points on the line. Consign goods to the Company at Mojave.

J. W. Murphy.
BLACKSMITHING
—AND—
General Iron Work.
Wagons and Carriages Repaired.
HORSESHOEING, $2.00 for CASH
Shop on Edwards St., opposite the Court House, Independence.

BLACKSMITHING,
Horseshoeing, General Iron
—AND—
WAGON WORK.
PIONEER BLACKSMITH SHOP
Cor. Main St. & Depot Ave.,
INDEPENDENCE, CAL.
W. F. MATLACK ..... PROPRIETOR.
Horseshoeing ..... $2.00 for Cash
For particulars, call and see
W. F. MATLACK.

LONE PINE
Blacksmith Shop.
R. C. Spear, Prop'r
—ALL WORK ON—
MINING TOOLS,
FARMING IMPLEMENTS
& FREIGHTING OUTFITS
—PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO—
HORSE SHOEING,
CARRIAGE WORK,
GENERAL REPAIRING
All work attended to with neatness and despatch. Prices to suit the times.

BOOTS AND SHOES
MADE AND REPAIRED.
THE BEST MATERIAL.
FIRST-CLASS WORK.
Repairs done Promptly.
Prices Reasonable.
A. J. DAVIS,
nov 30-tf Independence,

MISCELLANEOUS.

Railroad Time Table.

CARSON & COLORADO R R

TAKING EFFECT, Sunday, May 10th, 1889.

STATIONS.		From Mound House. No. 1		To Mound House. No. 2.
		Leave—		Arrives—
Mound House		12:30 p. m		5.55 p. m
Dayton		1:00 p. m.		5.15 p. m.
Wabuska		3:05 p. m		3.06 p. m
Hawthorne		6:50 p. m.		11:20 a. m.
Luning		7:30 p. m.		10:05 a. m
Soda Springs		9:15 p. m.		9.05 a. m
Belleville		10:25 p. m.		7.45 a. m.
Candelaria	Ar.	11:10 p. m	Lv.	7:10 a. m
		No. 3. Leave—		No. 4. Arrives—
Belleville		8:10 a. m		5:25 p. m
Benton		11:40 a m		-
Basalt Creek		1:50p. m.		11:00 a. m
Alvord		2:25 p. m.		10:00 a. m
Independence		4:10 p. m.		8:30 a. m.
Lone Pine		5:00 p. m		7.40 a. m
Keeler	Ar.	5:45 p. m.	Lv.	7.00 a. m.

Trains 1 and 2 run daily.
Train 3 runs Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays
Train 4 runs Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays

Passenger trains make close connection at Mound House with express trains of V. & T. R. R., which connect at Reno with east and west bound trains of Central Pacific Railroad.

Stage Connections:

AT HAWTHORNE with United States Stage Company's coaches for Aurora (26 miles); Bodie (37 miles); Lundy and Bridgeport.

AT LUNING (125 miles from Mound House) with Gilmer, Salsbury & Co's. tri weekly stages (leaving Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays) for Downieville, Grantsville and Belmont.

AT CANDELARIA with U. S. Stage Co's. stages for Columbus (8 miles), Silver Peak, Montezuma Alida Valley, Gold Mountain, etc.

H. M. YERINGTON, General Superintendent.

R. J. LAWS, Assistant Superintendent.

D. A. BENDER, General Freight and Passenger Agent.

LUMBER. LUMBER.
SPRATT & CREASER,
BIG PINE.
—DEALERS IN—
ALL KINDS OF LUMBER.
Square timber of all dimensions for buildings and bridges.
CEILING,
FLOORING,
FENCING,
RUSTIC.
All kinds of tongued and grooved lumber.
Surfaced lumber of all kinds.
All orders filled promptly. Lumber delivered on board the cars at Alvord.
SPRATT & CREASER,
sep1-tf Big Pine, Inyo Co., Cal.

EDWARD CHENOT
Independence, Cal.,
INVITES PUBLIC ATTENTION TO HIS extensive Stock of
GENERAL MERCHANDISE
....Consisting of....
GROCERIES.
PROVISIONS
Tobacco, Cigars,
WINES AND LIQUORS
FLOUR & GRAIN
Together with an Assortment of
DRY GOODS AND CLOTHING
ETC., ETC
Buyers and consumers should call and examine my stock and prices before purchasing elsewhere.
E. CHENOT.
Independence, Cal., March 9, 1884.
n47tf

R. J. WHITTAKER
—PAINTER,—
BIG PINE, - - - - CAL.
HOUSE PAINTING,
SIGN WRITING,
PAPER HANGING,
GRAINING,
GILDING ON WOOD AND GLASS
Wagons Painted
The best of materials used and satisfaction guaranteed.

Wm. Muth-Rasmussen.
Bee Keeper.
Manufacturer of Comb Foundation.
Independence, Inyo Co. Cal

NATHAN RHINE.

NATHAN RHINE,
(Successor to Harris & Rhine.)
MERCHANT,
INDEPENDENCE
Inyo Co. Cal.
Wholesale & Retail
—DEALER IN—
General Merchandise
MY STOCK
CONSISTING OF
Almost every needed article is well calculated to satisfy the wants of everybody; and, as in the past, it will be our aim in the future to retain the extensive patronage enjoyed heretofore.
NATHAN RHINE.

NATHAN RHINE
BANKER.
Independence, Cal.
SELL EXCHANGE
—ON—
SAN FRANCISCO
Draw Direct
—ON—
NEW YORK,
LONDON, England.
BERLIN, FRANKFORT-on-the-Main, GERMANY.
I AM PREPARED TO TRANSACT ALL KINDS.
—OF—
GENERAL
BANKING & EXCHANGE,
BUSINESS.
Wechsel in beliebigen Summen auf Berlin und Frankfurt am der Main, Deutsche Vollmachten gefertigt. Geldsendungen von und nach Deutschland besorgt.
AGENT FOR
WELLS FARGO & CO'S.
EXPRESS
MUTUAL
Life Insurance Co.
OF NEW YORK
CAPITAL - - - - $5,000,000
LIVERPOOL AND LONDON AND GLOBE
INSURANCE - COMPANY
Capital - - - - $21,000,000
NATHAN RHINE.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY, MAY 23 1890

MARKET REPORT.

Bar silver, 104½
Lead, 4.12½
Copper, 15
Tin, 21.25
Sugar, .06⅛
Coffee, 17 @ 19¾
Wool, foothill, 17 @ 20.

DIED.

MEYERS—At the residence of Frank Shaw, near Bishop, C. A. Meyers, a native of Illinois, aged 30 years.

Quite a boom is in progress in Candelaria.

Bishop will have a Fourth of July celebration.

Mr. Nathan Rhine left for San Francisco yesterday merning.

Mr. and Mrs. A. R. Conklin returned home last Monday.

Chris Engle has sold his business in Big Pine to George Spratt.

Mr. L. D. Matthews returned from San Francisco last Monday.

Mr. Wm. Johnson returned from Darwin on Thursday morning.

J. H. Roberts returned to Big Pine last Monday from San Francisco.

Mr. Walter Ober and Mr. L. Waldrip went to Big Pine this morning.

C. Mulholland and P. H. Mask will return to Independence this evening.

Mr. Thomas Parker was engaged in taking the school census this past week.

Mr. Wells Barnes is now acting as cheif clerk in the store of Nathan Rnine.

Mr. John F. Sheehan has been appointed Register of the Land Office at San Francisco.

O. I. Mairs got back from Bakersfield Monday evening. Ed Crocker came up with him.

Bishop will hold a grand Fourth of July celebration. Active preparation is now in progress.

It has not yet been decided at what place the foot-race between Rosenthal and Ober will occur.

Mr. S. A. Densmore, who has been so seriously ill for several weeks past, is able to be out once more.

Sheriff Eldred made the drive from Bakersfield in four days arriving at Independence last Saturday.

Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Russell, of Benton, came down on Monday's train and are visiting at Independence.

The high water is playing hob with the water works. The stuff that comes through the pipes is meat and drink both.

Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Gunn came in from Minnietta on Tuesday. They have rented Mr. Cartier's residence for the Summer.

All of those who went to Bakersfield say that it is a pretty country and a growing one—but they had rather live in Owens Valley.

E. A. Reed returned home to Candelaria on Tuesday. He was over in Saline Valley about a month putting up works for Conn & Trudo.

The cattle men in this end of the valley have been rounding up for a week or more. They stood guard last night and will start for Long Valley to-morrow.

Dr. Summers returned to Fresno on Tuesday. He came over to attend the funeral of Barna Peeler. He reports Bob Peeler as doing very well in Fresno.

The family of John Davis arrived on Monday last from England, consisting of wife, three daughters and two sons. It had been seventeen years since he had last seen them.

The jury in the Elliott case, recently closed at Bakersfield, stood as follows: Four for murder in the first degree, one for murder in the second degree and seven for manslaughter. The jury was out sixty hours.

Mrs. Farrell and Mrs. Bodle, of Big Pine, were seriously injured last Sunday. They were driving in a cart when a spring wagon in which there were a number of men ran into them, smashing the cart and seriously injuring both ladies. Mrs. Bodle had a leg broken and Mrs. Farrell sustained internal injuries.

Quite a large number of people attended the pic-nic at Georges Creek last Saturday. The Independence Brass Band was in attendance and played some of their choicest music at intervals all day. There being no place for dancing made, the affair was somewhat duller than it would otherwise have been. A number of young people came to Independence and an impromptu dance was got up in the evening.

Messrs. A. W. Noble and W. T. Grant returned last week from Salt Wells Valley where they had been prospecting for borax. They report finding quite a large deposit, and are confident that in a short time they will realize a handsome return from their labor. On last Monday they again started for their borax fields accompanied by Surveyor Seely and Mr. Young, who is an authority on borax.

In our issue of May 16th we stated that "W. Cameron came in from Lookout on Thursday morning and will remain in town a few days to get the lead out of his system." This was a mistake. Mr. Cameron came here to have his leg treated for a bite from some poisonous insect. In a letter received from him he states that during his three months stay at Modock he has not seen a single case of lead poison.

Nelson Beaudry came in from Sylvania last Wednesday. He informs us that it is at the present time a very lively place. Buildings are being put up, town lots staked off, and a number of people arriving daily. The Sylvania Mining Company has over 500 tons of good smelting ore on their dump, and have already in their employ about sixty men. Nelse says that Sylvania will in a short time be the leading mining camp of the State.

INYO COUNTY.

A MAN OF WEALTH PLANTING HIS LIFE'S MONUMENT.

A Great Big Field for Capital and a Happy Home for Immigrants—The Work of Nevada Capitalists—An Immense Mineral Country—Inyo Can Produce the Light Rhine Wines—Etc.

D. O. Mills and H. M. Yerington returned from a tour of inspection in Inyo county Sunday night. An Enterprise reporter, who had been in Mono county, joined the party at Hawthorne on the return trip. Mr. Mills, who is deeply interested in building up a community of happy and prosperous people in Inyo county, expressed himself beyond measure of satisfaction at the preliminary work now progressing. Every man of great wealth is possessed of some utopian ideas, some ideal, something that will stand over his grave as a monument or marble bust commemorative of his record upon earth. Mr. Mills, one of the most powerful and influential millionaires in the Union, it would seem, is planting the base of his eternal monument in Owens Valley, Inyo county.

Favored by the clearest skies that envelope the great West; bathed by streams from the highest peaks of the greatest mountain range of the West, and nestling in its most interesting and picturesque region, is Owens Valley. There is no tropical fruit grown in the United States that will not outdo itself in this modern land of Canaan, and to reach it is nothing dissimilar to old Moses's trip in the desert, with the bare exception that a railroad has now been built to it. One of the greatest incentives for immigration to the valley is the recent discovery that the soil will produce a wine grape from which the light Rhine wines are manufactured. This, of itself, should induce an intelligent immigration and the planting of much capital for the manufacture of superior wines—something that California does not as yet in truth boast of.

Superintendent H. M. Yerington, whose indefatigable energy is proverbial, and who is interested in the investments of Mr. Mills, and who is the active supervisor of every work upon the ground, is putting in nothing but the very best species of every product, and there will be nothing raised in Gwens Valley from the cuttings that he has had planted that will not be fit to put on exhibition at the World's Fair in Chicago. This is saying a good deal, but it stands as a fact, and as a challenge to all the world besides.

Owens Valley is not nakedly an agricultural section. Affording a market for its products is one of the grandest mineral sections of the West, all of which will be tributary to its wealth and resources upon development. This section of country extends from Bodie on the north to Panamint on the south, and includes the mining districts of Jordan, 20 miles from Bodie, where a company during the past year invested $5,500 in the purchase of mines. Castle Creek, Lundy, Homer, Sylvania, Crystal Peak, Columbus, Candelaria, Cerro Gordo, Union, Palmetto, Modock and several other mining districts of lesser note, a total distance of 250 miles. There would also come in the extensive mineral belt running through Nye and Lincoln counties in this State. In the way of fruit raising there could be no possible opposition from any quarter, and there would be no necessity to import any agricultural products or live stock from anywhere. Owens Valley can not only be free from competition with the southern counties of California, but after the building of the railroad to the sea shore its viticulturist can compete with the most favored sections upon the earth.

For the convenience and benefit of those in quest of homes Mr. Yerington has planted cuttings of all species of grapes and other fruits and nuts along the railroad at every section from Bishop to Keeler, a distance of about 100 miles, where may be seen what the soil will produce.

Mr. Mills was particularly pleased with the outlook in Cerro Gordo, and with the Inyo Marble Works, where in due time works to compete with the products of Vermont and Italy will be established.

With regard to this quarry a writer in the San Francisco Bulletin says: "The company is now putting up a mill with all modern marble machinery at Verdi. There is excellent water-power there and the location has great advantages for shipping either East or West. Marble-turning lathes, counter-sinking machines and cutting mechanism, that will sever, with little more apparent difficulty than a knife will cheese, huge marble blocks whose estimate resistance is something like 16,000 pounds to a cubic inch."

Of the visit made by Mr. Yerington with other gentlemen, a full account of which appeared in the Enterprise of May 14, the San Francisco News Letter says: Col. W. D. Sutherland and Captain Hulse, of London, arrived in town during the week from Nevada, making the trip from Reno on a special train in seven hours, one of the fastest runs on record in this part of the world. While in Nevada, the Colonel visited a valuable mining property in the southeastern portion of the State, in company with H. M. Yerington, Evan Williams and other prominent mining men of Virginia City. From this it may be surmised that another heavy installment of British gold will soon be on its way, to further the development of mining interests in the Silver State."

As before stated, nothing but preliminary work to prove the great resources of Inyo county has yet been done. There has been no advertising of the country. The world is yet ignorant of a spot that is full of promise; a spot where nature responds as if by magic to the touch of the husbandman. When these facts become generally known, look out for a boom.—Enterprise.

Clinton A. Meyers committed suicide by taking poison at Frank Shaw's ranch, near Bishop, last Sunday morning. He left a letter stating the cause of his deed and asking that his remains be not mutilated. He said that he was very much in love, and there being no hope for the fulfillment of his desires he would rather die. He was found dead, lying on the bed in his room, neatly washed and dressed. He was about thirty years of age and had been in the employ of Mr. Shaw as a vaquero for twelve years.

El Crocker says he proposed marriage to a young lady on his last trip to Bakersfield; but in came very nearly breaking Ed's heart when she replied that she was not "particularly stuck after him."

The Louisiana Lottery Company now offers $1,000,000 a year to the State for the privilege of continuing its business.

Trial of W. T. C. Elliott.

From the Bakersfield Californian of May 17th we clip the following: "The case of W. T. C. Elliott, which commenced Tuesday of last week, was submitted to the jury Thursday afternoon at about 4 p. m. The facts are about as follows; Elliott arrived in the Owens River Valley several years ago, having formerly lived in Nevada where he had been divorced from his wife who afterward married a prominent citizen. He appeared in a destitute condition and the first employment he found, from which he derived anything, was with a lady known as the widow Baker. She had a fine, well improved farm, a feature of which was an extensive fruit orchard. Mrs. Baker had three children, and the father having died without a will, half the estate belonged to them, and like a good, affectionate mother she desired and strove to have their property cared for and developed in the best manner. Elliott proved a good employe and maintained the property in such good condition and pleased her so well that she subsequently leased it to him and finally married him. As a husband, however, he was not so satisfactory, and their relationship became most unhappy. He wanted everything himself and the wife naturally objected. Finally she applied for a divorce and it was granted. Among the conditions of it was the privilege of his living in a cabin on the farm for a certain time and of seeing a child that had been born to him, three times a week. These privileges gave him opportunity to be very annoying to Mrs. Elliott and her family, and she was forced to send for her uncle, Mr. White, who had formerly been her guardian, to protect her. He made her several visits, and on one occasion found him maltreating her whereupon he inflicted upon him a moderate measure of punishment with a stick. About twenty days afterward White was found dead near Elliott's cabin stabbed through the heart with some sharp instrument. The first intimation of his death came from Elliott. His account of it was that White descended the steps of the cellar in which he was slicing bacon for his dinner, threatening him with his cane, and that he rushed under his uplifted arm to escape up the stairway, striking him with his knife as he did so. He kept on and gave information of what he had done. The body was forty-seven feet from where the wound was said to have been inflicted. The truth of Elliott's testimony depends upon whether a man with his heart literally divided could turn and walk that distance before expiring. Our visitors from Inyo have appeared generally strongly prejudiced against the accused. At the time of going to press the jury had not returned a verdict.

MISCELLANEOUS.

BELL'S Flouring Mills,

A. N. BELL, Prop.

TRY BELL'S

EXTRA PATENT ROLLER FLOUR.

Having added Patent Rolls and other Improvements o our Mills, I am now turning out Flour that is fully

Equal to the Best.

Corn, Oats and Barley Cracked on Short Notice.

A. N. BELL,

Independence, Cal.

F. E. Bosworth,
Watchmaker & Jeweler.
BISHOP, CAL.

Fine and Complicated Watch Repairing a Specialty.

Guns, Sewing Machines, Organs and Music Boxes Put in Perfect Condition and Warranted.

I Prefer to do all work at your house and will call if you will write to me at Bishop.

SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN
ESTABLISHED 1845.

Is the oldest and most popular scientific and mechanical paper published and has the largest circulation of any paper of its class in the world. Fully illustrated. Best class of Wood Engravings. Published weekly. Send for specimen copy. Price $3 a year. Four months' trial, $1. MUNN & CO., PUBLISHERS, 361 Broadway, N.Y.

ARCHITECTS & BUILDERS Edition of Scientific American.

A great success. Each issue contains colored lithographic plates of country and city residences or public buildings. Numerous engravings and full plans and specifications for the use of such as contemplate building. Price $2.50 a year, 25 cts. a copy. MUNN & CO., PUBLISHERS.

PATENTS may be secured by applying to MUNN & Co., who have had over 40 years' experience and have made over 100,000 applications for American and Foreign patents. Send for Handbook. Correspondence strictly confidential.

TRADE MARKS.

In case your mark is not registered in the Patent Office, apply to MUNN & CO., and procure immediate protection. Send for Handbook.

COPYRIGHTS for books, charts, maps etc., quickly procured. Address

MUNN & CO., Patent Solicitors,
GENERAL OFFICE 361 BROADWAY, N. Y

IF YOU WISH A GOOD REVOLVER PURCHASE ONE OF SMITH & WESSON'S

Finest small arms ever manufactured and the first choice of all experts. In calibres 32, 38 and 44-100. Single or double action, Safety Hammerless and Target models. Best quality wrought steel, carefully inspected for workmanship and stock. Unrivaled for finish, durability and accuracy. Do not be deceived by cheap malleable iron imitations often sold for the genuine article. They are unreliable and dangerous. The SMITH & WESSON REVOLVERS are stamped upon the barrels with firm's name, address and dates of patents, and are guaranteed perfect. Insist upon having them, and if your dealer cannot supply you, an order sent to address below will receive prompt attention. Descriptive catalogue and prices upon application.

SMITH & WESSON,
Springfield, Mass.

WEINSTOCK & LUBIN:

Trousers at $3.50

We are making a specialty of Men's Trousers at this price. We buy and sell by hundreds of pairs, and are therefore able to give extra value for the money. The trousers are neat, shapely and durable, and come in desirable medium and dark patterns. In ordering, state which you prefer. Price $3.50; by mail, 30c. extra. Give waist measure and length of inside seam of leg.

Our Great $3.00 Shoes

We have sold over ten thousand pairs of these shoes and with the greatest satisfaction to buyers. Probably the best men's shoe for three dollars in America. Neat, easy-fitting and desirable. May be had in either hook and lace, Congress (elastic sides) or button toes, and with or without toe caps. Price, $3.00; by mail, 30c. extra.

This same shoe for boys, in sizes 3 to 5, price, $2.50; sizes 11 to 2, price, $2.00. The best of school shoes. Postage, 25c. extra.

The great success of the above lines has led us to introduce a ladies' kid button shoe at $3.00; by mail, 20c. extra. This shoe has low heels, medium toes, and is, withal, such a neat and sensible production that it promises to have a great sale. Sizes, 2½ to 8; widths, A to EE.

Writing the Order.

Weinstock, Lubin & Co.
400 to 412 K St., Sacramento, Cal.

Illustrated Catalogue of all kinds of Wearing Apparel, Household Supplies, etc., free to any address.

12

MISCELLANEOUS.

Lake View Hotel
Keeler, Cal.
John Barnes, Prop'r.

First-class hotel in every respect. The table always supplied with the best in the market. Clean, nicely furnished rooms. Transient visitors will receive every courtesy and attention.

THE BAR
—Is constantly supplied with the finest—
Wines, Liquors, & Cigaas.

NORMAN HOUSE,
Independence, - Cal.

New House,
New Furniture,
Low Rates.

Special attention will be given to secure the comfort of guests.
O. I. MAIRS, Prop.
feb12tf

IRWIN'S SALOON
Cor. Edwards and Market Streets,
Independence . Cal.

THE PUBLIC GENERALLY ARE respectfully invited to call and inspect my establishment, which has been entirely rebuilt an furnished in a style second to none on this side of the mountains. A SPLENDID NEW BILLIARD TABLE provided for the amusement of patrons.

THE BAR

Is supplied with the most celebrated brands of pure Wines and Liquors and the Finest Havana Cigars.

JOHN C. IRWIN, Proprietor.
feb12tf

Palace Saloon.
WALTER OBER, Lessee.
—THE BAR—
Is constantly supplied with the best kinds o
WINES, LIQUORS, & CIGARS.

The most careful attention given to the the amusement and comfort of patrons.

A FINE BILLIARD TABLE

Is always at the disposal of visitors to the Palace Saloon Dec. 20 89

PIONEER BREWERY
INDEPENDENCE

BEER ICE COLD.

The Bar is supplied with the Best of all kinds of Liquors and Cigars.

The Coolest Hall in the town. Call in and see what comfort you can have this hot weather.

PHILIP GEHRIG, PROPRIETOR

MISCELLANEOUS.

A. K. EUGLEY,

BIG PINE INYO CO. CAL.

PROVISIONS,
&c., &c., &c.

Postmaster and Deputy Co Clerk.
A. K. EUGLEY,
Big Pine, Cal.

Sulphur & Borax Baths
AT SODA SPRINGS, NEVADA
On ...son & Colorado Railroad

These valuable Springs offer special

INDUCEMENT TO INVALIDS

THE WATER CONTAINS

SULPHUR, MAGNESIA AND BORAX.

And Is Very Strengthening and Cleansing

When used for bathing purposes.

THE BATH HOUSES HAVE BEEN RE-BUILT
—And a large—
SWIMMING : BATH
Added, where those wishing to do so can take an invigorating plunge.

Excellent Accommodations
—AND—
Board by the Day, Week, or the Month

about the fiftieth part of its bulk. It is a grand, double size telescope, as large as is easy to carry. We will also show you how you can make from $5 to $10 a day at least, from the start, without experience. Better write at once. We pay all express charges. Address, H. HALLETT & CO., Box 880, PORTLAND, MAINE.

BISHOP ADVERTISEMENTS.

A. COHN & CO.

—DEALERS IN—

General Merchandise.

—ALL KINDS OF—

Farm Implements
—AND—
--MACHINERY--

Farm Produce

—OF ALL KINDS BOUGHT—

Orders for all kinds of supplies needed in mining camps promptly filled.

GIVEN & INGALLS.

—DEALERS IN—

FARM PRODUCE.

J. E. DUNLAP.
Harness Maker.

Harness of all kinds, from the lightest to the heaviest. Any kind of new work made promptly and of the best material. Repairing done on the shortest notice. A full line of saddles and harness.

H. E. WRIGHT.
DRUGGIST.

Medicines, Drugs, Toilet and Fancy Articles. Physicians' prescriptions carefully and promptly filled. All drugs and medicines fresh and of the best quality. All orders by mail receive immediate attention

Valley View Hotel.

O. H. Hill, Prop'r.

A New House Newly Furnished Throughout. Guests will receive every courtesy and attention.

NEVADA STABLE
BISHOP.
Opposite Valley View Hotel, Main St

In the Livery Department nothing is kept but safe and good traveling carriage and saddle horses. Conveyances of all kinds first-class. Good attendance and the best of hay and grain for all animals boarding at the stable
S. P. SMITH, Prop.

BISHOP CREEK
BREWERY,
MUNZINGER, PHILLIPPAY & CO., Proprietors.

All the appliances and conveniences of First Class Brewery, including a beautiful grove for out-door parties.

Customers supplied on all points
Of the C. & C. Railroad.

Send orders to
MUNZINGER, PHILLIPPAY & CO.
Bishop Creek, Cal.

A NEW DEAL!

BISHOP CREEK
Livery. Feed & Sale Stable.
ROBERT O'NEIL, Prop'r.

Horses are boarded by the day, week or month. Stock bought and sold.
Bishop Creek, Cal., Nov. 20, 1883.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Newest Styles
OF
Fashionable Clothing
Dry Goods, Ladies' Wear, etc., etc
AT
L. WOOD'S
CASH STORE

A small stock of fresh groceries & canned goods constantly renewed.

Fresh Produce, and Grain Flour, etc., constantly on hand.

CANDIES,
PEANUTS,
WALNUTS,
TOYS!

THE CASH STORE
Is Where You Get
WORTH OF YOUR MONEY

THOMAS & HILL,
—DEALERS IN—
GENERAL MERCHANDISE
BIG PINE, INYO COUNTY, CAL,
We keep constantly on hand goods of all kinds needed in a country home. We order only First-Class Goods and ask no more than a reasonable profit. Give us a trial.
THOMAS & HILL.

J. FORBES. W. D. TOBEY

FORBES & TOBEY,
HAWTHORNE, NEV.,
—DEALERS IN—
LUMBER
OF ALL KINDS.

DOORS,
SHINGLES,
SASH AND BLINDS.
LATH,
RUSTIC
MOULDINGS,
DRESSED LUMBER.

Matched and Dressed Flooring.

sept 11-tf

COLONEL QUARITCH, V.C.

By H. RIDER HAGGARD.

CHAPTER XVIII.

EDWARD COSSEY MEETS WITH AN ACCIDENT.

On the day following that upon which Edward Cossey had been terrified into transferring the Honham mortgages to Mr. Quest, the colonel went out shooting. He had on the previous day become the possessor of a new hammerless gun by a well known London maker, of which he stood in considerable need. He had treated himself to this gun when he came into his aunt's little fortune, but it was only just completed. The weapon was a beautiful one, and at any other time it would have filled his sportsman's heart with joy. Even as it was, when he put it together and balanced it and took imaginary shots at blackbirds in the garden, for a little while he forgot his sorrows, for the sorrow must indeed be heavy which a new hammerless gun by such a maker cannot do something toward lightening. So on the next morning he took his gun and proceeded to do the marshes by the river, where, he was credibly informed, several whisps of snipe had been seen, to attempt to shoot some of them and put the new weapon to the test.

It was on this same morning that Edward Cossey got a letter which disturbed him not a little. It was from Belle Quest, and ran thus:

"DEAR MR. COSSEY—Will you come over and see me this afternoon about 3 o'clock? I shall expect you, so I am sure you will not disappoint me. B. Q."

For a long while he hesitated what to do. Belle Quest was at the present juncture the very last person whom he wished to see. His nerves were shaken, and he feared a scene; but on the other hand he did not know what danger might threaten him if he did not go. Quest had got his price, and he knew that he had nothing more to fear from him; but a jealous woman has no price, and if he did not humor her it might, he felt, be at a risk which he could not estimate. Also, he was nervously anxious to give no further cause for gossip. A sudden outward and visible cessation of his intimacy with the Quests in a little country town like Boisingham, where all his movements were known, might, he thought, give rise to surmises and suspicion. So, albeit with a faint heart, he determined to go.

Accordingly, at 3 o'clock precisely, he was shown into the drawing room at The Oaks. Mrs. Quest was not there; indeed, he waited for ten minutes before she came in. She was very pale, so pale that the blue veins on her forehead showed distinctly through her ivory skin, and there was a curious intensity about her manner which frightened him. She was very quiet also, unnaturally so, indeed; but her quiet was of the ominous nature of the silence before the storm, and when she spoke her words were keen, and quick, and vivid.

She did not shake hands with him, but sat down and looked at him, slowly fanning herself with a painted ivory fan which she took up from the table.

"You sent for me, Belle, and here I am," he said, breaking the silence.

Then she spoke. "You told me the other day," she said, "that you were not engaged to be married to Ida de la Molle. It was not true. You are engaged to be married to her."

"Who said so?" he asked defiantly. "Quest, I suppose?"

"I have it on a better authority," she answered; "I have it from Miss de la Molle herself. Now listen, Edward Cossey. When I let you go I made a condition, and that condition was that you should not marry Ida de la Molle. Do you still intend to marry her?"

"You had it from Ida?" he said, disregarding her question; "then you must have spoken to Ida—you must have told her everything. I suspected as much from her manner the other night. You"——

"Then it is true," she broke in, coldly. "It is true, and in addition to your other failings, Edward, you are a coward and a—liar."

"What is it to you what I am or what I am not?" he answered, savagely. "What business is it of yours? You have no hold over me, and no claim upon me. As it is, I have suffered enough at your hands and at those of your accursed husband. I have had to pay him thirty thousand pounds, do you know that? But of course you know it. No doubt the whole thing is a plant, and you will share the spoil."

"Ah!" she said, drawing a long breath.

"And now look here," he went on. "Once and for all, I will not be interfered with by you. I am engaged to marry Ida de la Molle, and whether you wish it or no I shall marry her. And one more thing—I will not allow you to associate with Ida. Do you understand me? I will not allow it."

She had been holding the fan before her face while he spoke. Now she lowered it and looked at him. Her face was paler than ever, paler than death, if that be possible, but in her eyes there shone a light like the light of a flame.

"Why not?" she said quietly.

"Why not?" he answered savagely. "I wonder that you think it necessary to ask such a question; but as you do I will tell you why. Because Ida is the lady whom I am going to marry, and I do not choose that she should associate with a woman who is what you are."

"Ah!" she said again; "I understand now."

At that moment a diversion occurred. The drawing room looked on to the garden, and at the end of the garden was a door which opened on to another street.

Through this door had come Col. Quaritch, accompanied by Mr. Quest, the former with his gun under his arm. They had walked up the garden, and were almost at the French window when Edward Cossey saw them. "Control yourself," he said in a low voice, "here is your husband."

Mr. Quest advanced, and knocked at the window, which his wife opened. When he saw Edward Cossey he hesitated a little, and then nodded to him, while the colonel came forward, and placing his gun by the wall entered the room, shook hands with Mrs. Quest, and bowed coldly to Edward Cossey.

"I met the colonel, Belle," said Mr. Quest, "coming here with the benevolent intention of giving you some snipe, so I brought him up by the short way."

"That is very kind of you, Col. Quaritch," said she, with a sweet smile (for she had the sweetest smile imaginable).

He looked at her. There was something about her face which attracted his attention, something unusual.

"What are you looking at?" she asked.

"You," he said, bluntly, for they were out of hearing of the other two. "If I were poetically minded, I should say that you looked like the Tragic Muse."

"Do I?" she answered, bursting out laughing. "Well, that is curious, because I feel like Comedy herself."

"There's something wrong with that woman," thought the colonel to himself as he extracted two couple of snipe from his capacious coat tails. "I wonder what it is?"

Just then Mr. Quest and Edward Cossey passed out into the garden, talking.

"Here are the snipe, Mrs. Quest," he said. "I have had rather good luck. I killed four couple and missed two couple more; but then I had a new gun, and one can never shoot so well with a new gun."

"Oh, thank you," she said, "do pull out the 'painters' for me. I like to put them in my riding hat, and I never can find them myself."

"Very well," he answered, "but I must go into the garden to do it; there is not light enough here. It gets dark so soon now."

Accordingly he stepped out through the window, and began to hunt for the pretty little feathers which are to be found at the angle of a snipe's wing.

"Is that the new gun, Col. Quaritch?" said Mrs. Quest, presently; "what a beautiful one!"

"Be careful," he said; "I haven't taken the cartridges out."

If he had been looking at her, which at the moment he was not, Harold would have seen her stagger and catch at the wall for support. Then he would have seen an awful and malevolent light of sudden determination pass across her face.

"All right," she said. "I know all about guns. My father used to shoot, and I always cleaned his gun," and she took the weapon up and began to examine the engraving on the locks.

"What is this?" she said, pointing to a little slide above the locks, on which the word "safe" was engraved in gold letters.

"Oh, that's the safety bolt," he said. "When you see the word 'safe,' the locks are barred, and the gun won't go off. You have to push the bolt forward before you can fire."

"So?" she said, carelessly, and suiting the action to the word.

"Yes, so; but please be careful, the gun is loaded."

"Yes, I'll be careful," she answered. "Well, it is a very pretty gun, and so light that I believe I could shoot with it myself."

Meanwhile Edward Cossey and Mr. Quest, who were walking toward them, had separated, Mr. Quest going to the right across the lawn to pick up a glove which had dropped upon the grass, while Edward Cossey slowly sauntered toward them. When he was about nine paces off he too halted, and, stooping a little, looked abstractedly at a white Japanese chrysanthemum which was still in bloom. Mrs. Quest turned, as the colonel thought, to put the gun back against the wall. He would have offered to take it from her, but at the moment both his hands were occupied in extracting one of the "painters" from a snipe. The next thing that he was aware of was a loud explosion, followed by an exclamation or rather a cry from Mrs. Quest. He dropped the snipe and looked up, just in time to see the gun, which had leaped from her hands with the recoil, strike against the wall of the house and fall to the ground. Instantly, whether by instinct or by chance he never knew, he glanced toward the place where Edward Cossey was standing, and saw that his face was streaming with blood and that his right arm hung helpless by his side. Even as he looked, he saw him put his uninjured hand to his head and, without a word or sound sink down on the gravel path.

For a second there was silence.

For a second there was silence, and the blue smoke from the gun hung heavily upon the damp autumn air. In the midst of it stood Belle Quest like one transfixed, her lips apart, her blue eyes opened wide, and the stamp of terror—or was it guilt?—upon her pallid face.

All this he saw in a flash, and then ran to the bleeding heap upon the gravel.

He reached it almost simultaneously with Mr. Quest, and together they turned the body over. But still Belle stood there enveloped in the heavy smoke.

Presently, however, her trance left her, and she ran up, flung herself upon her knees, and looked at her former lover whose face and head were now a mass of blood.

"He is dead!" she wailed; "he is dead, and I have killed him. Oh, Edward! Edward!"

Mr. Quest turned on her savagely; so savagely that one might almost have thought that he feared lest in her agony she should say something further.

"Stop that," he said, seizing her arm, "and go for the doctor; for if he is not dead he will soon bleed to death."

With an effort she rose, put her hand to her forehead, and then ran like the wind down the garden and through the little door.

CHAPTER XXIX.

HAROLD TAKES THE NEWS.

Mr. Quest and Harold bore the bleeding man, whether he was senseless or dead they knew not, into the house and laid him on the sofa. Then, having dispatched a servant to seek a second doctor in case the one already gone for was out, they set to work to cut the clothes from his neck and arm, and do what they could, and that was little enough, toward stanching the bleeding. It soon, however, became evident that Cossey had only got the outside portion of the charge of No. 7—that is to say, that he had been struck by about a hundred pellets out of the three hundred or so which would go to the ordinary ounce and an eighth. Had he received the whole charge he must, at that distance, have been instantly killed. As it was, the point of the shoulder was riddled, and so, to a somewhat smaller extent, was the back of his neck and the region of the right ear. One or two outside pellets had also struck the head higher up, and the skin and muscles along the back were torn by the passage of the shot.

"By Jove!" said Mr. Quest, "I think he is done for."

The colonel nodded. He had had some experience of shot wounds, and the present one was not of a nature to encourage hope of the patient's survival.

"How did it happen?" asked Mr. Quest presently, as he mopped up the streaming blood with a sponge.

"It was an accident," groaned the colonel. "Your wife was looking at my new gun. I told her that it was loaded, and that she must be careful, and I thought she had put it down. The next thing that I heard was the report. It is all my cursed fault for leaving the cartridges in."

"Ah," said Mr. Quest, "she always thought that she understood guns. It is a shocking accident."

Just then one of the doctors came running up the lawn carrying a box of instruments, and followed by Belle Quest; and in another minute was at work. He was a quick and skillful surgeon, and having announced that the patient was not dead, at once set to work to tie one of the smaller arteries in the throat, which had been pierced, and through which Edward Cossey was rapidly bleeding to death. By the time that this was done the other doctor, an older man, put in an appearance, and together they made a rapid examination of the injuries.

Belle stood by holding a basin of water. She did not speak, and on her face was that same fixed look of horror which Harold had observed after the discharge of the gun.

When the examination was finished, the two doctors whispered together for a few seconds.

"Will he live?" asked Mr. Quest.

"We cannot say," answered the older doctor. "We do not think it probable that he will. It will depend upon the extent of the injuries, and whether or no they have extended to the spine. If he does live he will probably be paralyzed to some extent, and he will certainly lose the hearing of the right ear."

When she heard this Belle sunk down upon a chair overwhelmed, and then the two doctors, assisted by Harold, set to work to carry Edward Cossey into another room which had been rapidly prepared, leaving Mr. Quest alone with his wife.

He came and stood in front of her and looked her in the face, and then laughed.

"Upon my word," he said, "we men are bad enough, but you women beat us in wickedness."

"What do you mean?" she said, faintly.

"I mean that you are a murderess, Belle," he said, solemnly. "And you are a bungler, too. You could not hold the gun straight."

"I deny it," she said, "the gun went off"——

"Yes," he said, "you are wise to make no admissions; they might be used in evidence against you. Let me counsel you to make no admissions. But now look here. I suppose that this man will have to lie in this house until he recovers or dies, and that you will help to nurse him. Well, I will have none of your murderous work going on here. Do you hear me? You are not to complete at leisure what you have begun in haste."

"What do you take me for?" she asked, with some return of spirit; "do you think I would injure a wounded man?"

"I do not know," he answered, with a shrug, "and as for what I take you for, I take you for a woman whose passion has made her mad," and he turned and left the room.

When they had got Edward Cossey, dead or alive—and he looked more like death than life—up to the room prepared for him, the colonel, seeing that he could be of no further use, left him with a view of going at once to the castle.

On his way out he looked into the drawing room and there was Mrs. Quest, still sitting on the chair and gazing blankly before her. Pitying her, he entered. "Come, cheer up, Mrs. Quest," he said, kindly, "they hope that he will live."

She made no answer.

"It is an awful accident; but I am almost as culpable as you, for I left the cartridges in the gun. Anyhow, God's will be done."

"God's will!" she said, looking up, and then once more relapsed into silence.

He turned to go, when suddenly she rose and caught him by the arm.

"Will he die?" she said, almost fiercely. "Tell me what you think—not what the doctors say—you have seen lots of wounded men and know better than they do. Tell me the truth."

"I cannot say," he answered, shaking his head.

Apparently she interpreted his answer as yes. At any rate she covered her face with her hands.

"What would you do, Col. Quaritch, if you had killed the only thing you loved in the whole world?" she asked presently. "Oh, what am I saying?—I am off my head. Leave me and go and tell Ida; it will be good news for Ida."

Accordingly, having picked up his gun from the spot where it had fallen from the hands of Mrs. Quest, he started for the castle.

And then it was that for the first time there flashed upon his mind the extraordinary importance of this dreadful accident in its bearing upon his own affairs. If Cossey died he could not marry Ida, that was clear. That was what Mrs. Quest must have meant when she said that it would be good news for Ida. But how did she know anything about Ida's engagement to Edward Cossey? And by Jove! what did the woman mean when she asked what he would do if he had killed the only thing he loved in the world? Cossey must be the "only thing she loved," and now he thought of it, when she believed that he was dead she called him "Edward, Edward."

Now, Harold Quaritch was as simple and unsuspicious a man as it would be easy to find, but he was no fool. He had moved about the world and on various occasions come in contact with cases of this sort, as most other men have done. He knew that when a woman, in a moment of distress calls a man by his Christian name it is because she is in the habit of thinking of him and speaking to him by that name. Not that there was much in that by itself, but in public she called him "Mr. Cossey." "Edward" clearly then was the "only thing she loved," and Edward was secretly engaged to Ida, and Mrs. Quest knew it.

Now, when a man has the fortune, or rather the misfortune, to be the only thing a married woman ever loved, and when that married woman is aware of the fact of his devotion for and engagement to somebody else, it is obvious, he reflected, that in nine cases out of ten the knowledge will excite strong feelings in her breast, feelings, indeed, which in some natures would amount almost to madness.

When he had first seen Mrs. Quest that afternoon she and Cossey were alone together, and he had noticed something unusual about her, something unnatural and intense. Indeed he had, he remembered, told her that she looked like the Tragic Muse. Could it be that the look was the look of a woman maddened by insult and jealousy, who was meditating some fearful crime? How did that gun go off? He did not see it, and he thanked God that he did not, for somehow we are not always as anxious to bring our fellow creatures to justice as we might be, especially when they happen to be young and lovely women. How did it go off? She understood guns; he could see that from the way she handled it. Was it likely that it exploded of itself, or owing to an accidental touch of the trigger? It was possible, but not likely. Still, such things had been known to happen, and it would be impossible to prove that it had not happened in this case. If it was an attempted murder it was very cleverly managed, because nobody could prove that it was not accidental. But could it be that that soft, beautiful, baby faced woman had on the spur of the moment taken advantage of his loaded gun to wreak her jealousy and her wrongs upon her faithless lover? Well, the face is no mirror of the quality of the soul within, and it was possible. Further than that, it did not seem to him to be his business to inquire.

By this time he was at the castle. The squire was out, but Ida was in, and he was shown into the drawing room while the servant went to seek her. Presently he heard her dress rustle upon the stairs, and the sound of it sent the blood to his heart, for where is the music that is more sweet than the rustling of the dress of the woman whom we love?

She came in and shook hands with him.

"Why, what is the matter?" she said, noticing the disturbed expression on his face.

"Well," he said, "there has been an accident—a very bad accident."

"Who?" she said. "Not my father?"

"No, no; Mr. Cossey."

"Oh," she said, with a sigh of relief. "Why did you frighten me so?"

The colonel smiled grimly at this unconscious exhibition of the relative state of her affections.

"What has happened to him?" asked Ida, this time with a suitable expression of concern.

"He has been accidentally shot."

"Who by?"

"Mrs. Quest."

"Then she did it on purpose—I mean—is he dead?"

"No, but I believe he will die."

They looked at each other, and each read in the eyes of the other the thought which passed through their brain. If Edward Cossey died, they would be free to marry. So clearly did they read it that Ida actually interpreted it in words.

"You must not think that," she said. "It is very wrong."

"It is wrong," answered the colonel, apparently in no way surprised at her interpretation of his thoughts, "but unfortunately human nature is human nature."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Two hundred farms were sold in Atlantic county, N. J., within two days to satisfy mortgages which had been foreclosed. One farmer became crazy, burning his house and perished in the flames.

A MERCHANT'S DECISION AFTER TRIAL.

Sierra Chemical Co.

GENTLEMEN:—When I started in to give your Great Sierra Kidney and Liver Cure a trial, I supposed it was like all other advertised preparations, put up to make money and of no use. Now since I have taken it my decision is that it is the best remedy in the world for kidney and liver disorders. It has done me so much good that I will forever praise it and gladly recommend it to all suffering with general disorders of the body.

Very truly yours
P. J. ADAMS,
Firm of Reynold & Adams, San Francisco, California.

How little and dried up the cheese appears to the rat after he is caught in the trap.

LUCK DID NOT TURN THEIR HEADS.

Two Wise Young Clerks Who Won $15,000 in the Louisiana State Lottery.

Henry Hudson and Harry Knotts, two young clerks in C. D. Kenny's tea store, 530 N. Gay St., furnish an interesting instance of the fact that a stroke of good fortune does not always turn the heads of those who profit by it. A couple of weeks ago they drew $15,000 in the Louisiana State Lottery and have already received the money. Instead of celebrating their good fortune by giving up their places and proceeding to "enjoy life," as so many persons do under similar circumstances, they put their money in bank, and are working just as hard at selling tea as they did before they became blooded capitalists. A News reporter saw Mr. Hudson this morning at his place of business. "Have you received your money yet?" inquired the reporter. "Yes," was the reply. "We learned of our good luck March 12, the day after the drawing, and we placed our coupon in the hands of the Adams Express Company for collection. I tell you it made me feel like a new man when I handled my half of it, and my friend was just as happy as I was.

"Both of us made up our minds to hold on to our heads and not let our good fortune run away with us, so we deposited the money in bank the same day. It is there to stay, for a while at least, as my friend and I don't intend to give up our places just yet.

"It only cost me 50 cents to get that $7,500 and it happened this way," continued Mr. Hudson. "My friend and I had invested a dollar, or fifty cents apiece eight times without getting anything, and we began to feel like dropping the thing. In fact we came very close to not buying a ticket this month. 'We haven't struck anything yet,' said my friend, 'but still fifty cents apiece isn't much. We won't miss it even if we don't get anything.'

"I thought I would likely spend the money for something else, anyhow, so I said all right, and we sent one dollar and got one twentieth ticket, No. 8182, which won $300,000, of which we received $15,000, the one twentieth part.

It is said that another Baltimorean drew $15,000 in the last month's drawing of the lottery, which was collected through the Franklin Bank of this city. At the bank the officers refused to say anything about the matter.—Baltimore (Md.) News, March 27.

Horseflesh is said to be the worst thing in the world to give people the nightmare.

Oh, how can a fair maiden smile and be gay,
Be lovely and loving and dear,
As sweet as a rose and as bright as the May
When her liver is all out of gear?

She can't. It is impossible. But if she will only take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, it will cleanse and stimulate her disordered liver, purify her blood, make her complexion soft and rosy, her breath wholesome, her spirits cheerful and her temper sweet. All druggists.

Don't hawk, hawk, blow, spit, and disgust everybody with your offensive breath, but use Dr. Sage's Catarrh Remedy and end it.

When our names are blotted out, and our place knows us no more, the energy of each social service will remain.

NATURE IN CONVULSION

Is terrific. Volcanic eruptions, cyclones, earthquakes are awfully and tremendously picturesque, but scarcely desirable to emulate in action and effect by the administration of remedies which produce convulsion and agony in the abnormal portion of the human frame. Such is the effect of the old-fashioned violent purgatives happily falling more and more into disuse, and of which Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is the wholesome, pleasant and far more effective succedaneum. They weakened the intestines—the Bitters invigorates them. They left the bowels inactive, because incapacitated by ensuing feebleness. The Bitters on the contrary, and because it enables, not forces, them to act—a vast and fortunate difference—perpetuates their activity and regularity. The liver is beneficially stimulated, as the kidneys also are, by this medicine, which easily conquers, also, malaria, nervousness and rheumatism.

When you fret and fume at the petty ills of life, remember that the wheels which go around without creaking last the longest.

No safer remedy can be had for Coughs and Colds, or any trouble of the Throat, than "Brown's Bronchial Troches." Price 25 cts. Sold only in boxes.

Freedom from low necessities can only come by reaching after higher satisfactions.

When in San Francisco stop at Straub's Restaurant and Saloon, 327 and 329 Bush Street. Best to eat and drink. No fancy prices.

Try Germea for Breakfast.

Spring Medicine

Is a necessity with nearly everybody. The run down, tired condition at this season is due to impurities in the blood which have accumulated during the winter, and which must be expelled if you wish to feel well. Hood's Sarsaparilla thoroughly purifies and vitalizes the blood, creates a good appetite, cures biliousness and headache, gives healthy action to the kidneys and liver, and imparts to the whole body a feeling of health and strength. Try it this spring.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Sold by all druggists, $1; six for $5. Prepared only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar

STEINWAY, KRANICH, PEASE & BACH, Gabler, Roenish Pianos; Burdett Organs, Band Instruments. Largest stock of Sheet Music and Books. Bands supplied at Eastern Prices. MATTHIAS GRAY CO., 206 Post Street, San Francisco.

MONEY

Can be made easy by raising Chickens. A large 32-page Illustrated Catalogue describing Incubators, Brooders, Brooding Houses, How and What to Feed, How long to keep them in the Brooder, Drinking Fountains, Diseases and their Cure, in fact more information than is given in many 25-cent books. Sent to any address on receipt of 2c. stamp. Wire Netting, Bone Mills, Bone Meal and all kinds of Poultry Supplies. Address,

Petaluma Incubator Co., Petaluma, Cal.

DR. SYKES' SURE CURE FOR CATARRH. ESTABLISHED CHICAGO 1870. 1888 Removed TO CINCINNATI. Has cured many cases pronounced hopeless by physicians. Send for Free Book "Common Sense Talk" and numerous testimonials. They will convince you.

Dr. SYKES' SURE CURE CO., 330 Race St., Cincinnati, O.

CHICHESTER'S ENGLISH PENNYROYAL PILLS

RED CROSS DIAMOND BRAND. Safe and always reliable. Ladies, ask Druggist for Diamond Brand, in red, metallic boxes, sealed with blue ribbon. Take no other. All pills in pasteboard boxes, pink wrappers, are dangerous counterfeits. Send 4c. (stamps) for particulars, testimonials and "Relief for Ladies," in letter, by return mail. Name Paper. Chichester Chem'l Co., Madison Sq., Phila., Pa.

PILES! PILES! PILES!

Dr. William's Indian Pile Ointment is the only sure cure for Blind, Bleeding or Itching Piles ever discovered. It never fails to cure old chronic cases of long standing.

Judge Coffinbury, Cleveland, O., says: "I have found by experience that Dr. William's Indian Pile Ointment gives immediate relief."

Do not suffer an instant longer. Sold by William's Manufacturing Co., Props., Cleveland, Ohio. 50c. and $1.

If we could read the secret history of our enemies, we should find in each man's life sorrow and suffering enough to disarm all hostility.

UNANSWERABLE ARGUMENTS.

No better word of praise or confidence can be given to the PACIFIC BANK, of San Francisco, than the statement that its record is without a blot, and stands as clean as "Truth" itself. No runs have ever been made upon it, no panic has ever impaired its credit.

Kindness draws out the better part of every nature—disarming resistance, dissipating angry passions and melting the hardest heart.

AN ELEGANT PACKAGE OF FINE CARDS.

Including 15 rare novelties, shapes and artistic imported oleographic and chromatic cards. This large and beautiful collection sent by mail to anyone who will do this:—Buy a box of the genuine Dr. C. McLane's Celebrated Liver Pills from any druggist, price 25 cents, and mail us the outside wrapper with your address, plainly written and 4 cents in stamps. The genuine McLane's Pills are prepared only by Fleming Bros., Pittsburg, Pa., and have been in constant use for over sixty years. They are superior to all others in purity and effectiveness. A certain cure for indigestion and sick headache. Address, Fleming Bros. Pittsburgh, Pa.

So much in this world depends upon getting what you want. Prosperity is to the human heart like a sunny south wall to a peach.

Six Novels Free, will be sent by Cragin & Co., Philada., Pa., to any one in the U. S. or Canada, postage paid, upon receipt of 25 Dobbins' Electric Soap wrappers. See list of novels on circulars around each bar. Soap for sale by all grocers.

Success is full of promise till men get it; and then it is a last year's nest, from which the bird has flown.

FULL WEIGHT PURE

DR. PRICE'S CREAM BAKING POWDER

MOST PERFECT MADE

Its superior excellence proven in millions of homes for more than a quarter of a century. It is used by the United States Government. Indorsed by the heads of the Great Universities as the Strongest, Purest and Most Healthful. Dr. Price's the only Baking Powder that does not contain Ammonia, Lime or Alumn. Sold only in Cans.

PRICE BAKING POWDER CO.,
NEW YORK. CHICAGO. SAN FRANCISCO.

To cure Biliousness, Sick Headache, Constipation, Malaria, Liver Complaints, take the safe and certain remedy, SMITH'S

BILE BEANS

Use the SMALL SIZE (40 little beans to the bottle). They are the most convenient; suit all ages. Price of either size, 25 cents per bottle.

KISSING at 7, 17, 70: Photo-gravure, panel size of this picture for 4 cents (coppers or stamps).

J. F. SMITH & CO.,
Makers of "Bile Beans," St. Louis, Mo.

FARMERS

If you must sell Corn, Wheat, Butter and Eggs at present prices you must buy Cheaper or expect hard times. We offer, tariff or no tariff, one of our leading Coffees, 20lbs. full weight $3.75; ground, ready for use, cheaper grades at 15c; Baking Powder, 5-lb tin $1; never heard of complaint; try it and report. Starch, best big lumps, 1bls. 3½c; 50-lb boxes, 4½c; 20 lbs $1. White Beans, No. 2, but fair quality, 2c. Tea Dust, 75 lbs, $3.75—good to use, but we would rather sell you Ten at 20c, 25c, 30c, or 35c. Canned Tomatoes, good pack, $1.75 case. Corn, $1.90, $2.40, $2.75 a case that has no equal. Table Fruit, three grades, per case, (2 dozen in a case mind) $3.50, $3.75 and $4.25; these are fine; have cheaper but not recommended. Flour, $1 sack, or $4 bbl; will you try this kind? Axle Grease at $1.75 a case. Chewing Tobacco, plug, 3 brands at 30c; 2 or 3, including Lorillards, 10c Nuggets, at 35c, full weight. Shoes and Stockings—Men's Button Shoes, 5 to 10, at $1.45, neat and worth buying; a better grade in lace that have proved cheap at $1.75; then our $2.50 Sunday Shoe in Button, Congress or Bals. that is lace with hooks has no equal; it would be called cheap here at $3, and in some places brings $4.00. Men's low cut shoes all styles, widths and sizes from 5 to 9, at $1.50 were made to sell at $3.50 but have not found buyers at this figure. Ladies' Kid, Goat or Calf, button, in standard widths, only $1.50, is the cheapest we could recommend; have kid at $1.25, but not so good though neat and saleable; for higher cost shoes see regular list in Home Circle. Misses, one lot of over 300 pairs, cloth and kid lace, regular stock cost $1 to make, we sell 11, 11½ at 90c, 12 and 12½ at 60c, 13 and 1-1½ at 70c, or six pairs any size for $3.00; Children's stout goat, calf or kid lace Shoes, fit for everyday wear, size 2, 50c, size 3, 3-c, size 4 at 40c, size 5 at 55c; the big sizes are all sold at double the money; they have heels. Infants' Shoes, light or dark in sizes 1, 2, 3, either ankle tie or lace boots at 28c to 35c, as to size and kind; the ankle ties are light color. Men's ½-hose in small and medium sizes fair quality, per doz. 65c, 75c, 90c; better quality and full to extra sizes $1.00, $1.25, and fine and heavy $1.35, all ribbed top and extra value. Women's Stockings, not our best or our worst at $1 dozen or 10c pair in stripe, plain, mixed white or balbriggan, some of the latter used to bring 25c pair; try them if you ever wear Stockings. It costs too much to advertise in the newspapers or we would tell you of 10,000 articles we offer at 30 to 100 per cent. lower than any credit store on the Coast. Send for Home Circle if you have not had it or do not get it regularly; it is issued every month. Address Smith's Cash Store, 118 Front Street, San Francisco, Cal.

WANTED!

TWO WOOD CARVERS.

Apply F. T. RILEY,
528 Fifth Street, - - San Francisco.

Damiana Bitters.

The great Mexican Remedy for Disorders of the Kidneys and Bladder, Damiana is recognized by all physicians as the best Nervous Stimulant gives health and strength to the Generative and Procreative Organs. For sale everywhere.

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE,
323 & 325 Market St., S. F., Agents.

WILEY B. ALLEN'S MUSICAL PASTIME.

A JOURNAL OF MUSIC, ISSUED MONTHLY (16 pages reading matter and 16 pages latest and most popular vocal and instrumental music) for 75c per annum. Sample copy 10c. Stamps taken. Send 40c for the latest popular Song, "DRIFTING APART" by Edward J. Fink, and 50c for "Chapel in the Sierras," Piano Solo by E. Cook. (Mention this paper.) Address: The Wiley B. Allen Music Store, 211 First Street, Portland, Oregon.

SURE CURE FOR PILES.

Sure cure for blind, bleeding and itching Piles. One box has cured the worst cases of ten years' standing. No one need suffer ten minutes after using Kirk's German Pile Ointment. It absorbs tumors, allays the itching, acts as a poultice, gives relief. Dr. Kirk's German Pile Ointment is prepared only for Piles and itching of the private parts, and nothing else. Every box is warranted..... Sold by druggists and sent by mail on receipt of price, $1.00 per box. J. J. Mack & Co., Wholesale Agents, San Francisco.

Never does a man portray his own character more vividly than in his manner of portraying another's.

America's finest, "Tansill's Punch" Cigar.

It is a law as old as time and as enduring as eternity that we are dependent upon one another in social and intellectual matters.

How to Cure Skin & Scalp DISEASES with the CUTICURA REMEDIES.

THE MOST DISTRESSING FORMS OF SKIN and scalp diseases, with loss of hair, from infancy to old age, are speedily, economically and permanently cured by the CUTICURA REMEDIES, when all other remedies and methods fail.

CUTICURA, the great skin cure, and CUTICURA SOAP, an exquisite skin Beautifier, prepared from it, externally, and CUTICURA RESOLVENT, the new Blood Purifier, internally, cure every form of skin and blood disease, from pimples to scrofula. Sold everywhere. Price CUTICURA, 50c.; SOAP, 25c.; RESOLVENT, $1. Prepared by the POTTER DRUG AND CHEMICAL CORPORATION, BOSTON, MASS. Send for "How to Cure Skin Diseases."

Pimples, blackheads, chapped and oily skin prevented by CUTICURA SOAP.

Relief in one minute, for all pains and weaknesses, in CUTICURA ANTI-PAIN PLASTER, the only pain-killing plaster. 25c.

THE BEST

FOR TABLE USE. FOR DAIRY USE.

REGISTERED HOLMES' EXTRA SIFTED SALT PREPARED WITH NEW AND IMPROVED MACHINERY EXPRESSLY FOR BEST DAIRY AND TABLE USE. CHESHIRE ENGLAND.

It is more highly refined than any Salt. All harmful ingredients found in most Salt are removed: therefore it is the safest to use.

It is free from lime and pan scales, requires no sifting. It is the strongest and altogether the most economical.

It dissolves very easily, therefore does not spoil butter by the gritty particles as often happens with other Salt.

Common Salt is too risky for anybody to use in making Butter. The poorest families use so little Salt on their table that they can afford to get that which is the most healthy and the best.

HOLMES' EXTRA SIFTED SALT is used by the best dairymen in California, and has never failed to please better than any other brand whenever tried.

Packed in 250, 100 and 50 pound Pure Linen Bags; also in 5 pound Cotton Bags and Cartons.

Insist on having this brand from your grocer.

C. E. WHITNEY & CO.,
Pacific Coast Agents, 101 and 103 California St., San Francisco.

Cures in 1 TO 5 DAYS. Guaranteed not to cause Stricture. Mfd only by the Evans Chemical Co. Cincinnati, Ohio. Trade Mark

I prescribe and fully endorse Big G as the only specific for the certain cure of this disease. G. H. INGRAHAM, M. D., Amsterdam, N. Y.

We have sold Big G for many years, and it has given the best of satisfaction. D. R. DYCHE & CO., Chicago, Ill.

$1.00. Sold by Druggists.

A PUZZLE FOR YOUNG OR OLD. ENDless amusement. It will make you laugh THAT PUZZLES it will make you shout. It will try your brain. Get ahead of EVERYBODY by ordering at once. Send 25 cents and get ahead of neighbors. Address,

C. STOECKLE,
San Francisco, - - - California

"Good and Honest."

St. Jacobs Oil is thus praised:

State of Ohio Treasury Dept., Columbus, Ohio, Feb. 6, 1889.

"I have used St. Jacobs Oil in my family for years, and find it to be the medicine of medicines

FOR GENERAL USE.

It is a good, honest medicine and honest men will not hesitate to recommend it to suffering humanity." JOHN P. SLEMMONS, Bookkeeper.

AT DRUGGISTS AND DEALERS.
THE CHARLES A. VOGELER CO., Baltimore, Md.

TIGER

FRONT-CUT MOWER!

The Best Mower in the Market,

—AND—

The Only Machine to Buy!

"The best Mower I have ever seen work."—David Hall, Cloverdale.

"The best Mower I have ever used, and my experience extends over thirty years, and with all the different kinds."—Augustus Moore, Sunol

"I will cheerfully recommend it to all."—William Armstrong, Petaluma.

"Lightest draft Mower I have ever used."—George C. Hanley, Livermore.

"Has given perfect satisfaction."—Thomas Richardson, Oakdale.

"Would not exchange it for any Mower I know of."—A. W. Collis, Brentwood.

"Best Mower I ever used."—Thomas Holden San Buenaventura.

"The Lightest Draft and Strongest-Cutting Mower in the market."—John Worswick, Grangeville.

Write for Special Circulars.

Baker & Hamilton,

San Francisco and Sacramento.

WEBSTER'S UNABRIDGED ANCIENT EDITION.

A so-called "Webster's Unabridged Dictionary" is being offered to the public at a very low price. The body of the book, from A to Z, is a cheap reprint, page for page, of the edition of 1847, which was in its day, a valuable book, but in the progress of language for over FORTY YEARS, has been completely superseded. It is now reproduced, broken type, errors and all, by photo-lithograph process, is printed on cheap paper and flimsily bound. A brief comparison, page by page, between the reprint and the latest and enlarged edition, will show the great superiority of the latter. These reprints are as out of date as a last year's almanac. No honorable dealer will allow the buyer of such to suppose that he is getting the Webster which to-day is accepted as the Standard and THE BEST,—every copy of which bears our imprint as given below.

☞ If persons who have been induced to purchase the "Ancient Edition" by any misrepresentations will advise us of the facts, we will undertake to see that the seller is punished as he deserves.

G. & C. MERRIAM & CO.
SPRINGFIELD, MASS.

S. F. N. U., No. 409. New Series No. 16

A MEMORY OF EARLY DAYS.

Bane of childhood's tender years,
Swallowed oft with groans and tears,
How it made the flesh

INYO INDEPENDENT.

COUNTY OFFICIAL PAPER.

C. MULHOLLAND, - - - Proprietor.

Independence, Cal.,

FRIDAY, - - - MAY 30, 1890.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

VOL. XXI. NO. 51. INDEPENDENCE, INYO CO., CAL., MAY 30, 1890. WHOLE NO. 1022.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

COUNTY OFFICIAL PAPER.

C. MULHOLLAND, - - - Proprietor.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One Year (post paid)	$4.00
Six Months	2.25
Three Months	1.50
One Month	50
Single Copies	20

MY OWN.

She basks in the glorious sunshine,
Half hid in a favorite nook,
Her eyes bent on fields in the distance
With a dreamy and far-away look.
The wild flowers growing about her,
Unheeded receive not a glance—
I silently gaze on the picture.
Ah! shall I retreat, or advance?

She knows not that I am so near her,
I'm standing outside of the gate.
My entrance, I fear, might disturb her
And hence I impatiently wait.
For once when I burst on her musings
The interview ended in pain—
And now is my heart in a flutter
With fear lest it happen again.

Ah! could I decipher the feelings
That throb in the heart of my own.
Oh! could I foresee a glad welcome
If I should approach her alone.
And, Oh, if she kindly would greet me
And slip her head into this noose—
She's the trickiest mule in the pasture
And won't let me catch her when loose.

—Charles L. Hill, in Jury.

UP THE MALINGA.

Explorer Casement Arrives in the Land of the Balolo.

A Great Race Almost Exterminated by the Cannibal Lufembi—A Strangely Disfigured People—Slaves at Four Cents a Head.

[COPYRIGHT, 1890.]

FINDING nothing at Bukutila more interesting than firewood and eggs and the attention of the ladies, who giggled and nudged each other and then fled if we gave the slightest indication of approaching within ten yards of them—which we had no desire to do—we bade farewell to the good-tempered crowd and continued our journey up river.

We passed some two hours later the large district of Lulungu—consisting of several villages on the mainland and on an island in mid-stream—whose inhabitants regarded us either in speechless astonishment, or greeted us with loud cries to land, as we steamed past the long line of their villages. Elenge Minto, our guide, informed us that we should find these keen ivory traders more inclined to sell to us on our return from the upper waters of the river than on our present journey, so we determined to push ahead as rapidly as possible, only stopping where it was necessary to obtain fire-wood, or to purchase food for ourselves and crew.

A heavy tornado of wind and rain forced us to halt early alongside the deep impenetrable forest of the left bank, on the edge of which we put our crew to sawing up dry trees and dead wood for next day's firing.

Next morning soon after starting we again came on canoes darting about ahead of us, and speedily were steaming through a channel between an island entirely covered with native houses and the north or right bank—on which were collections of huts among immense grove of plantains separated from one another by stretches of grassy plain in some places extending quite a mile inland before the ever-encircling belt of forest was reached.

This island-village and the north bank district was called Bonginda, but we passed it without stopping—pursued by a fleet of friendly canoes offering very bad-smelling small fish for sale. They continued the chase until we had entered another district, that of Wambala, Elenge Minto informed us, whose inhabitants set up a great cry at our approach, but did not attempt to come out to us in their canoes.

Towards evening we arrived opposite two villages surrounded by high stockades on the land side, through two gates in which we could perceive women going and coming, on their way to or from the village plantation surrounding the fence. We halted for the night at the upper of these villages, fastening the steamer close alongside the bank. In the morning when I arose from my couch on deck I found, to my disgust, that some enterprising native had profited by the shadows of night to steal my trousers, socks and coat from the table at the head of my bed where I had laid them on going to rest, so that I was spared the difficulty I usually experienced on getting up of endeavoring to get into my clothes unperceived by native eyes, until I had been able to arouse Glave in the cabin by my cries, who soon appeared on the scene with fresh articles of attire and enabled me to arise clothed and in my right mind, but breathing awful vengeance against the thief if I should discover him. The missing garments never turned up, and I was forced to quit Bolombo (the name of this dishonest village), hoping that on the return journey down river again the thief might be revealed, or that at least the clothes and the effort to put them on properly might work the physical ruin of the wretch who had stolen them.

EVERYWHERE WAS DESOLATION.

From Bolombo we continued our journey past long stretches of thick forest, occasionally relieved by open spaces and steep red-earthed bluffs topping which extended vivid green patches of banana and plantain leaves, where some small village nestled amid the deep groves of those trees.

Although I judged we must now have been from eighty to one hundred miles from the mouth of the Lulungu the river continued of the same breadth, averaging a mile wherever we could see its entire surface from shore to shore, unbroken by islands.

Late on the afternoon of the second day, after quitting Bolombo—at a point about one hundred and ten miles from the Congo—we came upon the first of a long line of villages, extending up the left bank as far as the eye could see, crowning a bluff about fifty feet high and so steep that rope ladders, or wooden steps fixed into the hard, red clay of the bank, served to communicate between the village and the waters' edge.

Large canoes were lying hauled up partly out of the water at the foot of the bluff, or, manned by excited crowds, darted out from the shore and circled round us as we drew in to the beach. Voices from under the great trees that towered over the streets of houses lining the top of the bank called out to us to approach, and answered us that there were tons of ivory for sale here. Landing by firelight we made blood-brothers on the bank, amid a crowd of savages, with the old chief of this village, whose name we learned was Popono, and received from him two fine tusks of ivory as presents. All night long our men were chatting with the natives round the fires on shore.

The district of which Popono was only one village was called Masan Kuso, and extended about eight miles higher up to the junction of the Malinga and Lopori rivers, which together form the Lulungu, the great tributary of the Congo we had been traversing for the last four days.

Next day we steamed higher up to the topmost village of the district, situated in face of the Lopori which, coming from the north and flowing through countries destitute of ivory, and only supplying enormous numbers of slaves to the raiding canoes of this very Masan Kuso district, here joins the still broader Malinga by a mouth about four hundred to five hundred yards wide.

The natives here were very friendly, and we had to undergo the ceremonial of exchanging blood and becoming "kindred of one blood" with several chiefs of the community, who expressed their appreciation of their new-found relations by offering us goats, fowls and two or three beautiful tusks of ivory, for all of which we gave suitable presents in return, consisting of several fathoms of red cloth, or American sheeting, or cheap Manchester cottons, a few spoonfuls of white and blue beads, a mirror or two, a tin plate, cup and spoon, and one or two odds and ends which cheer the heart of the African in his rude simplicity.

Learning at Masan Kuso that a great inland tribe of cannibals known as the Lufembi had been ravaging the banks of the Malinga and had destroyed every village up to the great Balolo town of Malinga (from which the river takes its name), we determined to lay in as large a stock of fowls, goats and other food as possible, since we could not hope to reach Malinga town before three days.

On the second morning after our arrival we started from Masan Kuso up the Malinga and were soon far from any evidences of life. No canoes passed us and no signs of human habitation or human being greeted us. For two days we passed along between the tall, silent walls of the great forest on either side, the silence scarcely broken by the cries of any bird, and the only moving thing upon the waters the head of a black or green water snake as it strove to avoid our bows in its passage across the river. One of these creatures jumped into our low-lying canoe attached to the side of the steamer which served us instead of a boat and scattered all the cooking arrangements of poor little Mochindu, our cook, who used to arrange his mid-day dishes along the bottom of the canoe.

On the evening of November 10, after we had been two days in the Malinga without seeing a sign of hut or human being, we were cheered to sight a few miles ahead of us up along a straight reach of river, the ligther green patch in the dark surrounding line of forest which denoted the presence of the broad-leaved plantain groves that surround every village. However, on getting up to it we were saddened by the scene which met our eyes, after we had ascended by rope ladder and steps cut in the bank the cliff on which the plantains waved their long arms. Every where was desolation. The huts were almost all destroyed by fire and only charred poles and half burnt thatch remained to show where once had extended the broad pleasant street of a comfortable African village. The beautiful stems of the bananas and plantains were blackened by fire—or cut down in enormous masses they blocked up the paths between the houses, or lay half suspended across the still hanging center pole of some partially destroyed hut.

We wandered about for some time amid the ruins, wondering at the cause of this destruction, and seeking if we might find some poor savage lurking in the bushes near his but recently destroyed home. Presently from across the river a voice called out to us, timidly and faintly, and looking in the direction whence it came, we perceived a small canoe with two occupants creeping close in to the opposite bank and stealing up stream in the shadows of the trees. To our cries that we were friends and should do them no harm if they approached, the timid natives only answered that they had nothing to sell or even give us save the advice that we should sleep anywhere else rather than on the site of their destroyed village, for that the Lufembi at the back were only a short distance off and would probably come down on us in the night. However, as there was plenty of good wood to be had from the partially burnt framework of the houses, we determined to remain the night there, and put all hands to pulling down poles and charred timbers, sawing them on the top of the bank and throwing them down the cliff, whence we had them carried on board the Florida. This work by firelight went on gayly enough well into the night, the men chaffing each other and occasionally saying in half-play, half-earnest: "What will we do if the Lufembi come down upon us by and by?"

Gradually, work being finished and the wood all carried on board, the men sank to rest round their fires up on top of the cliff, each man with his loaded Snider rifle beside him, and a guard having been posted we all went asleep with a feeling of security. I had not lain very long, I fancy, on my camp bed out on the deck of the Florida when I was startled from sleep by an awful noise coming from the top of the bluff—yells and shrieks and hoarse cries, amid which continually sounded sharp and clear the bang! bang! of the rifles being discharged. I jumped from bed, seized my revolver from under my pillow, and with Glave and the engineer, whom I encountered running forward similarly clad and armed, I was just going to leap on shore and scale the steep path up to the plateau, when, tumbling helter-skelter over one another, rolling down the entire distance from the top to the water's edge, or even leaping from the summit, came the greater number of the crew of the Florida. For a moment there was a scene of indescribable confusion among the panic-stricken men, struggling up to their necks in the river.

No one could tell the cause of the sudden flight. All were shouting at once, and expecting the next moment to be nearly overwhelmed by a shower of spears from the banks, where we doubted not the savage Lufembi must be gathering for an assault on the steamer. We endeavored to arrest the men in their scramble, and were just mounting the scaling ladder when voices from the darkness on top of the bluffs and a ringing peal of laughter caused us to pause. Then came the tones of Bionelo's voice relating the cause of the panic, and the shouts of laughter from the men who a moment before had been risking their lives in their wild leaps to the bottom of the river bank drowned all our attempts at inquiry or reproof.

It appeared from Bionelo, who with one or two more had not fled when the first shot was fired, that on searching for the cause of the disturbance, he had found our three goats tied up near one of the houses for the night after having grazed during the afternoon, and it was one of these which had coughed in its dreams, or while chewing the cud, that had startled Elenge Minto, that brave "young man," from his slumbers.

His first thought was of the Lufembi and the blood-curdling cough being repeated he had answered it with a yell of fear and pulled the trigger of his Snider. Then followed the panic, the hasty shots at an invisible foe and the indescribably swift descent over the face of the cliff.

We could not refrain from joining in the merriment and chaffing the unfortunate Elenge Minto. The racking cough of a consumptive goat became quite a popular complaint on board the Florida for the remainder of the evening.

Our next day's run was a short one, and we camped at two in the afternoon alongside a small opening in the forest of the north bank, where we found dead wood for fuel, as well as numerous elephant and buffalo tracks, but none of them very recent ones. The river now was only on an average one hundred and fifty to two hundred and fifty yards broad, and its general direction was always the same, from the southeast.

Continuing our journey next morning, we steamed on at a good speed without seeing a human habitation or a canoe until the afternoon, when we arrived off a village situated on low-lying swamp land at the water's edge, and consisting of a few poor fishermen's huts. It was on the right bank of the river and opposite the side on which the Lufembi carried on their ravages.

The few fishermen about were astonished at our advent, but they speedily gathered in fresh recruits from the forest at the back and adjacent plantations, and became sensible of the beauties of a few strings of white beads held up artlessly before their longing eyes. When to these were added a handful of cowries and a shining tin plate and spoon the leader of the assemblage of savages on shore could only find broken tones in which to explain his appreciation of our kindness; and when, later on, we asked him as to the country lying ahead of us, he eagerly strove to impart every thing he knew.

He was of the Balolo, the great race of Iron-workers (Balolo signifying "Iron People"), who inhabit the country bordering on the three affluents of the Congo—the Ronki, Ikelemba and Lulungu—but whose true home is at the head waters of this system of kindred rivers. The facial and bodily adornment of the Balolo differs entirely from the modes of cicatrization of the tribes dwelling lower down, or along the banks of the Congo. The men we now encountered indulged their savage instinct of improving upon nature's handiwork by chiseling their features into hard lumps resembling Spanish nuts in size and shape, which were impartially distributed down the forehead to the bridge of the nose, and on each cheek as well as on the chin.

The shoulders and hollow of the back were alike covered with these protuberant knots of hard skin and flesh. The women, in addition to sporting all this display, revelled in an extra batch or two of lumps, scattered down the thighs, which, if one may except a narrow strip of banana or planatain leaf, fastened from a thong of fiber around the waist, formed their sole indebtedness to art for any covering. The men, on the contrary, wore a strangely-made little grass or palm-fiber cloth, which terminated in a tail behind, to which was attached a piece of monkey skin, or the fur of some animal. They carried spears and shields, the former beautifully made of iron, their hafts covered with shining bands of copper or brass, and the latter procured from melting down the brass-wire rods used as currency by Upper Congo tribes. The younger boys paraded about with bows and arrows to shoot small birds, or thin, many-pronged spears, with which they speared fish in the shallows.

It was our first glimpse of the mysterious Balolo, on the borders of whose realm we now found ourselves, and we listened with interest to the speech of the old headman, who spoke to us through Elenge Minto, our interpreter. First, he gave us to understand that they lived in mortal dread of the savage Lufembi, and that the "big" town of Malinga, to which he belonged, only a little further up river, had lately suffered a great deal. Many had been killed and others carried off into slavery, but that now all the scattered Malinga villages on the other, or Lufembi side of the river, had drawn together and constructed a strong barricade around their united town, and so had been able to beat off the renewed attacks of the Lufembi.

In reply to my question whether these savages had ivory, he facetiously remarked that as no Malinga man who had ever visited the Lufembi returned to tell his tale it was impossible to say what they had, but he considered an appetite for human flesh as their most cherished possession; and on further inquiry the old gentleman admitted that he himself was not at all averse to a little boiled or roast Lufembi, whenever the fortunes of war delivered a few prisoners into the hands of his countrymen.

"Those who are not fit to sell as slaves," he said, alluding to the weak or wounded captives, "we eat."

Then he branched off into a description of the upper course of the river, which we soon judged would prove navigable yet for another ten days' steaming of the Florida.

"High up," said he, "the river divides into two branches, one coming from swamps and trees, the other, and larger, falling over stones where there are fisher villages."

Before reaching this point, however, he said we should come across the veritable home of the elephant, scores of these huge creatures continually crossing and recrossing the infant river, bathing in its pools and wallowing in the shady recesses of its forest banks.

OUR LAST VIEW OF THE VILLAGE.

Slaves, he asserted, in that paradise of the man-catcher could be purchased for two mitakos each (two brass rods, worth about two cents each), so valuable was metal there and so plentiful the supply of human flesh.

Any exhibition of disgust on our part was out of place here; and we felt that to argue with a blood-thirsty old cannibal, and have our arguments met by a supercilious lifting of a pair of anthropophagous eyebrows was more than either we could stand, or Elenge Minto find suitable words to express; so by way of inflicting as much torture as possible ere we shot out from the bank, we gave the steam-whistle string such a tug that the shriek which burst from the Florida nearly deafened ourselves as we enjoyed the spectacle of its humiliating effect on the line of grinning savages along the muddy shore.

Our last view of that village was somewhat obscured by the hopeless jumble of arms, legs, monkey's tails, knotted thighs and bursting banana fiber waist thongs, which heaved and throbbed on the muddy beach—as old chief and young warrior, wife, husband and babe struggled and panted to escape from the piercing screams of the iron monster which was now gaily dashing aside the current of the river on its way to renowned Malinga.

The Longevity of Birds.

The swan is the longest-lived bird and it is asserted that it has reached the age of 100 years. Knauer, in his work entitled "Naturhistoriker," states that he has seen a falcon that was 162 years old. The following examples are cited as to the longevity of the eagle and vulture: A sea eagle captured in 1715 and already several years of age, died 104 years afterward, in 1819; a white-headed vulture, captured in 1706, died in 1826 in one of the aviaries of Schoenbrunn Castle, near Vienna, where it had passed 118 years in captivity. Paroquets and ravens reach an age of over 100 years. The life of sea and marsh birds sometimes equals that of several human generations. Like many other birds, magpies live to be very old in a state of freedom, but do not reach over 20 or 25 years in captivity. The nightingale lives but 10 years in captivity and the blackbird 15. Canary birds reach an age of from 12 to 15 years in the cage, but those flying at liberty in their native islands reach a much more advanced age.

—A letter of Buckle's has been published, giving his list of the really important authors whom the world has produced, according to his judgment. Excluding physical and mathematical works, he specifies as the principal original writers Homer, Plato, Aristotle, Dante, Shakespeare, Bacon, Descartes, Hobbes, Grotius, Locke, Berkeley, Kant, Hegel and Comte; Mill's "Logic," Smith's "Wealth of Nations," Malthus on "Population," and Ricardo's "Political Economy," with "Don Quixote," the "Pilgrim's Progress" and Goethe's "Faust." The Romans, it is added, produced nothing original, except jurisprudence. Their philosophy they stole from the Greeks and spoiled it.

—Mrs. Kennan is a great help to George Kennan in his work for the oppressed people of Russia. She recopies manuscript, reads proofs, translates Russian works, goes over the receipts from his work, and sees to their investment or deposit. Mrs. Kennan is described as a thorough business woman, of considerable business tact and much personal attractiveness.

KEEPERS OF MILLIONS.

The Responsibilities Incurred by the Heads of Bank-Note Companies.

I saw in a Broadway horse-car in New York one evening not long since a tall, fine-looking man accompanied by a messenger boy. The latter carried a small package in strong, thick paper bound with stout string. It might have contained any thing—a pair of shoes or a bundle of laundry—but it didn't. There were in it five hundred bonds of the Missouri Pacific railroad which were being carried in this apparently careless way to the house of Mr. George Gould. That occurrence has been repeated many times. The man who thus carried openly a large fortune and had it within his power to handle without restriction riches to such an enormous amount that the sum contained in the package was a mere trifle in comparison is the president of a well-known bank-note company.

I had occasion to call upon him the other day and questioned him as to the position he occupied and the trust necessarily reposed in him by wealthy men and corporations. I was amazed to learn that he had it in his power to handle enormous sums of money without being placed under any actual practical surveillance. In one way and another he had the access to securities amounting to hundreds of millions of dollars. At times there were in his possession negotiable securities the par value of which would amount to more than $500,000,000.

Besides these, he had under his private lock and key the plates from which the bonds of nearly all the prominent railroads and corporations of the country could be duplicated. Bank notes of nearly all the countries of the American continent passed through his hands, and the means of reproducing them were within his power. If he desired to use this power he could for a long time escape attracting any attention, and before his crime could be discovered he could have possessed himself of an enormous fortune and have disappeared beyond the reach of the law.

That such shrewd and wary financiers as George Gould and Russell Sage, both of whom are directors in this bank-note company, should place so much confidence in one man seems startling at first thought. It would appear to argue that they had an amount of confidence in human nature that no one has yet supposed them to possess. That corporations and governments should place it within the power of one man to rob them of startlingly large sums of money seems astounding. But the fact is that there is no choice in the matter. The bank note business in this country is all conducted in the same manner, and the same confidence is reposed in the head of each concern.

While the most careful safeguards are placed about the minor employes, the head of the company is almost entirely unchecked. While the employes are locked up in the workshop, in case a single piece of paper used for bank notes or bonds should be missing, until it is found, the president carries about him the keys to safes containing enormous amounts of money. His opportunities are far greater for fraud than are those of a bank cashier or president, inasmuch as the last two are always a check upon each other, and the amount of money at their disposal is never so great.

The president in question laughed as I asked him how it happened that a business of such magnitude should be conducted in apparently such a careless manner.

"The position of president of such a company," he said, "is one of great honor in the business world. No man would be given such a position whose probity was not thoroughly known throughout business circles, and whose character was not entirely without blemish. Such a man would accept the position simply because of the honor it would reflect upon him. The salary would not by any means recompense him for the responsibility he incurs. That being the case, he would not submit to being placed under checks or restricted in his powers. He is, of course, always prepared with accurate statements of his business affairs when the directors of the company require them, but these are necessarily merely nominal checks. It would be an affront to such a man to suspect him of abusing his powers, and he would not accept the position if he had any reason to suppose that his footsteps were being dogged by detectives. That, however, would be the only practical check upon him."

Yet, I am told, there has never been a single instance in the history of bank note companies in this country of dishonesty on the part of the man in whom this wonderful confidence is reposed, although the pay they receive is not at all commensurate with the enormity of their trust. Six or seven thousand dollars a year is all that is paid to a man who has the opportunity of helping himself to all the money he could ever possibly use.

It is nevertheless appalling to think of the amount of damage a dishonest man in such a position could do to the commercial interests of the country.—Charles J. Rosebault, in Philadelphia Press.

Mlle. Rhea, like other foreign actresses, has "declared her intentions" to become an American citizen, and has taken out her first naturalization papers.

—The merchant who doesn't believe in an "ad" is likely to know a good deal about subtraction—from his bank account.—Washington Critic.

SEEKING EASY PLACES.

A Poor Way of Achieving Success and Recognition in Life.

It seems nothing but natural for every person, man or woman, to think the position they occupy is just a little bit worse than that of any one else. And they imagine that if they could only exchange places with some one else, what a relief it would be. Much of the worry and fretting in life is caused by a desire to secure an easy place.

Success is only obtained by earnest effort. And this implies hard work of some kind. And when you are doing hard work you certainly can not be considered as having found an easy place. It is those who do not make a success that are always on the lookout or hunt for an easy place. And after they find themselves in positions where a little earnest effort would considerably improve their conditions, rather than make the effort they allow themselves to make an easy place for their individual comfort, and let the chance slip. Many a young man, in an effort to find an easy place, has allowed opportunities to pass by, which, if he would have taken them up and added a few years of hard, well directed labor, would have placed him in a condition where, if he desired, he might take upon himself an easy place.

One item should by no means be overlooked in this, and that is, that many places are like the ones you are occupying; that is, they are very deceiving. Others imagine that you are having a very easy time as compared with theirs, and they would gladly exchange with you, while at the same time you are thinking the same with them.

We often make our lot in life not only harder but considerably worse than it really is by continually looking at the dark side. We try to see all the drawbacks rather than trying to better our condition all the while, and this at least adds nothing to it. The fact is, if life were all sunshine, if we all secured what we might consider as easy places, it is very doubtful if we would appreciate it as fully as we do our present blessings. Better wear out than rust out. Life can be made much pleasanter if we would try to make the best of every thing, and then when we are able to better ourselves we are in a condition to enjoy better. It is an impossibility that each and every one of us should be able to secure a place that we might consider as easy. Added to this is the fact that much that we see is deceiving, and that if we fail to find what we are seeking in making a change, we are only breeding discontent instead of bettering ourselves.

It is certainly to the interest of every man to better himself or his condition when he can do so honestly. This is what, to a certain extent, we are all aiming to accomplish, but we will not be able to reach this if instead of earnest, faithful work, we devote our energies to seeking out and obtaining an easy place.—Industrial Gazette.

HARMONY OF SEA-BIRDS.

A Concert Heard Among the Islands North and West of Scotland.

We are all more or less charmed with the notes of the thrushes, the warblers and other birds of the forest who sing in the morning and at night. In the case of these birds, it is commonly the individual voices that please us most. Not infrequently the effect of the mingled notes is discordant. With seafowl the opposite has been observed to be the case, as we see from Mr. Macculloch's account of what he heard among the islands north and west of Scotland:

I have often been entertained with the extraordinary concerts of the seafowl in Ailsa, the Shiant islands and elsewhere; but I never heard any orchestra so numerous, so various and so perfect as this one, which seemed to consist of almost all the birds that frequent the seas and rocks of these wild coasts. I should, perhaps, do injustice to the performers, did I attempt to assign the parts which each took in this concert; but it was easy to distinguish the short, shrill treble of the puffins and auks, the melodious and varied notes of the different gulls, the tenors of the divers and guillemots, and the croaking basses of the cormorants. But the variety of tones was far beyond my power of analysis. It may appear ludicrous to call this music melodious, or to speak of the harmony formed by such ingredients; yet it is a combination of sounds to which a musician will listen with interest and delight, although the separate cries of the different individuals are seldom thought agreeable. Few of the notes in this concert could, perhaps, have been referred to the scale, if separately examined; yet the harmony was often as full and perfect as if it had been the product of well-tuned instruments, and the effect was infinitely superior to that which is often heard in a spring morning among the singing birds of the forest, while it was so entirely different as not to admit of any comparison. In the sea-birds there are few tones and few notes, but they are decided and steady. The body of sound is also far greater, and, however inferior in variety or sweetness the notes of the individuals may be, there is much more variety in the harmonious combinations, and in that which musicians would call the contrivance and design. Very often they remind me of some of the ancient religious compositions, which consist of a perpetual succession of fugue and imitation on a few simple notes, and sometimes it appeared as if different orchestras were taking up the same phrase.—Youth's Companion.

HISTORIC SHREWS.

Women Who Have Become Famous and Notorious for Scolding.

Some of the shrews have had as enduring a record in history as have some of the beauties, though owing their fame to a very opposite quality. England and France supply the most prominent specimens.

Royalty first, however. Mathilda, Empress and claimant against King Stephen for the crown of England, has left a fair claim to a masterful temperament. Queen Elizabeth, great as she was, exhibits herself in some of her letters and actions, as when she boxed Essex's ears, as a right royal shrew. So was Catherine de Medici. So, emphatically, was Christina of Sweden, who caused her chamberlain, Monaldeschi, in right of her prerogative, to be strangled in a palace of the King of France. So was Catherine, of Russia, a shrew, who had absolute power to back up her shrewishness.

In Henry VIII.'s reign, Lady More, wife of the great and good Sir Thomas, stands out as a very definite shrew who ruled her husband and children alike with much austerity. But she does not, though she liked her own way, appear, as far as we can see, in any way to come up to Lady Coke, in James I.'s reign. This lady drove her husband, the terrible Chief Justice (of whom James himself said, "Nay, mon, if Coke sends for me I must go"), nearly frantic. The subject was their daughter's marriage. Lady Coke was furious, indefatigable, resolute and a most accomplished scold.

Now for a French one little known to English readers in general. This was Mme. de Vervins, who, in the seventeenth century, was a fine specimen of the species. She told her servants to kill those of a lady whom her lackeys insulted for venturing to defend their mistress. She bullied her husband incessantly, and on one occasion in a quarrel used her riding whip as an argument. She habitually beat her servants violently. She scolded her acquaintances for the least difference of opinion, unfavorable criticism or most minute slight offered to her or fancied by her, and plotted their assassination if they opposed her imperious and arbitrary nature.

Another woman of the same type, who loved to play the shrew in public, and especially at balls and parties, was Mme. d'Orgeval. She lived in the same time as Mme. de Vervins. Mme. d'Orgeval gave great entertainments, but she and her daughter, according to the French memoirs, chiefly loved doing insolent things in a polite manner. On all occasions Mme. d'Orgeval's temper was furious if any lady danced better or oftener than her daughter. In one instance of this she told the lady who offended her that if she continued dancing she would stop the ball. She bullied her guests with vigor, and demanded her own way in every thing.

Returning to England our gallery of portraits must not omit Sarah, first Duchess of Marlborough, whose violent temper made her generally dreaded. She had the good quality of loving her husband, the famous General, and thinking him the foremost of men. But to every one else she could be a shrew on occasion. Poor Queen Anne was afraid of her. She bullied her as if she were a nobody. And in the MS. room at the British Museum much contemporary light is thrown on this subject by a remarkable letter to be seen there, written at the time, and describing an order sent to the Duke and Duchess to give up their insignia of office without notice, and telling the latter that she was not to come to the Queen, who, no doubt, was afraid of her. This was at the time when her enemies' intrigues (led by her own cousin, Miss Masham, whom she had placed at court in her interest) were successful.—Saturday Review.

Over the Garden Wall.

"Ha! Carpentering, Jones?"
"Yes, I'm building a hencoop."
"What! Are you going to keep hens?"
"I am."
"I thought you always hated hens."
"So I have and do hate 'em, but my neighbor Smith swears he'll have a prettier garden than mine this summer, and I'm bound he shan't."—Boston Herald.

Wanted Time for a Teacher.

Smart Girl (with a philosophical turn of mind)—Papa, have you ever heard of the hand of Time pulling an ear of corn or boxing the compass, or even pointing the finger of scorn at any one?

Papa—No, my dear.

Practical Schoolboy—Wish we had him for teacher, then.—New York Herald.

A Variation.

Mr. Olds—Will you be my wife?
Miss Youngs—No; but I——
Mr. Olds—Don't say you will be a sister to me.
Miss Youngs—I wasn't going to. I was just going to say that I wouldn't mind being a widow to you.—Puck.

LITTLE'S
CHEMICAL FLUID
NON-POISONOUS
SHEEP DIP.
One gallon, mixed with 60 gallons of cold water will dip thoroughly 180 sheep, at a cost of 1 cent each. Easily applied; a nourisher of Wool; a certain cure for SCAB. Also,
Little's Patent Powder Dip,
(Poisonous.)
Mixes instantly with water. Prevents the fly from striking. In a 2-pound package there is sufficient to dip twenty sheep, and in a 7 pound package there is sufficient to dip one hundred sheep.
CATTON, BELL & CO.
SUCCESSORS TO FALKNER, BELL & CO.
Office, 406 California St. and Wool Agency Warehouse, cor. 6th and Townsend Sts.
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

C. Mulholland,
EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.
PUBLISHED EVERY FRIDAY

INDEPENDENCE, CAL

FRIDAY, MAY 30 1890

County Official Paper.

SUPERVISORS' PROCEEDINGS.

Special Session.

A special meeting of the Board of Supervisors of Inyo County to be held at the Court House in Independence is called for Friday, May 23d, 1890, at 6 o'clock p. m., of that day, to take into consideration and act upon all bills and demands against Inyo County incurred in the action of The People of the State of California vs. W. T. C. Elliott.

Also to act upon the rejected bills of A. R. Conklin for professional services in the above action, and P. H. Mack's bill for expenses etc., incurred in the issue of and negotiation of the new five per cent Inyo County bonds, and the transfer of County funds.

SETH G. SNEDEN, Supervisor.
J. D. HARGER, Supervisor.
J. J. STEWART, Supervisor.
E. ROBINSON, Supervisor.

Dated May 15th, 1890.

FRIDAY, May 23, 1890.

On the above named day the Board of Supervisors of the County of Inyo, State of California, met at 6 o'clock p. m., in special session pursuant to a call duly made and entered.

Present—Supervisors Robinson, Sneden, Stewart and Harger. Absent—Eddy.

Supervisor Robinson in the chair.

Order calling special meeting was read.

Whereupon the Board proceeded to examine the bills of P. H. Mack for $1,000; J. J. Moore $209.95 for special services and expenses in transferring Inyo Co., bonds. The claims were allowed and warrants ordered drawn for the amounts on the Bond Fund.

The claim of A. R. Conklin for services as special counsel in the case of the People vs. W. T. C. Elliott for $600 was allowed on the General Expense Fund and warrant ordered drawn for that amount.

The claims of Supervisors Robinson, Stewart, Harger and Sneden were allowed, and warrants ordered drawn on the Salary Fund for the following amounts:

J. D. Harger	$20 10
S. G. Sneden	19 80
E. Robinson	6 30
J. J. Stewart	10 80

Whereupon the Board adjourned.

A visit to the Asylum for the insane at Reno, Nevada, will convince anyone that some of the suggestions offered in "Looking Backward" are quite practical. A large and beautiful building, surrounded by handsome grounds, orchard and green fields. An abundance of good food well cooked; plenty of comfortable clothing; bath rooms; the whole building lighted at night with electric lights. All the solid comforts and many of the elegancies that ample fortune is needed to secure in private life. All these are supplied to the patients at an average of about 63 cents per day, and a large part of this expense goes for attendance. Dr. S. Bishop, the Superintendent says that sane people could be as well cared for at a cost not greater than about half the figure given. This shows what could be done by cooperation and wise management.

A few days ago a man and woman were traveling in a buggy on the road north of Big Pine. The road was covered with water and the buggy upset, throwing the woman into the water. No damage was done beyond a wetting.

SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN
ESTABLISHED 1845.

is the oldest and most popular scientific and mechanical paper published and has the largest circulation of any paper of its class in the world. Fully illustrated. Best class of Wood Engravings. Published weekly. Send for specimen copy. Price $3 a year. Four months' trial, $1. MUNN & CO., PUBLISHERS, 361 Broadway, N.Y.

ARCHITECTS & BUILDERS Edition of Scientific American.

A great success. Each issue contains colored lithographic plates of country and city residences or public buildings. Numerous engravings and full plans and specifications for the use of persons contemplate building. Price $2.50 a year, 25 cts. a copy. MUNN & CO., PUBLISHERS.

PATENTS may be secured by applying to MUNN & CO., who have had over 40 years' experience and have made over 50,000 applications for American and Foreign patents. Send for Handbook. Correspondence strictly confidential.

TRADE MARKS.

In case your mark is not registered in the Patent Office, apply to MUNN & CO., and procure immediate protection. Send for Handbook.

COPYRIGHTS for books, charts, maps, etc., quickly procured. Address

MUNN & CO., Patent Solicitors,
GENERAL OFFICE 361 BROADWAY, N. Y.

BUHACH
THE UNRIVALED
Insect Exterminator

Manufactured solely from Pyrethrum flowers, grown in California, in a locality where the soil and climate are peculiarly adapted to the production of flowers rich in the essential oil which makes them so remarkably destructive to insect life.

Avoid the Worthless and Spurious Preparations, sold as Insect Powders, and use Buhach from original packages, and clear your premises of all Annoying and Destructive Insect Pests.

BUHACH C. H. MILLER'S CALIFORNIA PRODUCT INSECT EXTERMINATOR

None Genuine Without the Trade Mark.

If your dealer doesn't keep it, order directly from the

Buhach Producing & Manufacturing COMPANY,
SOLE MANUFACTURERS,
STOCKTON, - - CALIFORNIA.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE.

INYO MARBLE COMPANY.

Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Keeler, Inyo county.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of a Board of Directors, held on the 17th day of April, 1890, an assessment (No. 9) of Ten (10) cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary at the office of the company, 205 Front street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 3d day of June, 1890 will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Thursday, the 26th day of June, 1890 to pay the delinquent assessment together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.

G. W. LUCE, Secretary.

Office, 205 Front St., San Francisco, California.

FINAL HOMESTEAD PROOF.

H A No. 432

LAND OFFICE AT INDEPENDENCE, CAL., April 30, 1890.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT THE following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before the Register and Receiver at Independence, Cal., on Saturday, June 14th, 1890, viz.: JOHN S. GORMAN, Homestead Application No. 432, for the W ½ of lot No. 1 in NW ¼ Sec 5 Lot No. 1 in NE ¼ and E ½ of lot No. 1 in NW ¼ of Sec 6, in Twp 13 S. Range 35 East, M D M

He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon, and cultivation of, said land, viz: Hiram C. Hamilton, Helaire P. Cartier, Alvah R. Conklin and William M. Boyd, all of Independence, Cala.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD, Register.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.

Estate of ELIZA ANN SMITH, deceased.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN BY THE UNdersigned, Executor of the last Will and Testament of Eliza Ann Smith, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Executor, at his residence, at Block Rock, Inyo county, California.

WILLIAM S. MORTON.
Executor of the last Will and Testament of said Eliza Ann Smith, deceased.

Dated May 9th, 1890.

S. H. BIGLAND,
—DEALER IN—
Owens Valley Lands
39 SUTTER STREET.
SAN FRANCISCO.
1-26

A. K. EUGLEY,

BIG PINE INYO CO. CAL.

Dealer in GENERAL MERCHANDISE, GROCERIES MINERS Supplies

PROVISIONS,
&c., &c., &c

Postmaster and Deputy Co Clerk.
A. K. EUGLEY,
Big Pine, Cal.

F. E. Bosworth,
Watchmaker
& Jeweler.
BISHOP, CAL.

Fine and Complicated Watch Repairing a Specialty.

Guns, Sewing Machines, Organs and Music Boxes Put in Perfect Condition and Warranted.

I Prefer to do all work at your house and will call if you will write to me at Bishop.

A $20 A Day Man:

A VOICE from Ohio. Here is portrait of Mr. Gordon, of Salem, Ohio. He writes: "Was at work on a farm for $20 a month; I now have an agency for E. C. Allen & Co's albums and publications and often make $20 a day." (Signed) W. H. GARRISON.

William Kline, Harrisburg, Pa., writes: "I have never known anything to sell like your album. Yesterday I took orders enough to pay me over $25." W. J. Elmore, Bangor, Me., writes: "I take an order for your album at almost every house I visit. My profit is often as much as $20 for a single day's work." Others are doing quite as well. We have not space to give extracts from their letters. Every one who takes hold of this grand business rises up to grand profits. Shall we start YOU in this business, reader? Write to us and learn all about it for yourself. We are starting many; we will start you if you don't delay until another gets ahead of you in your part of the country. If you take hold you will be able to pick up gold fast. ☞ Read—On account of a forced manufacturer's sale 125,000 ten dollar Photograph Albums are to be sold to the people for $2 each. Bound in Royal Crimson Silk Velvet Plush. Charmingly decorated insides. Handsomest albums in the world. Largest Size. Greatest bargains ever known. Agents wanted. Liberal terms. Big money for agents. Any one can become a successful agent. Sells itself on sight—little or no talking necessary. Wherever shown, every one wants to purchase. Agents take thousands of orders with rapidity never before known. Great profits await every worker. Agents are making fortunes. Ladies make as much as men. You, reader, can do as well as any one. Full information and terms free, to those who write for same, with particulars and terms for our Family Bibles, Books and Periodicals. After you know all, should you conclude to go no further, why no harm is done.

Address E. C. ALLEN & CO., AUGUSTA, MAINE

OFFICIAL.

Application for Patent.

Mining Application No. 247.

UNITED STATES LAND OFFICE, INDEPENDENCE, CAL., April 25, 1890.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT PATrick Reddy, whose post office address is San Francisco, California, has this day filed his application for a patent for fourteen hundred and forty-eigh and seven-tenths linear feet of the Bernon Quartz Mine or vein bearing galena, lead and silver, with surface ground six hundred feet in width, situated in Coso Mining District, County of Inyo and State of California and designated by the field notes and official plat on file in this office as Lot No. 42, in Township 19 South, Range No. 40 East, of Mt. Diablo Base and Meridian.

Said Lot No. 42 being described as follows, to wit:

Survey of Connecting Line:

Commencing at corner common to Sections 14, 15, 22 and 23 of T 19 S., R. 40 E., M. D. B. and M., and running with Mag. Var. of 15 deg. 37 min. E. as follows:

N. 73 deg. 52 min. E., Needle varying along the line from N. 58 1-8 deg. E. to N. 58 3-8 deg. E. Magnetic. 71.99 chs to the S W cor. post of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine, being the S. E. cor. of the Bernon claim.

Survey of the Exterior Boundaries:

Commencing at a stake in high stone Mont. having pencil marks too dim to be read, being the S. W. cor. of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine, and the S. E. cor. of the Bernon claim, thence deflecting L. 180 deg. 86 deg. 57 min. from connecting line extended N. 73 deg. 52 min. E. as assumed standard bearing of the survey, upon boundary line of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine and East boundary line of the Bernon claim, and running as follows: 1. N. 19 deg. 11 mi. W., upon East boundary of claim, local variation of declination of 0 deg. 18 min. E.; 0.90 chs to summit of limestone reef; 1.65 chs crossing high reef of limestone, 1.93 chs; whence bears S. 70 3 4 deg., W. 0.46 chs., face of open cut five feet wide. 1. N. 19 deg. 11 min., W. 4.09 chs, centre of ravine bearing Easterly 7.42 chs, summit of high croppings of lime rock; whence bears N. 59 degrees 11 min. W 4.55 chs centre incline prospect shaft 15 ft deep, no marks, 10.14 chs to centre of wash bearing Easterly from summit towards Defiance Works; 10.90 chs to old stake in high stone Mont. marked in pencil as follows: — of Bernon and Defiance Ledge—surveyed by Joseph Seely, U. S. M. Surveyor; being the side line Mont. of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine; 749.7 ft., or 11 36 chs., Set 3 by 4 post in mound of stone marked Defiance West line and Bernon East line; whence bears N. 35 deg. 19 min. E. 1 28 chs. centre of incline prospect cut 12 ft. deep; whence bears N. 70 deg. 49 min E 0.75 chs centre of small prospect cut, whence bears N 79 deg. 07 min. E. 5.37 chs centre of mouth of Defiance and Bernon Tunnel; whence bears N. 79 deg. 45 min. W. 2 43 chs. the face of Defiance and Bernon Tunnel; 14.39 chs centre of wash leading Easterly; 15.61 chs; whence bears N 70 deg. 49 min. E. 0 03 chs an old stake in stone Mont. having Seely's name in pencil and other marks too dim to be read, being a sideline Mont. of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine; 1. N. 19 deg. 11 min. W 16.18 chs summit of ridge bearing Easterly; 29.31 chs, whence bears S 42 deg. 04 min. W. 1.76 chs a stake in stone Mont. marked Kerso Ledge, S W cor. Post No. 6; whence bears N 42 deg. 04 min. E. 6.91 chs a stake in stone Mont. marked Kerso Ledge N E Post; whence bears N 35 deg. 45 min. E 2.41 chs a stake in stone Mont. marked Kerso centre point 1448.7 ft., or 21.95 chs to stake in stone Mont., no marks, being the N W cor. of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine, set 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon N E cor. No. 1, and Defiance N W cor. No. 4; thence deflecting L. 90 deg. from Co. 1 extended N. 19 deg. 11 min. W making interior ang e 90 deg. ran; 2 S. 70 deg. 49 min. W upon the North boundary line of the Bernon claim; local variation of declination of 0 deg. 18 min. E., 2, S 70 deg. 49 min. W 0.30 chs centre old sled road from summit of hill, 1.69 chs, whence bears N 60 deg. 07 min., W 3.06 chs a stake in stone Mont. being the Northerly end of Lode line and centre of Hidalgo claim, 7.10 chs whence bears N 79 deg. 57 min. W 0.04 chs the centre of Hidalgo incline shaft, 4.07 chs, crossing summit of Darwin Range, whence bears S 19 deg 31 min. E 2.91 chs. centre small shaft 300 ft or 4.545 chs, set 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked, Bernon L. L. P. No. 1; being the Northerly end of Lode Line and centre of Bernon claim, 7.80 chs centre mouth of tunnel bearing Northerly 6.00 ft, or 9.09 chs, set a 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon N W Cor. No. 4, being the N W Cor. of the Bernon claim; thence deflecting L 90 deg. from Co 2 extended S 70 deg. 49 min. W making the interior angle 90 deg. and ran 3, S 19 deg. 11 min. E upon West boundary line of Bernon Claim, local variation of declination of 0 deg. 18 min. E, 0.15 chs centre wash bearing Westerly 4.07 chs, summit of ridge bearing Westerly, 9.01, center deep gulch bearing Westerly 10.15 chs, whence bears S 28 deg. 47 min. W 9.19 chs a stone Mont. being the S E cor. of the Hidalgo Claim; whence bears S 56 deg. 51 min. W 11.17 chs a stone Mont. being the Southerly end of Hidalgo Lode Line; whence bears S 76 deg. 25 min. W 12.46 chs a stone Mont. being the S W Cor. of the Hidalgo Claim 3, S 19 deg. 11 min. E 13 23 chs, summit of spur bearing Westerly, 14.61 chs, crossing head of wash bearing Westerly 16.28 chs, summit of spur bearing Westerly 18.03 chs, whence bears N 86 deg. 28 min. E 3.32 chs the centre of mouth of Carry Tunnel, No. 1, whence bears N 83 deg. 29 min. E 4.22 chs the centre of mouth of Carry Tunnel No. 2, whence bears N 86 deg. 46 min. E 2.71 chs the centre of mouth of Carry Tunnel, No. 3, 21.65 chs, centre of ravine bearing Westerly, 21.47 chs, intersection with connecting line; whence bears S 73 deg. 52 min. W 62.29 chs the corner common to Sections 14, 15, 22 and 23 of T 19 S, R 40 E, M D B and M, 1448.7 ft, or 21.95 chs, in south side of ravine, set 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon S W Cor. No. 3, being the S W Cor. of the Bernon Claim; thence deflecting L 90 deg. from Co. 3, extended S 19 deg. 11 min. E, making interior angle 90 deg. and ran; 4. N 70 deg. 49 min. E, upon South boundary line of Bernon, local variation of declination of 0 deg. 03 min. E, 1.26 chs, edge of ravine, 2.51 chs, edge of spur bearing Westerly 3.00 ft, or 4.45 chs, set 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon L. L., P. No. 2, being the Southerly end of Lode Line and centre of claim, 7.16 chs, crossing high reef of lime rock, 4, N 70 deg. 49 min. E, 600 ft, or 9.09 chs back to place of beginning, and set a 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon S E Cor., No. 2, and Defiance S W Cor., No. 3.

Containing 19.95 acres.

Survey of Lode Line.

Commencing at the L. L., P., No. 1, of Claim and deflecting thence L. 90 deg. from Co. 2, extended S 70 deg. 49 min W, making the interior angle 90 deg. ran, 5, S, 19 deg. 11 min. E, upon lode line; ascending 3.94 chs, whence bears S 74 deg. 41 min. W 2.91 chs a stone Mont. claimed to be the centre of Hidalgo Claim; whence bears S 72 deg. 36 min. E, 0.71 chs centre small shaft; descending; 10.30 chs, whence bears S 70 deg. 49 min. W 0.30 chs centre prospect hole 11.82 chs, whence bears N 70 deg. 49 min. E 0.50 chs centre incline shaft 60 ft deep. Ascending; 13.03 chs, summit of spur bearing Westerly. Descending; 13.36 chs, whence bears S 70 deg. 06 min. E 0.80 chs centre shaft 45 ft deep, 14.41 chs, whence bears S 70 deg. 49 min. W 0.10 chs centre mouth of tunnel, 16.66 chs, whence bears S 70 deg. 49 min. W 0.12 chs centre shaft 6 ft deep 1448 ft, or 21.94 chs to L. L. P., No. 2, of Claim.

Magnetic variation 15 deg. 37 min. E containing 19.95 acres.

THE LOCATION of this mine is recorded in the Recorder's office of Coso Mining District in Book C of page 136. The adjoining claimant is the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. mine.

Any and all persons claiming adversely any portion of said Bernon Quartz mine or surface ground are required to file their adverse claims with the Register of the United States Land Office at Independence in the State of California during the sixty days period of publication hereof, or they will be barred by virtue of the provisions of the Statute.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD, Register.

o-n24

INDEPENDENCE
SHAVING SALOON.

Shaving, Hair Cutting, etc., done in the best manner.

WM. H. HUFF, Prop'r

MISCELLANEOUS.

J. R. ELDRED,
Sheriff and
Tax-Collector.
INYO CO., CAL.

P. H. MACK,
COUNTY CLERK,
—AND—
Ex-officio Auditor and Recorder,
INYO CO., CAL.

GEO. M. GILL,
District Attorney,
INYO CO., CAL.

J. J. MOORE,
County Treasurer,
INYO CO., CAL.

S. P. M'KNIGHT, C. E.
COUNTY SURVEYOR
—AND—
U. S. Deputy Mineral Surveyor
For California and Nevada.
—BISHOP CREEK, INYO CO., CAL.—

The obtaining of United States mineral patents a specialty.

All kinds of surveying given the most careful and accurate attention.

JUSTICE OF PEACE,
C. MULHOLLAND.
Office in the "INDEPENDENT" Building, Independence, Inyo County, Cal.

A. R. CONKLIN,
Attorney-at-Law.
Independence, Cal.
Will practice in all the Courts of the States of California and Nevada.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
Independence, Cal.

P. W. FORBES,
ATTORNEY AT LAW.
NOTARY PUBLIC.
☞ Cases in U. S. Land Office a Specialty. ☜
BISHOP, INYO COUNTY, CALIFORNIA.

IRVING J. WOODIN, M D.,
Physician & Surgeon,
(COUNTY PHYSICIAN)
Louise L. Woodin, M. D.
PHYSICIAN & SURGEON.
☞ NIGHT CALLS ATTENDED. ☜
Office and residence at the Reddy place, Independence.

W. H. GEORGE, M. D.,
Physician and Surgeon,
Bishop Creek, Cal.,
Offers his professional services to the people of Bishop Creek and vicinity. Office and residence opposite Andrew Clark's.

F. E. Bunting, M. D.
Physician & Surgeon
LONE PINE, CAL
OFFICE IN GELCICH BUILDING
All calls attended to immediately.

Lodge 221, F. & A. M.

Regular meetings of Lodge No. 221, F. & A. M., for the year 1889, will be held at the Lodge room at Independence as follows:

Saturday	February 1st
"	March 1st
"	March 29th
"	May 3rd
"	May 31st
"	June 28th
"	July 26th
"	August 30th
"	September 27th
"	October 25th
"	November 22nd
"	December 20th

P. H. MACK, W. M.
C. MULHOLLAND Sec.

P. W. FORBES. P. H. MACK.
MACK & FORBES.
Real Estate Agents,
Address, P. H. MACK, Independence, Cal.
P. W. FORBES, Bishop, Cal.

FRED BURCKHARDT
Watchmaker & Jeweler,
LONE PINE, CAL.

Time pieces of all descriptions repaired and regulated, satisfaction guaranteed. Jewelry made to order. Firearms repaired and loaded.
☞ All orders from any part of the country will be promptly attended to, at the most reasonable charges. At the old stand "Mechanics' Hall," Lone Pine.
FRED BURKHARDT.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CROCKER'S HOTEL.
BIG PINE - CAL

New House.
New Furniture.
Low Rates

☞ Splendid hunting and fishing near by, in act, it is a veritable paradise for tourists and pleasure seekers.

Special attention given to the wants of every guest.

CROCKER BROS., Props.
sep1-tf

ANTONS SALOON
KEELER, CAL.

BEER, WINES, LIQUORS and CIGARS

All kinds of Fancy Drinks, including pure water. A comfortable and pleasant Hall.

JOHN C. ANTON, Prop.

Pioneer
Livery & Feed Stables,
INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

Having returned and resumed the management of the above well known feed and livery stables, patrons can be assured of finding there the best of Buggy Teams, Saddle Horses, and

Livery Accommodations

in general. Also, Hay and Grain for sale by the pound or ton.

O. I. MAIRS, Proprietor.

E. H. Edwards,
—DEALER IN—
General Merchandise,
LONE PINE,
INYO COUNTY - - - CALIFORNIA.

Inyo
Freighting
Company.
REGULAR LINE
Mojave To Bishop.

Teams leave Mojave and Bishop weekly. Goods delivered with regularity at all points on the line. Consign goods to the Company at Mojave.

J. W. Murphy.
BLACKSMITHING
—AND—
General IronWork.

Wagons and Carriages Repaired.

HORSESHOEING, $2.00 for CASH

Shop on Edwards St., opposite the Court House, Independence.

BLACKSMITHING,
Horseshoeing, General Iron
—AND—
WAGON WORK.

PIONEER BLACKSMITH SHOP
Cor. Main St. & Depot Ave.,
INDEPENDENCE, CAL.
W. F. MATLACK.....PROPRIETOR.

Horseshoeing ..... $2 00 for Cash
For particulars, call and see
W. F. MATLACK.

LONE PINE
Blacksmith Shop.
R. C. Spear, Prop'r
—ALL WORK ON—
MINING TOOLS,
FARMING IMPLEMENTS
& FREIGHTING OUTFITS
—PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO—
HORSE SHOEING,
CARRIAGE WORK,
GENERAL REPAIRING
☞ All work attended to with neatness and despatch. Prices to suit the times.

BOOTS AND SHOES
MADE AND REPAIRED.

THE BEST MATERIAL.
FIRST-CLASS WORK.

Repairs done Promptly.
Prices Reasonable.
A. J. DAVIS,
nov 30-tf Independence,

MISCELLANEOUS.

Railroad Time Table.

CARSON & COLORADO R R

TAKING EFFECT,

Sunday, May 10th, 18 9.

STATIONS.	From Mound House. No. 1 Leave—	To Mound House. No. 2. Arrives—
Mound House	12 30 p. m	5.55 p. m
Dayton	1.00 p. m.	5.15 p. m.
Wabuska	3.05 p. m	3.06 p. m
Hawthorne	6 50 p. m.	11 20 a. m.
Luning	7:30 p. m.	10.05 a. m.
Soda Springs	9:15 p. m.	9.05 a. m
Belleville	10:25 p. m.	7.45 a. m.
Candelaria Ar.	11 10 p. m	Lv. 7.10 a. m
	No. 3. Leave—	No. 4. Arrives—
Belleville	8 10 a. m	5 25 p. m
Benton	11.40 a m	-
Bishop Creek	1.50p. m.	11.00 a. m
Alvord	2.55 p. m.	10.00 a. m.
Independence	4 10 p. m.	8.30 a. m.
Lone Pine	5 00 p. m.	7.40 a. m
Keeler Ar	5.45 p. m.	Lv. 7.00 a. m.

Trains 1 and 2 run daily.
Train 3 runs Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays.
Train 4 runs Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays

Passenger trains make close connection at Mound House with express trains of V. & T. R., which connect at Reno with east and west bound trains of Central Pacific Railroad.

Stage Connections:

AT HAWTHORNE with United States Stage Company's coaches for Aurora (26 miles); Bodie (37 miles), Lundy and Bridgeport.

AT LUNING (125 miles from Mound House) with Gilmer, Salsbury & Co's. tri weekly stages (leaving Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays) for Downeyville, Grantsville and Belmont.

AT CANDELARIA with U. S. Stage Co's. stages for Columbus (8 miles), Silver Peak, Montezuma Allda Valley, Gold Mountain, etc.

H. M. YERINGTON,
General Superintendent.

R. J. LAWS, Assistant Superintendent.

D. A. BENDER,
General Freight and Passenger Agent.

LUMBER. LUMBER.

SPRATT & CREASER,
BIG PINE.
—DEALERS IN—
ALL KINDS OF LUMBER.

Square timber of all dimensions for buildings and bridges.

CEILING,
FLOORING,
FENCING,
RUSTIC.

All kinds of tongued and grooved lumber.
Surfaced lumber of all kinds.
All orders filled promptly. Lumber delivered on board the cars at Alvord.

SPRATT & CREASER,
sep1-tf Big Pine, Inyo Co., Cal.

EDWARD CHENOT
Independence, Cal.,
INVITES PUBLIC ATTENTION TO HIS extensive Stock of
GENERAL MERCHANDISE
....Consisting of....
GROCERIES.
PROVISIONS
Tobacco, Cigars,
WINES AND LIQUORS
FLOUR & GRAIN
Together with an Assortment of
DRY GOODS AND CLOTHING
ETC., ETC
☞ Buyers and consumers should call and examine my stock and prices before purchasing elsewhere.
E. CHENOT.
Independence, Cal., March 9, 1889.
947tf

R. J. WHITTAKER
—PAINTER,—
BIG PINE, - - - - CAL.

HOUSE PAINTING,
SIGN WRITING,
PAPER HANGING,
GRAINING,
GILDING ON
WOOD AND GLASS
Wagons Painted
The best of materials used and satisfaction guaranteed.

Wm. Muth-Rasmussen.
Bee Keeper.
Manufacturer of Comb Foundation.
Independence, Inyo Co. Cal

NATHAN RHINE.

NATHAN RHINE,
(Successor to Harris & Rhine.)
MERCHANT,
INDEPENDENCE
Inyo Co. Cal.

Wholesale & Retail
—DEALER IN—
General Merchandise

MY STOCK
CONSISTING OF
Almost every needed article is well calculated to satisfy the wants of everybody; and, as in the past, it will be our aim in the future to retain the extensive patronage enjoyed heretofore.

NATHAN RHINE.

NATHAN RHINE
BANKER.
Independence,
Cal.

SELL EXCHANGE
—ON—
SAN FRANCISCO

Draw Direct
—ON—
NEW YORK,
LONDON, England.
BERLIN, FRANKFORT-on-the-Main, GERMANY.

I AM PREPARED TO TRANSACT ALL KINDS,
—OF—
GENERAL
BANKING
&
EXCHANGE,
BUSINESS.

Wechsel in beliebigen Summen auf Berlin und Frankfurt am der Main.
Deutsche Vollmachten geleistet.
Geldsendungen von und nach Deutschland besorgt.

AGENT FOR WELLS FARGO
& CO'S.
EXPRESS

MUTUAL
Life Insurance Co.
OF NEW YORK
CAPITAL - - - - $5,000,000

LIVERPOOL
AND LONDON AND GLOBE
INSURANCE - COMPANY
Capital - - - - - $21,000,000

NATHAN RHINE.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY, MAY 30 1890

MARKET REPORT.

Bar silver, 104¼
Lead, 4.12½
Copper, 15
Tin, 21.25
Sugar, .06¼
Coffee, 17@ 19¾
Wool, foothill, 17 @ 20.

Mr. J. N. Evans of Reno has been at Independence since last Monday.

Louis Munzinger came down from Bishop last Monday and was in town a few days.

Mrs. Gregg and Mrs Baker were down from Big Pine a few days at the beginning of the week.

James C. Crocker, R. Hessian and Chris Engle of Big Pine were at Independence at the beginning of the week.

Owens river is overflowing its banks in places, and Wednesday it was reported running around both ends of the bridge at Big Pine.

Rev. J. H. De La Matyr has returned from a trip to Reno; Religious services will be held at Lone Pine, George's Creek and Independence.

A big team belonging to Archie Farrington has lately been added to the force hauling borax for Conn and Trudo. That Saline Valley has a big borax field, there is no doubt.

A meeting of Fair Directors will be held at Independence tomorrow afternoon. The location of the next Fair will be the subject of deliberation.

Santa Claus was down from Big Pine at the beginning of the week. We called him Chris Engle at Independence just for fun, but we knew all the time that he was jolly old Santa in disguise.

R. S. Minor Esq. has very greatly improved in health since he came to Independence. He now walks about erect and his cheeks begin to show the rosy hue of health. When he came here two months ago he looked like one whose death was near.

The vines and fruit trees set out this spring at the various stations of the C & C road in Owens Valley are making good growth. The stations will soon have an attractive appearance, and will show to travelers what the soil and climate of Owens Valley is capable af producing.

Mr. C. S. Young is offering land already planted with raisin vines and almond trees for one hundred dollars per acre. The land is close to the Southern Pacific railroad, twelve miles north of Bakersfield. It is provided with a fine system of irrigating ditches and abundance of water. The terms offered are very easy. It is very reasonable to expect that the raisin crop of third year will pay for the land.

All the machinery for the new smelting furnace at the Sylvania mines is now on the ground and the erection of the works is proceeding rapidly. Mr. D. Hessian of Big Pine has a crew of men at work chopping wood and making charcoal for the furnace and a large stock will be ready as soon as needed. The ore dumps are steadily increasing in size and there will be a large stock on hand to begin with. The outlook for Sylvania is very encouraging, as the mines continue to show up fine ore bodies as more ground is opened up.

Mr. Hyman Fredrick, at Reno, has as fine a stock of Jewelry of all kinds as can be seen between that point and San Francisco. Gold and Silver watches of all styles and prices. Every one who has an hour or two to spend at Reno while waiting for a train should call and see the display of beautiful articles. Every visitor from Inyo County or any point along the line of the C. & C. road will be most kindly received by Mr. Fredrick. Repairs of Watches or Jewelry will be done in the best manner and at moderate cost. See his advertisement in another column.

Twelve representative men gave their verdict that Arnold was not guilty of murder in killing Garness. This verdict places slander that would break innocent hearts and bring ruin on a family in the same class of crimes as attempt to murder. It is right and lawful for one man to kill another if the act be necessary to save his own life. Slander that would bring misery upon mothers and daughters is, by this verdict, rightly placed on the same level with attempts to commit murder. It will not be necessary to kill many such villians as Garness before a check will be put upon slander.

Silver is again declining in value. The session of Congress is drawing to a close and fears begin to be felt that the power interested in opposition to the interests of the people will be strong enough to prevent justice being done. The crime of 1873 has been so enormously profitable to the capitalists that they are making a desperate effort to continue its work. No classes have suffered so much from this crime as the farmers, miners and all kinds of working people; as these constitute a vast majority of the voters of the Nation they ought to be able to devise and accomplish some remedy to free themselves from the wrong so long inflicted upon them.

The tax-payers of the county are earnestly discussing what more should be done in the Elliott case. This murder has already cost the county about twelve thousand dollars. Every one who attended the recent trial at Bakersfield is satisfied that it will never be possible to convict Elliott there, and that another trial would therefore be useless, and money thrown away. It is suggested that the Board of Supervisors be requested by the citizens to ask the District Attorney of Kern county to go into Court and ask that the case be dismissed. The people of Inyo are peaceful and law abiding, but where such a miscarriage of justice occurs as in this case, they might be justified in dealing out swift justice upon a red handed murderer.

A Good Camp

Miners have been sought for the past two weeks to work at Cerro Gordo. There appears to be an intention to develop the mines as fast as help can be got. Cerro Gordo is a healthy camp with plenty of good water and a fine climate. The town overlooks the terminus of the C. & C. railroad, and mail service is regular. The mines are not deep and are dry, cool and well ventilated. There are very few better camps, so far as health and comfort are concerned, than Cerro Gordo.

BAKERSFIELD AND VICINITY.

There is not today any other part of California that has a more assured or a grander future than the country about Bakersfield, the County Seat of Kern County. During a stay of two weeks there recently, the writer traveled over a good deal of territory in the neighborhood of Bakersfield, and was careful in gathering facts. The town commands a noble prospect; the snow-crowned Sierra Mountains swing around from the east and unite with the Coast Range about thirty miles south of the town. There is no natural boundary to mark where the one range ends and the other begins; the two grand ranges unite to make a protecting frame about one of the richest and most beautiful valleys in the world. The valley at this point is about forty miles wide, and Bakersfield is several miles nearer the Sierra Mountains than the Coast Range. Fifty miles north and south is the length of what is called Kern Valley, though that is but a local name, as the great valley of the San Joaquin stretches northward in one unbroken plain from the junction of the Sierra and Coast ranges, two hundred and sixty miles, where it joins the grand valley of Sacramento. Here, within a few miles of Independence, where Mount Whitney and hundreds of other noble peaks, the highest in the United States, tower up among everlasting snow fields, the many streams that unite to make the noble Kern river have their sources. When we go up from Owens Valley in the summer to camp and fish along those beautiful streams, we seldom reflect that their clear waters, from which we pull unlimited quantities of the finest trout in the world, finally fulfill their mission by watering a valley as fertile as that of the Nile and as beautiful as Tempe. The soil about Bakersfield is mostly alluvial, of great depth and apparently inexhaustible fertility. Beyond any question this will soon become one of the greatest, if not the very greatest, raisin producing regions of the world. Only a beginning has been made in this direction, but raisins of the very finest quality are already produced. The present spring fully three thousand acres of raisin producing vines have been planted near the town. Almonds, prunes and apricots are among the most profitable of all the productions of the earth, and these appear to have here found the most favorable conditions for their growth. The peach orchards may be equaled, but cannot be excelled. The growth and early production from vines and trees is scarcely to be believed without being seen. Mr. C. S. Young, formerly State Superintendent of Schools for the State of Nevada, took the writer out from Bakersfield twelve miles to see trees and vines that were planted this spring. Mr. Young has a tract containing twenty five hundred acres. Four months ago the land was all in a state of nature, covered with brush, weeds and grass; now Mr. Young has 175 acres planted with raisin producing vines, and very many of the young vines were found by the writer to have well formed bunches of grapes. Seventy acres are planted with almond trees. On close inspection not a single one of the trees could be found that had failed to make vigorous growth. It is reasonably certain that the crop of raisins gathered the third year will pay the original cost of the land and all other expenses up till that time. This may sound strange, but it is the truth. At Rosedale, a new colony a few miles west of Bakersfield, similar results were noted. Orange trees set out at Rosedale the past spring appeared to be growing well, and no reason is apparent why Bakersfield should not be noted for its production of oranges.

LAND MONOPOLY.

No question in recent times has been more hotly debated than land monopoly, and no monopolists have been more reviled and cursed than land monopolists. The most ardent opponent of land monopoly, if he will visit Bakersfield and carefully look at the conditions and what has been done and is doing there, will certainly modify his opinions on that subject. Of all the land monopolists in California it is tolerably safe to say that none have been more roundly abused than Haggin & Carr. Mr. Haggin owns about three hundred thousand acres of the best land in the Bakersfield country, and the possession by one man of so vast a territory has been denounced as a wrong done to every other citizen in California. When Mr. Haggin got possession of this land it was utterly useless to poor men, they and their families would have starved to death upon it. It required far-seeing judgment, great capital and daring enterprise to make the country what it now is. Not less than two millions of dollars have been expended in making canals to convey water upon the land; perhaps the actual cost was much greater than this. Now there is the most complete system of irrigating canals that exists anywhere. It may fairly be taken for granted that in spending so vast a sum of money Mr. Haggin did so only from business motives; but the good accomplished to the State and to mankind is just as real as if he had been impelled to the enterprise by the same motives that induced Howard to give his life for securing better care of criminals and Wilberforce to labor for the abolition of the slave trade. Having given years of labor and spent millions of money to prepare the country for settlement, Messrs. Haggin & Carr now offer the land to settlers at prices ranging from $25 to $100 per acre. One-fourth of the purchase price cash; the remainder in one, two and three years, with interest at seven per cent. At the Rosedale colony most of the new settlers have bought tracts of not more than twenty acres. The settler can at once begin to put seeds in the ground, and inside of three months can be feeding himself and family from his own land. Any man of average judgment and industry can in three or four years have such an income from raisins or other fruits as will make him absolutely independent, and enable him to provide his family not only with all the necessaries, but with many of the elegancies and luxuries of life, and all this from twenty acres of land properly managed. It is very hard for farmers living in the Middle, Western or in the Eastern States to believe that such results can be accomplished in California, but the truth is that more can be done here than has ever yet been told, or than would be believed without being seen. The great business about Bakersfield up till the present time is growing alfalfa and raising cattle. The crops of alfalfa are big, ten tons to the acre for the entire season being quite a common yield. A citizen of Owens Valley will, however, be disgusted by seeing how that pestilent weed, foxtail, has been suffered to overrun the country. Vast fields of what should be clover appear to be mostly covered with foxtail. This weed is bearded, like barley, and the spines when once taken into the mouth of an animal continue to penetrate till they work their way through and out of the neck, sides and sometimes the eyes of the unfortunate beast. It would appear as if nature had here made her protest against large landholding; where the land is so thoroughly cultivated as is possible only with small holdings, the foxtail disappears. None was noticed in the orchards or vineyards. It is a noteworthy fact that though for years past tens of thousands of sheep came into Owens Valley from Kern county, there is not a trace of foxtail in our alfalfa fields, and an Owens Valley farmer would not give one ton of his clover for five of that grown at Bakersfield. We have no doubt that when the whole of that rich valley shall be divided up into small holdings the foxtail will be exterminated, and the owner of twenty acres of land can have his raisin vineyard, his orchard and orange grove and plenty of clean alfalfa to feed a span of horses and four or five cows. The first settlers in Kern Valley were sorely afflicted with ague and other malarial diseases. But here, as in Illinois and other States, cultivation has wrought a great and beneficent change. As the land is cleared, cultivated and exposed to the sun and air, all forms of malaria disappear, and that region will now compare favorably with other parts of the State, so far as health is concerned. The town of Bakersfield is growing rapidly, but not more so than the settlement of the surrounding country will warrant. Whole blocks of handsome brick buildings have been erected within a year, and other fine buildings are in progress. The town at present has a population of between twenty-five hundred and three thousand. Street railways, water and gas works are supplied and extended as fast as needed. The school buildings are very creditable to the town and the schools are fully up to the high standard maintained in the larger towns and cities. The new settlers flocking into the country appear to be a very desirable class. American citizens are preferred, because they can more readily accommodate themselves to new conditions. The land agent for Mr. Haggin, Mr. L. C. McAfee, stated that the most contented and successful foreign settlers they had yet found were men who had been engaged in teaching in schools or colleges in England. The high intelligence of these men enabled them to quickly understand what must be done to secure success, and the certainty afforded them of being landowners, something they never need hope for in their own country, stimulated them to work in a way that makes success a certainty. We met one of these men, Mr. Kent by name, and found him a well-informed and pleasant gentleman. He had traveled in France, Italy and Spain and was well informed on the conditions of life in those countries, as well as in his native land. He had been but a few weeks at Bakersfield, yet in that time he had bought twenty acres of land from Mr. Haggin, had ten acres planted with raisin vines and had some peach and other fruit trees planted. For an outlay of two hundred and fifty dollars he had a house of four rooms built, and was about to move into it with his wife and two children. The building was rough, yet in that mild climate will be comfortable enough, and he was as contented with it, and perhaps as proud to own his own home as the Earl of Warwick could be of his grand feudal castle. Mr. Kent said that in writing home he could not venture to describe the advantages and attractions of California, as he felt certain the truth would not be believed. It is just as certain as anything in the future can be, that land now offered in the neighborhood of Bakersfield at forty to sixty dollars per acre, will within five years be worth from two to five hundred dollars per acre. This mighty change of converting a forbidding desert, uninhabitable by civilized man, into a region as fertile and beautiful as any that ever existed on earth is due to the sound judgment and daring enterprise of J. B. Haggin and W. B. Carr.

Eleventh District Fair.

The Fair of the 11th District will be held at Quincy, Plumas County, this year. Susanville, Lassen County, offered $4,500 for the Fair; Quincy offered $5,140. The coin will be paid to the Directors on demand. The bid of Quincy included the following: "We further guarantee to furnish for the use of said Association, during said Fair, free of all costs to said Association, the Race Track in order, fenced with solid board fence, eight feet high, the Grand Stand, Judges' Stand, Bar Room, Kitchen and Boarding house, and all other privileges connected with said Track, also sixty-five Box Stalls for horses, fifty-two Single Stalls, thirty-five Double Stalls, four water closets. Also free water for all purposes of said Association in its use of said track, buildings and other privileges, and also the free use of a hall for Pavilion and Ball. As to the race-track, the above guarantee is that it shall be in good order on the first day of the Fair, and thereafter it is to be kept in good order at the expense of the Association."

Sylvania.

A reliable man who came in from Sylvania at the beginning of the week, says that in one shaft six thousand tons of ore are now in sight. An average of many samples of the ore showed worth one hundred and fifty dollars a ton in silver and lead. It is estimated that the total cost of working the ore, including mining and smelting, will fall within twenty bollars per ton. The ore is very easily mined and the depth now reached is but eighty feet. There is plenty of fuel for the furnace and timber for the mines close at hand. On the basis of the data given there is a profit of seven hundred and eighty thousand dollars in sight. Other mines in the same group are reported to be showing up well. The Crocker Brothers of Big Pine are largely interested in the mines and have helped largely in their improvement. The new furnace is of forty tons capacity.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Lake View Hotel
Keeler, Cal.
John Barnes, Prop'r.

First-class hotel in every respect. The table always supplied with the best in the market. Clean, nicely furnished rooms. Transient visitors will receive every courtesy and attention.

THE BAR
—Is constantly supplied with the finest—
Wines, Liquors, & Cigaas.

IRWIN'S SALOON
Cor. Edwards and Market Streets,
Independence . Cal.

THE PUBLIC GENERALLY ARE RESPECTFULLY invited to call and inspect my establishment, which has been entirely rebuilt an furnished in a style second to none on this side of the mountains. A SPLENDID NEW BILLIARD TABLE provided for the amusement of patrons.

THE BAR
Is supplied with the most celebrated brands of pure Wines and Liquors and the Finest Havana Cigars.

JOHN C. IRWIN, Proprietor.
feb12d

WEINSTOCK & LUBIN:

The Largest General Retail Trade west of the Rocky Mountains is done by Weinstock, Lubin & Co., Sacramento, Cal. They sell everything one needs to wear or to use at home. They deal largely with manufacturers in Europe and America, thus bringing producer and customer in almost direct contact. This helps to make their prices low.

Small orders are filled as carefully as large ones. Goods not as ordered are returnable at their expense.

For whatever you need, wherever you are, send to them. THEY DON'T INTEND THAT ANY ONE ANYWHERE SHALL SUPPLY YOUR WANTS SO WELL AS THEY.

Polished Wood Pencils, with rubber caps, per dozen, 8c. If sent by mail as a single package, 4c extra will be required for postage. These pencils are suitable for business, school and home use.

Illustrated Catalogue and Samples free. Weinstock, Lubin & Co., 400 to 412 K Street, Sacramento, Cal.

JEWELRY, DIAMONDS, WATCHES.
Hyman Fredrick, Reno, Nev.

The attention of the people of Inyo and neighboring counties is respectfully invited to the LARGEST AND BEST STOCK
of Watches, Diamonds, Ear and Finger Rings, Bracelets and all other kinds of Jewelry this side of San Francisco. Knives, Forks, Spoons, and other Table Ware of the Best quality.
PRICES DEFY OUTSIDE COMPETITION.
All repairs done promptly and in a workmanlike manner.
Address orders and packages to
HYMAN FREDRICK, Jeweler,
m30-tf RENO, NEVADA.

MISCELLANEOUS.

NORMAN HOUSE,
Independence, - - Cal.
New House.
New Furniture.
Low Rates.
Special attention will be given to secure the comfort of guests.
O. I. MAIRS, Prop.
feb12tf

BELL'S
Flouring Mills,
A. N. BELL, Prop.
TRY BELL'S
EXTRA PATENT ROLLER FLOUR.
Having added Patent Rolls and other Improvements o our Mills, I am now turning out flour that is fully
Equal to the Best.
Corn, Oats and Barley Cracked on Short Notice.
A. N. BELL,
Independence, Cal.

PIONEER BREWERY
INDEPENDENCE
BEER ICE COLD.
The Bar is supplied with the Best of all kinds of Liquors and Cigars.
The Coolest Hall in the town. Call in and see what comfort you can have this hot weather.
PHILIP GEHRIG, PROPRIETOR

MISCELLANEOUS.

Sulphur & Borax Baths
AT SODA SPRINGS, NEVADA
On Iron & Colorado Railroad
These valuable Springs offer special
INDUCEMENT TO INVALIDS
THE WATER CONTAINS
SULPHUR, MAGNESIA AND BORAX.
And Is Very Strengthening and Cleansing
When used for bathing purposes.
THE BATH HOUSES HAVE BEEN RECEIVED
—And a large—
SWIMMING : BATH
Added, where those wishing to do so can take an invigorating plunge.
Excellent Accommodations
—AND—
Board by the Day, Week, or the Month

scope. Our facilities are unequaled, and to introduce our superior goods we will send FREE to ONE PERSON in each locality, as above. Only those who write to us at once can make sure of the chance. All you have to do in return is to show our goods to those who call—your neighbors and those around you. The beginning of this advertisement shows the small end of the telescope. The following cut gives the appearance of it reduced to about the fiftieth part of its bulk. It is a grand, double size telescope, as large as is easy to carry. We will also show you how you can make from $8 to $10 a day at least, from the start, without experience. Better write at once. We pay all express charges. Address, H. HALLETT & CO., Box 880, PORTLAND, MAINE.

IF YOU WISH A GOOD REVOLVER
PURCHASE ONE OF SMITH & WESSON'S

Finest small arms ever manufactured and the first choice of all experts. In calibres 32, 38 and 44-100. Single or double action, Safety Hammerless and Target models. Best quality wrought steel, carefully inspected for workmanship and stock. Unrivaled for finish, durability and accuracy. Do not be deceived by cheap malleable iron imitations often sold for the genuine article. They are unreliable and dangerous. The SMITH & WESSON REVOLVERS are stamped upon the barrels with firm's name, address and dates of patents, and are guaranteed perfect. Insist upon having them, and if your dealer cannot supply you, an order sent to address below will receive prompt attention. Descriptive catalogue and prices upon application.
SMITH & WESSON,
Springfield, Mass.

BISHOP ADVERTISEMENTS.

A. COHN & CO.
—DEALERS IN—
General Merchandise.
—ALL KINDS OF—
Farm Implements
—AND—
--MACHINERY--
Farm Produce
—OF ALL KINDS BOUGHT—
Orders for all kinds of supplies needed in mining camps promptly filled.

GIVEN & INGALLS.
—DEALERS IN—
FARM PRODUCE.

J. E. DUNLAP.
Harness Maker.
Harness of all kinds, from the lightest to the heaviest. Any kind of new work made promptly and of the best material. Repairing done on the shortest notice. A full line of saddles and harness.

H. E. WRIGHT.
DRUGGIST.
Medicines, Drugs, Toilet and Fancy Articles. Physicians' prescriptions carefully and promptly filled. All drugs and medicines fresh and of the best quality. All orders by mail receive immediate attention

Valley View Hotel.
O. H. Hill, Prop'r.
A New House Newly Furnished Throughout. Guests will receive every courtesy and attention.

NEVADA STABLE
BISHOP.
Opposite Valley View Hotel, Main St
In the Livery Department nothing is kept but safe and good traveling carriage and saddle horses. Conveyances of all kinds first-class. Good attendance and the best of hay and grain for all animals boarding at the stable
S. P. SMITH, Prop.

BISHOP CREEK
BREWERY,
MUNZINGER, PHILLIPPAY & CO.,
Proprietors.
All the appliances and conveniences of First Class Brewery, including a beautiful grove for out-door parties.
Customers supplied on all points
Of the C. & C. Railroad.
Send orders to
MUNZINGER, PHILLIPPAY & CO.
Bishop Creek, Cal.

A NEW DEAL!
BISHOP CREEK
Livery. Feed & Sale Stable.
ROBERT O'NEIL, Prop'r.
Horses are boarded by the day, week or month. Stock bought and sold.
Bishop Creek, Cal., Nov. 20, 1883.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Newest Styles
OF
Fashionable Clothing
Dry Goods, Ladies' Wear, etc., etc
AT
L. WOOD'S
CASH STORE
A small stock of fresh groceries a canned goods constantly renewed.
Fresh Produce, and Grain Flour, etc., constantly on hand.
CANDIES,
PEANUTS,
WALNUTS,
TOYS!
THE CASH STORE
Is Where You Get
WORTH OF YOUR MONEY

THOMAS & HILL,
—DEALERS IN—
GENERAL MERCHANDISE
BIG PINE, INYO COUNTY, CAL,
We keep constantly on hand goods of all kinds needed in a country home. We order only First-Class Goods and ask no more than a reasonable profit. Give us a trial.
THOMAS & HILL

J. FORBES. W. D. TOBEY
FORBES & TOBEY,
HAWTHORNE, NEV.,
—DEALERS IN—
LUMBER
OF ALL KINDS.
DOORS,
SHINGLES,
SASH AND BLINDS,
LATH,
RUSTIC
MOULDINGS,
DRESSED LUMBER.
Matched and Dressed Flooring.
sept 11-tf

COLONEL QUARITCH, V.C.

By H. RIDER HAGGARD.

Then he went on to tell her all about it. Ida made no comment, that is after those first words "she did it on purpose," which burst from her in her astonishment. She felt, and he felt too, that the question as to how that gun went off was one which was best left uninquired into by them. No doubt if the man died there would be an inquest, and the whole matter would be investigated. Meanwhile one thing was certain, Edward Cossey, whom she was engaged to, was shot and likely to die.

Presently, while they were still talking, the squire came in from his walk, and to him also the story was told, and, to judge from the expression of his face, he thought it a serious one enough. If Edward Cossey died, the mortgages over the Honham property would, as he thought, of course pass to his heir, who, unless he had made a will, which was not probable, would be his father, old Mr. Cossey, the banker, from whom Mr. de la Molle well knew he had little mercy to expect. This was serious enough, and what was still more serious was that all the bright prospects in which he had for some days been basking, of the re-establishment of his family upon a securer basis than it had occupied for generations, would vanish like a vision. Now, he was not more worldly minded than other men, but he did most fondly cherish the natural desire to see the family fortunes once more in the ascendant. The projected marriage between his daughter and Edward Cossey would have most fully brought this about, and however much he might in his secret heart distrust the man himself, and doubt whether the match was acceptable to Ida, he could not view its collapse with indifference. While they were still talking the dressing bell rang, and Harold rose to go.

"Stop and dine, won't you, Quaritch?" said the squire.

Harold hesitated and looked at Ida. She made no movement, but her eyes said "stay," and he sighed and yielded. Dinner was rather a melancholy feast, for the squire was preoccupied with his own thoughts, and Ida had not much to say, while, so far as the colonel was concerned, the recollection of the tragedy which he had witnessed that afternoon, and of all the dreadful details with which it was accompanied, was not conducive to appetite.

As soon as dinner was over, the squire announced that he would walk into Boisingham to inquire how the wounded man was getting on, and shortly afterward he started, leaving his daughter and the colonel alone.

They went into the drawing room and talked about indifferent things. No word of love passed between them; no word, indeed, that could bear even an affectionate significance, and yet every sentence they said carried a message with it, and was as heavy with unuttered passion as a bee with honey. For they loved each other dearly, and love is a thing that cannot be concealed by lovers from each other. Like the air impalpable, it is like the air surrounding, and, to those who breathe, it is necessary and real.

It was happiness to him merely to sit beside her and hear her speak, and watch the changes of her face, and the lamp light playing upon her hair, and it was happiness to her to know that he was sitting there and watching. For the most beautiful thing about deep affection is its accompanying sense of perfect companionship and rest, a sense that nothing else in this life can give, and which, like a lifting cloud, reveals a glimpse of the white peaks of that heavenly peace that we cannot hope to tread in our stormy journey through the world.

And so the evening wore away, till at last they heard the squire's loud voice talking to somebody outside. Presently he entered.

"How is he?" asked Harold. "Will he live?"

"They cannot say," was the answer. "But two great doctors have been telegraphed for from London, and will be down to-morrow."

CHAPTER XXX.

IDA RECANTS.

The two great doctors came, and the two great doctors pocketed their hundred guinea fee and went, but neither the one nor the other, nor eke the twain, would commit themselves to a fixed opinion as to Edward Cossey's chances of life or death. However, one of them picked out a number of shot from the wounded man, and a number more he left in because he could not pick them out, and they both agreed that the treatment of their humble local brethren was all that could be desired, and, so far as they were concerned, there was an end of it.

A week had passed, and Edward Cossey, nursed night and day by Belle Quest, still hovered between life and death.

It was a Thursday, and Harold had walked up to the castle to give the squire the latest news of the wounded man. While he was in the vestibule telling what he had to tell to Mr. de la Molle and Ida, a man whom he recognized as one of Mr. Quest's clerks rang the bell. He was shown in, and handed the squire a fully addressed brief envelope, which, he said, he had been told to deliver by Mr. Quest, and adding that there was no answer, bowed himself out.

As soon as he had gone, the envelope was opened by Mr. de la Molle, who took from it two legal looking documents which he began to read. Suddenly the first dropped from his hand, and with an exclamation he snatched at the second.

"What is it, father?" asked Ida.

"What is it? Why, it's just this. Edward Cossey has transferred the mortgages over this property to Quest, the lawyer, and Quest has served a notice on me calling in the money," and he began to walk up and down the room in a state of great agitation.

"I don't quite understand," said Ida, her breast heaving, and with a curious light shining in her eyes.

"Don't you?" said her father, "then perhaps you will read that," and he pushed the papers to her. As he did so, another letter, which he had not observed, fell out of them.

At this point Harold rose to go.

"Don't go, Quaritch, don't go," said the squire. "I shall be glad of your advice, and I am sure that what you hear will not go any further."

At the same time Ida motioned him to stay, and though somewhat unwilling he did so.

"Dear sir," began the squire, reading the letter aloud—

"Inclosed you will find the usual formal notices calling in the sum of thirty thousand pounds recently advanced upon mortgage of the Honham Castle estates by Edward Cossey, Esq. These mortgages have passed into my possession for value received, and it is now my desire to realize them. I most deeply regret being forced to press an old client, but my circumstances are such that I am obliged so to do. If I can in any way facilitate your efforts to raise the money, I shall be very glad to do so, but in the event of the money not being forthcoming at the end of the six months' notice, the ordinary steps will be taken to realize by foreclosure.

"I am, dear sir, yours truly,

"W. QUEST.

"James de la Molle, Esq., J. P."

"I see now," said Ida. "Mr Cossey has no further hold on the mortgages or on the property."

"That's it," said the squire; "he has transferred them to that rascally lawyer. And yet he told me—I can't understand it, I really can't."

At this point the colonel insisted upon departing, saying that he would call in again in the evening to see if he could be of any assistance. When he was gone, Ida spoke in a cold, determined voice:

"Mr. Cossey told me that when we married he would put those mortgages in the fire. It now seems that the mortgages were not his to dispose of, or else that he has since transferred them to Mr. Quest, without informing us."

"Yes, I suppose so," said the squire.

"Very well," said Ida. "And now, father, I will tell you something. I engaged myself—or, to be more accurate, I promised to engage myself—to Edward Cossey on the condition that he would take up these mortgages when Cossey & Son were threatening to foreclose, or whatever it is called."

"Good heavens!" said her astonished father, "what an idea!"

"I did it," went on Ida, "and he took up the mortgages, and in due course he claimed my promise, and I became engaged to marry him, though that engagement was most repugnant to me. You will see that, having persuaded him to advance the money, I could not refuse to carry out my share of the bargain."

"Well," said the squire, "this is all new to me!"

"Yes," she answered, "and I should never have told you of it had it not been for this sudden change in the position of affairs. What I did I did to save our family from ruin. But now it seems that Mr. Cossey has played us false, and that we are to be ruined after all. Therefore, the condition upon which I promised to marry him has not been carried out, and my promise falls to the ground."

"You mean that supposing he lives you will not marry Edward Cossey?"

"Yes, I do mean it."

The squire thought for a minute. "This is a very serious step, Ida," he said. "I don't mean that I think that the man has behaved well, but still he may have given up the mortgages to Quest under pressure of some sort, and might be willing to find the money to meet them."

"I do not care if he finds the money ten times over," said Ida. "I will not marry him. He has not kept to the letter of his bond, and I will not keep to mine."

"It is all very well, Ida," said the squire, "and of course nobody can force you into a distasteful marriage, but I wish to point out one thing to you. You have your family to think of as well as yourself. I tell you frankly that I do not believe that, as times are, it will be possible to raise thirty thousand pounds to pay off the charges, unless it is by the help of Edward Cossey. So if he lives—and as he has lasted so long I expect he will live—and you refuse to go on with your engagement to him, we shall be sold up, that is all, for that fellow Quest, confound him, will show us no mercy."

"I know it, father," answered Ida, "but I cannot and will not marry him, and I do not think you can expect me to. I got engaged, or rather promised to get engaged to him, because I thought that one woman had no right to put her own happiness before the welfare of an old family like ours, and I would have carried out that engagement at any cost. But since then, to tell you the truth," and she blushed deeply, "not only have I learned to dislike him a great deal more, but I have come to care for some one else, who also cares for me, and who, therefore, has a right to be considered. Think, father, what it means to a woman to sell herself into bodily and mental bondage—when she cares for another man."

"Well, well," said her father, with some irritation, "I am no authority upon matters of sentiment; they are not in my line, and I know that women have their prejudices Still you can't expect me to look at the matter in quite the same light as you do. And who is the gentleman, Col. Quaritch?"

She nodded her head.

"Oh," said the squire, "I have nothing to say against Quaritch; indeed, I like the man, but I suppose that if he has £500 a year, that is every sixpence he can count on."

"I had rather marry him upon five hundred a year than Edward Cossey upon fifty thousand."

"Ah, yes, I have heard women talk like that before, though perhaps they think differently afterward. Of course, I have no right to obtrude myself, but when you are comfortably married, what is going to become of Honham, I should like to know, and, incidentally, of me?"

"I don't know, father, dear," she answered, her eyes filling with tears; "we must trust to Providence, I suppose. I know you think me very selfish," she went on, catching him by the arm, "but, oh, father! there are things that are worse than death to women, or, at least, to some women. I almost think that I would rather die than marry Edward Cossey, though I would have gone through with it if he had kept his word."

"No, no," said her father. "I can't wonder at it, and certainly I do not ask you to marry a man you dislike. But still it is hard upon me to have all this trouble at my age, and the old place coming to the hammer, too. It is enough to make a man wish that his worries were over altogether. However, we must take things as we find them, and we find them pretty rough. Quaritch said he was coming back this evening, didn't he? I suppose there will not be any public engagement at present, will there? And look here, Ida, I don't want him to come talking to me about it. I have got enough things of my own to think of without bothering my head with your love affairs. Pray let the matter be for the present. And now I am going out to see that fellow George, who hasn't been here since he came back from London, and a nice bit of news it will be that I shall have to tell him."

After dinner Harold came again, as he had promised. The squire was not in the drawing room when he was shown in.

Ida rose to greet him with a sweet and happy smile upon her face, for in the presence of her lover all her doubts and troubles vanished like a mist.

"I have a bit of news for you," said he, trying to look as though he was rejoiced to give it. "Edward Cossey has taken a wonderful turn for the better. They say that he will recover."

"Oh," she answered, coloring a little, "and now I have a bit of news for you, Col. Quaritch. My engagement with Mr. Edward Cossey is at an end. I shall not marry him."

"Are you sure?" said Harold, with a gasp.

"Quite sure; I have made up my mind," and she held out her hand, as though to seal her words.

He took it and kissed it. "Thank God, Ida," he said.

"Yes," she answered; "thank God;" and at that moment the squire came in, looking very miserable and depressed, and, of course, nothing more was said about the matter."

CHAPTER XXXI.

GEORGE PROPHESIES AGAIN.

Six weeks have passed, and in that time several things have happened. In the first place, the miserly old banker, Edward Cossey's father, had died, his death having been accelerated by the shock of his son's accident. On his will being opened it was found that property and money to no less a value than £600,000 passed under it to Edward absolutely, the only condition attached being that he should continue in the house of Cossey & Son, and leave a certain share of his fortune in the business.

Edward Cossey had also, thanks chiefly to Belle's tender nursing, almost recovered, with one exception—he was, and would be for life, stone deaf in the right ear. The paralysis which the doctors had feared had not shown itself. One of the first questions when he became convalescent was addressed to Belle Quest.

He had, as in a dream, always seen her sweet face hanging over him, and dimly known that she was ministering to him.

"Have you nursed me ever since the accident, Belle?" he said.

"Yes," she answered.

"It is very good of you, considering all things," he murmured. "I wonder that you did not let me die."

And she turned her face to the wall and said never a word, nor did any further conversation on these matters pass between them.

Then as his strength came back, so did his passion for Ida de la Molle revive. He was not allowed to write or even receive letters and with this explanation of her silence he was fain to content himself. But the squire, he was told, often called to inquire after him, and once or twice Ida came with him.

At length a time came—it was two days after he had been told of his father's death—when he was pronounced fit to be moved into his own rooms, and to receive his correspondence as usual.

The move was effected without any difficulty, and here Belle bade him good-by. Even as she did so George drove his fat pony up to the door, and getting down, gave a letter to the landlady, with particular instructions that it was to be delivered into Mr. Cossey's own hands. As she passed, Belle saw that it was addressed in the squire's handwriting.

When it was delivered to him Edward Cossey opened it with eagerness. It contained an inclosure in Ida's writing, and this he read first. It ran as follows:

"DEAR MR. COSSEY—I am told that you are now able to read letters, so I hasten to write to you. First of all, let me say how thankful I am that you are in a fair way to complete recovery from your dreadful accident. And now I must tell you what I fear will be almost as painful to you to read as it is for me to write, namely, that the engagement between us is at an end. To put the matter frankly, you will remember that I rightly or wrongly became engaged to you on a certain condition. That condition has not been fulfilled, for Mr. Quest, to whom the mortgages on my father's property have been transferred by you, is pressing for their payment. Consequently, the obligation on my part is at an end, and with it the engagement must end also, for I grieve to tell you that it is not one which my personal inclination will induce me to carry out. Wishing you a speedy and complete recovery, and every happiness and prosperity in your future life, believe me, dear Mr. Cossey, very truly yours,

"IDA DE LA MOLLE."

He put this uncompromising and crushing epistle down, and nervously glanced at the squire's, which was very short.

"MY DEAR COSSEY," it began—"Ida has shown me the inclosed letter. I think that you did unwisely when you entered into what must be called a money bargain for my daughter's hand. Whether under all the circumstances she does either well or wisely to repudiate the engagement after it has once been agreed upon is not for me to judge. She is a free agent, and has a natural right to dispose of her life as she thinks fit. This being so, I have, of course, no option but to indorse her action, so far as I have anything to do with the matter. It is a decision which I for some reasons regret, but which I am quite powerless to alter.

"Believe me, with kind regards, truly yours, JAMES DE LA MOLLE."

Edward Cossey turned his face to the wall and indulged in such meditations as the occasion gave rise to, and they were bitter enough. He was as bent upon this marriage as he had ever been, more so in fact, now that his father was out of the way. He knew that Ida disliked him—he had known that all along—but he had trusted to time and marriage to overcome the dislike. And now that accursed Quest had brought about the ruin of his hopes. Ida had seen her chance of escape, and had, like a bold woman, seized upon it. There was one ray of hope, and one only. He knew that the money would not be forthcoming to pay off the mortgages. He could see, too, from the tone of the squire's letter, that he did not altogether approve of his daughter's decision. And his father was dead. Like Cæsar, he was the master of many legions, or rather of much money, which is as good as legions. Money can make most paths smooth to the feet of the traveler, and why not this? After much thought, he came to a conclusion. He would not trust his chance to paper, he would plead his cause in person. So he wrote a short note to the squire, acknowledging Ida's and his letter, and saying that he hoped to come and see them as soon as ever the doctor would allow him out of doors.

Meanwhile George, having delivered his letter, had gone upon another errand. Pulling up the fat pony in front of Mr. Quest's office, he alighted and entered. Mr. Quest was disengaged, and he was shown straight into the inner office, where the lawyer sat, looking more refined and gentleman like than ever.

"How do you do, George?" he said, cheerily; "sit down; what is it?"

"Well, sir," answered that lugubrious worthy, as he awkwardly took a seat, "the question is, what isn't it? These be rum times, they be; they fare to puzzle a man, they do."

"Yes," said Mr. Quest, balancing a quill pen on his finger, "the times are bad enough."

Then came a pause.

"Dash it all, sir," went on George presently, "I may as well get it out; I have come to speak to you about the squire's business."

"Yes," said Mr. Quest.

"Well, sir," went on George, "I am told that these dratted mortgages have passed into your hands and that you have called in the money."

"Yes, that is correct," said Mr. Quest again.

"Well, sir, the fact is that the squire can't get the money. It can't be had nohow. Nobody won't take the land as security. It might be so much water for all people will look at it."

"Quite so. Land is in very bad odor as security now."

"And that being so, sir, what is to be done?"

Mr. Quest shrugged his shoulders. "I do not know. If the money is not forthcoming, of course, I shall, however unwillingly, be forced to take my legal remedy."

"Meaning, sir?"—

"Meaning that I shall bring an action for foreclosure, and do what I can with the lands."

George's face darkened.

"And that reads, sir, that the squire and Miss Ida will be turned out of Honham, where they have been for centuries, and that you will turn in."

"Well, that is what it comes to, George. I am sincerely sorry to press the squire, but it's matter of thirty thousand pounds, and I am not in a position to throw away thirty thousand pounds."

"Sir," said George, rising in indignation, "I don't know how you came by them there mortgages. There is some things that lawyers know and honest men don't know, and that is one of them. But it seems that you've got 'em and are going to use 'em—and that being so, Mr. Quest, I have summat to say to you—and that is that no good will come to you from this here move."

"What do you mean by that, George?" said the lawyer, sharply.

"Never you mind what I means, sir. I means what I says. I means that sometimes people has things in their lives snugged away where nobody can't see them, things as quiet as though they was dead and buried, and that ain't dead and buried, things so much alive that they fare as though they were fit to kick the lid off their coffin. That's what I means, sir, and I means that when folk set to work to do a hard and wicked thing those dead things sometimes gets up and walks where they is least wanted; and mayhap if you goes on for to turn the old squire and Miss Ida out of the castle, mayhap, sir, something of that sort will happen to you, for mark my word, sir, there's justice in the world, sir, as mayhap you will find out. And now, sir, I'll wish you good morning, and leave you to think over what I've said," and he was gone.

"George!" called Mr. Quest after him, rising from his chair, "George!" but George was out of hearing.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

R. H. Orr, a lawyer of Fort Worth, has sued W. F. Lake, a merchant of the same place, for $20,000 damages under very "striking" circumstances. Plaintiff alleges, that "in discharging the duties of his official position it was necessary to submit to defendent certain interrogatories. After reading the interrogatories defendant became angry and violently assulted plaintiff, knocked him down and beat him."

MERIT DESERVES IT.

We are not in the habit of puffing up any patent medicine, but where merit deserves it we are always ready to notice the same particularly for the benefit of mankind. We have heard much of the fame of The Great Sierra Kidney and Liver Cure, but lately we have received positive proof of its healing qualities. A gentleman well known to us had suffered for years of Kidney complaint. The Great Sierra Kidney and Liver Cure was recommended to him. He has given it a trial and now assures us that a wonderful change has come over him, and that he is entirely cured. Thanks to your great and scientific vegetable remedy.—Jewish Times and Observer, San Francisco, Cal.

SAN FRANCISCO, January 7.

Sierra Chemical Co.

GENTLEMEN:—I have used your Great Sierra Kidney and Liver Cure with wonderful satisfaction, and can recommend it fully for kidney and liver disorders.

JOSEPH MAY,
Firm of Livingston & Co., 25 Fremont St.

True as straitness in the sun's rays,
True as compass to the star,
Show me what you like to laugh at
And I'll tell you what you are.

LUCKY PRIZE WINNERS.

Lucky Investors in The Louisiana State Lottery.

The last drawing of the Louisiana State Lottery proved fortunate for two San Franciscans, as on March 11th a portion of the first and also of the fourth capital prizes fell to residents of this city.

Mrs. Charlotte Hedge, living at 32 Second street, was seen yesterday afternoon at her home. She keeps a rooming-house at the address named, and readily admitted that she was the lucky holder of a coupon of ticket No. 8152, one-twentieth of which—representing her share of the $600,000 and amounting to $15,000—was paid to her in gold coin. She pleasantly stated that she had repeatedly bought tickets, but had never dreamed of such a large prize falling to her share. The money at present is resting safely in the bank, and Mrs. Hedge has not made up her mind how she will invest it.

The other one of the winners mentioned above is young Albert Bachman employed in the cigar store of R. S. Gannon at the Post, Market and Montgomery streets gore. He has been a regular buyer of lottery tickets for the past seven years and has on several occasions won prizes of from $5 to $50. Last drawing he struck it rich, however, for ticket No. 26,354 won $25,000, and his coupon entitling him to one-twentieth of that sum, consequently brought him $1,5 . He is a pleasant young man and, though elated over his success, has not lost his head, but is steadily sticking to his post, earning his living by the sale of the fragrant weed. He is well known and his success was a matter of sincere congratulation from his friends.—San Francisco (Cal.) Chronicle, April 2.

He (sorrowfully)—You say that your love for me is dead? How do you explain the sudden catastrophy? She (sententiously) Heart failure.

NATURE IN CONVULSION

Is terrific. Volcanic eruptions, cyclones, earthquakes are awfully and tremendously picturesque, but scarcely desirable to emulate in action and effect by the administration of remedies which produce convulsion and agony in the abnormal portion of the human frame. Such is the effect of the old-fashioned violent purgatives happily falling more and more into disuse, and of which Hostetter's Stomach Bitters is the wholesome, pleasant and far more effective succedaneum. They weakened the intestines—the Bitters invigorates them. They left the bowels inactive, because incapacitated by ensuing feebleness. The Bitters on the contrary, and because it enables, not forces, them to act—a vast and fortunate difference—perpetuates their activity and regularity. The liver is beneficially stimulated, as the kidneys also are, by this medicine, which easily conquers, also, malaria, nervousness and rheumatism.

The lover is an egotist,
One thing alone asks he,
And that is not "Love I the maid"
But "Does the maid love me?"

THE LADY NEXT DOOR.

Mrs. W. envied the lady next door because she always seemed so well and happy. "She enjoys life and I don't," said the discontented woman. "How I would like to change places with her!" At last she made the acquaintance of the object of her envy, and this is what the lady told her: "Happy? of course I am, for I enjoy perfect health. My dear Mrs. W., your face tells me why you are not happy. You are suffering from functional derangements. I was a martyr to female weaknesses for years, but Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription cured me, as it will you if you will try it. It is guaranteed to give satisfaction in every case or price ($1.00) returned.

Dr. Pierce's Pellets, one a dose. Cure headache, constipation and indigestion.

"What kind of a memory have you?" "Bad—very bad." "In what particular?" "It remembers things that were better forgotten."

AN ELEGANT PACKAGE OF FINE CARDS.

Including 15 rare novelties, shapes and artistic imported oleographic and chromatic cards. This arge and beautiful collection sent by mail to anyone who will do this:—Buy a box of the genuine Dr. C. McLane's Celebrated Liver Pills from any druggist, price 25 cents, and mail us the outside wrapper with your address, plainly written and 4 cents in stamps. The genuine McLane's Pills are prepared only by Fleming Bros., Pittsburg, Pa., and have been in constant use for over sixty years. They are superior to all others in purity and effectiveness. A certain cure for indigestion and sick headache. Address, Fleming Bros. Pittsburgh, Pa.

"Shall I put an inscription on the inside of the ring?" "Well—ah, yes. You might put something Latin—say, 'De gustibus non est disputandum.'"

For Coughs, Asthma, and Throat Disorders, use "Brown's Bronchial Troches." 25 cents a box.

A Real Nice Girl—George—Laura, will you be my better half? Laura—Oh, George, how can I, and you so good?

A pocket mirror free to smokers of "Tansill's Punch" 5c. Cigar.

DROPSY.

We call the attention of those suffering with dropsy to the fair proposition of Dr. H. H. Green & Sons in their advertisement on this page. Try them, it costs you nothing to do so.

Acquaintance—So you have determined to marry? Girl of the period (sadly)—Yes; I see nothing else before me.

When in San Francisco stop at Straub's Restaurant and Saloon, 327 and 329 Bush Street. Best to eat and drink. No fancy prices.

Beware of imitations of the genuine Seal of North Carolina Plug Cut Tobacco.

Try Germea for Breakfast.

Your Blood

Needs a good cleansing this spring, in order to overcome the impurities which have accumulated during the winter, or which may be hereditary, and cause you much suffering. We confidently recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla as the very best spring medicine. By its use the blood is purified, enriched and vitalized, that tired feeling is entirely overcome and the whole body given strenth and vigor. The appetite is restored and sharpened, the digestive organs are toned, and the kidneys and liver invigorated.

"I was feeling very much worn out and found nothing to benefit me till I took Hood's Sarsaparilla. I have now taken several bottles and it has made me feel perfectly well. I was also troubled with sores breaking out in my mouth, but since taking Hood's Sarsaparilla have had no further trouble from them. I have recommended it to others, who have been very much benefited by using it." MRS. MARY ADDERLY, 627 North Water Street, Decatur, Ill.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared only by C. I. HOOD & Co., Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar

WE WANT MARRIED LADIES, one or two in borhood to work for us. Salary $10 a week for five hours work each day. Address with 2c. stamp, KNOWLTON & CO., Station C, San Francisco.

10,000 AGENTS WANTED AT ONCE

To sell the complete history of the murder of Dr. CRONIN. Giving a full and complete account of the conspiracy, murder, discovery of the body, arrests, coroner's inquest, the trial and verdict. The book contains over 100 illustrations. One large 12 mo. volume of about 500 pages, price only $1.50. OUTFITS NOW READY. Send, at once, 25 cents for an outfit; first come, first served. This is the chance of your life-time; big commissions. Address, LAIRD & LEE, Publishers, 203-205 Jackson Street, Chicago, Ill.

USE NEW WELLINGTON COAL.

S. F. N. U. No. 410. New Series No. 17

SURE CURE FOR PILES.

Sure cure for blind, bleeding and itching Piles. One box has cured the worst cases of ten years' standing. No one need suffer ten minutes after using Kirk's German Pile Ointment. It absorbs tumors, allays the itching, acts as a poultice, gives relief. Dr. Kirk's German Pile Ointment is prepared only for Piles and itching of the private parts, and nothing else. Every box is warranted. Sold by druggists and sent by mail on receipt of price, $1.00 per box. J. J. Mack & Co., Wholesale Agents, San Francisco.

He who acquires wealth dishonestly is too corrupt to enjoy it.

Six Novels Free, will be sent by Cragin & Co., Philada., Pa., to any one in the U. S. or Canada, postage paid, upon receipt of 25 Dobbins' Electric Soap wrappers. See list of novels on circulars around each bar. Soap for sale by all grocers.

And still the measure of our needs
Outgrows the cramping bounds of creeds.

If afflicted with Sore Eyes, use Dr. Isaac Thompson's Eye Water. Druggists sell it. 25c.

FULL WEIGHT PURE
DR. PRICE'S CREAM BAKING POWDER
MOST PERFECT MADE

Its superior excellence proven in millions of homes for more than a quarter of a century. It is used by the United States Government. Indorsed by the heads of the Great Universities as the Strongest, Purest and Most Healthful. Dr. Price's the only Baking Powder that does not contain Ammonia, Lime or Alumn. Sold only in Cans.

PRICE BAKING POWDER CO.,
NEW YORK. CHICAGO. SAN FRANCISCO.

You can certainly Stop Coughing With 10 parts molasses or honey to one part of PERRY DAVIS' Pain Killer. Take 1/4 teaspoonful often. TRY IT.—PAIN KILLER also Cures Sore Throat, Diphtheria, Rheumatism, Neuralgia

SEVEN SEVENTEEN SEVENTY

To cure Biliousness, Sick Headache Constipation, Malaria, Liver Complaints, take the safe and certain remedy, SMITH'S

BILE BEANS

Use the SMALL SIZE (40 little beans to the bottle). They are the most convenient; suit all ages. Price of either size, 25 cents per bottle.

KISSING at 7, 17, 70; Photo-gravure, panel size of this picture for 4 cents (coppers or stamps).

J. F. SMITH & CO.,
Makers of "Bile Beans," St. Louis, Mo.

PATENTS NO DELAY. Circular free. W. E. BOULTER, WASHINGTON, D. C.

Plump and rosy are the babies living upon

LACTATED FOOD

Physicians prescribe it.
Invalids use and relish it.

A picture of five charming babies, also valuable pamphlet, sent on application.
WELLS, RICHARDSON & Co., Burlington, Vt.

ANY ONE CAN DYE — DIAMOND DYES

It's easy to dye with Diamond Dyes Because so simple.

It's safe to dye with Diamond Dyes Because always reliable.

It's economy to dye with Diamond Dyes Because the strongest.

You ought to dye with Diamond Dyes Because they are best.

Our new book, "Successful Home Dyeing," giving full directions for all uses of Diamond Dyes, sent free on application. Diamond Dyes are sold everywhere, or any color mailed on receipt of price, 10 cents.
WELLS, RICHARDSON & Co., Burlington, Vt.

ST. JACOBS OIL
CURES PERMANENTLY
RHEUMATISM.

Suffered for Nearly 30 Years.

187 N. Chester st., Baltimore, Md.

For nearly 30 years I suffered with rheumatism in arm and shoulder; could not lift my arm. Less than two bottles of St. Jacobs Oil cured me. W. H. HEESON.

Of Many Years' Standing

Gadsden, Crockett Co., Tenn.

My case was rheumatism of many years' standing, contracted during the war; tried most everything without relief. St. Jacobs Oil finally cured me. FRED. ROGGE.

AT DRUGGISTS AND DEALERS.

THE CHARLES A. VOGELER CO., Baltimore, Md.

GILES' CREOSOZONE

FOR THE DESTRUCTION OF

VERMIN and PARASITES

AFFECTING POULTRY AND BIRDS.

Price, FULL QUART, 75c. FULL DIRECTIONS ON EACH CAN.

SOLD BY ALL GROCERS AND DRUGGISTS.

Prepared only by Nelson Giles, Jr., Manufacturing Co., National City Cal.

THE WORKMAN'S SOLACE.

"I tell you, my boy, I get a heap more comfort out of a package of 'SEAL OF NORTH CAROLINA PLUG CUT' than Jay Gould does out of all his millions."

STEINWAY, KRANICH, PEASE & BACH, Gabler, Boenisch Pianos; Burdett Organs, Band Instruments. Largest stock of Sheet Music and Books. Bands supplied at Eastern Prices. MATTHIAS GRAY CO., 206 Post Street, San Francisco.

ONE REQUEST

We have only one thing to ask this week and that is easily granted. Please send postal card with your address and ask for copy of

MAY HOME CIRCLE.

It will be ready May 1st, and sample copies are offered free to all who ask for it. We know you will be interested in it. Quotes many thousand articles at lowest price to consumers, and gives information how to order, how to buy, how to ship, how to live well and cheaply in any part of the world. Address Smith's Cash Store 418 Front St., San Francisco, Cal.

TRADE MARK Damiana Bitters.

The great Mexican Remedy for Disorders of the Kidneys and Bladder, Damiana is recognized by all physicians as the best Nervous Stimulant gives health and strength to the Generative and Procreative Organs. For sale everywhere.

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE,
323 & 325 Market St., S. F., Agents.

Statement Jan. 1st, 1890.

R. H. McDonald PRES'T. F. V. McDonald, CASHIER.
ESTABLISHED 1863.
Oldest Chartered Bank on the Pacific Coast.

PACIFIC BANK

Capital Stock $1,000,000.00.
SURPLUS $ 750,000.00.
AV. RESOURCES $4,500,000.00

During the past year we have paid our regular dividends and have added another $50,000 to our surplus fund.

Thanking our friends for past favors we respectfully ask a continuance of the same.
San Francisco, Cal. R. H. McDonald, Prest.

Deposits Received from $1 upwards.

Money Saved is Money Earned. Deposit in a good Savings Bank.

PEOPLE'S HOME SAVINGS BANK

605 Market St., cor. 4th St. IN FLOOD BUILDING
San Francisco, California.

Guarantee Capital, $1,000,000

Interest apportioned from date of deposit.

Deposits from any part of the Pacific Coast States may be sent by registered letter, post office money order, bank draft or express.

Copy of By-laws and list of shareholders in Guarantee Capital sent free on application.

The People's Home Savings Bank has exceptional facilities for safe, profitable and satisfactory investment of funds at good rates of interest.

Thankful for past favors and asking for continuance of the same. Respectfully,

Columbus Waterhouse, Prest.

TIGER
FRONT-CUT MOWER!

The Best Mower in the Market,

—AND—

The Only Machine to Buy!

"The best Mower I have ever seen work."—David Hall, Cloverdale.

"The best Mower I have ever used, and my experience extends over thirty years, and with all the different kinds."—Augustus Moore, Sunol

"I will cheerfully recommend it to all."—William Armstrong, Petaluma.

"Lightest draft Mower I have ever used."—George C. Hanley, Livermore.

"Has given perfect satisfaction."—Thomas Richardson, Oakdale.

"Would not exchange it for any Mower I know of."—A. W. Collis, Brentwood.

"Best Mower I ever used."—Thomas Holden San Buenaventura.

"The Lightest Draft and Strongest-Cutting Mower in the market."—John Worswick, Grangeville.

Write for Special Circulars.

Baker & Hamilton,
San Francisco and Sacramento.

DROPSY
TREATED FREE.

Positively Cured with Vegetable Remedies. Have cured thousands of cases. Cure patients pronounced hopeless by best physicians. From first dose symptoms disappear; in ten days at least two-thirds all symptoms removed. Send for free book testimonials of miraculous cures. Ten days' treatment free by mail. If you order trial, send 10c. in stamps to pay postage. DR. H. H. GREEN & SONS, Atlanta, Ga. If you order trial return this advertisement to us.

"Her grace of motion, and of look, the smooth
And swimming majesty of step and tread,
The symmetry of form and feature, set
The soul afloat, even like delicious airs
Of flute and harp."

For her matchless look of grace and motion, this regal beauty was indebted to perfect health, restored by the use of that unequaled, invigorating tonic and nervine, Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, which set in healthy action every function and gave purity and richness to the blood. For delicate, feeble, nervous women, it is an inestimable boon, being unequaled as an appetizing cordial and restorative tonic. It is invaluable in subduing nervous excitability, exhaustion, prostration, hysteria, spasms and other distressing, nervous symptoms commonly attendant upon functional and organic disease of the womb. It induces refreshing sleep and relieves mental anxiety and despondency.

"Favorite Prescription" is a positive cure for the most complicated and obstinate cases of leucorrhea, excessive flowing, painful menstruation, unnatural suppressions, prolapsus, or falling of the womb, weak back, "female weakness," anteversion, retroversion, bearing-down sensations, chronic congestion, inflammation and ulceration of the womb. It is guaranteed to give satisfaction in every case, or money refunded. See guarantee printed on every bottle-wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years. Manufactured by WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, No. 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

Dr. Pierce's Pellets regulate and cleanse the liver, stomach and bowels. One a dose. Sold by druggists.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

COUNTY OFFICIAL PAPER.

C. MULHOLLAND, - - - Proprietor.

Independence, Cal.,

FRIDAY, - - - JUNE 6, 1890.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

VOL. XXI. NO. 52. INDEPENDENCE, INYO CO., CAL., JUNE 6, 1890. WHOLE NO. 1023.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

COUNTY OFFICIAL PAPER.

C. MULHOLLAND, - - - Proprietor.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One Year (post paid)	$3.00
Six Months	2.25
Three Months	1.50
One Month	50
Single Copies	20

UP THE MALINGA.

The Plucky Explorers Penetrate the Cannibal Country.

The Casement Party's Thrilling Experiences with the Painted Savages of the Upper Malinga—Out into the Watery Wilderness Again.

[COPYRIGHT, 1890.]

TWO hours later, as we rounded a sharp bend in the narrow river at a point only eighty yards across from bank to bank, we came in sight of this redoubted stronghold of the hunted Balolo, extending for several hundred yards along the top of a steep bank some ten or fifteen feet above the river. From the vast concourse of savages lining the shore, and from the numbers of canoes we observed darting about ahead of us, we concluded the size of the village must be much greater than its river front would have led us to suppose.

A great cry went up from the multitude as we shot into view, and the emotion they experienced at the strange sight of the big vessel puffing and panting up against the current of their river was soon intensified when the deep boom of her "harmony" whistle rang out over the waters, and the ludicrous alacrity of the chief who had been standing on the bank surrounded by the notabilities of his village to accord us a dignified welcome, to quit the scene on the breaking out of that sound, was only a little less premature than that of the encircling crowd of men, women and children.

However, we soon restored quiet, and Elenge Minto, Bukunu and others of the most intelligent of the Equator natives jumped on shore and went up in search of the chief to tell him who we were and why we had come to his country. They returned bearing an invitation to us three white men to ascend to the chief's abode and become his blood-brothers. Patsie, my bull-dog, Snooks and Spot, were already on shore, having been the first to land, and were driving great crowds of people before them, who had never seen beasts such as these, and who, although they cast longing and gluttonous eyes on Patsie's noble proportions, and the rounded limbs of Spot, who looked particularly sneering and puffed up with bloated aristocratic pride among the wretched canine inhabitants of Malinga, were warned by the strange look in the bleary red eye of the former, and the independent strut of the latter that they were animals better left untouched.

The three dogs following in our steps, we soon reached the enclosure of the chief—passing through the most crowded collection of the smallest huts I ever witnessed in an African village. On every side stretched lines of these low grass or palm-thatched structures, in narrow streets, and being rather a tall man I was able to almost see over the tops of them all. Bounding this labyrinth of streets, or maze of beehives I might call it, for they buzzed and hummed with wondering human voices as we passed along, rose the high barrier all along the land side of the fortification—a structure built up of tree trunks, plantain stems and old canoes stuck on end into the ground, their flat parts facing the enemy, all securely lashed together by liana ropes.

On arriving at Esekiyaka's, the chief's house, we found him waiting for us in the midst of a crowd of similarly attired and marked savages to those we had met at the little fishing village lower down, all armed with spears and shields, while in their girdles glistened the copper handles of long, bright-bladed knives which rested on the thigh.

These knives, when they talked among themselves as the savages often did during our interview with the chief, they would grasp in their hands and emphasize every point of their speech by the wave of a bright blade through the air, and the flash of its copper handle as they pointed it at their neighbor. The effect of this glittering metal, added to the repulsive and hideously marked features of all who gazed upon us, showing dirty, discolored rows of filed teeth as they smiled (!) back on us—and above all, the odor of unwashed bodies, not to mention cannibal orgies, which the leering, cruel look we met at every turn too plainly revealed what these people often indulged in, was to make us wish ourselves a little further off Malinga and out in the pure breezes of mid-stream.

However, the rites of blood brotherhood were soon performed, our pale-skinned arms contrasting with the rich brown of the muscular old Esekiyaka's as we bared them to the shoulder, while the little knife used on these occasions punctured the skin just below the elbow, causing blood to flow.

We were on the point of returning to the Florida, when a tremendous clamor arose from the direction of the barricade, and shouting out that the Lufembi were upon them. Every man rushed off to the stockade, brandishing spears and knife. Only Esekiyaka and one or two of his aged counsellors remained behind, and I had my hands full endeavoring to pacify Paddy and keep him from following after the rushing crowd of excited Malinga warriors (Snooks and Spot being in full cry at their heels), who, I feared, would leave in Paddy's iron jaws, if he once got on their track, more real cause for canine satisfaction than their floating tails of monkey skin or fur.

The alarm, however, proved to be a false one. In a few minutes the crowd resurrounded us, grinning and leering, so we thought it advisable to retire from the chief's presence and take up our quarters on the foredeck of the Florida, where we were speedily besieged by a clamoring, howling crowd, endeavoring to get near enough to exchange their spears, knives, shields and any brass rods they might possess for small blue, white and pink beads, or cowrie shells. So dense became the crowd, so pertinacious the small boys and outsiders in climbing up on deck, and so odorous the atmosphere that we were more than once compelled to resort to the extreme measure of pulling the connecting string of the whistle; but the relief so gained was only temporary, for the retreating wave of human beings soon reformed on the high bank, and, sweeping back with renewed force, threatened to submerge us under a perfect deluge of ungratified demands for more beads and cowries.

In the midst of this confusion old Esekivaka arrived on board with a grass switch to keep off flies and inflict corporal punishment on the small boys who ventured too near his august person. He had already presented us with a fine tusk of ivory on our having sealed our friendship by an admixture of blood, and he now came to see what we were worth, while discharging the obligations of African etiquette by returning our morning's visit.

We gave orders to clear the decks of all would-be bead and cowrie buyers, and to hoist the anchor attached to the little windlass in the bows preparatory to moving out into mid-stream, where we might discuss matters at our leisure with the old chief. Esekiyaka, however, seeing the preparations for departure, made a rush for the side and was overboard into the first canoe before we had time to stop him, while his suite followed suit, many jumping into the river in their haste to escape.

ESEKIYAKA'S SCARE.

It required our repeated assurances that we had no intention of departing suddenly with him on board, and the present of an empty tin of Huntley & Palmer's "cuddy" biscuits, to induce Esekiyaka to venture on the Florida again.

He informed us that formerly Malinga had been very rich in ivory, great stores of it having accumulated from different raids made up to the head-waters of the river, but that only two years previously the men of Lulungu had come up with a hundred war canoes and many guns; that his people being only armed with spears and bows and arrows, had been beaten, and numerous captives taken by the victorious Lulungus, who, after their victory, retired with their prisoners to the island opposite the village. From this point they had opened up negotiations with the remnant of Malinga in their retreat in the woods for the purchase back of their relatives by giving up all their concealed stores of ivory to the raiders. So it came about that Malinga was now without any thing to offer us. "But," added the old chief, "I can give you slaves. I have no goats or fowls to present you with, for we dare hardly leave our walls on account of the Lufembe in the forest back there; and the river, too, is often barred to us by the onslaughts from below—but if you'll have a few men and women to take back with you down river, all right."

We endeavored to explain to the poor old savage that it was not the custom of white men to keep other people in bondage, but that we should continue our journey higher up river, where we heard plenty of ivory was to be obtained.

"Oh! you'll get plenty of it up there," he said, "but not with those things," pointing to the beads and cowries lying on the deck. "Those are all very well up there; but they want spears and knives, too, and they won't sell you a single tusk, unless you have a spear or two to give in with the other things. They have no iron in those countries to make weapons, so you had better buy spears from us."

This was an eye-opener to us. Learning that Esekiyaka's statement was perfectly true from Elenge Minto, who got his information from other sources on shore, we sent out more beads and cowries for the purchase of every spear and knife we could induce the savages to part with.

We got rid of the old chief towards sun-down, and, night coming on, settled ourselves down for a quiet, cool rest out in the center of the river, little dreaming of the horrible deed to be enacted on shore while we slept.

Many of our men slept on shore, preferring the warmth and shelter of a friendly native's hut to the iron deck of the Florida. As I got up next morning I observed them crowding down to the beach and into the canoes to come off to the steamer. On arriving on board Bionelo came up to me and said that the head and limbs of a woman had just been offered to him for sale. The man offering the head had asked for white beads in exchange for it. Horrified at this story, we asked Elenge Minto if he knew any thing about it, and he answered that the same request had been put to him and that the people told him the murdered woman had been one with "too much to say," so they thought the best thing to do with her was to kill and eat her. Our white chalk beads, however, had proved stronger even than the desire for human flesh; hence the offer of the head and arms to our men for some of their beads.

Utterly disgusted with Malinga, its dirt, its people and their hideous, repulsive countenances and still more hideous ways, we hove up anchor as soon as all the crew had reassembled and started up river once more.

We were now left entirely to guesswork, to judge of what lay before us, for Elenge Minto knew nothing of the river beyond Malinga to which he had made one or two canoe journeys on trading expeditions of the Lulungu and lower river people. Next day we continued our journey up broader stretches of river still between the interminable lines of forest trees on each side, seeing a few strange-looking wild ducks, whose exquisite green and blue plumage, with a shade of gold running through it like the sheen of a peacock's breast, lit up the somber waters of the river as they ever and anon rose at the steamer's approach only to drop down again to the water a few hundred yards higher up.

There were silver-tailed monkeys, too, with black coats and a plentiful crop of white hair falling over the cheeks and from the back of the head behind and quite covering the ears—beautiful things, leaping away deeper into the recesses of the forest from some swaying bough overhanging the river on which they had perched, watching us until we came too close for their tastes.

The long reaches of the river opened out bend after bend and turn after turn without any sign of a village, and we were beginning to think of camping for the afternoon to get plenty of wood for next day when the wife of one of the men supplied us with food for talk and a few minutes' excitement.

She had had several little family affairs with her husband during the voyage and had invariably come off second best in them, for he stood no nonsense in these matters, and had one final and effective argument for all too-prolonged conjugal discussions—a good, thick stick, which he generally took care to provide himself with during wood-cutting operations.

However, to-day she was rather emboldened by the fact that her husband had neglected to bring the usual sapling from the last camping place, or else she had made up her mind to strike one last desperate blow for woman's rights on board the Florida. The amicable wrangle between husband and wife had continued for some time in the stern of the ship, and insult after insult, such bitter phrases as "that she didn't know how to boil a plantain even," or "to make pepper soup," having been heaped upon the devoted head of the wife, she abandoned the wordy war, and divesting herself of her heavy brass anklets, her copper bangles and steel bracelets, evidences of a now brutal husband's once fond regard, she looked round the ship, and with a blood-curdling yell deliberately climbed the railings and threw herself into the river.

The engineer rushed to stop the engines. One or two of the black men jumped overboard and swam back towards the head we could perceive bobbing up and down far behind us. Others quickly manned the canoe alongside and paddled off to the rescue. The injured wife, who was as vigorous a swimmer as a debater, struck off full speed, hand over hand down stream. For a few moments there was quite an exciting little chase, until she was overtaken, dragged up into the canoe and its prow turned up-stream again. She stepped proudly and with an air of conscious triumph on her features upon deck once more. But, alas! for the vanity of human wishes, her reception was far other than she anticipated. Not even the white men looked pitifully on her. The engineer shook his fist and her husband—but there, let us draw a vail over what followed.

Later in the day, when harmony was restored between husband and wife, I ventured to remonstrate with him on striking a woman—saying that a white man who did so was looked on as a coward. He smiled and replied:

"Oh! that may be all very well in your country, but if I didn't hit her sometimes there would be no standing her at all. Why look at her now, she's quite happy."

THE RUNAWAY WIFE.

And so she was, and although not satisfied that the man was right, I felt he knew his business better than I did.

The delay caused by this incident made it very late when we rounded a point of trees and came in sight of Baulu village. It presented a beautiful sight, lit up by the red light of the setting sun, a long line of brown buildings under bright green foliage extending for nearly a mile along the bank of the river, a background of dark, seemingly impenetrable forest, while the blue smoke from the evening fires floated out over the stream, and enveloped the upper end of the here broad reach of river in a dim haze.

The sun sank as we drew near the bank, where we found the chief attired in a cloth of dark red, waiting to receive us, surrounded by a crowd of men, armed with the most perfectly made spears and copper-handled knives we had yet seen.

ROGER CASEMENT.

Retribution.

The salesman in the music store had succeeded at last, after an hour's hard talking, in working off a cheap, wheezy, screeching fiddle on a customer at four times its value.

"Where shall I send it?" he inquired.

"To No. 914 Slugg street, flat A."

The salesman's jaw fell. He had moved with his family the day before to No. 914 Slugg street, flat B, on a two years' lease.—Chicago Tribune.

IGNORANCE AND BLISS.

The Stupidity of Looking For Things to Worry One.

A chemist says he is making an analysis of various samples of drinking water, with a view of testing their purity, and asks if he shall send his reports for publication. Please do not do that, good friend. There is already too much prejudice against the use of water for drinking purposes, and scientific reports that must be long for argument's sake and tend to keep people from drinking nature's best drink, must be dry reading. An intelligent editor with a soft spot in his heart was once sorely tried by a female poet. Her verses were not up to standard and he asked to be excused from publishing them. "But," persisted the poet, "you have published poetry worse than mine." "That may be true, if any could be worse," replied the poor editor, "for to oblige friends and their friends we have used some pretty poor stuff; but we never publish it when we do not feel obliged to." A great many essays on health by men more famous for talking than healing have probably been published in place of reading matter to oblige friends and their friends. Editors who know their business do not solicit sermons on health from men who are not generally regarded as authorities on health matters. Chemists are very useful in this world. They put drugs together and patent medicines. They compound and make more or less mistakes. To say their mistakes are buried in graves would be a chestnut.

The police report that a man has poisoned himself. The chemist goes through the stomach and says there is poison in it. That is almost like what the policeman said. The reason why the man put poison in his stomach is not found. A man is murdered by poison. The chemist goes through the stomach and says the man's death has been caused by poison. He thinks so because he sees death and finds the poison. With the trace of arsenic there is no trace of the murderer's name. The chemist gives certificates of character for the waters of different springs, and tells rich people where they should spend their summers. Heaven must help the poor people. Water works companies are not going to give free river and lake water to the poor because chemists declare foul cistern or ditch or shallow well water is unhealthy. Chemists on water are like Bob Ingersoll in religion. They take away a poor man's faith and give him nothing in return. Certainly not better water. A man hunting constantly for impurities in wines and waters and sugars and milk and canned goods may become so impressed with dangers ahead that he will never again enjoy eating and drinking. In despair he will order boiled eggs. He will say: "Here is food that is free from impure air and that wicked man can not have adulterated with foreign substances." He opens one gleefully, and may find a chicken or rottenness! God knows where they came from. There is no escape. Man may eat his peck of dirt, and there is no guarantee that every thing will be clean after that. The clay eaters prove that dirt does not kill immediately. Savages show that nastiness in person and eating is tolerably healthy for the savage. A great deal of eating and drinking is a matter of taste. If there ever can be a chance for the faith cure to do honest work it must come through the stomach. Convince the colored woman she did not swallow a live lizard and she will feel better. Show the man that it was the ten glasses of whisky and not the crumb of cheese and cracker that made him sick, and he will think better of eating and less of drinking.

The chemist is a useful member of the world's population. Science and the arts want him, and the medical profession wants him. Rival baking powders want him, to down the other powders with. But he must not unmask every thing to those who have weak minds or stomachs. He should let a gay and happy world indulge to a certain extent the belief that there is yet something fit to eat and drink and live for, and remember that where ignorance really is a bliss it is comparative folly to be wise.—N. O. Picayune.

DARKEYVILLE SOCIETY.

Doings of the Four Hundred as Recorded By the Bugle's Reporters.

This has been a very gay winter indeed, in Darkeyville. The select Four Hundred have dispensed hospitality with a lavish hand, as we learn from the last issue of the Society Bugle which says:

Mr. and Mrs. Wintergreen gave a large and elegant reception in Mr. Green's barber shop on B street last night. The chairs were removed and dancing indulged in until daylight.

Mr. Billy Mash has tendered his resignation as cook at the Simpson House to accept a similar position with a higher salary at the Blue Eagle restaurant.

Mr. and Mrs. Price Greenwood gave an elegant reception at their laundry last Friday evening, which was attended by the elite of the city. Mrs. Greenwood wore a superb Worth gown of purple and green, with full court train of robin's-egg blue, and bodice of orange yellow with a broad pink and red sash, a harmonious and beautiful blending of colors most becoming to the wearer's beauty.

Miss Pet Greenwood wore a pale-blue gown flounced with green. A crimson bodice, purple sash, plaid overdress and pink satin ribbons completed her striking and beautiful costume.

Miss Mamie Marmaduke wore a beautiful gown belonging to her mistress, who is out of the city for a few days.

Miss Cleopatra Helene Partridge now occupies the responsible position of head dish-washer at the Bangor House. Miss Cleopatra is one of our most select and charming belles, and we are glad of her good fortune.

Miss Lily May Hartshorn, one of our most gifted society girls, announces her engagement to Mr. Sambo Peters, the active and efficient bootblack at the Diamond Star barber shop. Congratulations.—Time.

—The tramp refused cold chops, because they savored too much of the wood pile.

THE POLICY OF RUSSIA.

She Will Never Permit the Dismemberment of France.

In the Messager Russe, a review published in St. Petersburg, there is an article upon the future policy of Russia, by Mr. Serge de Tatishoff, the eminent historian and diplomatist. He declares that Russia may remain indifferent to all the misunderstandings and difficulties of Western Europe, but that there is one thing that the Empire is bound at all hazards to resist, and that is the dismemberment of France by Germany or by the quadruple alliance. In opposing such an act, he says, Russia would only be defending her own interests, because a powerful France is absolutely necessary as a counter-balance to the German Empire, which is at present supported by the armies of Austro-Hungary and Italy and also sustained by the naval forces of Great Britain. This was something that was well understood by the Emperor Alexander I. in 1814-15, and later still by Alexander II., when in 1875 he would not permit Germany to invade France for the second time, before she could recover from her disasters and place herself once more on the defensive. Let it be remembered that at the above-named dates Russia was bound to the courts of Berlin and Vienna by treaty, while to-day she is perfectly free to mold her policy according to her own interests and needs. German, at the head of the so-called league of peace, already dominates the whole of Central Europe. Two great powers alone preserve their independence and hinder her domination from spreading all over the universe. Hence the absolute identity of their reciprocal interests. If Germany should succeed in conquering France without the interference of Russia, or in conquering Russia, left without the aid of France, there would then not only be no balance of power in Europe, but none in the entire world. All powers and all peoples would find themselves obliged to bow their heads under the yoke of Germany and to acknowledge her universal soverignty. Therefore, in any struggle with the quadruple alliance it is the duty of Russia to sustain France, just as it is the duty of France to sustain Russia. To the objection that if an alliance were concluded between France and Russia a declaration of war would be the immediate result Mr. Totishoff replies:

"It is just the same as if two separate army corps, acting against a concentrated enemy, were advised to keep separate for fear of hurting the feelings of that enemy. And how should they be kept thus separate? By a maneuver which must necessarily lead to defeat! The absurdity of such advice is plain to every body from a purely military point of view, and only a half-blind and incompetent diplomacy fails to see it as a matter of policy. To our eyes it is as plain as that two and two make four that if the peace of Europe is to be assured it must be by an alliance frank and sincere between France and Russia. The conditions of such an alliance are very simple—common defense against the common enemy; a mutual guaranty of the integrity of our territories, and an engagement not to conclude a peace otherwise than by common consent. The treaty would contain nothing hurtful to anybody, even if it was not justified by the threatening coalition of the four other great powers known under the name of the league of peace, and which, notwithstanding its name, is precisely the thing that compromises the peace of Europe by the mysterious actions and the constant armaments of its members."

THE MUSICAL ACCENT.

An Illustration That Was More Personal Than Polite.

At a trial in the Court of King's Bench as to an alleged piracy of the "Old English Gentleman," one of the first witnesses put into the box was Cooke. "Now, sir," said Sir James Scarlett in his cross-examination of Cooke, "you say that the two melodies are identical but different. What am I to understand by that, sir?"

"What I said," replied Cooke, "was that the notes in the two arrangements are the same but with a different accent—the one being in common while the other is in triple time; consequently the position of the accented notes is different in the two copies."

"What is a musical accent?" Sir James flippantly inquired.

"My terms for teaching music are a guinea a lesson," said Cooke, much to the merriment of the court.

"I do not want to know your terms for teaching," said the counsel; "I want you to explain to his Lordship and the jury what is musical accent." Sir James waxed wroth. "Can you see it?" he continued.

"No," was the answer.

"Can you fell it?"

"Well," Cooke drawled out, "a musician can." After an appeal to the judge the examining counsel again put the question. "Will you explain to his Lordship and the jury—who are supposed to know nothing about music—the meaning of what you call accent?"

"Musical accent," rejoined Cooke, "is emphasis laid on a certain note just in the same manner as you would lay stress on any word when speaking, in order to make yourself better understood. I will give you an illustration, Sir James. If I were to say, 'you are a donkey,' the accent rests on donkey; but if instead I said 'you are a donkey,' it rests on you, Sir James, and I have no doubt that the gentleman of the jury will corroborate me in this." The story is more personal than polite—nevertheless, it is well worth telling as an instance of forcible illustration. It is useful, too, since it may serve to impress upon the minds of that very large circle of people who plume themselves on being musical some faint notion of what accent in music really is. It is the outcome of that wonderful invention, the division of music into bars, but for which music might still be only the magical accomplishment of a few.—Gentleman's Magazine.

—It is understood that the reason for McGinty's failure to appear is due to the soothing influence experienced by one who is being rocked in the cradle of the deep.

AMONG THE T'LINKITS.

The Rights of Women Among the Aboriginal Tribes of Alaska.

Every time a man wants to undertake a business transaction he takes his wife along with him to ratify or veto the bargain, and should she be absent at the time she may afterward put in an appearance and upset the whole affair. Funniest of all, the same equivalent transactions of the women are not subject to the same supervising power of the men, who have nothing to say regarding the bargains of their wives and daughters, except to foot the bill, if any compensation is promised by the squaws that the men are expected to fill, as work, utensils they can make, or even money, where they can get it from white men and understand its value. I have known several instances where the men have closed certain bargains, only to find them opened again when the absent wife put in an appearance. As white men are not very liable to undo a bargain which they think is to their advantage, they seldom acquiesce in the demand of the women in canceling the contract, and some of the worst personal misunderstandings between the two races have occurred on this account. I, of course, do not know how the T'linkit man fared after he got home from such a bargain; but I think we can all imagine pretty well. Nothing was more exasperating to me, at times, upon my expeditions into Alaska—in 1883 and 1886—when I came across some man from whom I wanted to buy some trifling article or to employ for a short time than to have to start out for the Indian village, probably a mile or two distant, to consult his wife about it, or to bring her to me to talk the matter over.

Then the succession to the chieftainship of the tribe is a most singular one, based also on "woman's rights," or something akin to it. Neither the eldest son of the King and Queen nor the chief and his wife nor, in fact, any of the sons and daughters succeed their father to the head of the tribe when he dies, but some one of the nearest male relatives of the Queen is made chief when her husband dies. It is easy to see that this curious and roundabout method of handing down the scepter may transfer the crown to anybody in the tribe, and that there can be no such thing as a true royal succession or hereditary decent of the chief's power.

When the parents, or either of them, have died all of the effects that they possessed descend by inheritance on the mother's side, none of the descendants of the father receiving any thing out of the estate. One would think that it would lead to some curious muddles, but somehow they manage to keep it straight.

The same as among all savages, the men have often two or three wives, and in rare cases even more; but the women, not to be outdone in the matrimonial line, have in a few instances—two or three of which I know of personally—two husbands. They are nearly always rich women, who have had a great deal left them by inheritance, or who had made a large amount themselves—for, as I have said, the women do nearly all the business. One T'linkit woman, a Sitka woman, who went by the name of Mrs. Tom among the white people, and who had already one husband, bought another, a slave, for about a thousand dollars in goods and chattels, and when I saw the two together afterward I think he was the best-looking one of the pair. When a man and woman marry they try and adopt a boy and a girl. If the man dies the boy becomes the woman's husband, and if the woman dies the girl becomes the wife of the man.—Lieutenant Schwatka, in N. Y. Independent.

Wanted to Chop It.

Customer (to waiter who has just filled his order)—Did you say this was a chop?

Waiter—Yes; sir. Any thing the matter with it, sir?

Customer—Nothing much. But say, when you are coming 'round this way again please bring the axe.—Life.

A Writer for the Press.

"What are you doing, Thomas?" asked the minister, patronizingly.

"I am a writer for the press," said the lad, proudly.

"Indeed, you are quite young for that. What do you write?"

"I direct wrappers."—Washington Critic.

—One of the probable effects of rapid transit in Brooklyn will be the lowering in value of residence propty in New York City. Real estate owners are closely watching events. Those in Gotham are apprehensive of a decrease in their holdings, and those in Brooklyn are expecting a boom in all the unimproved lots of the City of Churches. Another result that is likely to come from Brooklyn's elevated roads is an unusual development toward the ocean.

—There is in Connecticut savings banks over $75,000 which has remained without claimants for over twenty years. Of this $21,000 is held by the Society for Savings in Hartford, $17,000 by the New London Savings Bank, $12,500 by the Norwich Savings Bank, $7,000 to the Bridgeport Saving Bank, $4,000 by the Middletown, and not far from $4,000 by the Nowalk.

—The women of New York have been granted more patents than their sisters in any other State. The women of Massachusetts, Ohio, Indiana and Wisconsin rank next in order.

AN ENGLISH SWANNERY.

A Curious Sight to Be Seen on the Marshy Shore at Abbotsbury.

A very curious sight does the marshy shore at Abbotsbury present in the breeding season. Then the ground is dotted with nests, a pair of swans to each, one covering the eggs, the other sitting or standing, a snow-white sentinel beside his mate. The swans do not breed until they are three years old; they are strictly monogamous, and the male bird takes his full share in the incubation. The nests, formed of dry reeds, are of great size, and are made upon grassy tussocks among the osiers, the whole breeding ground, moist with runnels of water, being so freely intersected by narrow alleys of sound turf that the visitor is enabled to inspect them closely; nor does his approach disturb the equanimity of the birds, though if molested during the breeding season, or while the brood is young, the swan is a bird that will defend himself, and still more his offspring, with considerable valor. They lay from five to eight very large thick-shelled white eggs, and the period of incubation is six weeks.

The swan is not indigenous to the British Isles, but is supposed to have been introduced from Eastern Europe or Asia many centuries back. Our climate, however, suits them well, and at Abbotsbury they have flourished exceedingly. The number there now is about eight hundred; formerly more were kept, as many as fifteen hundred; while further back, again, tradition gives the number as seven or eight thousand. In winter time many sorts of wild birds put in appearance, when the sooty plumage of innumerable coots forms a striking contrast with the snowy whiteness of the swans. Some few years back a black swan, that rara avis in terris, kept the white ones company for a while, but none knew whence it came or whither it went. There are also hoopers, or wild swans, a smaller species.

Wild species are, perhaps, always smaller than tame, though generally more beautiful; but this does not seem to be the case with the swan, as M. Baillon, King's Counselor and bailiff of Waben, at Montreuilsur-Mer, remarks: "The abundance and the choice of food augmented the bulk of the tame swan, but its form has lost none of its elegance; it has preserved the same graces and the same freedom in all its motions; its majestic port is ever admired. I doubt even whether all these qualities are found to equal extent in the wild bird." At Abbotsbury, however, the swans are not fed; they find ample provision for themselves in the algæ and other marsh plants which grow on the banks of the Fleet.

The grace and power with which the swan moves in what we may call his native element are delightful. On land he has been coupled with the dismounted dragoon to illustrate the extreme of awkwardness, and it must be confessed that his gait is most ungainly; but afloat he is superb. According to that keen observer and eminent naturalist, Buffon, the swan presents the finest natural model for the art of navigation, "Its raised neck and round swelling breast exhibit the prow of a ship cleaving the waves, its broad belly represents the keel, its body, pressed down before, rises behind into the stern; the tail is a genuine rudder; its feet are broad oars, and its wings, half opened to the wind and gently inflated, are the sails which impel the animated machine."—Cornhill Magazine.

An Honest ...an Indeed.

"Beg pardon," he said as he hurriedly re-entered the car, "but did you find my wallet on the seat?"

"I did, sir," was the prompt reply. "This is the one, I presume?"

"Ah! thanks! You are an honest man."

"Oh, no thanks—no thanks. The fifteen cents, two shirt buttons and a recipe for making hair wash were no temptation to my principles!"

—First cowboy—I don't mind an injun havin' his rights. Second cowboy—Them's my sentiments, too. He ought to have his rights. But if he undertakes to assert his rights, then he oughter be skulped. "That's what I say, perticularly of he has any good ridin' ponies"—Texas Siftings.

—A Chattanooga newspaper puts the following "display head" over an account of a Chinaman attempting to cut his throat with a jack knife: "Hari-Kari. Wah Lee, a He-Chinee, Drew forth His Snickersnee, and Strove in Vain, While Much Insane, to Cut in Twain, His Jugular Vein, and to Sever Forever His Stomach's Pain."

—We are willing to be delighted with success, though we are somewhat indifferent to the homely qualities which insure it. Our thought is so filled with the rocket's burst of momentary splendor so far above us, that we forget the poor stick, useful and unseen, that made its climbing possible. One of these homely qualities is continuity of character, and it escapes present applause because it tells chiefly, in the long run, in results.—Lowell.

LITTLE'S

CHEMICAL FLUID

NON-POISONOUS

SHEEP DIP.

One gallon, mixed with 600 gallons of cold water will dip thoroughly 100 sheep, at a cost of 1 cent each. Easily applied, a nourisher of Wool; a certain cure for SCAB. Also,

Little's Patent Powder Dip,

(Poisonous.)

Mixes instantly with water. Prevents the fly from striking. In a 2 pound package there is sufficient to dip twenty sheep, and in a 7 pound package there is sufficient to dip one hundred sheep.

CATTON, BELL & CO.

SUCCESSORS TO FALKNER, BELL & CO.

Office, 406 California St. and Wool Agency Warehouse, cor. 6th and Townsend Sts

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

C. Mulholland,
EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.
PUBLISHED EVERY FRIDAY

INDEPENDENCE, CAL

FRIDAY JUNE 6 1890

County Official Paper.

Mr Adams, President of the Union Pacific railroad made some remarks a few days ago in San Francisco that are of much importance to the people of Inyo County. He is reported as saying that his Company have no intention of extending the road beyond Pioche, Nevada. The Union Pacific is on good terms with the Southern Pacific and no extension of the former road to San Francisco is even contemplated. The Union Pacific has its own line to Portland and Puget Sound and if any improvements are to be made they will be in that direction. The extension of the Carson and Colorado railroad southward has been regarded as a certainty so soon as the road from Pioche should be pushed on through Inyo County; but according to Mr. Adams, we will have to wait for the canal diggers from Mars to come and build that road before the Carson and Colorado will be extended. It is very likely, however, that just so soon as the owners of the C & C road can be convinced that there will be business enough to pay interest on the money necessary to extend the road it will be done.

It is a gross wrong to the Republican delegates to the State Convention to require them to go from Sacramento to Fresno to nominate a candidate for Congress. Alpine, Mono and Inyo send seven delegates to the Convention, and all of them must go to Reno in order to reach Sacramento. The expense in time and money is great, and all this expense is usually borne by the delegates themselves. To put the delegates to the further expense of a trip to Fresno and the loss of another week in time is a gross and needless injustice. A candidate for Congress can be chosen at Sacramento as readily as at Fresno, and no good reason can be given for dragging the delegates to the latter place except to force them to give proxies to wire-pullers or to spend their money at Fresno hotels. This useless waste of time and money should be avoided.

Every man in either House of Congress, and all who would like to get there, should commit to memory the following sentences from the speech of Senator Stanford in support of his bill for the Government loaning money to farmers. "It is the duty of statesmen to find means, if possible, to find out the way by which the Creator's design for the highest advance of civilization is to be obtained. Want, discomfort and misery are not necessarily the heritage of the industrious and prudent man. Put the tools of industry in capable hands that know how to use them and great results will follow. The bill provides for what may perhaps not improperly be termed a revolution in finance, and I do not expect it will be adopted until it has been considered by the people and met with their approval."

Palace Saloon.
WALTER OBER. Lessee.
—THE BAR—
Is constantly supplied with the best kinds o
WINES, LIQUORS, & CIGARS.
☞The most careful attention given to the the amusement and comfort of patrons.
A FINE BILLIARD TABLE
Is always at the disposal of visitors to the Palace Saloon Dec. 20 89

BUHACH
THE UNRIVALED
Insect Exterminator
Manufactured solely from Pyrethrum flowers, grown in California, in a locality where the soil and climate are peculiarly adapted to the production of flowers rich in the essential oil which makes them so remarkably destructive to insect life.
Avoid the Worthless and Spurious Preparations, sold as Insect Powders, and use Buhach from original packages, and clear your premises of all Annoying and Destructive Insect Pests.
None Genuine Without the Trade Mark.
If your dealer doesn't keep it, order directly from the
Buhach Producing & Manufacturing COMPANY,
SOLE MANUFACTURERS,
STOCKTON. - - CALIFORNIA.

TO ADVERTISERS
A list of 1000 newspapers divided into STATES AND SECTIONS will be sent on application—FREE.
To those who want their advertising to pay, we can offer no better medium for thorough and effective work than the various sections of our Select Local List. GEO. P. ROWELL & CO., Newspaper Advertising Bureau, 10 Spruce Street, New York.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE.

STEVENS DITCH COMPANY.

Location of principal place of business, Independene, California. Location of ditch, near Independence, Inyo county.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of a Board of Directors, held on the 31st day of May, 1890, an assessment (No. 4) of Ten (10) cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary at the office of the company, Independence, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 26th day of July, 1890 will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Saturday, the 30th day of August, 1890 to pay the delinquent assessment together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.
P. H MACK, Secretary.

FINAL HOMESTEAD PROOF.

H A No. 432

LAND OFFICE AT INDEPENDENCE, CAL., April 30, 1890.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT THE following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before the Register and Receiver at Independence, Cal., on Saturday, June 14th, 1890, viz.: JOHN S. GORMAN, Homestead Application No. 432, for the W ½ of lot No. 1 in NW ¼ Sec 5 Lot No. 1 in NE ¼ and E ½ of lot No. 1 in NW ¼ of Sec 6, in Twp 13 S, Range 35 East, M D M

He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon, and cultivation of, said land, viz.: Hiram C. Hamilton, Helaire P. Cartier, Alvah R. Conklin and William M. Boyd, all of Independence, Cala.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD, Register.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.

Estate of ELIZA ANN SMITH, deceased.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN BY THE UNdersigned, Executor of the last Will and Testament of Eliza Ann Smith, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Executor, at his residence, at Block Rock, Inyo county, California.

WILLIAM S. MORTON.
Executor of the last Will and Testament of said Eliza Ann Smith, deceased.
Dated May 9th, 1890.

S. H. BIGLAND,
—DEALER IN—
Owens Valley Lands
39 SUTTER STREET.
SAN FRANCISCO.
1-26

A. K. EUGLEY,
BIG PINE INYO CO. CAL.
Dealer in GENERAL MERCHANDISE, GROCERIES MINERS Supplies
PROVISIONS, &c., &c., &c.
Postmaster and Deputy Co Clerk.
A. K. EUGLEY, Big Pine, Cal.

SCIENTIFIC AMERICAN
is the oldest and most popular scientific and mechanical paper published and has the largest circulation of any paper of its class in the world. Fully illustrated. Best class of Wood Engravings. Published weekly. Send for specimen copy. Price $3 a year. Four months' trial, $1. MUNN & CO., PUBLISHERS, 361 Broadway, N.Y.

ARCHITECTS & BUILDERS Edition of Scientific American.
A great success. Each issue contains colored lithographic plates of country and city residences or public buildings. Numerous engravings and full plans and specifications for the use of such as contemplate building. Price $2.50 a year, 25 cts. a copy. MUNN & CO., PUBLISHERS.

PATENTS may be secured by applying to MUNN & CO., who have had over 40 years' experience and have made over 100,000 applications for American and Foreign patents. Send for Handbook. Correspondence strictly confidential.
TRADE MARKS.
In case your mark is not registered in the Patent Office, apply to MUNN & CO., and procure immediate protection. Send for Handbook.
COPYRIGHTS for books, charts, maps etc., quickly procured. Address
MUNN & CO., Patent Solicitors.
GENERAL OFFICE 361 BROADWAY, N. Y.

A $20 A Day Man!
A VOICE from Ohio. Here is a portrait of Mr. Garrison, of Salem, Ohio. He writes: "Was at work on a farm for $20 a month; I now have an agency for E. C. Allen & Co's albums and publications and often make $20 a day." (Signed) W. H. GARRISON.
William Kilne, Harrisburg, Pa., writes: "I have never known anything to sell like your album. Yesterday I took orders enough to pay me over $25." W. J. Elmore, Bangor, Me., writes: "I take an order for your album almost every house I visit. My profit is often as much as $20 for a single day's work." Others are doing quite as well; we have not space to give extracts from their letters. Every one who takes hold of this grand business piles up grand profits. Shall we start YOU in this business, reader? Write to us and learn all about it for yourself. We are starting many; we will start you if you don't delay until another gets ahead of you in your part of the country. If you take hold you will be able to pick up gold fast. ☞Read—On account of a forced manufacturer's sale 125,000 ten dollar Photograph Albums are to be sold to the people for $3 each. Bound in Royal Crimson Silk Velvet Plush. Charmingly decorated insides. Handsomest albums in the world. Largest Size. Greatest bargains ever known. Agents wanted. Liberal terms. Big money for agents. Any one can become a successful agent. Sells itself on sight—little or no talking necessary. Wherever shown, every one wants to purchase. Agents take thousands of orders with rapidity never before known. Great profits await every worker. Agents are making fortunes. Ladies make as much as men. You, reader, can do as well as any one. Full information and terms free, to those who write for same, with particulars and terms for our 'family Bibles, Books and Periodicals. After you know all, should you conclude to go no further, why no harm is done.
Address E. C. ALLEN & CO., AUGUSTA, MAINE.

OFFICIAL.

Application for Patent.

Mining Application No. 247.

UNITED STATES LAND OFFICE, INDEPENDENCE, CAL., April 25, 1890.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT PATrick Reddy, whose post office address is San Francisco, California, has this day filed his application for a patent for fourteen hundred and forty-eigh and seven-tenths linear feet of the Bernon Quartz Mine or vein bearing galena, lead and silver, with surface ground six hundred feet in width, situated in Coso Mining District, County of Inyo and State of California and designated by the field notes and official plat on file in this office as Lot No. 42, in Township 19 South, Range No. 40 East, of Mt. Diablo Base and Meridian.

Said Lot No. 42 being described as follows, to wit:

Survey of Connecting Line:

Commencing at corner common to Sections 14, 15, 22 and 23 of T 19 S., R. 40 E., M. D. B. and M., and running with Mag. Var. of 15 deg. 37 min. E. as follows:

N. 73 deg. 52 min. E., Needle varying along the line from N. 58 1-8 deg. E. to N. 58 3-8 deg. E, Magnetic. 71.99 chs to the S W cor. post of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine, being the S. E. cor. of the Bernon claim.

Survey of the Exterior Boundaries:

Commencing at a stake in high stone Mont. having pencil marks too dim to be read, being the S. W. cor. of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine, and the S. E. cor. of the Bernon claim, thence deflecting L. 180 deg. 86 deg. 57 min. from connecting line extended N. 73 deg. 52 min. E. as assumed standard bearing of the survey, upon West boundary line of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine and East boundary line of the Bernon claim, and running as follows: 1. N. 19 deg. 11 min. W., upon East boundary of claim, local variation of declination of 0 deg. 18 min. E.; 0.90 chs to summit of limestone reef; 1.65 chs crossing high reef of limestone, 1.93 chs; whence bears S. 70 3 4 deg., W. 0.46 chs., face of open cut five feet wide. 1. N. 19 deg. 11 min., W. 4.03 chs, centre of ravine bearing Easterly 7.42 chs, summit of high croppings of lime rock; whence bears N. 59 degrees 11 min. W 4.53 chs centre incline prospect shaft 15 ft deep, no marks, 10.14 chs to centre of wash bearing Easterly from summit towards Defiance Works; 10.90 chs to old stake in high stone Mont. marked in pencil as follows: — of Bernon and Defiance Ledge—surveyed by Joseph Seely, U. S. M. Surveyor; being the side line Mont. of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine; 749.7 ft., or 11 36 chs., Set 3 by 4 post in mound of stone marked Defiance West line and Bernon East line; whence bears N. 35 deg. 19 min. E. 1 28 chs. centre of incline prospect cut 12 ft. deep; whence bears N. 70 deg. 49 min E 0.75 chs centre of small prospect cut, whence bears N 79 deg. 01 min. E 5.37 chs centre of mouth of Defiance and Bernon Tunnel; whence bears N. 70 deg. 45 min. W. 2 43 chs. the face of Defiance and Bernon Tunnel; 14.39 chs centre of wash leading Easterly; 15.61 chs; whence bears N 79 deg. 49 min. E 0 03 chs an old stake in stone Mont. having Seely's name in pencil and other marks too dim to be read, being a side-line Mont. of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine; 1. N. 19 deg. 11 min. W 16.18 chs summit of ridge bearing Easterly; 20.31 chs, whence bears S 42 deg. 01 min. W. 1.79 chs a stake in stone Mont. marked Kerso Ledge, S W cor. Post No. 6; whence bears N 42 deg. 01 min. E. 6.91 chs a stake in stone Mont. marked Kerso Ledge N E Post; whence bears N 35 deg. 45 min E 2.41 chs a stake in stone Mont. marked Kerso centre point 1448.7 ft., or 21.95 chs. to stake in stone Mont., no marks, being the N W cor. of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine, set 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon N E cor. No. 1, and Defiance N W cor. No. 4; thence deflecting L. 90 deg. from Co. 1 extended N. 19 deg. 11 min. W making interior angle 90 deg. ran; 2 S. 70 deg. 49 min. W upon the North boundary line of the Bernon claim; local variation of declination of 0 deg. 18 min. E, 2, S 70 deg. 49 min. W 0.30 chs centre old sled road from summit of hill, 1.09 chs, whence bears N 60 deg. 07 min., W 3.06 chs a stake in stone Mont. being the Northerly end of Lode line and centre of Hidalgo claim, 7 10 chs whence bears N 70 deg. 57 min. W 0.61 chs the centre of Hidalgo incline shaft, 4.07 chs, crossing summit of Darwin Range, whence bears S 19 deg 31 min. E 2.91 chs. centre small shaft 300 ft or 4.545 chs, set 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked, Bernon L. L. P. No. 1; being the Northerly end of Lode Line and centre of Bernon claim, 7.86 chs centre mouth of tunnel bearing Northerly 6.01 ft, or 9.09 chs, set a 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon N W Cor. No. 4, being the N W Cor. of the Bernon claim; thence deflecting L. 90 deg. from Co. 2 extended S 70 deg. 49 min. W making the interior angle 90 deg. and ran 3, S 19 deg. 11 min. E upon West boundary line of Bernon Claim, local variation of declination of 0 deg. 18 m n. E, 0.15 chs centre wash bearing Westerly 4.07 chs, summit of ridge bearing Westerly, 9.01, center deep gulch bearing Westerly 10.15 chs, whence bears S 28 deg. 47 min. W 9.19 chs a stone Mont. being the S E cor. of the Hidalgo Claim; whence bears S 56 deg. 51 min. W 11.17 chs a stone Mont. being the Southerly end of Hidalgo Lode Line; whence bears S 56 deg. 25 min. W 12.45 chs a stone Mont. being the S W Cor. of the Hidalgo Claim 3, S 19 deg. 11 min. E 14 25 chs, summit of spur bearing Westerly, 14.61 chs, crossing head of wash bearing Westerly 15.28 chs, summit of spur bearing Westerly 16.03 chs, whence bears N 86 deg. 28 min. E 5.32 chs the centre of mouth of Carry Tunnel, No. 1, whence bears N 83 deg. 29 min. E 4.22 chs the centre of mouth of Carry Tunnel No. 2, whence bears N 56 deg. 46 min. E 2.74 chs the centre of mouth of Carry Tunnel, No. 3, 21.65 chs, centre of ravine bearing Westerly, 21.47 chs, intersection with connecting line; whence bears S 73 deg. 52 min. W 62.89 chs the corner common to Sections 14, 15, 22 and 23 of T 19 S, R 40 E, M D B and M, 1448.7 ft, or 21.95 chs, in south side of ravine, set 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon S W Cor. No. 3, being the S W Cor. of the Bernon Claim; thence deflecting L. 90 deg. from Co. 3, extended S 19 deg. 11 min. E, making interior angle 90 deg. and ran; 4, N 70 deg. 49 min. E, upon South boundary line of Bernon, local variation of declination of 0 deg. 03 min. E, 1.26 chs, edge of ravine, 2.51 chs, ridge of spur bearing Westerly 3.99 ft, or 4.545 chs, set 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon L. L., P. No. 2, being the Southerly end of Lode Line and centre of claim, 7.06 chs, crossing high reef of lime rock, 4, N 70 deg. 49 min. E, 600 ft, or 9.09 chs back to place of beginning, and set a 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon S E Cor., No. 2, and Defiance S W Cor., No. 3.

Containing 19.95 acres.

Survey of Lode Line.

Commencing at the L. L., P., No. 1, of Claim and deflecting thence L. 90 deg. from Co. 2, extended S 70 deg. 49 min W, making the interior angle 90 deg. ran, 5, S, 19 deg. 11 min. E, upon lode line; ascending 3.94 chs, whence bears S 74 deg. 41 min. W 2.91 chs a stone Mont. claimed to be the centre of Hidalgo Claim; whence bears S 72 deg. 36 min. E, 0.71 chs centre small shaft; descending; 10.30 chs, whence bears S 70 deg. 49 min. W 0.30 chs centre prospect hole 11.82 chs, whence bears N 70 deg. 49 min. E 0.50 chs centre incline shaft 60 ft deep. Ascending; 13.03 chs, summit of spur bearing Westerly. Descending; 13.36 chs, whence bears S 70 deg. 06 min. E 0.80 chs centre shaft 45 ft deep, 14.41 chs, whence bears S 70 deg. 49 min. W 0.10 chs centre mouth of tunnel, 16.66 chs, whence bears S 70 deg. 49 min. W 0.12 chs centre shaft 6 ft deep 1448 ft, or 21.94 chs to L. L. P., No. 2, of Claim.

Magnetic variation 15 deg. 37 min. E containing 19.95 acres.

THE LOCATION of this mine is recorded in the Recorder's office of Coso Mining District in Book C of page 136. The adjoining claimant is the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. mine.

Any and all persons claiming adversely any portion of said Bernon Quartz mine or surface ground are required to file their adverse claims with the Register of the United States Land Office at Independence in the State of California during the sixty days period of publication hereof, or they will be barred by virtue of the provisions of the statute.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD, Register.
o-n24

INDEPENDENCE
SHAVING SALOON.
Shaving, Hair Cutting, etc., done in the best manner.
WM. H. HUFF, Prop'r

MISCELLANEOUS.

J. R. ELDRED,
Sheriff and Tax-Collector.
INYO CO., CAL.

P. H. MACK,
COUNTY CLERK,
—AND—
Ex-officio Auditor and Recorder,
INYO CO., CAL.

GEO. M. GILL,
District Attorney,
INYO CO., CAL.

J. J. MOORE,
County Treasurer,
INYO CO., CAL.

S. P. M'KNIGHT, C.E.
COUNTY SURVEYOR
—AND—
U. S. Deputy Mineral Surveyor
For California and Nevada.
—BISHOP CREEK, INYO CO., CAL.—
The obtaining of United States mineral patents a specialty.
All kinds of surveying given the most careful and accurate attention.

JUSTICE OF PEACE,
C. MULHOLLAND.
Office in the "INDEPENDENT" Building, Independence, Inyo County, Cal.

A. R. CONKLIN,
Attorney-at-Law.
Independence, Cal.
Will practice in all the Courts of the States of California and Nevada.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
Independence, Cal.

P. W. FORBES,
ATTORNEY AT LAW.
NOTARY PUBLIC.
☞Cases in U. S. Land Office a Specialty.☜
BISHOP, INYO COUNTY, CALIFORNIA.

IRVING J. WOODIN, M D.,
Physician & Surgeon,
(COUNTY PHYSICIAN)
Louise L. Woodin, M. D.
PHYSICIAN & SURGEON.
☞ NIGHT CALLS ATTENDED. ☜
Office and residence at the Reddy place, Independence.

W. H. GEORGE, M. D.,
Physician and Surgeon,
Bishop Creek, Cal.,
Offers his professional services to the people o Bishop Creek and vicinity. Office and residence o osite Andrew Clark's.

F. E. Bunting, M. D.
Physician & Surgeon
LONE PINE, CAL
OFFICE IN GELCICH BUILDING
All calls attended to immediately.

Lodge 221, F. & A. M.

Regular meetings of Lodge No. 221, F. & A. M., for the year 1889, will be held at the Lodge room at Independence as follows:

Saturday ..... February 1st
" ..... March 1st
" ..... March 29th
" ..... May 3rd
" ..... May 31st
" ..... June 28th
" ..... July 26th
" ..... August 30th
" ..... September 27th
" ..... October 25th
" ..... November 22nd
" ..... December 20th

P. H. MACK, W. M.
C. MULHOLLAND Sec.

P. W. FORBES. P. H. MACK.
MACK & FORBES.
Real Estate Agents,
Address, P. H. MACK, Independence, Cal.
P. W. FORBES, Bishop, Cal.

FRED BURCKHARDT
Watchmaker & Jeweler,
LONE PINE, CAL.
Time pieces of all descriptions repaired and regulated, satisfaction guaranteed. Jewelry made to order. Firearms repaired and loaded.
☞All orders from any part of the country will be promptly attended to, at the most reasonable charges. At the old stand "Mechanics' Hall," Lone Pine.
FRED BURKHARDT.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CROCKER'S HOTEL.
BIG PINE - CAL
New House,
New Furniture,
Low Rates
☞Splendid hunting and fishing near by, in act, it is a veritable paradise for tourists and pleasure seekers.
Special attention given to the wants of every guest.
CROCKER BROS., Props.
sept-tf

ANTONS SALOON
KEELER, CAL.
BEER, WINES, LIQUORS and CIGARS
All kinds of Fancy Drinks, including pure water. A comfortable and pleasant Hall.
JOHN C. ANTON. Prop.

Pioneer Livery & Feed Stables.
INDEPENDENCE, CAL.
Having returned and resumed the management of the above well known feed and livery stables, patrons can be assured of finding there the best of Buggy Teams, Saddle Horses, and
Livery Accommodations
in general. Also, Hay and Grain for sale by the pound or ton.
O. I. MAIRS, Proprietor.

E. H. Edwards,
—DEALER IN—
General Merchandise,
LONE PINE,
INYO COUNTY - - - CALIFORNIA.

Inyo Freighting Company.
REGULAR LINE
Mojave To Bishop.
Teams leave Mojave and Bishop weekly. Goods delivered with regularity at all points on the line. Consign goods to the Company at Mojave.

J. W. Murphy.
BLACKSMITHING
—AND—
General Iron Work.
Wagons and Carriages Repaired.
HORSESHOEING, $2.00 for CASH
Shop on Edwards St., opposite the Court House, Independence.

BLACKSMITHING,
Horseshoeing, General Iron
—AND—
WAGON WORK.
PIONEER BLACKSMITH SHOP
Cor. Main St. & Depot Ave.,
INDEPENDENCE, CAL.
W. F. MATLACK.....PROPRIETOR.
Horseshoeing .....$2 00 for Cash
For particulars, call and see
W. F. MATLACK.

LONE PINE
Blacksmith Shop.
R. C. Spear, Prop'r
—ALL WORK ON—
MINING TOOLS,
FARMING IMPLEMENTS
& FREIGHTING OUTFITS
—PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO—
HORSE SHOEING,
CARRIAGE WORK,
GENERAL REPAIRING
☞All work attended to with neatness and despatch. Prices to suit the times.

BOOTS AND SHOES
MADE AND REPAIRED.
THE BEST MATERIAL.
FIRST-CLASS WORK.
Repairs done Promptly.
Prices Reasonable.
A. J. DAVIS,
nov 30-tf Independence,

MISCELLANEOUS.

Railroad Time Table.

CARSON & COLORADO R R

TAKING EFFECT, Sunday, May 10th, 18 9.

STATIONS.	From Mound House. No. 1		To Mound House. No. 2.
	Leave—		Arrives—
Mound House.....		12 30 p m	5 55 p. m
Dayton		1 00 p. m.	5 15 p. m.
Wabuska		3 05 p m.	3 00 p. m
Hawthorne		6 50 p. m.	11 20 a. m.
Luning		7 30 p. m.	10.05 a. m
Soda Springs.....		9 15 p. m.	9 05 a. m
Belleville.....		10 25 p. m.	7 45 a. m.
Candelaria.....	Ar.	11 10 p. m	Lv. 7 10 a. m
	No. 3.		No. 4.
	Leave—		Arrives—
Belleville.....		8 10 a. m	5 25 p. m
Benton		11 40 a. m	-
Bishop Creek		1 50 p. m.	11 00 a. m
Alvord.....		2 35 p. m.	10 00 a. m
Independence.....		4 10 p. m.	8 30 a. m.
Lone Pine.....		5 00 p. m.	7 40 a. m
Keeler.....	Ar.	5 45 p. m.	Lv. 7 00 a. m.

Trains 1 and 2 run daily.
Train 3 runs Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays.
Train 4 runs Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays

Passenger trains make close connection at Mound House with express trains of V. & T. R. R, which connect at Reno with east and west bound trains of Central Pacific Railroad.

Stage Connections:

AT HAWTHORNE with United States Stage Company's coaches for Aurora (26 miles); Bodie (37 miles); Lundy and Bridgeport.

AT LUNING (125 miles from Mound House) with Gilmer, Salsbury & Co's. tri weekly stages (leaving Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays) for Downeyville, Grantsville and Belmont.

AT CANDELARIA with U. S. Stage Co's. stages for Columbus (8 miles), Silver Peak, Montezuma, Alida Valley, Good Mountain, etc.

H. M. YERINGTON, General Superintendent.
R. J. LAWS, Assistant Superintendent.
D. A. BENDER, General Freight and Passenger Agent.

LUMBER. LUMBER.
SPRATT & CREASER,
BIG PINE.
—DEALERS IN—
ALL KINDS OF LUMBER.
Square timber of all dimensions for buildings and bridges.
CEILING,
FLOORING,
FENCING,
RUSTIC.
All kinds of tongued and grooved lumber.
Surfaced lumber of all kinds.
All orders filled promptly. Lumber delivered on board the cars at Alvord.
SPRATT & CREASER,
sept tf Big Pine, Inyo Co., Cal.

EDWARD CHENOT
Independence, Cal.,
INVITES PUBLIC ATTENTION TO HIS extensive Stock of
GENERAL MERCHANDISE
....Consisting of....
GROCERIES.
PROVISIONS
Tobacco, Cigars,
WINES AND LIQUORS
FLOUR & GRAIN
Together with an Assortment of
DRY GOODS AND CLOTHING
ETC., ETC
☞Buyers and consumer should call and examine my stock and prices before purchasing elsewhere.
E. CHENOT.
Independence, Cal., March 9, 1884.
n4761f

R. J. WHITTAKER
—PAINTER,—
BIG PINE, - - - - CAL.
HOUSE PAINTING,
SIGN WRITING,
PAPER HANGING,
GRAINING,
GILDING ON WOOD AND GLASS
Wagons Painted
The best of materials used and satisfaction guaranteed.

Wm. Muth-Rasmussen.
Bee Keeper.
Manufacturer of Comb Foundation.
Independence, Inyo Co. Cal

NATHAN RHINE.

NATHAN RHINE,
(Successor to Harris & Rhine.)
MERCHANT,
INDEPENDENCE
Inyo Co. Cal.
Wholesale & Retail
—DEALER IN—
General Merchandise
MY STOCK
CONSISTING OF
Almost every needed article is well calculated to satisfy the wants of everybody; and, as in the past, it will be our aim in the future to retain the extensive patronage enjoyed heretofore.
NATHAN RHINE.

NATHAN RHINE
BANKER
Independence, Inyo Co. Cal.
SELL EXCHANGE
—ON—
SAN FRANCISCO
Draw Direct
—ON—
NEW YORK,
LONDON, England.
BERLIN, FRANKFORT-on-the-Main, GERMANY.
I AM PREPARED TO TRANSACT ALL KINDS,
—OF—
GENERAL BANKING & EXCHANGE BUSINESS.
Wechsel in beliebigen Summen auf Berlin und Frankfurt am de Main. Deutsche Vollmachten gefertigt. Geldsendungen von und nach Deutschland besorgt.
AGENT FOR
WELLS FARGO & CO'S. EXPRESS
MUTUAL Life Insurance Co. OF NEW YORK
CAPITAL - - - - $5,000,000
LIVERPOOL AND LONDON AND GLOBE
INSURANCE - COMPANY
Capital - - - - - $21,000,000
NATHAN RHINE.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY, JUNE 6 1890

MARKET REPORT.

Bar silver, 104½
Lead, 4.12½
Copper, 15
Tin, 21.25
Sugar, .05½
Coffee, 17@ 19¾
Wool, foothill, 17 @ 20.

Religious Services.

Rev. J. H. De La Matyr will preach at Lone Pine on Sunday at 11 o'clock, a. m. at Georges Creek at 2:30 p. m. and at Independence at 7:30 o'clock evening; Sunday School at Independence and Lone Pine at 11 o'clock a. m.

DIED.

McGovern—At Georges Creek, June 2, to Mr. and Mrs. A. G. McGovern, a daughter.

COURT NOTES.

Superior Court of Inyo County California H.n. John A. Hannah, Judge.

SATURDAY, May 31st.

Owen Neylon vs. John F. Milner, Administrator—Filed demurrer.

Estate of Albert H. Johnson, deceased—Decree of final distribution.

Estate and guardianship of Rafael Diaz et als.—A. A. Diaz appointed guardian.

MONDAY, June 2d.

A. N. Bell, Administrator, vs. Jeremiah Fitzgerald—Clerk's entry of Defendant's default.

TUESDAY, June 3d.

Broder et als. vs. Conklin et al.—Filed affidavit of service of copy of exceptions to Receiver's report.

THURSDAY, June 5th.

Agnes Love vs. James H. Brown—Filed demurrer.

Mr. James Brown of Bishop was at Independence a few days this week.

Frank Cox came in from Darwin last Thursday. He is very sick and is here for medical treatment.

Frank Densmore has been very sick for two or three weeks past, but is now regaining health.

Miss Alice Rhine, accompanied by her sisters, Misses Sophie and Emily, arrived at Independence last Monday from San Francisco.

The Odd Fellows election last evening resulted as follows: J. Alexander, N. G.; W. James Jr., V. G.; J. D. Blair, Sec. and P. H. Mack Treas.

Mrs. I. Harris and her daughters, Misses Lena and Hulda Harris, arrived at Independendence on Monday. They expect to stay about six weeks.

A. R. Conklin left town yesterday for Monache. He is attending to the renting of the meadows and will be absent from town about three weeks.

A special meeting of the Board of Supervisors is called for next Monday evening at Independence. The object of the meeting is to consider the coming trial of the Elliott case.

Mr. G. P. Rixford, Treasurer of the Inyo Marble Company, arrived at the quarry on Monday from San Francisco. He came up to Independence yesterday and returned to the quarry this afternoon.

A test case has resulted in confirming the law that a child may be refused admission to the public schools if it has not been vaccinated, and shall not be allowed to attend school till it has been vaccinated.

On Tuesday an election for school trustee was held at Independence and resulted in the selection of E. Robinson. At Camp Independence J. White Smith, C. A. Walter and George Lewis were elected trustees.

D. A. Bender, General Freight and Passenger Agent of the C. and C., has telegraphed County Clerk Mack that the same rates of fare will be granted witnesses in the Elliott trial as before, namely, $35.00 each.

The charge for all political announcements in the INYO INDEPENDENT is ten dollars. All announcements will be gratefully received and prominently displayed, but no deviation will be made from the regular rate.

Mr. A. Stecker is under engagement to go to Sylvania and take charge of constructing the buildings about the furnaces and such other buildings as the Company may erect at the mines. Mr. Stecker expects to leave Independence and go to Sylvania within a day or two.

An interesting service will be given by the Sunday School at the M. E. Church on Sunday. The pupils of the school have practiced diligently for some weeks past and are now prepared to give a pleasing concert. The service will begin at 11 o'clock a. m. Everybody cordially invited to attend.

A. G. McGovern has been looking over the ground with a view of building a road from Citrus to Saline Valley. He says a road can be made across the Inyo Range by way of Piute Monument that will be seventy miles less on the round trip than by way of Alvord. He says further that a tolerably good road can be made without great expense.

A. R. Conklin Esq. gives notice that he is a candidate for the office of Superior Judge, subject to the Republican nomination. It is known to every voter in Inyo county that Mr. Conklin is an able and experienced lawyer. He has had experience on the bench as well as at the bar, that would fit him for the office of Superior Judge.

It has not yet been decided whether the race between Rosenthal and Ober shall be run on the fourth or the fifth of July; this will depend on how trains are run. Both sides have put up the forfeit money, and the men are diligently training for the race. A large number of friends of Rosenthal and other visitors will be here from the north, and Independence must see to it that that the strangers are entertained with right cordial hospitality. Whether our man win or lose it is incumbent upon us to entertain the visitors heartily.

The Elliott Incubus.

On Sunday last District Attorney Gill had a telegram from the District Attorney of Kern County, stating that another trial of Elliott had been set for June 23d, two weeks from next Monday. By letter Mr. Gill is further informed that Elliott has been admitted to bail in the sum of $10,000. It is not probable that he can get bail in any such amount. Mr. Gill has written to the District Attorney of Kern County requesting him to ask for a postponement of the case till after the second Tuesday in July. Our County Board of Equalization meets the first week in July, and some who may be summoned as witnesses may want to appear before that body. Judge Arick, of Kern, has written that he will take a vacation in July, and it is not at all certain that the request for postponement will be granted. Our farmers were taken away at their seed time, and now they may be forced away from home when their hay is ready to cut. Elliott is a curse to Inyo County; pity he was not hanged on the day he murdered John B. White. On Wednesday evening District Attorney Gill got a telegram from the District Attorney of Kern County, to the effect that the Superior Judge of Kern had refused to postpone the trial of the Elliott case. The people of Inyo might as well migrate to Bakersfield and camp out there till this case shall be ended; they would have some satisfaction in the end. Elliott is certain to be turned loose and a week afterward will get drunk and kill some of the fools who are now so eager to set him free. The people of Kern will hang him at once and then we can all come home again feeling safe.

An Expensive Failure.

The Mount Cory mill and reduction works, near Hawthorne, Nevada, is a fine illustration of how mining enterprises are ruined by superintendents who are either fools or knaves. The mill and reduction works cost seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars. They are located several miles from the mine, at a place where there is neither fuel nor water, while at the mine there is plenty of both. The machinery was not at all suited to the character of the ore. The Virginia Chronicle says a Candelaria mine owner made the statement that he shipped fifty tons of ore from that district to the Mt. Cory mill for reduction. After the ore was dumped into the feeders or hoppers, nothing was ever afterwards seen either of the ore or the metal it contained, and it is supposed that the pulverized ore was blown away in passing through the dust chambers. When Eastern people invest money in these enterprises they often insist upon the appointment as the Superintendent of some man they know. It may be that the person selected is a good accountant and honest but entirely ignorant of all pertaining to mines or mills. The result is the Mt. Cory and many similar failures.

18th District Fair.

The Directors of the 18th District Agricultural Association met at Independence last Saturday. After consideration it was decided to hold the next Fair of the Association at Independence, beginning on Tuesday, September 23d, and continuing four days. No proposition for the Fair had been received from any other town in the District; therefore the Directors accepted the offer from Independence. It would have been very easy for any other town to have got the Fair, as the sum offered by Independence was but $340. This would seem to imply that the people of Independence do not attach much importance to having the Fair at all, but now that it is so ordered the amount of subscriptions will be considerably increased.

Ready for Shipment.

At the marble quarry thirty car-loads of marble are now ready for shipment. Different colored marbles are in the lot and all of them are very handsome. The new mill on the Truckee river is rapidly approaching completion and in a few weeks will be ready for work. The mill is within such easy reach of San Francisco that dealers and marble workers need not carry large stocks, but can give their orders at the office of the company in San Francisco and have them filled as promptly as though the marble was kept in stock in the city. The beautiful marbles of this quarry are now so well known that there will be plenty of demand for them as soon as the mill is in operation.

Ruin.

Within the past few days it has been proven that foxtail, or tickle grass, has made its appearance in Owens Valley. If this weed is not attacked at once and rooted out it will spread so rapidly that within a year or two the whole valley will be covered with it. It will overrun alfalfa in two seasons and make the hay nearly worthless. In the San Juaquin Valley the first cutting of each season on thousands of acres is raked up on the ground and burned; the alfalfa is so full of foxtail that no animal, not even a hog, can eat it. Such loss as this would ruin our farmers; better try to destroy the weed now than wait till it gets beyond control, and this very quickly.

Hon. John A. Hannah gives notice that he is a candidate for re-election to the office of Superior Judge. In 1871 Judge Hannah was elected County Judge under the old Constitution and at each subsequent election he was again the choice of the people for office up till 1880. When the present Constitution went into effect he was elected Superior Judge and has been continued in office up to the present time. That long service has made him familiar with the duties of the office, and it is conceded that he has always discharged those duties in a conscientious manner and to the best of his ability.

The census enumerators are now at work, and many of the questions they are compelled to ask are grossly impertinent, useless and stupid. Many questions are repeated several times over, and, of course, the same answers are returned. All this will greatly increase the cost of the work and delay the publication of facts that would be of real value. Many of the questions are such as will receive misleading answers, and will therefore diminish the value of the whole work. There is evident and painful lack of common sense in the preparation of the questions.

No matter what theories may be offered to account for the fearful railroad tragedy at Oakland last Friday, the fact remains that it was caused by stupid carelessness. Had the train men and bridge-tender been intelligent, careful and strictly sober men, thirteen human lives would not have been sacrificed, hearts and homes would not now be full of sorrow. There have been fearful accidents and loss of life that human foresight and care could not have guarded against; but as a rule these terrible occurrences can all be traced to some neglect of duty, or the stupidity of a cheap employé, or to drunkenness, and this Oakland horror will be found to be no exception to the rule.

Meteorological Summary for May, 1890. Keeler, Cal.

Mean Barometer	29.789
Mean Temperature	69°
Highest Temperature	94°
Lowest Temperature	39°
Greatest daily range of temperature	31°
Prevailing direction of wind, S. E.
Extreme velocity of wind, direction and date, 34 miles N. W. 13th.
Total precipitation	0.20
Number of cloudless days	22
Number of partly cloudy days	6
Number of cloudy days	3
Dates of frost, none.

D. C. GRUNOW,
Private, Signal Corps.

The venire for jurors to try the Elliott case and subpœnas for witnesses are already issued. The time for trial is fixed, and it is therefore altogether unlikely that a postponement will be granted. To reach Bakersfield on June 23d witnesses must leave here on Thursday, June 19th.

Mr. and Mrs. Auffray arrived at Independence last Monday from San Francisco. The lady is wellknown in America and Europe as Edith O'Gorman; she is sister to John S. Gorman Esq., of Camp Independence, where herself and husband are now visiting. This is the first time the brotner and sister have met in about eighteen years.

Timothy P. Greenleaf, James Wheeler and Isaac Snell were all killed at Park City, Utah, last week. The men were on a cage going down a mine shaft. The cage was jammed in the shaft by a large piece of timber. The cable was piled up on top of the cage, which at last got loose and plunged down three hundred feet. The men were fearfully mangled.

George M. Gill Esq. declares himself a candidate for the office of Superior Judge. Mr. Gill is so well known to the people of the County that nothing could be said of him but what is already familiar to everybody. He had good experience at Stockton as a practicing attorney, and as District Attorney he is familiar with the business of our own County.

The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Stevens Ditch Company was held at Independence last Saturday. A. C. Stevens, P. H. Mack, W. S. Enos, H. J. Robinson and J. V. Skinner were elected as directors. The following officers were elected: A. C. Stevens, President; P. H. Mack, Secretary; W. S. Enos, Treasurer. The Board retained J. W. P. Laird Esq. as Attorney for the Company.

Mr. John S Gorman of Independence makes public declaration that he is a candidate for the office of Sheriff. To all citizens, irrespective of party, Mr. Gorman should be an acceptable candidate, for the reason that the capacity he has shown in the management of private business will make him a valuable public servant. To Republicans he needs no commendation, as his fidelity to his party is beyond question

A State Convention was held at Carson, Nevada, last Thursday. The object of the Convention was to organize a systematic effort for the relief of the people of the United States from the wrong inflicted upon them by the demonetization of silver. It is earnestly to be hoped that similar action may be taken in all the other States of the Union. The people are powerful enough to put an end to the great wrong that is now being done them, but their power can be made available only through such organization as effected in Nevada.

POLITICAL ANNOUNCEMENTS.

All announcements under this head will be charged for at the uniform rate of Ten Dollars

For Superior Judge.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Superior Judge, subject to the action of the Republican County Convention.

GEORGE M. GILL.

For Superior Judge.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Superior Judge, Subject to the action of the Democratic county convention.

JOHN A. HANNAH.

For Superior Judge.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY DECLARE myself as a candidate for the office of Superior Judge, subject to the action of the Republican county convention.

A. R. CONKLIN.

For Sheriff.

ANNOUNCEMENNT IS HEREBY MADE that I respectfully declare myself as a candidate for the office of Sheriff, subject to the action of the Republican County Convention.

JOHN S. GORMAN.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Lake View Hotel
Keeler, Cal.
John Barnes, Prop'r.

First-class hotel in every respect. The table always supplied with the best in the market. Clean, neely furnished rooms. Transient visitors will receive every courtesy and attention.

THE BAR
—Is constantly supplied with the finest—
Wines,
Liquors,
& Cigars.

IRWIN'S SALOON
Cor. Edwards and Market Streets,
Independence . Cal.

THE PUBLIC GENERALLY ARE RESPECTFULLY invited to call and inspect my establishment, which has been entirely rebuilt an furnished in a style second to none on this side of the mountains. A SPLENDID NEW BILLIARD TABLE provided for the amusement of patrons.

THE BAR
Is supplied with the most celebrated brands of pure Wines and Liquors and the Finest Havana Cigars.

JOHN C. IRWIN, Proprietor.
feb12tf

WEINSTOCK & LUBIN:

Easy Chair Shopping.

The Catalogue sells to the easy chair shoppers as readily as our best salesman sells to a customer at the counter. Why should it not? Clear in its statements, honest in import, replete with news,—it deals direct and above all is complete. The latest devices, the sensible household necessities,—what you need and what you would like to have,—are all there in beautiful illustrations and interesting descriptions. It's a helpful book for young or old, rich or poor, and free for the asking.

If you send an order you may rest assured of getting the same goods, the same styles, the same prices as if present in Sacramento. For how else can we hold your trade from year to year except by doing our best in every transaction?

UNDERWEAR—It really doesn't pay to make muslin underwear at home when 98 cents will buy a complete set, consisting of chemise, gown and drawers. Good strong muslin nicely trimmed. By mail, 22c. extra.

The price of the gown in the above set, if sold separately, 48c., neatly trimmed with tucks and embroidery.

KID SHOES, $2—Ladies' soft kid button shoes, medium toes and low heels, neat and dressy, price $2. By mail, 20c. extra. Sizes, 2½ to 8, and widths, D. E. and E E.

MEN'S TROUSERS, $3 50—We are making a great specialty of these goods. Buying hundreds of pairs at a time, and from one of the largest manufacturers in the country, we are able to give unusual value for that money. The trousers are neatly cut and well made of good material. In ordering give waist measure and length of inside seam of leg, and state whether you prefer medium or dark patterns. You will get in return a better pair of pants than you have ever had for anything like the same money. Price, $3.50. Postage, 30c. extra.

APRONS, 25c.—Ladies' cream-colored aprons, with fancy open work stripes, and linen lace, one yard long, wide strings. Price, 25c. Postage, 5c. extra.

SEERSUCKER DRESSES—Fancy striped Seersucker dresses, Mother Hubbard style, for 6 months to 2 years. Price, 25c. Postage, 5c. extra.

Weinstock, Lubin & Co.
WEARING APPAREL FOR MEN, WOMEN AND CHILDREN, HOUSEHOLD SUPPLIES, TOYS, SPORTING GOODS, NOTIONS, ETC.
400 to 412 K Street, Sacramento, Cal

JEWELRY, DIAMONDS, WATCHES.
Hyman Fredrick, Reno, Nev.

The attention of the people of Inyo and neighboring counties is respectfully invited to the
LARGEST AND BEST STOCK
of Watches, Diamonds, Ear and Finger Rings, Bracelets and all other kinds of Jewelry this side of San Francisco. Knives, Forks, Spoons, and other Table Ware of the Best quality.
PRICES DEFY OUTSIDE COMPETITION.
All repairs done promptly and in a workmanlike manner.
Address orders and packages to
HYMAN FREDRICK, Jeweler,
m30-tf RENO, NEVADA.

MISCELLANEOUS.

NORMAN HOUSE,
Independence, - - Cal.
New House.
New Furniture.
Low Rates.
Special attention will be given to secure the comfort of guests.
O. L. MAIRS, Prop.
feb12tf

BELL'S
Flouring Mills,
A. N. BELL, Prop.
TRY BELL'S
EXTRA PATENT ROLLER FLOUR.
Having added Patent Rolls and other improvements o our Mills, I am now turning out Flour that is fully
Equal to the Best.
Corn, Oats and Barley Cracked on Short Notice.
A. N. BELL,
Independence, Cal.

PIONEER BREWERY
INDEPENDENCE.
BEER ICE COLD.
The Bar is supplied with the Best of all kinds of Liquors and Cigars.
The Coolest Half in the town. Call in and see what comfort you can have this hot weather.
PHILIP GEHRIG, PROPRIETOR

MISCELLANEOUS.

Sulphur & Borax Baths
AT SODA SPRINGS, NEVADA
On Ogden & Colorado Railroad
These valuable Springs offer special
INDUCEMENT TO INVALIDS
THE WATER CONTAINS
SULPHUR, MAGNESIA AND BORAX.
And Is Very Strengthening and Cleansing
When used for bathing purposes.
THE BATH HOUSES HAVE BEEN REBUILT
—And a large—
SWIMMING : BATH
Added, where those wishing to do so can take an invigorating plunge.
Excellent Accommodations
—AND—
Board by the Day, Week, or the Month

One of the BEST Telescopes in the world. FREE Our facilities are unequaled, and to introduce our superior goods we will send FREE TO ONE PERSON in each locality, as above. Only those who write to us at once can make sure of the chance. All you have to do in return is to show our goods to those who call—your neighbors and those around you. The beginning of this advertisement shows the small end of the telescope. The following cut gives the appearance of it reduced to about the fifteth part of its bulk. It is a grand, double size telescope, as large as is easy to carry. We will also show you how you can make from $3 to $10 a day at least, from the start, without experience. Better write at once. We pay all express charges. Address, H. HALLETT & CO., Box 880, PORTLAND, MAINE.

IF YOU WISH A GOOD REVOLVER PURCHASE ONE OF SMITH & WESSON'S

Finest small arms ever manufactured and the first choice of all experts. In calibres 32, 38 and 44-100. Single or double action, Safety Hammerless and Target models. Best quality wrought steel, carefully inspected for workmanship and stock. Unrivaled for finish, durability and accuracy. Do not be deceived by cheap malleable iron imitations often sold for the genuine article. They are unreliable and dangerous. The SMITH & WESSON REVOLVERS are stamped upon the barrels with firm's name, address and dates of patents, and are guaranteed perfect. Insist upon having them, and if your dealer cannot supply you, an order sent to address below will receive prompt attention. Descriptive catalogue and prices upon application.
SMITH & WESSON,
Springfield, Mass.

BISHOP ADVERTISEMENTS.

A. COHN & CO.
DEALERS IN—
General Merchandise.
—ALL KINDS OF—
Farm Implements
—AND—
--MACHINERY--
Farm Produce
—OF ALL KINDS BOUGHT—
Orders for all kinds of supplies needed in mining camps promptly filled.

GIVEN & INGALLS.
—DEALERS IN—
FARM PRODUCE.

J. E. DUNLAP.
Harness Maker.
Harness of all kinds, from the lightest to the heaviest. Any kind of new work made promptly and of the best material. Repairing done on the shortest notice. A full line of saddles and harness.

Valley View Hotel.
O. H. Hill, Prop'r.
A New House Newly Furnished Throughout. Guests will receive every courtesy and attention.

NEVADA STABLE
BISHOP.
Opposite Valley View Hotel, Main St
In the Livery Department nothing is kept but safe and good traveling carriage and saddle horses. Conveyances of all kinds first-class. Good attendance and the best of hay and grain for all animals boarding at the stable
S. P. SMITH, Prop.

BISHOP CREEK
BREWERY,
MUNZINGER, PHILLIPPAY & CO.,
Proprietors.
All the appliances and conveniences of First Class Brewery, including a beautiful grove for out-door parties.
Customers supplied on all points
Of the C. & C. Railroad.
Send orders to
MUNZINGER, PHILLIPPAY & CO.
Bishop Creek, Cal.

F. E. Bosworth,
Watchmaker & Jeweler.
BISHOP, CAL.
Fine and Complicated Watch Repairing a Specialty.
Guns, Sewing Machines, Organs and Music Boxes Put in Perfect Condition and Warranted.
I Prefer to do all work at your house and will call if you will write to me at Bishop.

A NEW DEAL!
BISHOP CREEK
Livery. Feed & Sale Stable.
ROBERT O'NEIL, Prop'r.
Horses are boarded by the day, week or month. Stock bought and sold.
Bishop Creek, Cal., Nov. 20, 1889.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Newest Styles
OF
Fashionable Clothing
Dry Goods, Ladies' Wear, etc., etc
AT
L. WOOD'S
CASH STORE
A small stock of fresh groceries & canned goods constantly renewed.
Fresh Produce, and Grain Flour, etc., constantly on hand.
CANDIES,
PEANUTS,
WALNUTS,
TOYS!
THE CASH STORE
Is Where You Get
WORTH OF YOUR MONEY

THOMAS & HILL,
—DEALERS IN—
GENERAL MERCHANDISE
BIG PINE, INYO COUNTY, CAL,
We keep constantly on hand goods of all kinds needed in a country home. We order only First-Class Goods and ask no more than a reasonable profit. Give us a trial.
THOMAS & HILL.

J. FORBES. W. D. TOBEY.
FORBES & TOBEY,
HAWTHORNE, NEV.,
—DEALERS IN—
LUMBER
OF ALL KINDS.
DOORS,
SHINGLES,
SASH AND BLINDS,
LATH,
RUSTIC
MOULDINGS,
DRESSED LUMBER.
Matched and Dressed Flooring.
sept 14-tf

COLONEL QUARITCH, V.C.

By H. RIDER HAGGARD

"Now what did he mean by that—what the devil did he mean?" said Mr. Quest with a gasp as he sat down again. "Surely," he thought, "the man cannot have got hold of anything about Edith. Impossible, impossible; if he had he would have said more, he would not have confined himself to hinting—that would take a cleverer man; he would have shown his hand. He must have been speaking at random to frighten me, I suppose. By heavens, what a thing it would be if he had got hold of something. Ruin, absolute ruin! I'll settle up this business as soon as I can, and leave the country; I can't stand the strain, it's like having a sword over one's head. I've half a mind to leave it in somebody else's hands and go at once. No, for that would look like running away. It must be all rubbish; how could he know anything about it?"

So shaken was he, however, that though he tried once, and yet again, he found it impossible to settle himself down to work till he had taken a couple of glasses of sherry from the decanter in the cupboard; and even as he did so he wondered if the shadow of the sword disturbed him so much, how he would be affected if it ever was his lot to face the glimmer of its naked blade.

No further letter came to Edward Cossey from the castle, but, impatient as he was to do so, another fortnight elapsed before he was able to go up to see Ida and her father. At last, one fine December morning, he was for the first time since his accident allowed to take carriage exercise, and his first drive was to Honham castle.

When the squire, who was sitting in the vestibule writing letters, saw a poor, pallid man, rolled up in fur, with a white face scarred with shot marks and black rings round his large dark eyes, being helped from a closed carriage, he did not know who it was, and called to Ida, who was passing along the passage, to tell him.

Of course she recognized her admirer instantly, and wished to leave the room, but her father prevented her.

"You got into this mess," he said, forgetting how and for whom she got into it, "and now you must get out of it in your own way."

When Edward, having been assisted into the room, saw Ida standing there, all the blood in his wasted body seemed to rush for a few seconds into his pallid face.

"How do you do, Mr. Cossey?" she said. "I am glad to see you out, and hope that you are better."

"I beg your pardon, I cannot hear you," he said, turning round; "I am stone deaf in my right ear."

A pang of pity shot through her heart. Edward Cossey, feeble, dejected and limping from the jaws of death, was a very different being to Edward Cossey in the full bloom of his youth and health and strength. Indeed, so much did his condition appeal to her sympathies, that for the first time since her mental attitude toward him had been one of entire indifference, she looked on him with out repugnance.

Meanwhile her father had shaken him by the hand, and led him to an armchair before the fire.

Then, after a few questions and answers as to his accident and merciful recovery, there came a pause.

At length he broke it. "I have come to see you both," he said, with a faint, nervous smile, "about the letters you wrote me. If my condition would have allowed it I would have come before, but it would not."

"Yes," said the squire, attentively, while Ida folded her hands in her lap and sat still with her eyes fixed upon the fire.

"It seems," he went on, "that the old proverb has applied to my case as to so many others—being absent, I have suffered. I understand from these letters that my engagement to you, Ida, is broken off?"

She made a motion of assent.

"And that it is to be broken off on the ground that, having been forced by a combination of circumstances which I cannot enter into, to transfer the mortgages to Mr. Quest, consequently, I broke my bargain with you?"

"Yes," said Ida.

"Very well, then, I come to tell you both that I am ready to find the money to meet those mortgages and pay them off."

"Ah!" said the squire.

"Also, that I am ready to do what I offered to do before, and which, as my father is now dead, I am perfectly in a position to do—namely, to settle two hundred thousand pounds absolutely upon Ida, and, indeed, generally to do anything else that she or you may wish," and he looked at the squire.

"It is no use looking at me for an answer," said he, with some irritation. "I have no voice in the matter."

He turned to Ida, who put her hand before her face and shook her head.

"Perhaps," said Edward, somewhat bitterly, "I should not be far wrong if I said that Col. Quaritch has more to do with your change of mind than the fact of the transfer of these mortgages."

She dropped her hand and looked him full in the face.

"You are quite right, Mr. Cossey," she said, boldly. "Col. Quaritch and I are attached to each other, and we hope one day to be married."

"Confound that fellow Quaritch," growled the squire.

Edward winced visibly at this outspoken statement.

"Ida," he said, "I make one last appeal to you; I am devoted to you with all my heart—so devoted that though it may seem foolish to say so, especially before your father, I really think that I would rather not have recovered from my accident than that I should have recovered for this. I will give you everything that a woman can want, and my money will make your family what it was centuries ago, the greatest in the country side. I don't pretend to have been a saint—perhaps you may have heard something against me in that way—or to be anything out of the common. I am only an ordinary everyday man, but I am devoted to you. Think, then, before you refuse me altogether."

"I have thought, Mr. Cossey," answered Ida, almost passionately; "I have thought until I am tired of thinking, and I do not consider that it is fair that you should press me like this, especially before my father."

"Then," he said, rising with difficulty, "I have said all that I have to say, and done all that I can do. I shall still hope that you may change your mind; I shall not yet abandon hope. Good-by."

She touched his hand, and then the squire offering him his arm, he went down the steps to his carriage.

"I hope, Mr. de la Molle," he said, "that bad as things are for me, if they should take a turn, I shall have your support."

"My dear sir," answered the squire, "I tell you frankly that I wish my daughter would marry you. As I said before, it would for obvious reasons be desirable. But Ida is not like ordinary women. When she sets her mind upon a thing she sets it like a flint. Things may change, however, and that is all I can say. Yes, if I were you, I should remember that this is a changeable world and that women are the most changeable things in it."

When the carriage had gone he re-entered the vestibule. Ida, who was going away much disturbed in mind, saw him coming and knew from the expression of his face that there was going to be trouble. With characteristic courage she turned, determined to brave it out.

CHAPTER XXXII.

THE SQUIRE SPEAKS HIS MIND.

For a moment or more her father fidgeted about, moving his papers backward and forward, but saying nothing.

At last he spoke. "You have taken a most serious and painful step, Ida," he said. "Of course, you have a right to do as you please; you are of full age, and I cannot expect that you will consider me or your family in your matrimonial engagements, but at the same time I think that it is my duty to point out to you what it is that you are doing. You are refusing one of the finest matches in England in order to marry a broken down, middle aged, half pay colonel, a man who can hardly support you, whose part in life is played, or who is apparently too idle to seek another."

Here Ida's eyes flashed ominously, but she made no comment, being apparently afraid to trust herself to speak.

"You are doing this," went on her father, working himself up as he spoke, "in the face of my wishes, and with the knowledge that your action will bring your family, to say nothing of your father, to utter and irretrievable ruin."

"Surely, father, surely," broke in Ida, almost in a cry, "you would not have me marry one man when I love another. When I made the promise I had not become attached to Col. Quaritch."

"Love! pshaw!" said her father. "Don't talk to me in that sentimental and school girl way—you are too old for it. I am a plain man, and I believe in family affection and in duty, Ida. Love, as you call it, is only too often another word for self will and selfishness, and other things that we are better without."

"I can understand, father," answered Ida, struggling to keep her temper under this jobation, "that my refusal to marry Mr. Cossey is disagreeable to you for obvious reasons, though it is not so very long ago that you detested him yourself. But I do not see why an honest woman's affections for another man should be talked of as though there was something shameful about it. It is all very well to sneer at 'love,' but after all a woman is flesh and blood; she is not a chattel or a slave girl, and marriage is not like anything else—it means, as you must know, many things to a woman. There is no magic about marriage to make that which is unrighteous righteous, or that which is impure pure."

"There," said her father, "it is no good your lecturing to me on marriage, Ida. If you do not want to marry Cossey I can't force you to. If you want to ruin me and your family and yourself you must do so. But there is one thing. While it is over me, which I suppose will not be for much longer, my house is my own, and I will not have that colonel of yours hanging about it, and I shall write to him to say so. You are your own mistress, and if you choose to walk over to church and marry him you can do so, but it will be done without my consent, which of course, however, is an unnecessary formality. Do you hear me, Ida?"

"If you have quite done, father," she answered, coldly, "I should like to go before I say something which I might be sorry for. Of course, you can write what you like to Col. Quaritch, and I shall write to him, too."

Her father made no answer beyond sitting down at his table and grabbing viciously at a pen. So she left the room, indignant, indeed, but with as heavy a heart as any woman could carry in her breast.

"DEAR SIR," wrote the not altogether unnaturally indignant squire,—"I have been informed by my daughter Ida of her entanglement with you. It is one which, for reasons that I need not enter into, is most distasteful to me, as well as, I am sorry to say, ruinous to Ida herself and to her family. Ida is of full age and must, of course, do as she pleases with herself. But I cannot consent to become a party to what I disapprove of so strongly, and this being the case I must beg you to cease your visits to this house. I am, sir, Your obedient servant,

"JAMES DE LA MOLLE."

Ida, as soon as she had sufficiently recovered herself, also wrote to the colonel. She told him the whole story, keeping nothing back, and ended her letter thus:

"Never, dear Harold, was a woman in a greater difficulty, and never had I more need of help and advice. You know and have good reason to know how hateful this marriage would be to me, loving you as I do entirely and alone, and having no higher desire than to become your wife. But, of course, I see the painfulness of the position. I am not so selfish as my father believes or says that he believes. I quite understand how great would be the material advantage to my father if I could bring myself to marry Mr. Cossey. You may remember I told you once that I thought no woman had a right to prefer her own happiness to the prosperity of her whole family. But, Harold, it is easy to speak thus, and very, very hard to act up to it. What am I to do? What am I to do? And yet how can I in common fairness ask you to answer that question? God help us both, Harold! Is there no way out of it?"

These letters were both duly received by Harold Quaritch on the following morning, and threw him into a fever of anxiety and doubt. He was a just and reasonable man, and, knowing something of human nature, under the circumstances did not altogether wonder at the squire's violence and irritation. The financial position of the De la Molle family was little, if anything, short of desperate; and he could easily understand how maddening it must be to a man like Mr. De la Molle, who loved Honham—which had for centuries been the habitation of his race—better than he loved anything on earth, to suddenly realize that it must pass away from him and his forever, merely because a woman happened to prefer one man to another, and that man, to his view, the less eligible of the two. So keenly did he realize this, indeed, that he greatly doubted whether or no he was justified in continuing his advances to Ida. Finally, after much thought, he wrote to the squire as follows:

"I have received your letter, and also one from Ida, and I hope you will believe me when I say that I quite understand and sympathize with the motives which evidently led you to write it. I am, unfortunately—although I never regretted it till now—a poor man, whereas my rival suitor is a very rich one. I shall, of course, strictly obey your injunctions; and, moreover, I can assure you that, whatever my own feelings may be in the matter, I shall do nothing, either directly or indirectly, to influence Ida's ultimate decision. She must decide for herself."

To Ida herself he also wrote at length:

"DEAREST IDA," he ended, "I can say nothing more; you must judge for yourself; and I shall accept your decision loyally whatever it may be. It is unnecessary for me now to tell you how inextricably my happiness in life is interwoven with that decision, but at the same time I do not wish to influence it. It certainly to my mind does not seem right that a woman should be driven into sacrificing her whole life to secure any monetary advantage either for herself or for others, but then the world is full of things that are not right. I can give you no advice, for I do not know what advice I ought to give. I try to put myself out of the question and to consider you, and you only; but even then I fear that my judgment is not impartial. At any rate, the less we see of each other the better at present, for I do not wish to appear to be taking any undue advantage. If we are destined to pass our lives together, this temporary estrangement will not matter, and if, on the other hand, we are doomed to a life long separation, the sooner we begin the better. It is a cruel world, and sometimes (as it does now) my heart sinks within me as from year to year I struggle on toward a happiness that ever vanishes when I stretch out my hand to clasp it; but if I feel thus what must you feel who have so much more to bear? My dearest love, what can I say? I can only say with you, God help us!"

This letter did not tend to raise Ida's spirits. Evidently her lover saw that there was another side to the question—the side of duty, and was too honest to hide it from her. She had said that she would have nothing to do with Edward Cossey, but she was well aware that the matter was still an open one. What should she do? What ought she to do? Abandon her love, desecrate herself and save her father and her house, or cling to her love and leave the rest to chance? It was a cruel position, nor did the lapse of time tend to make it less cruel. Her father went about the place pale and melancholy—all his jovial manner had vanished beneath the pressure of impending ruin. He treated her with studious and old fashioned courtesy, but she could see that he was bitterly aggrieved by her conduct, and that the anxiety of his position was telling on his health. If this was the case now, what, she wondered, would happen in the spring, when proceedings were actually taken to sell the place?

One bright, cold morning she was walking with her father through the fields down the footpath that led to the church, and it would have been hard to say which of the two looked the paler or more miserable. On the previous day the squire had had an interview with Mr. Quest, and made as much of an appeal ad misericordiam to him as his pride would allow, only to find the lawyer very courteous, very regretful, but as hard as adamant. Also that very morning a letter had reached him from London announcing that the last hope of raising money to meet the mortgages to be paid off had failed.

The path ran along toward the road past a line of oaks. Half way down this line they came across George, who, with his marking instrument in his hand, was contemplating some of the trees which it was proposed to take down.

"What are you doing there?" said the squire, in a melancholy voice.

"Marking, squire."

"Then you may as well save yourself the trouble, for the place will belong to somebody else before the sap is up in those oaks."

"Now, squire, don't you begin to talk like that, for I don't believe it. That ain't a-going to happen."

"Ain't a-going to happen, you stupid fellow, ain't a-going to happen?" answered the squire, with a dreary laugh. "Why, look there"—he pointed to a dog cart which had drawn up on the road in such a position that they could see it without its occupants seeing them—"they are taking notes already."

George looked and so did Ida. Mr. Quest was the driver of the dog cart, which he had pulled up in such a position as to command a view of the castle, and his companion, in whom George recognized a well known London auctioneer who sometimes did business in these parts, was standing up, an open notebook in his hand, alternately looking at the noble towers of the gateway and jotting down memoranda.

"D—n him, and so he be," said George, utterly forgetting his manners.

Ida looked up and saw her father's eyes fixed upon her with an expression that seemed to say: "See, you willful young woman, see the ruin you have brought upon us."

Ida turned away; she could not bear it, and that very night she came to a determination, which was in due course communicated to Harold, and him alone. That determination was to let things be for the present, upon the chance of something happening by means of which the dilemma might be solved. But if nothing happened—and indeed it did not seem probable to her that anything would happen—then she would sacrifice herself at the last moment. She believed, indeed she knew, that she could always call Edward Cossey back to her if she liked. It was a compromise, and, like all compromises, had an element of weakness; but it gave time, and time to her was like water to the dying.

"Sir," said George presently, "it's Boisingham quarter sessions the day after to-morrow, ain't it?" (Mr. de la Molle was chairman of quarter sessions.)

"Yes, of course it is."

George thought for a minute.

"I'm thinking, squire, that if I aren't wanted that day I want to go up to Lunnon about a bit of business."

"Go up to London!" said the squire; "why, what do you want to do there? You were in London the other day."

"Well, squire," he answered, looking inexpressibly shy, "that ain't no matter of nobody's. It's a bit of private affairs."

"Oh, all right," said the squire, his interest dying out; "you are always full of mysteries," and he continued his walk.

But George shook his fist in the direction of the road down which the dog cart had driven.

"Ah! you devil," he said, alluding to Mr. Quest, "if I don't make Boisingham, yes, and all England, too hot to hold you, my name ain't George. I'll give you what for, my cuckoo, that I will!"

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

—A young English woman, Miss Richardson, three years ago opened a "Reformatory Hospital" in Bombay, India, which is mostly sustained from her private means, and is directly under her management.

—Switzerland has 1,162 Sunday-schools, with 5,459 teachers and 84,000 scholars. Sweden has 3,340 Sunday-schools, with 15,000 teachers and 220,000 scholars. Australia has 140 Sunday-schools, with 312 teachers and 4,519 scholars.

—Hebron, in Palestine, has a population of 12,000 inhabitants, of which about 2,000 are Jews. A Protestant Christian Mission has lately been commenced among the Jews. It is under the direction of D. C. Joseph, of Jerusalem, the superintendent of the "Evangelical Mission to Israel."

—The number of Christian churches at Constantinople is very large, namely, 145. Fourteen of these are Protestant, 50 Greek Orthodox, 39 Armenian Orthodox, 26 Roman, 3 Greek Roman, 12 American Roman, 1 Bulgarian. Four patriarchs of Oriental churches and a Roman archbishop are residing in the capital of Mohammed's successor.

—Four thousand six hundred and thirty-two students in American colleges recently expressed their willingness to go as missionaries to foreign fields. Of these 78 per cent. are men, 22 per cent. women, 35 per cent graduates; 27½ per cent. are Presbyterians, 18 per cent. Congregationalists, 14 per cent. Methodists, 11½ per cent. Baptist. Forty denominations are represented.

—A Catholic Indian missionary, Father Jerome, of the Benedictine order, has compiled a prayer-book for the Sioux. It will be published by Bishop Marty, and will be printed in the Sioux language. Besides the ordinary Catholic prayers the book will contain a catechism of Christian doctrine and Catholic hymns, with appropriate music. Five thousand copies of the prayer-book will be published.

—The Prussian landtag has been considering the overcrowded condition of the Prussian schools and the pressing need of more teachers. The lack of teachers has caused a tremendous increase in the size of the classes and a corresponding deterioration in the amount of instruction received by each child. In the last ten years 1,500,000 Prussian children have been taught in classes of 70 to 100, and 600,000 in classes of 100 to 150. In 1886 almost 12,000 children had no teachers at all.

A Word of Warning.

A German Lieutenant took occasion to change his orderly. The new orderly, while rummaging his master's room, found a note intended for himself. It read as follows:

"You will find the boss a pretty good sort of fellow. If you brush his clothes good and make his shoes shine, he will treat you like a gentleman. But let me tell you one thing, don't fool with his cigars. The blankety blank fool counts them every night.—Omnibus.

AND STILL THEY COME.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 29, '90.

Sierra Chemical Co.:

GENTLEMEN:—I have been a sufferer from Kidney complaints for several years and have used all kinds of medicine without any apparent results or relief until my friends advised me, and told me of the wonderful cures The Great Sierra Kidney and Liver Cure was accomplishing. I was induced to buy one bottle but without much faith, and to my surprise after using that bottle I noticed such a great improvement that I kept on until I have now used three bottles, and can safely say that I am entirely cured and never felt better in my life. I wish to recommend this remedy to all sufferers from Kidney and Liver disorders, for it will positively do the work.

Very truly yours,
L. H. COHN,
Atlantic & Pacific Pub. Co., room 52, St. Anne's Building, San Francisco, Cal.

A despot's heel is on thy shore,
Maryland! My Maryland!
A despot's steal bring grief galore,
Maryland! My Maryland!

POPPE'S LUCK.

How the Family is Spending the Money So Easily Won.

Everybody has been anxious to see Charles Poppe, the Clements Constable who won the $15,000 in the last drawing of The Louisiana State Lottery, but he has remained out in the country ever since he came in to send the ticket forward for collection. The money came forward promptly, and was duly paid over to Mrs. Fanny Poppe, whose receipt for the money the express company holds.

The Poppe's like many others have bought tickets from time to time, but heretofore have not had any luck. They could hardly believe their eyes when they saw that one of their tickets bore the magic figures which entitled them to one-twentieth of the grand prize of $200,000. Mr. Poppe came into town at once and sent the ticket forward by express for collection. He was considerably embarrassed financially, and several persons were laying their plans to attach the money for the husband's debts. Mrs. Poppe, however, headed them off, and the transfer of the money to her was made through the San Francisco office of the express company.

Their good luck does not seem to have turned their heads and Mrs. Poppe is putting it to good use. She has purchased a band of 1000 sheep for her son, and he and his father are herding them up in the foothills. Those who want to see Mr. Poppe will have to take a trip up the range for that purpose. He has sold out his livery stable business to the man who has rented the hotel belonging to his wife, and the Poppe's propose to settle down to pastorial pursuits.

The money so easily won by the expenditure of $1 will clear off an incumbrance on Mrs. Poppe's property and with the balance left after doing this and paying for the sheep a ranch will be purchased and made a homestead, thus furnishing a certain provision for the family for all time to come. Wetzell who claimed to have an interest in the ticket, has not as yet been able to establish it and the chances are that he never will, as the courts will not recognize ownership in a lottery ticket, so the Poppe's are likely to enjoy the full benefit of their luck whether they are entitled to it or not.—Stockton (Cal.) Independent, April 9.

It is always safe to learn, even from our enemies—seldom safe to instruct, even our friends.

DON'T GO OFF BEFORE YOU ARE READY.

Particularly on a long journey. Be fully prepared. You cannot be, permit us to say, unless you are accompanied with the traveler's and tourist's vade mecum, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters most genial of appetizers, acclimatizers and promoters of digestion. Against sea sickness, malaria, cramps and colics begotten of badly cooked or unwholesome food and brackish water, nervousness, increased by travel, chronic biliousness and constipation, the Bitters is a sovereign preventive. It imparts a relish for food not altogether to your taste, and prevents it from disagreeing with you. Never was there such a capital thing for the unfortunate dyspeptic who stands in dread of the best cooked meal. Stomachic trouble caused by ill prepared viands aboard ship, on steamboats, and rations hastily bolted at railway restaurants, is soon remedied by the Bitters, which gives a quietus also to rheumatism, kidney troubles and insomnia.

Acquaintance—So you have determined to marry? Girl of the period (sadly)—Yes; I see nothing else before me.

CONFIDENCE BEGOT OF SUCCESS.

So successful has Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery proved in curing chronic nasal catarrh, bronchial and throat diseases, that its manufacturers now sell it through druggists under a positive guarantee of its benefitting or curing in every case, if given a fair trial, or money paid for it will be refunded. Consumption (which is scrofula of the lungs) if taken in time, is also cured by this wonderful medicine.

For Constipation or Sick Headache, use Dr. Pierce's Pellets; Purely Vegetable. One a dose.

He who acquires wealth dishonestly is too corrupt to enjoy it.

CASH ADVANCED.

Farmers, merchants and brokers at times find themselves so placed as to be forced to raise money on short notice. To such we would say, go to the PACIFIC BANK, of San Francisco, where a large amount of money is always on hand, which will be let out on good securities and easy terms.

The curfew tolls the knell of parting day;
A jaded crowd sneaks gently o'er the lea—
The fishers homeward plod their weary way,
Concocting lies to tell to you and me.

If success be the true test of merit, it is a settled fact that "Brown's Bronchial Troches" have no equal for the prompt relief of Coughs, Colds and Throat troubles.

Who can imagine a more thoroughly miserable human being than the lawyer who is seized with double pleurisy? Think of it! He can't lie on either side?

Old smokers prefer "Tansill's Punch."

A tombstone man has sent circulars to umpires offering reduced rates to clubs of base-ball men.

SURE CURE FOR PILES.

Sure cure for blind, bleeding and itching Piles. One box has cured the worst cases of ten years' standing. No one need suffer ten minutes after using Kirk's German Pile Ointment. It absorbs tumors, allays the itching, acts as a poultice, gives relief. Dr. Kirk's German Pile Ointment is prepared only for Piles and itching of the private parts, and nothing else. Every box is warranted.

Sold by druggists and sent by mail on receipt of price, $1.00 per box. J. J. Mack & Co., Wholesale Agents, San Francisco.

DROPSY.

We call the attention of those suffering with dropsy to the fair proposition of Dr. H. H. Green & Sons in their advertisement on this page. Try them, it costs you nothing to do so.

When in San Francisco stop at Straub's Restaurant and Saloon, 327 and 329 Bush Street. Best to eat and drink. No fancy prices.

Beware of imitations of the genuine Seal of North Carolina Plug Cut Tobacco.

Try Germea for Breakfast.

In the Spring

Nearly everybody needs a good medicine. The impurities which have accumulated in the blood during the cold months, must be expelled or when the mild days come, and the effect of bracing air is lost, the body is liable to be overcome by debility or some serious disease. The remarkable success achieved by Hood's Sarsaparilla, and the many words of praise it has received, make it worthy your confidence. We ask you to give this medicine a trial. We are sure it will do you good.

"Our little girl nineteen months old was troubled with scrofula sores. Her eyes were in a terrible condition, and her nose all covered with scab. Physicians said they could not cure her. We commenced giving her Hood's Sarsaparilla, and now, after using two bottles in the past three months, her face and eyes are clear of the sores, and her appetite has returned. We feel very thankful for finding so valuable a medicine as Hood's Sarsaparilla to save our child." J. A. GREY, 453 Minor Avenue, Stockton, Cal.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Sold by all druggists, $1; six for $5. Prepared only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar

PILES! PILES! PILES!

Dr. William's Indian Pile Ointment is the only sure cure for Blind, Bleeding or Itching Piles ever discovered. It never fails to cure old chronic cases of long standing.

Judge Coffinbury, Cleveland, Ohio, says: "I have found by experience that Dr. William's Indian Pile Ointment gives immediate relief."

Do not suffer an instant longer. Sold by William's Manufacturing Co., Props., Cleveland, Ohio. 50c & $1.

The "Exit Omnes"—"Would you desire to live your life over again?" was asked the old actor. "No, no," replied he: "no encore, please."

HOME TREATMENT.

The most positive evidences of permanent cures in catarrh, throat, bronchial and lung affections, and consumption itself, mailed free on receipt of address. Dr. Aborn, the celebrated physician in the cure of consumption, is now located at Portland, Or. Medicines, inhalers and other apparatus sent C. O. D. for home treatment for those who cannot call personally.

First Tramp—Bill, what would you do if you had a thousand dollars?" Second Tramp—I'd give yous de cold shake.

AN ELEGANT PACKAGE OF FINE CARDS.

Including 15 rare novelties, shapes and artistic imported oleographic and chromatic cards. This large and beautiful collection sent by mail to anyone who will do this:—Buy a box of the genuine Dr. C. McLane's Celebrated Liver Pills from any druggist, price 25 cents, and mail us the outside wrapper with your address, plainly written and 4 cents in stamps. The genuine McLane's Pills are prepared only by Fleming Bros., Pittsburg, Pa., and have been in constant use for over sixty years. They are superior to all others in purity and effectiveness. A certain cure for indigestion and sick headache. Address, Fleming Bros. Pittsburgh, Pa.

The color line, as applied to the sugar problem, is a matter of refinement.

Six Novels Free, will be sent by Cragin & Co., Philada., Pa., to any one in the U. S. or Canada, postage paid, upon receipt of 25 Dobbins' Electric Soap wrappers. See list of novels on circulars around each bar. Soap for sale by all grocers.

Patti tells a reporter that she went to Venice to have her hair dyed. That was right. See Venice and dye.

ST. JACOBS OIL
TRADE MARK
THE GREAT REMEDY FOR PAIN
CURES PROMPTLY AND PERMANENTLY
RHEUMATISM,
Lumbago, Headache, Toothache,
NEURALGIA,
Sore Throat, Swellings, Frost-bites,
SCIATICA,
Sprains, Bruises, Burns, Scalds.
THE CHARLES A. VOGELER CO., Baltimore, Md.

SEVEN SEVENTEEN SEVENTY

To cure Biliousness, Sick Headache, Constipation, Malaria, Liver Complaints, take the safe and certain remedy, SMITH'S

BILE BEANS

Use the SMALL SIZE (40 little beans to the bottle). They are the most convenient; suit all ages. Price of either size, 25 cents per bottle.

KISSING at 7, 17, 70: Photo-gravure, panel size of this picture for 4 cents (coppers or stamps).

J. F. SMITH & CO.,
Makers of "Bile Beans." St. Louis, Mo.

MONEY Can be made easy by raising Chickens. A large 32-page Illustrated Catalogue describing Incubators, Brooders, Brooding Houses, How and What to Feed, How long to keep them in the Brooder, Drinking Fountains, Diseases and their Cure, in fact more information than is given in many 25-cent books. Sent to any address on receipt of 2c. stamp. Wire Netting, Bone Mills, Bone Meal and all kinds of Poultry Supplies. Address, Petaluma Incubator Co., Petaluma, Cal.

Damiana Bitters.

TRADE MARK

The great Mexican Remedy for Disorders of the Kidneys and Bladder, Damiana is recognized by all physicians as the best Nervous Stimulant gives health and strength to the Generative and Procreative Organs. For sale everywhere.

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE,
323 & 325 Market St., S. F., Agents.

CHICHESTER'S ENGLISH
PENNYROYAL PILLS
RED CROSS DIAMOND BRAND.
Safe and always reliable. Ladies, ask Druggist for Diamond Brand, in red, metallic boxes, sealed with blue ribbon. Take no other. All pills in pasteboard boxes, pink wrappers, are dangerous counterfeits. Send 4c. (stamps) for particulars, testimonials and "Relief for Ladies," in letter, by return mail. Name Paper.
Chichester Chem'l Co., Madison Sq., Phila., Pa.

WILEY B. ALLEN'S MUSICAL PASTIME.

A JOURNAL OF MUSIC, ISSUED MONTHLY (16 pages reading matter and 16 pages latest and most popular vocal and instrumental music) for 75c per annum. Sample copy 10c. Stamps taken. Send 40c for the latest popular Song, "DRIFTING APART" by Edward J. Fink, and 50c for "Chapel in the Sierras," Piano Solo by E. Cook. (Mention this paper.) Address: The Wiley B. Allen Music Store, 211 First Street, Portland, Oregon.

BIG G Cures in 1 TO 5 DAYS. Guaranteed not to cause Stricture. Mfd only by the Evans Chemical Co. Cincinnati, Ohio. Trade Mark

I prescribe and fully endorse Big G as the only specific for the certain cure of this disease.
G. H. INGRAHAM, M. D., Amsterdam, N. Y.

We have sold Big G for many years, and it has given the best of satisfaction.
D. R. DYCHE & CO., Chicago, Ill.

$1.00. Sold by Druggists.

STEINWAY. KRANICH, PEASE & BACH, Gabler, Roenisch Pianos; Burdett Organs, Band Instruments. Largest stock of Sheet Music and Books. Bands supplied at Eastern Prices. MATTHIAS GRAY CO., 206 Post Street, San Francisco.

PATENTS NO DELAY. Circular free. W. E. BOULTER, WASHINGTON, D. C.

HOW TO MAKE MARRIAGE A SUCCESS. Not a cheap and nasty "marriage guide," so called, by a quack, but a strictly scientific work by an experienced English physician. It is the marriage question from a physiological standpoint. More marital troubles are caused by purely physical reasons than anything else. This book advocates early marriages, virtue and continence. It points out the physical defects which should debar marriage by either sex. The organism of woman is exhaustively treated. Married ladies are given valuable advice and hints. The dangers of many common practices, use of quack medicines, etc., are dwelt upon at length. Useful recipes, valuable formulas and prescriptions are given. To all who contemplate marriage and to thousands of the married this book will prove a revelation. No one of marriageable age should be without it. $1.00 in cloth, free on receipt of price. Sample pages and table of contents for 2 cent stamp. KNOWLTON & CO., Station C, San Francisco.

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. H. G. ROOT, M. C., 183 Pearl St. New York.

DR. PRICE'S CREAM BAKING POWDER

MOST PERFECT MADE.
STATE ASSAY OFFICE.

I have analyzed DR. PRICE'S CREAM BAKING POWDER bought by me in open market and have found it free from Alum and Ammonia and containing no deleterious ingredients of any kind. It makes fine light bread, and I can recommend it to all wishing pure and wholesome food.

LOUIS FALKENAU,
Formerly State Assayer

SAN FRANCISCO, January 25th, 1889.

AN OLD SMOKER

Can't be humbugged with bad Tobacco. The great success of the "SEAL OF NORTH CAROLINA" Plug Cut fully proves it suits all classes of Smokers.

GILES' CREOSOZONE FOR THE DESTRUCTION OF

VERMIN and PARASITES
AFFECTING POULTRY AND BIRDS.

Price, FULL QUART, 75c. FULL DIRECTIONS ON EACH CAN.
SOLD BY ALL GROCERS AND DRUGGISTS.
Prepared only by Nelson Giles, Jr., Manufacturing Co., National City Cal.

ONE REQUEST

We have only one thing to ask this week and that is easily granted. Please send postal card with your address and ask for copy of

MAY HOME CIRCLE.

It will be ready May 1st, and sample copies are offered free to all who ask for it. We know you will be interested in it. Quotes many thousand articles at lowest price to consumers, and gives information how to order, how to buy, how to ship, how to live well and cheaply in any part of the world. Address Smith's Cash Store 418 Front St., San Francisco, Cal.

USE NEW WELLINGTON COAL.

TIGER
SELF-OPERATING
Sulky Hay Rakes

157,000 NOW IN USE.
—THE ONLY—
Perfect Self-Dump Hay Rake
EVER INVENTED.

Has been on the market for eleven years, and its sales are more than double that of any other Rake in the world.

If there is one of these Rakes which has failed to satisfy the purchaser in any particular we have never heard of it.

Special Circulars and Price-Lists on Application.

SOLE AGENTS,
Baker & Hamilton
Dealers in and Manufacturers of
AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS.
WHOLESALE HARDWARE.
San Francisco and Sacramento, Cal.

DROPSY
TREATED FREE.
Positively Cured with Vegetable Remedies.
Have cured thousands of cases. Cure patients pronounced hopeless by best physicians. From first dose symptoms disappear; in ten days at least two-thirds all symptoms removed. Send for free book testimonials of miraculous cures. Ten days' treatment free by mail. If you order trial, send 10c. in stamps to pay postage. DR. H. H. GREEN & SONS, Atlanta, Ga. If you order trial return this advertisement to us.

DR. SYKES' SURE CURE FOR CATARRH
ESTABLISHED CHICAGO 1870
1883 Removed TO CINCINNATI.
Has cured many cases pronounced hopeless by physicians. Send for Free Book "Common Sense Talk" and numerous testimonials. They will convince you.
Dr. SYKES' SURE CURE CO., 330 Race St., Cincinnati, O.

S. F. N. U. No. 411. New Series No. 18

THE TRUANTS.

Harry—"That's ma calling me; she's going to lick me, 'cause I didn't hurry from the druggist's with this medicine. Jimmy, you can take my gum till I get back; I've got to squall like I was being half-killed, or pa'll lick me; ma can't hurt any, 'cause she's sick most of the time."

Jimmy—"Let's see that medicine. That's the same Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription that cured my mom. Why, she couldn't spank the baby, and now—the other day she shook pop so he doesn't drink any more. In about two weeks you'll get belted so you'll wish you'd been born good."

Please remember, that Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the only positive cure for the numerous diseases that destroy a woman's influence in her family. It's guaranteed to give satisfaction, in every case, or money paid for it promptly refunded.

"Favorite Prescription" is a positive cure for the most complicated and obstinate cases of leucorrhea, excessive flowing, painful menstruation, unnatural suppressions, prolapsus, or falling of the womb, weak back, "female weakness," anteversion, retroversion, bearing-down sensations, chronic congestion, inflammation and ulceration of the womb.

A Book of 160 pages, treating of Woman and her peculiar diseases, and their Self-cure, illustrated with wood-cuts and colored plates, mailed in plain, sealed envelope, on receipt of ten cents in stamps.

Address, WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, No. 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

SICK HEADACHE,

Bilious Headache, Dizziness, Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, and all derangements of the stomach and bowels, are promptly relieved and permanently cured by the use of

DR. PIERCE'S PELLETS.

Purely Vegetable and Perfectly Harmless.
As a LIVER PILL, Unequaled!

ONE PELLET A DOSE! SMALLEST, CHEAPEST, EASIEST TO TAKE.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

COUNTY OFFICIAL PAPER.

C. MULHOLLAND, - - - Proprietor.

Independence, Cal.,

FRIDAY, - - - JUNE 13, 1890.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

VOL. XXII. NO. 1. INDEPENDENCE, INYO CO., CAL., JUNE 13, 1890. WHOLE NO. 1024.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

COUNTY OFFICIAL PAPER.

C. MULHOLLAND, - - - Proprietor.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One Year (post paid)	$4.00
Six Months	2.25
Three Months	1.50
One Month	.50
Single Copies	.10

LORD HARRY.

Lord Harry, he sat on the shingles one day,
And his lordship with jewels was laden,
And he lifted his eye, as sweet Polly came by,
The bonniest trim fisher-maiden.
He gave her a stare, with his lordliest air,
And he said: "I've determined to marry;
I've goods and I've land, and here is my hand;
I think I'm a catch," said Lord Harry.

"And what will you give to your lady?" said she,
"To the bride whom your lordship may honor?"
"Why, dinners and dresses and money," said he,
"And jewels to sparkle upon her!"
"If you give nothing more, sir," the maiden replied,
"I pity the girl whom you marry!"
While his lordship looked down at her rough fisher gown,
"What more can she want?" cried Lord Harry.

"When I have a lover," sweet Polly replied,
And she blushed with a smile that was sunny,
"He must give me his heart, or he makes me his bride,
For 'tis love that I ask for—not money!"
She made him a curtsey, and off went my lord,
And invited a duchess to marry;
She was ugly and old, but she'd plenty of gold,
And she made a good match for Lord Harry.
—Temple Bar.

UP THE MALINGA.

Closing Chapter of Explorer Casement's Journey.

A Savage Dance at Baulu—Trading for Ivory—Customs of the Man-Eaters—An Impassable Barrier—The Return to Stanley Pool.

[COPYRIGHT, 1890.]

CONCLUDED IN THIS NUMBER.

OUR greeting at Baulu was most kindly. The usual ceremony of blood brotherhood having been gone through by firelight, presents were exchanged between the chief and ourselves and our men, quickly striking up friendships with natives on shore (for the Baukindu of the Equator are an offshoot of the great Balolo and speak a kindred tongue) were soon dancing round several fires with their new-formed chums, while Glave and I talked to the chief and interviewed him as to the possibilities of many days' steaming yet before us ere we should reach the end of navigable river.

We had up to this been unsuccessful in obtaining any thing like the quantity of ivory we expected to find in the Lulungu, our total stock purchased and that received as presents from "blood brothers" only amounting to a few hundred pounds' weight, which had cost us pretty dear, too.

However, in the morning we found ourselves surrounded by canoes containing magnificent tusks or were besieged from the shore side by a crowd of old Lolos, followed by sons or slaves staggering under beautiful white sixty-pound or seventy-pound tusks. Fully a ton-weight of ivory was brought alongside the Florida that day, but Glave, unwilling to spoil the price, would only buy about three hundred and fifty to four hundred pounds' weight of it, which he secured for prices averaging two pence and three pence per pound, paid chiefly in brass wire and white and blue beads, such as children use at home for making into toy-rings, which these larger African children put to the very same uses. A man on getting paid for the ivory he had just sold would take off at once with the tin soup-plate full of beads in his hands, glowing lengths of red-cotton handkerchiefs or blue cloth streaming out behind him; and the other items received, such as spoons, brass wire, mirrors, and odds and ends like these, gracing the arms of his adherents who followed in his wake thrusting their way through the crowd of would-be sellers of ivory, who regarded with longing eyes this ravishing transit of such wealth through their midst, or even grabbed at the beads as they shot past, thereby provoking an awful row and a scattering of many small boys to the winds, and sometimes the precious beads themselves, when the scramble which ensued beggars description.

A VILLAGE BUILT ON PILES.

A busy day was thus spent at Baulu, and promising to buy plenty of their remaining ivory on our return, by which time we guessed the beads would have done their deadly work, we bade farewell to the chief, and kindly disposed people of this happy Central African village.

We left Baulu in the afternoon and speedily became aware of the fact that we had left dry land behind us also, for the two little villages we soon came to consisted of huts raised upon piles standing in the water, and around on every side we took see no trace of bank or shore to the view. The bordering trees grew to see trees on each hand stood in the rushing water, and as we steamed on hoping to come to some spot where solid camp for the night and cut up dead wood for next day we passed frequent little fishing settlements but all constructed in the same manner.

At last we were compelled by darkness and want of fuel to halt at one of these for the night. The occupants of the few houses speedily stepped from off their little verandahs into their dug-out canoes fastened to one of the supporting pillars of the structure and came out to us where we had attached the bow of the steamer to the jutting branch of a fallen tree which rose from the surface of the river.

Other canoes from the villages we had passed gathered round us, too, and fresh detachments from up river came down to us, bringing fire-wood to sell for beads and cowries, and big lumps of gum-copal, which make a capital blaze. We were surrounded for hours by these poor creatures, anxious to obtain a few of the much-coveted possessions of the white men; and thanks to the supplies of wood they brought us, were enabled next morning to resume our journey.

Day after day our journey led us between swampy, overflowed banks, every now and then bringing us to villages erected on piles standing in the water similar to those we had passed.

The inhabitants of these wretched riverdwellings were poor in the extreme, and led a terrible, hunted existence, exposed on the forest side to the ferocious attacks of the Lufembi cannibals and on the river suffering from the raiding canoes of the more powerful villages lower down. As we journeyed higher up the misery and wretchedness seemed to increase, while the number of villages we encountered grew less and less.

At last, after many days of this, we reached a point beyond which the natives of Mompono, the last village we had seen, told us we should find no villages and no human beings. For three days we steamed up the ever-narrowing reaches of the river, its current increasing in force as it grew smaller; round sharp corners, where our bows were driven into the opposite bank and the funnel got entangled in the branches of the overhanging trees, and yet without seeing a single canoe or a trace of human habitation.

Climbing a tree one day which stood on a bluff whose river face was clothed in a clinging mass of ferns and creepers, I looked inland and away up river. Every where spread a broad, boundless expanse of trees—a wave of thick forest extending from my feet to the furthest limits of the horizon. There was no change in any direction—overhead the clear sky and the bright sunlight, underneath and all around level with the sky-line—the dark forest and its still, impenetrable veil of foliage. I could not help feeling that this was indeed the heart of Africa; that here, far, far from the outer world, throbbed the pulses of a hidden continent. What strange life might not lie concealed in those silent woodland depths? Whence came this mysterious river, welling silently up from the dim, swampy recesses of the surrounding forest—through which, for ages and ages, the elephant had roamed and savage man through countless generations of barbarians had pursued the same daily, monthly, yearly, round of bloodshed and misery, laughter and death—cannibal feasts and parental joy when another little savage had opened his baby eyes on the theater of life, whose strange scenes and stranger characters were to develop before his gaze behind that screen of forest barrier which the genius of Africa has raised around her inmost shrine.

Several days were passed traversing the dreary solitudes, without coming in contact with a single human being.

On the fourth day we were surprised to hear a voice coming from the trees, and to listen to a native shout. We sent our canoe, and brought him on board the Florida; but this was not done without difficulty, for our men had a sharp chase before he was finally caught. He was a very sullen fellow, and our interpreter had some trouble in coaxing him to speak at all. We were not very far from a village, he told us. At his request a drum was handed him, and he beat a signal to his village. We heard the answering signal, borne over the water, clear and distinct. He told us, too, that they would know that it meant strangers were here, and that we should soon see plenty of his people.

In the morning a number of strange-looking men came down toward us in canoes, bringing fuel and presents. We soon made friends. We learned that their village was three or four miles off. These people were Balolo, and had the same peculiar tribal marks I have already mentioned. I went over to their village, and a terrible tramp it was, over bogs and morasses and roots of trees. I stumbled and fell several times, smashing my watch, and after all my pains, I found on arriving there that it was a wretchedly poor place, with absolutely nothing to trade and only one poor tusk of ivory in the whole village. So I tramped back again by the way I came, first exacting a promise from the native we met the preceding night at the river that he would come to the Florida next morning and act as our guide. When morning came, and the Balolo failed to turn up, we pushed ahead without him.

Leaving the poverty-stricken settlement behind us, we started up stream again, only to run almost immediately into a snag at a sharp bend of the river. On getting safely afloat again we had to proceed with the utmost care, for we soon discovered that there was a succession of sharp turns and no end of snags immediately ahead. In avoiding these we were constantly running into the banks, for just at this point the stream is narrower and more rapid than at any other. Towards evening we came to traces of an encampment on the left bank of the river, where the Lufembi, the dreaded tribe of cannibals, were said to be. These were the first signs of houses we had seen in four days; for the last three days had been spent in dodging the snags of the river and avoiding disaster to the Florida. There were no signs of life about the encampment, as we stopped and sounded a shrill blast from the steam whistle; but there was no response save the echo which seemed to mock them selves indefinitely before dying out on the wooded shores. We pushed on for a mile or more, and then we observed fires on shore and two men standing near the edge of the bank. As the Florida drew near one of the men ran off with the speed of a deer, and the other, almost equally alarmed by our sudden appearance, darted in behind the trees and regarded us from that point of vantage. Several of our men jumped on shore and tried by persuasion to coax him to come to us, but it was useless. After a little while he, too, disappeared.

Judging by all the signs we thought there must be a village near, and so we decided to camp there. That afternoon while we were getting in firewood there was a sudden commotion and a great crowd of natives swarmed down upon us. They stood off at a respectful distance, evidently hardly knowing what to do about it, and we went out toward them, but they retired. This was not an auspicious beginning to our acquaintance, so we sent a deputation consisting of four of our own natives belonging to the crew to parley with them. Our men returned in an hour and reported that they had met a great crowd of natives armed with spears and shields, their bodies painted and with a very fierce, warlike appearance.

"You can not go on," was the reply of their head-man to our messengers. "The Lufembi, with many canoes, have passed up the river. No one ever sleeps here on this bank. If you try it you will all have your throats cut."

This was not particularly cheering, but we decided to sleep there, nevertheless, and sleep we did. A strong guard was detailed to prevent a surprise. In the morning we would go up to the village, which was named Bolando, and whose people, like all the Balolo, were kindred to the fierce Lufembi—at the same time frequent sufferers at their hands.

While we were dozing around the camp fires, in fancied security, a great shout suddenly went up and there was an instant panic, resembling the scare we had experienced at a point one hundred miles further down the river. Rifles and revolvers were discharged and when we heard drums beating in several directions we felt certain that the dreaded Lufembi were upon us in force. Owing to the impenetrable darkness we were in ignorance of the cause of all this confusion. After awhile the firing ceased and the frightened crew of the Florida were once more convinced that they had been the victims of a false alarm, as no enemy appeared. The distant drums, however, continued to beat at intervals, and it was not until daylight that our camp felt quite secure from attack of the invisible enemy.

In the morning, deeming it hopeless to risk a visit to the village, after the exciting scare of the night, and as we were unable to get either food or fuel at that point (which is between two hundred and fifty and three hundred miles up the Lulungu river, from the point of its confluence with the Congo), we returned to the steamer and went to Bohema, a fishing village where we were told supplies were to be had in abundance. We carried with us, however, a vivid recollection of the Bolando natives, whom our messengers described as being of a very martial appearance. They wore, when our delegation met them, a variety of weapons, the principal one being a wooden knife, in shape somewhat like a pruning hook, this made of an exceedingly hard and durable wood, sharpened to a point, and they used it very skillfully. In conversation, they employed it to emphasize their talk, and it was not encouraging to our messengers to see these savages brandishing their ugly-looking machetes at every sentence or two.

Although we were exceedingly anxious to push forward to the elephant country, where, in its native habitat, the forest giant, we were assured, could be found in vast numbers, we could not possibly do it. We had exhausted our food supply and the problem of revictualing was becoming harder daily. Besides, we were due back at Kinchasa by a certain date; so we regretfully turned the Florida's bows down-river and began our homeward journey. The current was strong and at the sharp bends of the river we were obliged to proceed with great caution, to avoid getting aground or fouling on hidden snags. Still, with all our precautions, we struck on the banks repeatedly, and the Florida sustained considerable damage, but not enough to prevent us from continuing our journey. Finally, we got through the dangerous swells and currents and into safe water, after which our progress down stream was very rapid.

On getting back to Baulu, we bought a great quantity of ivory—about 2,000 pounds of it, and of a very superior quality. Our journey to Malinga was continued without incident. There we were greeted by the natives in the same cordial way as on our first arrival; but a serious event had happened during our absence. Their village had been attacked by the cannibal Lufembi in force; a sharp fight had taken place and the assailants had finally been repulsed. Prisoners had been taken by both sides, and when we came upon the scene there were five Lufembi warriors in the hands of the Malingas. All this the head-man told us when he came on board the Florida on the evening of our arrival.

Going ashore I saw one or two of the captive cannibals tied up to huge logs, which were chained about their necks. These savages talk practically the same language as the Malingas, who are, as I have already explained, a branch of the great Lufembe race, and have the same peculiar tribal marks on their bodies, even to the ridges on their faces. Physically the Lufembi are magnificent men; tall, clean-limbed and dignified-looking. A peculiarity about them is that they are, as I was informed by the head-man, vegetarians in all else except their horrible love of human flesh. They differ from other savage races in the fact that, according to all we could learn, they make war solely through a desire to get their enemies to eat, and not because they hate them or from motives of vengeance. They are the true man-hunters, who follow the human game to gratify their frightful appetite for flesh. While other savages attack their enemies to punish aggression or secure revenge, the Lufembi alone make their ghoulish appetite the primary object in their raids upon their weaker neighbors.

The prisoners in the hands of the Malingas were stolen, and bore themselves bravely. A savage, although he knows he is to be killed the next morning, will make no outcry, nor will he try to escape. Their eyes had a passive expression, and they faced their fate uncomplainingly.

The inland tribes are all related, the Lufembi being generic. The latter occupy a country that is full of swamps and heavy forests; and to make a village they have incredible labor, clearing the dense growth of timber. The Lufembe villages are large and populous, we were told at Malinga, and they have fine plantations, their occupation, when not making war, being almost wholly agricultural.

Prominent among these great African inland tribes are the elephant hunters, into whose country we had penetrated, and some of whom we had seen. They are large, powerful men, and physically the equal of the Lufembi. Their method of hunting is simple and effective. First a watch is kept until the place in the forest where the elephants are accustomed to pass when going to the river is discovered. Then the hunters choose a large tree hanging over the elephant path and to a stout branch or limb they attach a broad-bladed strong spear, which is hung point downward, in such a manner that the head of the weapon is exactly over the center of the path. To gauge the position accurately, one of the hunters ascends the tree and, climbing out on the limb, drops water to the ground, which serves as a guide to the other, who are fixing the trap below. The spear, when in true position, aims at the very center of the path. Attached to the upper end and above the blade is a ponderous weight of wood or metal, which it sometimes takes fifty men to lift into position. On each side of the path is the tall forest grass. A rope stretched across the path and hidden from sight connects with the trap overhead. The elephant in passing strikes the concealed rope, the trap overhead is sprung, and the broad, keen blade, impelled by the great weight above it, crashes through the foliage and penetrates the back of the huge brute at a vital point, generally back of the head and between the shoulders. So accurate are the traps of these elephant hunters that the game needs no finishing stroke after the trap has done its work.

THE ELEPHANT TRAP.

We returned to Equator where we discharged our native crew, took on board the Zanzibaris and Loando natives, and then continued on to Kinchasa. On reaching the head of Stanley Pool, we saw from the deck of the Florida a pleasing and unexpected sight. On shore among the trees were several neat-looking tents and, approaching closer, we were met by two young Englishmen who had come out there to hunt elephants. They had already shot three elephants, several buffaloes and an antelope, and were looking forward to more excellent sport. We went ashore at their invitation and stopped there for the day, starting up steam again in the Florida after breakfast next morning. I need hardly say that we enjoyed this little episode after our long sojourn among the savages of the upper Malinga. One of our hosts, Walter Dean, a splendid young fellow, was killed by an elephant a few months afterward.

We arrived safely at Stanley Pool Station on December 17. Ten days before our return the chief of the station, a German, had died after a short illness. So ended our memorable journey up the till then unexplored Malinga to the land of the elephant, the hunted Balolo, and the terrible, man-eating Lufembi.

ROGER CASEMENT.

A Live Man Slowly Petrifying.

The medical men of Boston and New York have been puzzling their brains over a strange case of ossification or petrification of a live man by the name of Jonathan Bass. Bass is a man now sixty or sixty-five years of age and has been gradually becoming ossified into one solid mass for the past forty-five years. His body is now perfectly rigid in color and to touch almost exactly like a well-seasoned bone, with no more flexibility about it than there is about a stick of wood. While unable voluntarily to make the least move, Mr. Bass' intellect is keen and his digestion unimpaired. Hundreds of physicians and scientists, both of this country and of Europe, have examined this remarkable freak, all concurring in the opinion that the case of Jonathan Bass beats any thing now on record in the medical books.—St. Louis Republic.

—Some of the members of the American Dialect Society of Harvard College are hunting up words that were in use in various American localities in the eighteenth century. In a list of words peculiar to New Jersey they include "jag," explaining that its meaning strictly is "a wagon load."

THE VERSATILE MAN.

A Myriad-Minded Individual Known All Over the Land.

Swift T. Totum was the most versatile man I ever saw. Talk of myriad-minded Shakespeare! Why, Shakespeare wasn't a patch to Totum. Totum had more minds in half a day than Shakespeare could boast of during his mortal career. He would swing around through the entire realm of the arts, sciences and humanities as readily and as swiftly as the New England weathercock will describe the horizon's circle, and he would go around the former quite as often as the New England weathercock makes its circuit in search of the wind that blows.

Swift T. Totum was, in fact, a wonderful man—a wonderfully wonderful man, not to make it too strong—and I have wondered what the world would have done without him. Totum wasn't one of your machine men, who spend their existence in one continuous, monotonous movement; not a bit of it. He was a grand and comprehensive machine shop, laboratory, atelier, studio and study rolled into one. There was nothing which he hadn't been into—and out of—and the only cloud upon Totum's life was the comparatively small number of avenues which the world of matter and the world of thought opened up to his superabounding versatility.

Meet Totum early in the morning and you found him filled to overflowing with, say, a scheme to ameliorate the condition of pastry cooks; an hour later he was deep in the investigation of some recondite theory of his own relative to the ancient sun-myth; at noon, he was interested in some grand business enterprise; the afternoon was given to the elaboration of some alleged discovery in physics; the political regeneration of the world occupied his evening hours, and he retired dreaming of an inchoate patent process which was to revolutionize the custom of wearing stockings inside one's boots instead of outside.

And then there was nothing small or secretive about Totum. Whatever he did, or rather whatever he began to do, he invariably took the world into his confidence. He wasn't the man to shut himself up in secret when he had one of his vast enterprises on foot. He loved company; the more of it he had, the better; and he would kindly talk over his impending scheme for hours, or as long as any one would listen to him, and then—why, by that time his prolific mind had given birth to some new idea which completely overshadowed and dwarfed its predecessor, grand as that had seemed when viewed by itself.

Totum never started out to sharpen a lead pencil or draw the cork out of an ink bottle but he had at least half a dozen wondering spectators, and, though it usually ended in somebody else sharpening the pencil and in somebody else drawing the cork, that fact did not militate against his greatness. It only showed that a mind like his, teeming with a redundancy of ideas, was so trammeled by time and occasion that it was impossible for him to put any of them into concrete form.

For like reason Totum never succeeded in learning a foreign language, ancient or modern, though he had made many essays in both directions; and his havning in literature was of the flimsiest description, while his information upon the practical affairs of life was exceedingly tenuous. His mind was constructed upon so grand a scale, and he attempted so much and so many things, that he could not pin himself down long enough to one subject to master it; he could not improve one opportunity without losing hundreds of other opportunities.

If Totum could have divided his corporeal substance into a thousand distinct individualities, he would easily have furnished them all from his own brain with vocations and avocations sufficient to last them all to the crack of doom. It was really too bad in Providence to endow Totum with so versatile a mind without providing an adequacy of physical functions and a sufficiency of time to accompany it. Had his body been at all commensurate with his mind, and his life been extended over centuries instead of through a paltry threescore and ten at the outside, this world would one day be a very different world than we now find it.

But, alas! Totum's carrying powers were no match to his creative. He died without accomplishing any thing. He had all through his life "bitten off more than he could chaw." He was chewing ever—he absorbed nothing. But Totum was a most excellent chewer.—Boston Transcript.

Household Helps.

A good way to take an ink-stain out of the floor is to use a jack-plane.

To get a table-cloth thoroughly clean, stand over the washer-woman when she is at the tub, and beat her with a piece of lead pipe.

If you would never have tainted fish, use always the kind that is salted.

To rejuvenate plums, dye them.

To get rid of rheumatism in the bones, give the gardener a day off, and do his work.

If you can't wash the dog clean in a tub, put him on the stove and boil him. Never roast him.

A good thing for mosquitoes is a dreamy fat man.

To keep shutters from slamming at night, remove them every afternoon.—Puck.

—We are sorry to say it, but at church most women pay more attention to the texture than to the text.—Harper's Bazar.

CALIFORNIA FIGS.

The Pacific Coast Getting Ready to Compete with the Turks.

In the course of an article on fig culture in California, the San Francisco Call says: We have good trees, some of which are called Smyrnas and some white Adriatics; they produce excelent figs, which, when properly prepared and packed, compare favorably with the best Smyrna figs. It is generally understood in this State that fig trees should begin to bear in their second year, and should yield a full crop in their fourth. But in Smyrna the best trees which produce the fig of commerce do not bear a full crop until they are eight or ten years old. We are so impatient a people that many fig growers may have chafed at so long a delay and have cut down excelent trees.

In figs, as in every kind of fruit, we must, if we want to succeed, produce the best and nothing but the best. The second best is not worth growing at all. There are grocers at the East who deal in imported figs. Some of them exhibit in their sample rooms drums of beautiful clear, luscious-looking Smyrna fruit, and beside them bags of small, black figs, labeled "Here's your California article!" This is considered fair, for every one looks out for himself; but it will be our fault if in a few years from now we do not beat the Turks in figs, as we are beating the Spaniards in raisins and the French in prunes. We have the soil to do it; all we want is the requisite knowledge of the industry.

Dried figs would be even a larger source of income than raisins. The United States, imports, one year with another, 10,000,000 pounds of dried figs annually from Europe. There is a constantly increasing demand for the fruit. The medicinal properties, which were known to the old practitioners, are now better realized than they used to be. Periodical use of the dried fig, either in the shape of a pudding or a dessert fruit, is a preservative against many annoying maladies. When California is able to ship 4,000 or 5,000 tons of dried figs each winter to the East, the consumption will probably be larger than it is.

ABOUT THE SUN-DEW.

How a Queer Plant Catches and Devours Small Insects.

The sun-dew is an insect catcher. Some have long, narrow leaves; others round ones. These sparkle in the sunshine as though covered with raindrops or dew. It is a sweet, sticky substance, by which insects are caught. Through a magnify glass the leaf will be seen to be fringed around the edge, and covered on the upper surface with what has been called tentacles, because they seem like the arms of certain sea animals, with which they capture their prey. The leaf sags a little in the middle, and when an insect is glued fast by the sticky drop, every tentacle begins to curve over and fasten him more strongly. The movement is very slow, so slow that it takes frequently several hours for it to be complete. What is very remarkable about it, if a fly alights on the side of the leaf, or anywhere away from the center, the tentacle it touches bends over, carrying its prey with it to the center of the leaf, and then all of the tentacles move toward the middle and clasp it. The leaf then pours over it a liquid acid, which dissolves what is good for food, thus acting as does the gastric juice in our stomachs. One full meal will last the plant nearly a week. It must have the right kind of food, however. Dr. Darwin fed a sun-dew on cheese, which made it turn yellow and sickly, and it finally died with dyspepsia. When a few drops of milk were poured on a leaf, it curved up around the edges, making the form more cup-like, while the tentacles bent over to absorb it. Another remarkable thing has been noted; if a bit of meat is divided, half of it placed on the leaf and the other on some moss beside it, the piece on the leaf will remain fresh until digested while that on the moss becomes spoiled.—Portland Transcript.

ODD CHURCH MUSIC.

The Queer Practical Joke Played by a Russian Organist.

A handsome, clever and highly-educated young Russian, bankrupt through operations on the bourse of St. Petersburg, came to this city some years ago with the wreck of his fortune, and for a time figured largely in the most exclusive social set. After a time, all his money having been spent, he dropped out of society, and for some years earned a precarious living in various mysterious ways. Later he took to the stage, and his fortunes began to look up. It was soon after his latest turn of fortune that an old acquaintance, going to church in a fashionable suburb, saw the Russian bound on the same errand in company with some of the set with whom he had mingled in earlier days. The Russian, who is a highly-skilled musician, was asked to play the organ, and ever body was delighted with the delicious, dreamy voluntary with which he opened.

A month later, the Russian and his old acquaintances met again at the rooms of a friend in New York, and the subject of that marvelous voluntary came up. The Russian was asked to repeat it, and he acceded to the request, saying at the same time that it was an improvisation. He played it as before, and all present were delighted. "Don't you recognize it?" he asked. Several of them found something familiar in the music, but no one could place it. "Listen," said the Russian, while I play it rapidly;" and sitting down at the piano he rattled off what all recognized as "Johnny Get Your Gun." By playing it slowly with new notes skillfully interwoven, he had proproduced the dreamy composition with which all had been so charmed.—Chicago Herald.

—There is wisdom in proverbs; but every body knows that the statement, "Speech is silver, silence is golden," was not made by a dumb man.—Puck.

OLD AS THE HILLS.

They Knew It All Two Centuries Ago, and Here's Proof of It.

A curious little book has just been dug out from the dust of two centuries and has been partially republished by the German newspapers for the purpose of proving that there is nothing new under the sun. The little book is entitled "Foolish Wisdom and Wise Foolishness," and was written by an old-fashioned German political economist named Becher. At the time of its publication the book was regarded as something of a Munchausen narrative of the author's travels through Europe. During his wanderings Becher became acquainted with most of the learned men on the Continent, and learned a vast deal concerning the scientific work of his day. The first genius he met was Franz Grundler, a Nurnberg optician. He says of him: "Grundler is a most remarkable man. He has an idea that he can cork up in a bottle, by means of a spiral, the ordinary spoken words of a man's voice, carry them around with him thus for an hour or more, and then open the bottle and let them out. How far Grundler has got with the execution of his idea since I saw him I do not know. The whole conception appears to be quite impossible of execution and silly."

After thus hinting that even in the days of the thirty years' war some men had learned a thing or two concerning the principle of the phonograph, Becher has a word to say of "an instrument by means of which persons more than a German mile apart could talk to each other in a low tone of voice." Becher calls the instrument a stentrophonicon and describes how in using it he was obliged to press his lips very close to the bell of a curiously shaped trumpet.

"I have seen," he continues, "some of these instruments at Grundler's in Nurnberg and talked with him through it. Although we were a good distance apart at the time and talked very low, yet no one between us could hear a word we said."

During his tour of inquiry Becher also discovered that in several regions on this side of Germany men had learned to write down what others said, with wonderful rapidity by means of strange characters. "Englishmen have discovered a kind of tachygraphy," he explains, "or rather an art which enables them to write as rapidly as the fastest speakers can talk. They have brought this wonderful art to such a degree of perfection that young persons often write out full sermons without a mistake. Orations in Parliament can be written out by this means as rapidly as they are delivered, which I regard as a very useful invention." So much for stenography two centuries ago.

To save himself the trouble of learning various languages of the countries through which he passed, Becher compiled a universal language, not unlike our Volapuk. This language, he says, was derived directly from the nature of things, slipped easily over the tongue, and could be learned in four weeks. It had but twelve letters, and five hundred words, was clear of declinations and conjugations, and subject to but six rules of syntax.

Among the many other wonderful things which Becher saw on the Continent and wrote about in his little book were an air gun "which shot lead without powder or noise," another gun "which delivered three balls in rapid succession after one loading," a ship in which Cornelius Trebbel had ridden under the water of the Thames, and an air ship "held high above the earth by balls much lighter than the atmosphere."

—The Eighth Hussars of the British army have a gazelle for "child of the regiment." It accompanies the regiment everywhere and is an especially conspicuous figure on the Sunday church parade, when it accompanies the band, leading the line with a steady tread, apparently imitated from that of the drum major.

—The Cherokee Indians, an organized nation with chief officials elected by the people, a legislative body in two branches, and a judiciary, maintains a hundred public schools in as many districts, and two seminaries or high schools, which cost $100,000 each; they also have an orphan and an insane asylum and a penitentiary.

—There are now five buildings and fourteen rooms along the line of the New York Central devoted to the use of the employes of that road as places of rest, recreation, education and religious instruction. No intoxicants find a place in them, and they are substitutes for the saloon. They have been erected or leased by the men themselves, aided by the railroad, and especially by Cornelius Vanderbilt.

—Yellow is a color that gives tone to all other colors. If you gather a bouquet in the garden and do not include a bit of yellow it often seems to lack brightness. Add a yellow rose, or a spray of calliopsis, or a nasturtium, and the change is as great as that which takes place in a landscape when a burst of sunshine breaks through the clouds which have been hanging above it. There is an instant suggestion of warmth.

LITTLE'S
CHEMICAL FLUID
NON-POISONOUS
SHEEP DIP.

One gallon, mixed with 6 gallons of cold water will dip thoroughly 180 sheep, at a cost of 1 cent each. Easily applied, a nourisher of Wool; a certain cure for SCAB. Also,

Little's Patent Powder Dip,
(Poisonous.)

Mixes instantly with water. Prevents the fly from striking. In a 2 pound package there is sufficient to dip twenty sheep, and in a 7 pound package there is sufficient to dip one hundred sheep.

CATTON, BELL & CO.
SUCCESSORS TO FALKNER, BELL & CO.
Office, 406 California St., and Wool Agency Warehouse, cor. Ellis and Townsend Sts
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

C. Mulholland,
EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.
PUBLISHED EVERY FRIDAY

INDEPENDENCE, CAL

FRIDAY JUNE 13 1890

County Official Paper.

The people of Oregon have given plain indication of what may be expected in all Pacific Coast elections this year. The Republican candidate for Governor did not satisfy the people concerning his views on the silver question, and therefore he was defeated. To the people of the Pacific Coast, the restoration of silver to its proper use as coin is a matter of the very greatest consequence, and it is evident that they will not vote for men whom they cannot trust on this issue.

The war on silver is a war to rob every working man for the benefit of the capitalists, and chiefly for English capitalists. Our own usurers get a great deal of the spoil, but in the end England is the greatest gainer. Monopoly, like a hideous vampire, is sucking the life blood of the American people; but no phase of it is so baleful in its effects as the single gold standard for money. No matter how small a purchase may be made by anyone in the United States, if it be no more than a postage stamp, part of the price goes as tribute to the gold men. This iniquity is nothing less than robbery of the poor for the benefit of the rich. The poor are many, the rich are few, and the many should not submit to such wrong.

The Democratic State Convention of Illinois has put a plank into the party platform to the following effect, namely That the parents may do what they please in the matter of educating their children, and that it is wrong and unlawful for the State to interfere. The parents shall be the sole judges of what education their children shall receive and who shall be their teachers. The elder Weller, talking to Mr. Pickwick about Sam, said, "I took a great deal o' pains with his eddication, Sir; let him run the streets when he was wery young and shift for his-self. It's the only way to make a boy sharp, Sir." "Rather a dangerous process," said Mr. Pickwick, and most sensible people will agree with him. But according to this doctrine of the Illinois Democracy, if Mr. Weller should decide to put Sam under the care of Fagin with Bill Sikes and the Artful Dodger for teachers, the State would have no right to interfere. This mischievous doctrine is a surrender to the ignorant and lawless mob of Chicago. Criminals themselves admit that the State may punish criminals; but surely it is a more sacred right, and a far nobler and holier exercise of power to secure for the child such education as will be likely to save the future man or woman from being a criminal. So long as society exists it will not only be the right, but duty of the State to interfere in the education of the young, so far as to save them from being kept in ignorance or educated in crime by ignorant or criminal parents.

SUPERVISORS' PROCEEDINGS.

Special Session.

MONDAY, June 9 th.

On the above named day the Board of Supervisors of Inyo county met in special session at 7 o'clock p. m. Present, Supervisors Harger, Sneden and Robinson, absent Stewart and Eldy. Call of meeting read.

The Board proceeded to consider the petitions of citizens and tax-payers of Inyo county praying the Board of Supervisors to ask the Superior Court of Kern county to dismiss the case of the The People vs. W. T. C. Elliott.

The following resolution was offered by Supervisor Sneden:

WHEREAS:—Petitions have been presented to the Board of Supervisors of Inyo county relative to the trial of the action of The People of the State of California vs. W. T. C. Elliott, set for trial June 23, 1890 at Bakersfield, Kern county, on a change of venue from this county, and a trial having heretofore been had and the jury failing to agree: We, your petitioners, believing that the Defendant has been thoroughly prosecuted, and the facts involved therein as fairly presented in the recent trial as will be in the future, and also taking into consideration the expressed opinion of the jury: It appears to us that the Defendant cannot be convicted, and we desire you, as a Board of Supervisors, that you express our wish to the Superior Court of Kern county and ask said Court to dismiss the action, therefore be it Resolved, That the petition of residents and tax payers above set forth express our views, and ask of the Hon. Judge of the Superior Court of Kern county to dismiss the action of The People of the State of California vs. W. T. C. Elliott, and that the District Attorney of Kern county be requested to present this petition to the Court.

It was moved by Supervisor Sneden and seconded by Supervisor Harger that the resolution be adopted by the Board. A vote was taken and resulted as follows: Aye: Sneden and Harger. No: Robinson. The motion was lost.

The following claims of members of the Board were allowed on the Salary Fund:

J. D. Harger	$20 10
S. G. Sneden	19 80
E. Robinson	6 30

Board adjourned.

POLITICAL ANNOUNCEMENTS.

All announcements under this head will be charged for at the uniform rate of Ten Dollars

For Superior Judge.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Superior Judge, subject to the action of the Republican County Convention.
GEORGE M. GILL.

For Superior Judge.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Superior Judge, Subject to the action of the Democratic county convention.
JOHN A. HANNAH.

For Superior Judge.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY DECLARE myself as a candidate for the office of Superior Judge, subject to the action of the Republican county convention.
A. R. CONKLIN.

For Sheriff.

ANNOUNCEMENNT IS HEREBY MADE that I respectfully declare myself as a candidate for the office of Sheriff, subject to the action of the Republican County Convention.
JOHN S. GORMAN.

For Treasurer.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Treasurer, subject to the action of the Democratic county convention. J. J. MOORE.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE.

STEVENS DITCH COMPANY.

Location of principal place of business, Independence, California. Location of ditch, near Independence, Inyo county.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of a Board of Directors, held on the 31st day of May, 1899, an assessment (No. 4) of Ten (10) cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary at the office of the company, Independence, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 25th day of July, 1890 will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Saturday, the 30th day of August, 1890 to pay the delinquent assessment together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.
P. H MACK, Secretary.

FINAL HOMESTEAD PROOF.

H A No. 432

LAND OFFICE AT INDEPENDENCE, CAL. April 30, 1890.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT THE following-named settler has filed notice of his intention to make final proof in support of his claim, and that said proof will be made before the Register and Receiver at Independence, Cal., on Saturday, June 14th, 1890, viz.: JOHN S. GORMAN, Homestead Application No. 432, for the W ½ of lot No. 1 in NW ¼ Sec. 5 lot No. 1 in NE ¼ and E ½ of lot No. 1 in NW ¼ of Sec 6, in Twp 13 S, Range 35 East, M D M

He names the following witnesses to prove his continuous residence upon, and cultivation of, said land, viz: Hiram C. Hamilton, Hezekiah P. Cartier, Alvah R. Conklin and William M. Boyd, all of Independence, Cala.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD, Register.

S. H. BIGLAND,

—DEALER IN—

Owens Valley Lands

39 SUTTER STREET,

SAN FRANCISCO.

1-26

A. K. EUGLEY,

BIG PINE INYO CO. CAL.

Dealer in
GENERAL
MERCHANDISE,
GROCERIES
MINERS Supplies

PROVISIONS,

&c., &c., &c.

Deputy County Clerk
A. K. EUGLEY,
Big Pine, Cal.

A $20 A Day Man!

A VOICE from Ohio. Here is portrait of Mr. Garrison, of Salem, Ohio. He writes: "Was at work on a farm for $20 a month; I now have an agency for E. C. Allen & Co's albums and publications and often make $20 a day." W. H. GARRISON. (Signed)

William Kline, Harrisburg, Pa., writes: "I have never known anything to sell like your album. Yesterday I took orders enough to pay me over $25." W. J. Elmore, Bangor, Me., writes: "I take an order for your album at almost every house I visit. My profits often as much as $20 for a single day's work." Others are doing quite as well; we have not space to give extracts from their letters. Every one who takes hold of this grand business gives us grand profits. Shall we start YOU in this business, reader? Write to us and learn all about it for yourself. We are starting many; we will start you if you don't delay until another gets ahead of you in your part of the country. If you take hold you will be able to pick up gold fast. ☞ Read— On account of a forced manufacturer's sale 125,000 ten dollar Photograph Albums are to be sold to the people for $2 each. Bound in Rich Crimson Silk Velvet Plush. Charmingly decorated insides. Handsomest album in the world. Largest Size. Greatest bargains ever known. Agents wanted. Liberal terms. Big money for agents. Any one can become a successful agent. Sells itself on sight—little or no talking necessary. Wherever shown, every one wants to purchase. Agents take thousands of orders with rapidity never before known. Great profits await every worker. Agents are making fortunes. Ladies make as much as men. You, reader, can do as well as anyone. Full information and terms free, to those who write for same, with particulars and terms for our Family Bibles, Books and Periodicals. After you know all, should you conclude to go no further, why no harm is done. Address E. G. ALLEN & CO., Augusta, Maine.

OFFICIAL.

Application for Patent.

Mining Application No. 247.

UNITED STATES LAND OFFICE, INDEPENDENCE, CAL., April 25, 1890.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT PATrick Reddy, whose post office address is San Francisco, California, has this day filed his application for a patent for fourteen hundred and forty-eigh and seven-tenths linear feet of the Bernon Quartz Mine or vein bearing galena, lead and silver, with surface ground six hundred feet in width, situated in Coso Mining District, County of Inyo and State of California and designated by the field notes and official plat on file in this office as Lot No. 42, in Township 19 South, Range No. 40 East, of Mt. Diablo Base and Meridian.

Said Lot No. 42 being described as follows, to wit:

Survey of Connecting Line:

Commencing at corner common to Sections 14, 15, 22 and 23 of T 19 S., R. 40 E., M. D. B. and M., and running with Mag. Var. of 15 deg. 37 min. E. as follows:

N. 73 deg. 52 min. E., Needle varying along the line from N. 58 1-8 deg. E. to N. 58 3-8 deg. E, Magnetic. 71.99 chs to the S W cor. post of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine, being the S. E. cor. of the Bernon claim.

Survey of the Exterior Boundaries:

Commencing at a stake in high stone Mont. having pencil marks too dim to be read, being the S. W. cor. of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine, and the S. E. cor. of the Bernon claim, thence deflecting L. 180 deg. 86 deg 57 min. from connecting line extended N. 73 deg 52 min. E. as assumed standard bearing of the survey, upon West boundary line of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine and East boundary line of the Bernon claim, and running as follows: 1. N. 19 deg. 11 min., W. 4.09 chs, centre of ravine bearing Easterly 7.42 chs, summit of high croppings of lime rock; whence bears N. 59 degrees 11 min. W 4.51 chs centre incline prospect shaft 15 ft deep, no marks, 10.14 chs to centre of wash bearing Easterly from summit towards Defiance Works; 10.90 chs to old stake in high stone Mont. marked in pencil as follows: — of Bernon and Defiance Ledge—surveyed by Joseph Seely, U. S. M. Surveyor; being the side line Mont. of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine; 710.7 ft., or 11 36 chs., S 4 3 by 4 post in mound of stone marked Defiance West line and Bernon East line; whence bears N. 35 deg. 19 min. E. 1 28 chs. centre of incline prospect cut 12 ft. deep; whence bears N. 70 deg. 49 min E 0.76 chs centre of small prospect cut, whence bears N 79 deg. 07 min. E 5.37 chs centre of mouth of Defiance and Bernon Tunnel; whence bears N. 70 deg. 45 min. W. 2 43 chs. the face of Defiance and Bernon Tunnel; 14.39 chs centre of wash leading Easterly; 15.61 chs; whence bears N 70 deg. 49 min. E 0 03 chs an old stake in stone Mont. having Seely's name in pencil and other marks too dim to be read, being a side-line Mont. of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine; 1. N. 19 deg. 11 min. W 16.18 chs summit of ridge bearing Easterly; 20.31 chs, whence bears S 42 deg. 04 min. W. 1.76 chs a stake in stone Mont. marked Kerso Ledge, S W cor. Post No. 6; whence bears N 42 deg. 04 min. E. 6.91 chs a stake in stone Mont. marked Kerso Ledge N E Post; whence bears N 35 deg. 45 min E 2.41 chs a stake in stone Mont. marked Kerso centre point 1448.7 ft., or 21.95 chs. to stake in stone Mont., no marks, being the N W cor. of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine, set 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon N E cor. No. 4, and Defiance N W cor. No. 4; thence deflecting L. 90 deg. from Co. 1 extended N. 19 deg. 11 min. W making interior angle 90 deg. ran 2 S. 70 deg. 49 min. W up on the North boundary line of the Bernon claim; local variation of declination of 0 deg. 18 min. E. 2, S 70 deg. 49 min, W 0.30 chs centre old sled road from summit of hill, 1.69 chs, whence bears N 60 deg. 07 min., W 3.06 chs a stake in stone Mont. being the Northerly end of Lode line and centre of Hidalgo claim, 2.10 chs whence bears N 79 deg. 57 min. W 0.61 chs the centre of Hidalgo incline shaft, 4.07 chs, crossing summit of Darwin Range, whence bears S 19 deg 31 min. E 2.91 chs. centre small shaft 300 ft or 4.545 chs, set 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked, Bernon L. L. P. No. 1; being the Northerly end of Lode Line and centre of Bernon claim, 7.86 chs centre mouth of tunnel bearing Nortuerly 6.00 ft, or 9.09 chs, set a 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon N W Cor. No. 4, being the N W Cor. of the Bernon claim; thence deflecting L 90 deg. from Co 2 extended S 70 deg. 49 min W, making the interior angle 90 deg. ran, 3, S 19 deg. 11 min. E, upon lode line; ascending 3.34 chs, whence bears S 74 deg. 41 min. W 2.91 chs a stone Mont. claimed to be the centre of Hidalgo Claim; whence bears S 72 deg. 36 min. W 0.71 chs centre small shaft; descending; 10.30 chs, whence bears S 70 deg. 49 min. W 0.30 chs centre prospect hole 11.82 chs, whence bears N 70 deg. 49 min. E 0.50 chs centre incline shaft 60 ft deep. Ascending; 13.03 chs, summit of spur bearing Westerly. Descending; 13.36 chs, whence bears S 70 deg. 06 min. E, 0.80 chs centre shaft 45 ft deep, 14.41 chs, whence bears S 70 deg. 49 min. W 0.10 chs centre mouth of tunnel, 16.66 chs, whence bears S 70 deg. 49 min. W 0.12 chs centre shaft 6 ft deep 1418 ft, or 21.94 chs to L. L. P., No. 2, of Claim.

Magnetic variation 15 deg. 37 min. E containing 19.95 acres.

THE LOCATION of this mine is recorded in the Recorder's office of Coso Mining District in Book C of page 136. The adjoining claimant is the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. mine.

Any and all persons claiming adversely any portion of said Bernon Quartz mine or surface ground are required to file their adverse claims with the Register of the United States Land Office at Independence in the State of California during the sixty days period of publication hereof, or they will be barred by virtue of the provisions of the Statute.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD, Register.

o-n24

INDEPENDENCE

SHAVING SALOON.

Shaving, Hair-Cutting, etc., done in the best manner.

WM. H. HUFF, Prop'r

J. R. ELDRED,
Sheriff and Tax-Collector.
INYO CO., CAL.

P. H. MACK,
COUNTY CLERK,
—AND—
Ex-officio Auditor and Recorder,
INYO CO., CAL.

GEO. M. GILL,
District Attorney,
INYO CO., CAL.

J. J. MOORE,
County Treasurer,
INYO CO., CAL.

S. P. M'KNIGHT, C. E.
COUNTY SURVEYOR
—AND—
U. S. Deputy Mineral Surveyor
For California and Nevada.
—BISHOP CREEK, INYO CO., CAL.—

The obtaining of United States mineral patents a specialty.

All kinds of surveying given the most careful and accurate attention.

JUSTICE OF PEACE,
C. MULHOLLAND.
Office in the "INDEPENDENT" building, Independence, Inyo County.

A. R. CONKLIN,
Attorney at Law.
Independence, Cal.
Will practice in all the Courts of the States of California and Nevada.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
Independence, Cal.

P. W. FORBES,
ATTORNEY AT LAW.
NOTARY PUBLIC.
☞ Cases in U. S. Land Office a Specialty. ☜
BISHOP, INYO COUNTY, CALIFORNIA.

IRVING J. WOODIN, M D.,
Physician & Surgeon,
(COUNTY PHYSICIAN)
Louise L. Woodin, M. D.
PHYSICIAN & SURGEON.
☞ NIGHT CALLS ATTENDED. ☜
Office and residence at the Reddy place, Independence.

W. H. GEORGE, M. D.,
Physician and Surgeon,
Bishop Creek, Cal.,
Offers his professional services to the people of Bishop Creek and vicinity. Office and residence opposite Andrew Clark's.

F. E. Bunting, M. D.
Physician & Surgeon
LONE PINE, CAL
OFFIE IN GELCIH BUILDING
All calls answered to immediately.

Lodge 221, F. & A. M.

Regular meetings of Lodge No. 221, F. & A. M., for the year 1889, will be held at the Lodge room at Independence as follows:

Saturday	February 1st
"	March 1st
"	March 29th
"	May 3rd
"	May 31st
"	June 28th
"	July 26th
"	August 30th
"	September 27th
"	October 25th
"	November 22nd
"	December 20th

P. H. MACK, W. M.
C. MULHOLLAND Sec.

P. W. FORBES. P. H. MACK.
MACK & FORBES.
Real Estate Agents,
Address, P. H. MACK, Independence, Cal. P. W. FORBES, Bishop, Cal.

FRED BURCKHARDT
Watchmaker & Jeweler,
LONE PINE, CAL.
Time pieces of all descriptions repaired and regulated, satisfaction guaranteed. Jewelry made to order. Firearms repaired and loaded.
☞ All orders from any part of the country will be promptly attended to, at the most reasonable charges. At the old stand "Mechanics' Hall," Lone Pine.
FRED BURKHARDT.

CROCKER'S HOTEL.
BIG PINE - CAL.
New House,
New Furniture,
Low Rates
☞ Splendid hunting and fishing near by, in act, it is a veritable paradise for tourists and pleasure seekers.
Special attention given to the wants of every guest.
CROCKER BROS., Props.
sep1-tf

ANTONS SALOON
KEELER, CAL.
BEER, WINES, LIQUORS and CIGARS
All kinds of Fancy Drinks, including pure water. A comfortable and pleasant Hall.
JOHN C. ANTON, Prop.

IRWIN'S SALOON
Cor. Edwards and Market Streets,
Independence . Cal.
THE PUBLIC GENERALLY ARE RESPECTFULLY invited to call and inspect my establishment, which has been entirely rebuilt and furnished in a style second to none on this side of the mountains. A SPLENDID NEW BILLIARD TABLE provided for the amusement of patrons.
THE BAR
Is supplied with the most celebrated brands of pure Wines and Liquors and the Finest Havana Cigars.
JOHN C. IRWIN, Proprietor.
feb12tf

Palace Saloon.
WALTER OBER, Lessee.
—THE BAR—
Is constantly supplied with the best kinds of
WINES, LIQUORS, & CIGARS.
☞ The most careful attention given to the amusement and comfort of patrons.
A FINE BILLIARD TABLE
Is always at the disposal of visitors to the Palace Saloon Dec. 29 89

Pioneer
Livery & Feed Stables.
INDEPENDENCE, CAL.
Having returned and resumed the management of the above well known feed and livery stables, patrons can be assured of finding there the best of Buggy Teams, Saddle Horses, and
Livery Accommodations
in general. Also, Hay and Grain for sale by the pound or ton.
O. I. MAIRS, Proprietor.

E. H. Edwards,
—DEALER IN—
General Merchandise,
LONE PINE,
INYO COUNTY - - - CALIFORNIA.

BLACKSMITHING,
Horseshoeing, General Iron
—AND—
WAGON WORK.
PIONEER BLACKSMITH SHOP
Cor. Main St. & Depot Ave.,
INDEPENDENCE, CAL.
W. F. MATLACK ..... PROPRIETOR.
Horseshoeing ..... $2 00 for Cash
For particulars, call and see
W. F. MATLACK.

LONE PINE
Blacksmith Shop.
R. C. Spear, Prop'r
—ALL WORK ON—
MINING TOOLS,
FARMING IMPLEMENTS
& FREIGHTING OUTFITS
—PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO—
HORSE SHOEING,
CARRIAGE WORK,
GENERAL REPAIRING
☞ All work attended to with neatness and despatch. Prices to suit the times.

BOOTS AND SHOES
MADE AND REPAIRED.
THE BEST MATERIAL.
FIRST-CLASS WORK.
Repairs done Promptly.
Prices Reasonable.
nov 30-tf A. J. DAVIS, Independence.

TO ADVERTISERS
A list of 1000 newspapers divided into STATE AND SECTIONS will be sent on application—FREE.
To those who want their advertising to pay, we can offer no better medium for thorough and effective work than the various sections of our Select Local List. GEO. P. ROWELL & CO., Newspaper Advertising Bureau, 10 Spruce Street, New York

MISCELLANEOUS.

Railroad Time Table.

CARSON & COLORADO R R

TAKING EFFECT,

Sunday, May 10th, 18 9.

STATIONS	From Mound House. No. 1	To Mound House. No. 2.
	Leave—	Arrives—
Mound House	12:30 p. m	5.55 p. m
Dayton	1:00 p. m.	5.15 p. m.
Wabuska	3:05 p. m	3 00 p. m
Hawthorne	6.50 p. m.	11:20 a. m.
Luning	7.30 p. m.	10.05 a. m
Sodа Springs	9:15 p. m.	9.05 a. m
Belleville	10:25 p. m.	7.45 a. m.
Candelaria	Ar. 11.10 p. m	Lv. 7.10 a. m
	No. 3.	No. 4.
	Leave—	Arrives—
Belleville	8 10 a. m	5:25 p. m
Benton	11 40 a. m	-
Bishop Creek	1:50 p. m.	11:00 a. m
Alvord	2. 5 p. m	10:00 a. m
Independence	4 10 p. m.	8:30 a. m
Lone Pine	5.00 p. m.	7.40 a. m
Keeler	Ar 5.45 p. m.	Lv. 7.00 a. m.

Trains 1 and 2 run daily.
Train 3 runs Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays
Train 4 runs Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays

Passenger trains make close connection at Mound House with express trains of V & T. R R, which connect at Reno with east and west bound trains of Central Pacific Railroad.

Stage Connections:

AT HAWTHORNE with United States Stage Company's coaches for Aurora (26 miles), Bodie (37 miles), Lundy and Bridgeport.

AT LUNING (125 miles from Mound House) with Gilmer, Salsbury & Co's. tri weekly stages (leaving Monday, Wednesdays and Fridays) for Downeyville, Grantsville and Belmont.

AT CANDELARIA with U. S. Stage Co's. stages for Columbus (8 miles), Silver Peak, Montezuma, Alida Valley, Gold Mountain, etc.

H. M. YERINGTON, General Superintendent.
S. J. LAWS, Assistant Superintendent.
D. A. BENDER, General Freight and Passenger Agent.

Lake View Hotel
Keeler, Cal.
John Barnes, Prop'r.
☞ First-class hotel in every respect. The table always supplied with the best in the market. Clean, nicely furnished rooms. Transient visitors will receive every courtesy and attention.
THE BAR
—Is constantly supplied with the finest—
Wines,
Liquors,
& Cigaas.

EDWARD CHENOT
Independence, Cal.,
INVITES PUBLIC ATTENTION TO HIS extensive Stock of
GENERAL MERCHANDIS
....Consisting of....
GROCERIES.
PROVISIONS
Tobacco, Cigars,
WINES AND LIQUORS
FLOUR & GRAI
Together with an Assortment of
DRY GOODS AND CLOTHING
ETC., ETC
☞ Buyers and consumers should call and examine my stock and prices before purchasing elsewhere.
E. CHENOT.
Independence, Cal., March 9, 1884.
n476tf

R. J. WHITTAKER
—PAINTER,—
BIG PINE, - - - - CAL.
HOUSE PAINTING,
SIGN WRITING,
PAPER HANGING,
GRAINING,
GILDING ON WOOD AND GLASS
Wagons Painted
The best of materials used and satisfaction guaranteed.

J. W. Murphy.
BLACKSMITHING
—AND—
General Iron Work.
Wagons and Carriages Repaired.
HORSESHOEING, $2.00 for CASH
Shop on Edwards St., opposite the Court House, Independence.

NATHAN RHINE.

NATHAN RHINE,
(Successor to Harris & Rhine.)
MERCHANT,
INDEPENDENCE
Inyo Co. Cal.
Wholesale & Retail
—DEALER IN—
General Merchandise
MY STOCK
CONSISTING OF
Almost every needed article is well calculated to satisfy the wants of every body; and, as in the past, it will be our aim in the future to retain the extensive patronage enjoyed heretofore.
NATHAN RHINE.

NATHAN RHINE
BANKER.
Independence,
Cal.
SELL EXCHANGE
—ON—
SAN FRANCISCO
Draw Direct
—ON—
NEW YORK,
LONDON, England.
BERLIN, FRANKFORT-on-the-Main, GERMANY.
I AM PREPARED TO TRANSACT ALL KINDS,
OF GENERAL
BANKING
&
EXCHANGE,
BUSINESS.
Wechsel in beliebigen Summen auf Berlin und Frankfurt am der Main.
Deutsche Vollmachten geben Sicht.
Geldsendungen von und nach Deutschland besorgt.
AGENT FOR
WELLS FARGO
& CO'S.
EXPRESS
MUTUAL
Life Insurance Co.
OF NEW YORK
CAPITAL - - - - $5,000,000
LIVERPOOL
AND LONDON AND GLOBE
INSURANCE - COMPANY
Capital - - - - $21,000,000
NATHAN RHINE

INYO INDEPENDENT.

INDEPENDENCE, CA.

SUNDAY, JUNE 13 189

MARKET REPORT

Bar silver, 104½
Lead, 4.12½
Copper, 15
Tin, 21.25
Sugar, 05½
Coffee, 17 @ 19¾
Wool, foothill, 17 @ 20.

Religious Services.

Rev. J. H. De La Matyr will preach at Independence at 7:30 o'clock evening; Sunday School at Independence and Lone Pine at 11 o'clock a. m.

BORN.

LEVY—At Bishop, June 4th, to Mr. and Mrs. D. Levy, a Daughter.

MCGOVERN—At Georges Creek, June 2, to Mr. and Mrs. A. G. McGovern, a daughter.

COURT NOTES.

Superior Court of Inyo County California Hon. John A. Hannah, Judge.

FRIDAY, June

Estate of Barna Peeler, deceased. Filed Petition for letters of administration.

Emma Ferrel vs. Geo. Ferrel.—Clerk's entry of default.

TUESDAY, June 3d.

Owen Neylon vs. John J. Milner, administrator, et al.—Filed summons.

Sheriff Elliott has been appointed District Deputy Grand Master of Odd Fellows.

Mr. Andy Dell of Bishop was at Independence last Tuesday on his way back from a trip to Tulare.

Mrs. W. K. Miller and Mrs. Decker of Lone Pine made a visit of a few days to Independence at the beginning of the week.

Last Saturday R. S. Miner Esq. and De Page left town for San Francisco. Mr. Miner improved very much in health while here.

Mr. J. F. Turner and Mr. A. I. Sanborn of San Francisco arrived at Independence last Monday. They came by way of Mojave.

Mrs. A. K. Cagley of Big Pine was at Independence several days this week visiting with the family of her brother, Mr. S. A. Densmore.

Mr. J. I. Moore is a candidate for the Democratic nomination for County Treasurer. Mr. Moore has so long and so faithfully filled the same office that his record is the best commendation that can be given him.

Supervisor Sueden says if it had not been for the expenses of the Elliott trial the tax levy of the incoming fiscal year would not have exceeded one and a half per cent on the assessed valuation of property in the county.

Witnesses in the Elliott case must be in Bakersfield on June 23d. Therefore they must leave here next Thursday, reaching there on the 21st. No provision has been made by our Supervisors for paying witnesses' expenses and railroad fare as on the Weinstock and Lubin, of Sacramento, have had an advertisement running in this paper for some months past. During that time many orders have been sent the Firm from Inyo County, and inquiry among the senders of said orders brings out the fact that in every case complete satisfaction has been given to buyers of goods.

What promised to be a big mining suit has been settled. Hon. P. Reddy and Timothy O'Keefe were the claimants of Cerro Gordo. Other parties laid claim to the property and proceedings had been pending several months ago. Now the claimants have sold out to the Southern Development Company and there will be no lawsuit.

Last Monday Sheriff Elliott had a letter from Elliott in reference to the approaching trial. Elliott asks to be excused from writing at greater length as a carriage was in waiting to take him to Belleview. He was on a trip up to Inyo county to see his friends. He could secure a good team and he set off getting back to Bakersfield in time for the trial. The evidence of this infernal scoundrel is almost incredible.

Mr. C. M. Joslin left Independence last Sunday for San Luis Obispo. Mr. Joslin is aged seventy-nine years; he insisted upon going alone to make the journey over the desert to Mojave. He traveled with one horse and a road cart. His son-in-law, Mr. J. C. Irwin, insisted strongly on sending a man with him, but he refused all offers to be given an attendant, and could not be argued out of the determination he had made to travel alone. Joslin only reached Lone Pine and has concluded to go by rail.

The commencement exercises of the Inyo Academy begin with Sunday, June 15th. The student's sermon will be delivered by Rev. C. L. Logan of C[illegible] the opening address by Rev. J. [illegible] in City. Lectures and [illegible] will be delivered on Monday and [illegible] evenings of the following week. The annual meeting of the Board on Tuesday, June 17th, at 2 o'clock p. m. Educational meeting Wednesday afternoon.

Tax-payers representing four hundred and ten thousand dollars of assessed property signed the petition that was presented to the Supervisors on last Monday evening asking for a dismissal of the Elliott case. This petition was offered for signature at but three places in the County, namely, Bishop, Lone Pine and Independence and very little effort was made to obtain signers. We believe that every signer of that petition believes Elliott guilty of murder but every one of them believes that it is not possible to convict him of murder in Kern County.

Fourth of July.

A public meeting was held at the Norman House, Independence, last Tuesday evening, to provide for a proper celebration of the Fourth of July. C. Mulholland was chosen for Chairman. After discussion it was ordered that the Chair appoint a Committee on finance and another on general arrangements. On the first Committee the Chair appointed J. W. Murphy, O. I. Mairs and Henry Rhine. On the second Committee the following were appointed, viz.: J. W. Murphy, P. H. Mack, J. C. Irwin D. Cofer and I. H. Mulholland. These are both good Committees and by them no no effort will be spared to make the celebration successful.

An Immense Work.

During the past few months frequent mention has been made of a project for building a large canal to convey the water from Owens river to Salt Wells valley. Mr. L. D. Mathews has been engaged most of the past two years in studying the country and doing preliminary work toward this end. Parties in San Francisco are to furnish the capital needed in the work. Last Monday two members of the Company, Mr. J. F. Turner and Mr A. I. Sanborn, arrived at Independence. In order to examine the country to be irrigated and the route of the proposed canal they came by way of Mojave, traveling through Salt Wells valley and from there along the line of the canal to Independence. Mr. Turner said in substance as follows: Many letters had been written him by Mr. Mathews descriptive of the country, and he had read many newspaper articles on the same subject. From all of this reading he had formed, as he thought, a tolerably correct opinion of the country, its extent, resources, topography and climate. But in all of these particulars the reality far exceeds his expectations. There is far more land than he expected to find and it is far better quality. The amount of water available for irrigation is vastly greater than he expected to find or could have been made to believe. His conception of the climate was entirely wrong; he expected to suffer from great heat but finds it as pleasant as need be desired. The grandeur of the Sierra Nevada Mountains when they tower above Owens Valley on the east is not equalled by any other chain of mountains in the United States. This grand range of snow-covered mountains makes the vast reservoirs where are stored the supplies for the many streams that run down to fertilize Owens Valley and fill up Owens Lake. The orchards at Oasis, Lone Pine and Independence with their trees now loaded with apricots, nectarines, peaches, pears and apples, give all the proof required of the fertility of the soil and a good climate. The fields of alfalfa and grain show not less clearly how well the country is suited to general farming. The grape vines prove how well the country and climate are adapted to the production of wine and raisins. The Company have many acquaintances in the Eastern States who will eagerly seek these lands as soon as water can be supplied, and who would make the most desirable kind of settlers. If reasonable encouragement is given the Company by the people of Owens Valley, work on the canal will be begun immediately. No assistance is asked here; all that is required is that no hinderances be unwisely put in the way. It is estimated that not less than one million dollars will be spent in this work and the Company are prepared to spend the amount. As soon as work shall begin all the men and teams that room can be found for will be employed and the work will be brought to a finish as rapidly as possible. Mr. Turner talked freely of the intention of his Company and gave at considerable length his own opinion of the country and the project but the foregoing gives the gist of all that he said. The mere beginning on such a work as this would at once increase the value of every acre of ground in Owens Valley. Mr. E. Robinson of Independence says that the beginning of work would add five thousand dollars to the value of his property, though he should never take a drop of water from the canal. The rights of all the present settlers will be properly guarded and no one need hesitate to give willingly liberally the Company may ask concerning right of way or riparian ownership

Found Dead.

Wednesday of this week James Ward was found dead in his cabin by Arlie Mairs. Ward was a native of England, aged about sixty-six years. About ten years ago he came over the mountains from Visalia by way of Kings river. He prospected and located a mining claim on Mt. Kearsarge, about twelve miles west from Independence. There, at an elevation of over 10,000 feet above sea level, he built a cabin and lived in it all these years. In the winter the snow covers the mountain to a great depth and at such seasons Ward would be alone for four or five months at a time. He kept a record of the days and when he came down to Independence after each of those long terms of isolation always knew accurately the day of the week and month. About May 10th of this year he came down to Independence to get needed supplies. Four weeks ago yesterday he left town, accompanied by Jack Welch, who took some pack animals along loaded with goods. Welch unloaded the goods about a mile from Ward's cabin, as it was impossible to get the animals any farther, the mountain being very steep. Welch says that the snow was then at least twenty feet deep all about the cabin. He carried a few packages of such articles as were most needed by Ward and put them in the cabin. The rest of the goods were put close to the trail and covered with canvas held in place by stones. Welch then came back to town, leaving Ward alone. The old man had been in poor health for same time past and on Wednesday Arlie Mairs and A. W. Sheets went up to see what condition he was in. Sheets stopped in the canyon a mile or two below the cabin and Arlie went on alone. On opening the door he saw the dead body of the old man seated in a chair near the fireplace. Decomposition was far advanced and it was evident that he had died soon after Jack Welch had left him four weeks previously. The goods that Welch had placed near the trail were found just as he had left them. Ward took ore out of his mine from time to time and always expressed confidence that he would develop a valuable ore body. He talked very little about himself or his business. His credit was good with Mr. N. Rhine and his bills were always paid. Nothing is certainly known of the past history of Ward; there is some doubt if that was even his real name. It is supposed that he had two sons, both living in Sacramento and both well-to-do, one of them said to be a wholesale butcher. The Coroner went yesterday to hold an inquest.

A Noted Prospector.

A few days ago Joseph Brunel was at Independence getting a stock of such supplies as prospectors need. Mr. Brunel was the discoverer of the rich mines of Calico, in San Bernardino County. He realized a good deal of money from the sale of mines and town lots, but he neither preaches nor practices hoarding and had a jolly time while it lasted. About ten years ago he was one of a party of five who went on a prospecting trip over through the Death Valley Country. They got out of water, and two of the party died of thirst and a third went mad but was brought out alive by the other two. Brunel got enough of Death Valley on that trip. There is no longer any danger in traversing that once dreaded and fatal region, provided travelers have a guide who is familiar with the country. Springs of good water are scattered among the mountains and can be readily reached when their location is known. Mr. Brunel is prospecting in the Inyo Mountains, and hopes to find another Calico.

FULL PROGRAMME OF THE FOOT-RACE FOR $900, WALTER OBER AND B. ROSENTHAL. AT INDEPENDENCE NEXT WEEK.

WEINSTOCK & LUBIN:

It takes two carloads of paper every year made in the East and shipped across the Continent to print the Illustrated Catalogue of WEINSTOCK, LUBIN & Co., Retailers, Sacramento. Four or five fast steam presses are used in printing; and thousands of dollars are expended for engravings, editing, printing, mailing, etc.

And what does it all mean? Back of it all there is a great truth. It pays to send to them for whatever you need to wear.

This Catalogue (free to any address) places their great stock at your very doors. It lets you select at leisure and select what you wish. It does not over-persuade you to buy what your judgment the next day will tell you is an unwise purchase. You can make out your order, lay it aside for a day or two, then review it and see if it still seems a wise one. Do salesmen give you this privilege?

If goods are not as ordered, you are at liberty to return them at their expense and get your money back.

Ladies' or Misses' Bracelets of rolled gold twisted wire, with padlock. These bracelets are very finely finished; and the fastening is so arranged that it also can be used as a glove buttoner. The whole is very neat and useful, as well as ornamental. Price 20c., by mail, 2c. extra. State whether your wrist is large or small. WEINSTOCK, LUBIN & Co.

Clothing	Dry Goods	Millinery
Upholstery	Trunks and Valises	Silverware
Dress Goods	Boots and Shoes	Notions
Cloaks	Furnishing Goods	Toys, etc.
Domestics	Household Supplies	Fancy Work

Illustrated Catalogue free to any address. Also, samples of Dress Goods. In ordering samples, state colors desired and about the price desired.

WEINSTOCK, LUBIN & CO.
400, 402, 404, 406, 408, 410 and 412 K St.
Sacramento, Cal.

JEWELRY, DIAMONDS, WATCHES.
Hyman Fredrick, Reno, Nev.

The attention of the people of Inyo and neighboring counties is respectfully invited to the
LARGEST AND BEST STOCK
of Watches, Diamonds, Ear and Finger Rings, Bracelets and all other kinds of Jewelry this side of San Francisco. Knives, Forks, Spoons, and other Table Ware of the Best quality.
PRICES DEFY OUTSIDE COMPETITION.
All repairs done promptly and in a workmanlike manner.
Address orders and packages to
HYMAN FREDRICK, Jeweler,
m30-tf RENO, NEVADA.

MISCELLANEOUS.

NORMAN HOUSE,
Independence, - - Cal.
New House.
New Furniture.
Low Rates.
Special attention will be given to secure the comfort of guests.
O. I. MAIRS, Prop.
feb12tf

BELL'S
Flouring Mills,
A. N. BELL, Prop.
TRY BELL'S
EXTRA PATENT ROLLER FLOUR.
Having added Patent Rolls and other Improvements to our Mills, I am now turning out Flour that is fully
Equal to the Best.
Corn, Oats and Barley Cracked on Short Notice.
A. N. BELL,
Independence, Cal.

PIONEER BREWERY
INDEPENDENCE
BEER ICE COLD.
The Bar is supplied with the Best of all kinds of Liquors and Cigars.
The Coolest Hall in the town. Call in and see what comfort you can have this hot weather.
PHILIP GEHRIG, PROPRIETOR

MISCELLANEOUS.

BUHACH
THE UNRIVALED
Insect Exterminator
Manufactured solely from Pyrethrum flowers, grown in California, in a locality where the soil and climate are peculiarly adapted to the production of flowers rich in the essential oil which makes them so remarkably destructive to insect life.
Avoid the Worthless and Spurious Preparations, sold as Insect Powders, and use Buhach from original packages, and clear your premises of all Annoying and Destructive Insect Pests.
None Genuine Without the Trade Mark.
If your dealer doesn't keep it, order directly from the
Buhach Producing & Manufacturing COMPANY,
SOLE MANUFACTURERS,
STOCKTON. - - CALIFORNIA.

Wm. Muth-Rasmussen.
Bee Keeper.
Manufacturer of Comb Foundation.
Independence, Inyo Co. Cal

IF YOU WISH A GOOD REVOLVER PURCHASE ONE OF SMITH & WESSON'S
Finest small arms ever manufactured and the first choice of all experts. In calibres 32, 38 and 44-100. Single or double action, Safety Hammerless and Target models. Best quality wrought steel, carefully inspected for workmanship and stock. Unrivaled for finish, durability and accuracy. Do not be deceived by cheap malleable iron imitations often sold for the genuine article. They are unreliable and dangerous. The SMITH & WESSON REVOLVERS are stamped upon the barrels with firm's name, address and dates of patents, and are guaranteed perfect. Insist upon having them, and if your dealer cannot supply you, an order sent to address below will receive prompt attention. Descriptive catalogue and prices upon application.
SMITH & WESSON,
Springfield, Mass.

DEALERS IN
General Merchandise.
—ALL KINDS OF—
Farm Implements
—AND—
--MACHINERY--
Farm Produce
—OF ALL KINDS BOUGHT—
Orders for all kinds of supplies needed in mining camps promptly filled.
GIVEN & INGALLS.
—DEALERS IN—
FARM PRODUCE.

J. E. DUNLAP.
Harness Maker.
Harness of all kinds, from the lightest to the heaviest. Any kind of new work made promptly and of the best material. Repairing done on the shortest notice. A full line of saddles and harness.

Valley View Hotel.
O. H. Hill, Prop'r.
A New House Newly Furnished Throughout. Guests will receive every courtesy and attention.

NEVADA STABLE
BISHOP.
Opposite Valley View Hotel, Main St
In the Livery Department nothing is kept but safe and good traveling carriage and saddle horses. Conveyances of all kinds first-class. Good attendance and the best of hay and grain for all animals boarding at the stable
S. P. SMITH, Prop.

BISHOP CREEK
BREWERY,
MUNZINGER, PHILLIPPAY & CO.,
Proprietors.
All the appliances and conveniences of First Class Brewery, including a beautiful grove for out-door parties.
Customers supplied on all points
Of the C. & C. Railroad.
Send orders to
MUNZINGER, PHILLIPPAY & CO.
Bishop Creek, Cal.

F. E. Bosworth,
Watchmaker & Jeweler.
BISHOP, CAL.
Fine and Complicated Watch Repairing a Specialty.
Guns, Sewing Machines, Organs and Music Boxes Put in Perfect Condition and Warranted.
I Prefer to do all work at your house and will call if you will write to me at Bishop.

A NEW DEAL!
BISHOP CREEK
Livery. Feed & Sale Stable.
ROBERT O'NEIL, Prop'r.
Horses are boarded by the day, week or month. Stock bought and sold.
Bishop Creek, Cal., Nov. 20, 1883.

CASH ST[illegible]
A small stock of fresh groceries and canned goods constantly renewed.
Fresh Produce, and Grain Flour, etc., constantly on hand.
CANDIES,
PEANUTS,
WALNUTS,
TOYS!
THE CASH STORE
Is Where You Get
WORTH OF YOUR MONEY

THOMAS & HILL,
—DEALERS IN—
GENERAL MERCHANDISE
BIG PINE, INYO COUNTY, CAL.,
We keep constantly on hand goods of all kinds needed in a country home. We order only First-Class Goods and ask no more than a reasonable profit. Give us a trial.
THOMAS & HILL.

J. FORBES. W. D. TOBEY
FORBES & TOBEY,
HAWTHORNE, NEV.,
—DEALERS IN—
LUMBER
OF ALL KINDS.
DOORS,
SHINGLES,
SASH AND BLINDS,
LATH,
RUSTIC
MOULDINGS,
DRESSED LUMBER.
Matched and Dressed Flooring.
sept 11-tf

; I'll have his l it in choke

made his way to the d pillars, but on arriving taken aback, for the place appearance of being deserted.
no blinds to the windows, and on were muddy foot marks and bits of d straw which seemed to be the litter of a recent removal. Indeed, there on the road were the broad wheel marks of the van which had carted off the furniture. He stared at the sight with dismay. The bird had apparently flown and left no address, and he had had his trip for nothing.

He pressed upon the electric bell; that is, he did this ultimately. George was not accustomed to electric bells, indeed he had never seen one before, and after attempting in vain to pull it with his fingers—for he knew that it must be a bell because there was the word itself written on it—he as a last resource condescended to try it with his teeth. Ultimately, however, he discovered how to use it, but without result. Either the battery had been taken away, or it was out of gear. Just as he was wondering what to do next he made a discovery—the door was slightly ajar. He pushed it and it came open—revealing a dirty hall, stripped of every scrap of furniture. Entering, he shut the door and walked up the stairs to the room whence he had fled after thrashing Johnnie. Here he paused and listened, for he thought he heard somebody in the room; nor was he mistaken, for presently a well remembered voice shrilled out within:

"Who's skulking about outside there?" said the voice. "If it's one of those bailiffs he'd better hook it, for there's nothing left here."

George's countenance positively beamed at the sound.

"Bailiffs, marm?" he sung out through the door; "it ain't no varmints bailiffs, it's a friend, and just when you're wanting one seemingly. Can I come in?"

"Oh, yes, come in, whoever you are," said the voice. Accordingly he opened the door and entered, and this was what he saw. The room, like the rest of the house, had been stripped of everything, with the solitary exceptions of a box and a mattress, beside which there were an empty bottle and a dirty glass. On the mattress sat the fair Edithia, alias Mrs. D'Aubigne, alias the Tiger, alias Mrs. Quest, and such a sight as she presented George had never seen before. Her fierce face bore traces of recent heavy drinking, and was moreover dirty, haggard and dreadful to look upon; her hair was a frouzy mat, on some patches of which the golden dye had faded, leaving it its natural hue of doubtful gray. She had no collar on, and her linen was open at the neck; on her feet were a filthy pair of white satin slippers, on her back that same gorgeous pink satin tea gown which Mr. Quest had observed on the occasion of his visit, now, however, soiled and torn. Anything more squalid or more repulsive than the whole picture cannot be imagined, and though his stomach was pretty strong, and in the course of his life he had seen many a sight of utter destitution, George literally recoiled from it.

"What's the matter?" said the hag, sharply, "and who the dickens are you? Ah, I know now; you are the chap who whacked Johnnie," and she burst into a hoarse scream of laughter at the recollection. "It was mean of you, though, to hook it and leave me. He pulled me, the devil, and I was fined two pounds by the beak."

"Mean of him, marm, not me; but he was a mean varmint altogether, he was; to go and pull a lady, too; I niver heard of such a thing. But, marm, if I might say so, you seem to be in trouble here," and he took a seat upon the deal box.

"In trouble; I should think I was in trouble. There's been an execution in the house, that is, there's been three executions—one for rates and taxes, one for a butcher's bill, and one for rent. They all came together, and fought like wild cats for the duds. That was yesterday, and you see all they have left me; cleaned out everything down to my new yellow satin, and then asked for more. They wanted to know where my jewelry was, but I hid them there, hee, hee!"

"Meaning, marm?"

"Meaning that I hid it—that is, what was left of it—under a board. But that ain't the worst. When I was asleep that devil Ellen, who's had her share of the swag all these years, got to the board and collared the things, and bolted with them, and look what she's left me instead," and she held up a scrap of paper, "a receipt for five years' wages, and she's had them over and over again. Ah, if ever I get a chance at her," and she doubled her long hand and made a motion as of a person scratching. "She's bolted and left me here to starve. I haven't had a bite since yesterday, nor a drink either, and that's worse. What's to become of me? I'm starving. I shall have to go to the work house. Yes, me," she added in a scream, "me, who have spent thousands. I shall have to go to a work house like a common woman."

"It's cruel, marm, cruel," said the sympathetic George, "and you a lawful wedded wife 'till death do us part.' But, marm, I saw a public over the way. Now, no offense, but you'll let me just go over and fetch a bite and a sup."

"Well," she answered, hungrily, "you're a gent, you are, though you're a country one. You go, while I just make a little toilet; and as for the drink, why, let it be brandy."

"Brandy it shall be," said the gallant George, and departed.

In ten minutes he returned with a supply of beef patties, some plates and glasses, and a bottle of good strong British brown, which, as everybody knows, is sufficient quantity to render three privates or two blue jackets drunk and incapable.

The woman, who now presented a slightly more respectable appearance, seized the bottle, and, pouring about a wine glassful and a half of its contents into a tumbler, mixed it with an equal quantity of water and drank it off at a draught.

"That's better," she said, "and now for a patty. It's a real picnic, this is."

He handed her one, but she could not eat more than half of it, for alcohol destroys the healthier appetites, and she soon flew back to the brandy bottle.

"Now, marm, that you are a little more comfortable, perhaps you will tell me how you got into this way, and you with a rich husband as I well knows to love and cherish you."

"A husband to love and cherish me!" she said; "why I have written to him three times to tell him that I'm starving, and never a cent has he given me—and there's no allowance due yet, and when there is they'll take it, for I owe hundreds."

"Well," said George, "I call it cruel—cruel, and he rolling in gold. Thirty thousand pounds he has just made, that I know of. You must be an angel, marm, to stand it, an angel without wings. If it were my husband, now, I'd know the reason why."

"Ay, but I daren't. He'd murder me. He said he would."

George laughed gently. "Lord! Lord!" he said, "to see how men do play it off upon poor weak women, working on their nerves and that like. He kill you? Laryer Quest kill you, and he is the biggest coward in Boisingham? But there it is; this is a world of wrong, as the parson says, and the poor shorn lambs must jamb their tails down and turn Why, marm," answered ... splendid mendacity, "it's the best thing that can happen for you, for if they collar him you get the property, and that's law."

"Oh," she answered, "if I'd known that he'd have been collared long ago, I can tell you."

"Come," said George, seeing that they were nearing their destination, "have one more nip just to keep your spirits up," and he produced the brandy bottle, at which she took a long pull.

"Now," he said, "go for him like a wild cat."

"Never you fear," she said.

They dismounted from the cab and entered the court house without attracting any particular notice. The court itself was crowded, for a case which had excited public interest was coming to a conclusion. The jury had given their verdict and sentence was being pronounced by Mr. de la Molle, the chairman.

Mr. Quest was sitting at his table below the bench taking some notes.

"There's your husband," he whispered, "now do you draw on."

George's part in the drama was played, and with a sigh of relief he fell back to watch its final development. He saw the fierce, tall woman slip through the crowd like a snake or a panther to its prey, and some compunction touched him when he thought of the prey. He glanced at the elderly respectable looking gentleman at the table, and reflected that he, too, was stalking his prey—the old squire and the ancient house of De la Molle. Then his compunction vanished, and he rejoiced to think that he would be the means of destroying a man who, to fill his pockets, did not hesitate to destroy the family with which his life and the lives of his forefathers for many generations had been interwoven.

By this time the woman had fought her way through the press, bursting the remaining buttons of her ulster in so doing, and reached the bar which separated the spectators from the space reserved for the officials. On the further side of the bar was a gangway, then came the table at which Mr Quest sat. He had been busy writing something all this time; now he rose and passed it to Mr. de la Molle, and then turned to sit down again.

Meanwhile his wife had craned her long, lithe body forward over the bar till her head was almost level with the hither edge of the table. There she stood glaring at him, her wicked face alive with fury and malice, for the brandy she had drunk had caused her to forget her fears.

As Mr. Quest turned, his eye caught the flash of color from the peacock feather hat. From thence it traveled to the face beneath.

He gave a gasp, and the court seemed to whirl round him. The sword had fallen, indeed.

"Well, Billy," whispered the hateful voice, "you see I've come to look you up."

With a desperate effort he recovered himself. A policeman was standing near him. He beckoned to him and told him to remove the woman, who was drunk. The policeman advanced and touched her on the arm.

"Come, you be off," he said, "you're drunk."

At that moment Mr. de la Molle ceased giving judgment.

"I ain't drunk," said the woman, loud enough to attract the attention of the whole court, which now, for the first time, observed her extraordinary attire, "and I've a right to be in the public court."

"Come on," said the policeman, "the clerk says you're to go."

"The clerk says so, does he?" she answered, "and do you know who the clerk is? I'll tell you all," and she raised her voice to a scream; "he's my husband, my lawful wedded husband, and here's proof of it," and she took the folded certificate from her pocket and flung it so that it fell upon the desk of one of the magistrates.

Mr. Quest sunk into his chair, and there was a silence of astonishment through the court.

The squire was the first to recover himself.

"Silence," he said, addressing her; "silence. This cannot go on here."

"But I want justice," she shrieked. "I want justice; I want a warrant against that man for bigamy." (Renewed sensation.) "He's left me to starve, me, his lawful wife. Look here," and she tore open the pink satin tea gown, "I haven't enough clothes on me, the bailiffs took all my clothes, I have suffered his cruelty for years, and borne it, and I can bear it no longer. Justice, your worships; I only ask for justice."

"Be silent, woman," said Mr de la Molle. "If you have any criminal charge to bring against anybody, there is a proper way to make it. Be silent, or leave this court."

But she only screamed the more for justice, and loudly detailed fragments of her woes to the eagerly listening crowd.

Then policemen were ordered to remove her, and there followed a most frightful scene. She shrieked and bit and fought in such a fashion that it took four men to drag her to the door of the court, where she dropped exhausted against the wall in the corridor.

"Well," said the observant George to himself, "she has done the trick proper, and no mistake. Couldn't have been better. That's a master one, that is." Then he turned his attention to the stricken man before him. Mr Quest was sitting in his chair, his face ashen, his eyes wide open, and his hands placed flat on the table before him. When silence had been restored, he rose and turned to the bench, apparently with the intention of addressing the court. But he said nothing, either because he could not find words or because his courage failed him. There was a moment's intense silence, for every one in the crowded court was watching him, and the sense of it seemed to take what resolution he had left out of him. At any rate, he left the table and hurried from the court. In the passage he found the Tiger, who, surrounded by a little crowd, and with her hat awry and her clothes half torn from her back, was huddled gasping against the wall.

She saw him and began to speak; but he stopped and faced her. He faced her, grinding his teeth, and with such an awful fire of fury in his eyes that she shrunk from him in terror, flattening herself against the wall.

"What did I tell you?" he said, in a choked voice, and then passed on. A few paces down the passage he met one of his own clerks, a sharp fellow enough.

"Here, Jones," he said, "you see that woman there. She has made a charge against me. Watch her. See where she goes to, and find out what she is going to do. Then come and tell me at the office. If you lose sight of her you lose your place too. Do you understand?"

"Yes, sir," said the astonished clerk, and Mr. Quest was gone.

He made his way direct to the office. It was closed, for he had told his clerks that he should not come back after court, and that they could go at half past 4. He had his key, however, and, entering, lighted the gas. Then he went to his safe and sorted some papers, burning a good number of them. Two large documents, however, he put by his side to read. One was his will, the other was indorsed: "Statement of the circumstances connected with Edith."

First he looked through his will. It had been made some years ago, and was entirely in favor of his wife, or rather of his reputed wife, Belle.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

The experiment will be tried for the first time Monday night of introducing the national anthem at the New York theatres as a closing feature of the night's entertainment. Sixteen theatres have agreed to this new departure.

The Garfield statue in the Garfield Memorial Chapel at Cleveland has been put in place. It is a piece of marble without a flaw. It was made in Italy.

CHAPTER XXXIV.

THE SWORD OF DAMOCLES.

At last the weary journey was over, and to George's intense relief he found himself upon the platform at Boisingham. He was a pretty tough subject, but he felt that a very little more of the company of the fair Edithia would be too much for him. As it happened, the station master was a particular friend of his, and the astonishment of that worthy when he saw the respectable George in such company cannot be expressed in words.

"Why boar! Well, I never! Is she a furriner?" he ejaculated in astonishment.

"If you mean me, you dirty, wheel greasing steam boss, you," said Edithia, who was by now in a fine bellicose condition, "I'm no more foreign than you are. Shut your ugly mouth, can't you, or"—and she took a step toward the stout station master. He retreated precipitately, caught his heel against the threshold of the booking office, and vanished backward with a crash.

"Steady, marm, steady," said George. "Save it up, now, do, and as for you, don't you irritate her, none of you, or I won't answer for the consequences, for she's an injured woman, she is, and injured women is apt to be dangerous."

As chance would have it, a fly which had brought somebody to the station was still standing there, and into it George bundled his fair charge, telling the driver to go to the sessions house.

"Now, marm," he said, "listen to me; I'm going to take you to the man as has wronged you. He's sitting as clerk to the magistrates. Do you go up and call him your husband. Then he'll tell the policeman to take you away. Then do you sing out for justice, because when people sings out for justice everybody's bound to listen, and say that you want a warrant against him for bigamy, and show them the marriage certificate. Don't you be put down, and don't you spare him. If you don't startle him you'll never get anything out of him."

"Spare him!" she snarled; "I'll make him had either overlooked or let through pity.

She put on her hat and cloak, and then going to the hole beneath the board, out of which she said the woman Ellen had stolen her jewelry, she extracted the copy of the certificate of marriage which that lady had not apparently thought worth stealing, and put it in the pocket of her pink silk peignoir.

Then George, having first secured the remainder of the bottle of brandy, which he put into his capacious pocket, they started, and, finding a hansom, drove to Liverpool street. Such a spectacle, as the Tiger looked upon the platform, George was wont, in after days, to declare he never did see. But it can easily be imagined that a fierce, dissolute, angry looking woman, with half dyed hair who had drunk as much as was good for her, dressed in a hat made of shabby peacock feathers, dirty white shoes, an ulster with some buttons off, and a gorgeous but filthy pink silk tea gown, presented a sufficiently curious appearance, especially when contrasted with her companion, the sober and melancholy looking George, who was arrayed in his pepper and salt Sunday suit.

So curious indeed was their aspect that the people loitering about the platform collected round them, and George, who was heartily ashamed of the position, was thankful enough when once the train started. He had, from motives of economy, taken her in a third class ticket, and at this point she grumbled, saying that she was accustomed to travel like a lady should, first; but he appeased her with the brandy bottle.

All the journey through he talked to her about her wrongs, till at last, what between the liquor and his artful incitements, she was inflamed into a condition of savage fury against Mr. Quest. When once she got to this point he would let her have no more brandy, seeing that she was now ripe for his purpose, which was, of course, to use her to ruin the man who would ruin the house he served.

Mr. Quest, sitting in state as clerk to the magistrates assembled in quarter sessions at the sessions house at Boisingham, little guessed that the sword, at whose shadow he had trembled all these years, was even now falling on his head, or that the hand that cut the hair that held it was that of the stupid bumpkin whose warning he had despised.

IT NEVER FAILS—TRY IT YOURSELF.

SAN FRANCISCO, Jan. 29, 90.

Manufacturers of the Great Sierra Kidney and Liver Cure:

GENTLEMEN:—I have been a sufferer from kidney complaint for several years and have used medicine upon medicine without any apparent relief until a friend of mine told me of the wonderful cures accomplished by your remedy. I was induced to buy a bottle but without much faith. After using the first bottle I noticed such an improvement I kept on until I had taken three bottles and can safely say that I am entirely cured and never felt better in my life. I can gladly recommend The Great Sierra Kidney and Liver Cure to all people that are suffering in any way with kidney or urinary disorders.

Respectfully Yours,
L. H. COHN,
Atlantic & Pacific Pub. Co., room 52, St. Ann's building, City.

Temptation, like death, knocks at the palaces of the rich as well as at the hovels of the poor.

OUR HANNAH JANE.

Our Hannah Jane was thin and weak,
And ashy white her lip and cheek,
We often thought—and thought with pain,
"We soon must lose our Hannah Jane."
With change of doctors, change of air,
She sought for healing everywhere.
And, when our hopes were almost past,
"Favorite Prescription" tried at last.
It gave us joy, it gave us hope,
She ceased to pine, she ceased to mope,
Pierce's remedies are sure and true,
Now Hannah Jane is as good as new.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription is the only medicine for women, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee, from the manufacturers, that it will give satisfaction in every case, or money will be refunded. This guarantee has been printed on the bottle-wrapper, and faithfully carried out for many years.

Dr. Pierce's Pellets—cleanse and regulate the stomach, bowels and system generally. One a dose; purely vegetable.

There's something in the accents of a voice
That wakes our natures from their quiet rest
As sleepy boys who hear their father's call
And know and feel to get right up is best.

DON'T GO OFF BEFORE YOU ARE READY.

Particularly on a long journey. Be fully prepared. You cannot be, permit us to say, unless you are accompanied with the traveler's and tourist's vade mecum, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, most genial of appetizers, acclimatizers and promoters of digestion. Against sea sickness, malaria, cramps and colics begotten of badly cooked or unwholesome food and British water, nervousness, increased by travel, chronic biliousness and constipation, the Bitters is a sovereign preventive. It imparts a relish for food not altogether to your taste, and prevents it from disagreeing with you. Never was there such a capital thing for the unfortunate dyspeptic who stands in dread of the best cooked meal. Stomachic trouble caused by ill prepared viands aboard ship, on steamboats, and rations hastily bolted at railway restaurants, is soon remedied by the Bitters, which gives a quietus also to rheumatism, kidney troubles and insomnia.

Many a man who is a good shot in this world hopes to miss the fire in the next.

CAUGHT THE GOLDEN EGG.

Fifteen thousand dollars falls to two of Fairview's citizens. Ticket No. 6185 in The Louisiana State Lottery drawing on February 11 captures the above amount. John S. Betts and L. G. Michener are joint owners in the lucky prize. J. S. Betts of the firm of Betts Bros., grain dealers is one of our prominent business men and L. G. Michener is the popular agent in this city for the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific R'y. The money was promptly paid to the parties in less than ten days through the Fairview State Bank. The Louisiana State Lottery is recognized as being honorable and prompt in all its dealings. The fortunate holders of tickets may rest assured that whatever sum their tickets call for whether large or small will be promptly forwarded to them. The immense sums of money being scattered by The Louisiana State Lottery Company among all over the country is evidence of its trustworthiness.—Fairview (Kansas) Enterprise, March 15.

A FORTUNATE INVESTMENT.

Since the report that Mr. Nordgren has drawn a $5,000 prize in The Louisiana State Lottery was published, we have received letters of inquiry as to the facts of the case. We have interviewed Charles A. Nordgren, the gentleman in question, and find the facts as follows: He sent one dollar to M. A. Dauphin, New Orleans, La., and obtained in return a ticket representing one-twentieth part of ticket No. 14,158. Soon after the drawing of The Louisiana State Lottery Company, in February last he saw by the bulletin issued by the company, that his ticket was entitled to the one-twentieth part of the $100,000 prize, or $5,000. He deposited his ticket in the First National Bank of this city for collection. The $5,000 was forwarded to him without discount by express. This is all there is of it. Mr. Nordgren received the money promptly, is a very worthy young man and will make good use of his money beyond question. As his name will indicate he is of Swedish ancestry. He is married but has no children and is engaged in the hardware trade. Whatever may be said of the immorality of the lottery business, it cannot be said that the business is not honorably and promptly conducted in this case at all events, or in any other that we have ever heard of.—Paxton (Ill.) Register, March 12.

People cannot be easily suited when they have made up their minds to be displeased.

Six Novels Free, will be sent by Cragin & Co., Philada., Pa., to any one in the U. S. or Canada, postage paid, upon receipt of 25 Dobbins' Electric Soap wrappers. See list of novels on circulars around each bar. Soap for sale by all grocers.

When a man knows that he cannot get out of the mud, his next impulse is to go in deeper.

The U. S. Government makes regular purchases of "Tansill's Punch" for the army.

Much of the charity that begins at home is too feeble to go a visiting.

CONSUMPTION SURELY CURED.

TO THE EDITOR—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the above named disease. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been permanently cured. I shall be glad to send two bottles of my remedy free to any of your readers who have consumption if they will send me their express and post office address. Respectfully,
T. A. SLOCUM, M. C., 181 Pearl St., New York.

When in San Francisco stop at Straub's Restaurant and Saloon, 327 and 329 Bush Street. Best to eat and drink. No fancy prices.

Try German for Breakfast.

Purify Your Blood

The importance of thoroughly purifying the blood This Spring cannot be over-estimated. The extraordinary epidemic of "the grip" and other diseases, the unhealthful winter, close confinement in doors and carelessness in diet, have caused accumulation of impurities in the blood which must be expelled before you can feel well and strong again. The universal praise given Hood's Sarsaparilla by those who have taken it, should certainly convince you that it is the ideal Spring Medicine. It acts especially and immediately upon the blood, overcomes physical weakness, revives the health-tone and creates a good appetite. Try it this spring.

N. B. If you decide to take Hood's Sarsaparilla do not be induced to buy any other.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared only by C. I. HOOD & Co., Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar

STEINWAY. KRANICH, PEASE & BACH, Gabler, Roemish Pianos; Burdett Organs, Band Instruments. Largest stock of Sheet Music and Books. Bands supplied at Eastern Prices. MATTHIAS GRAY CO., 206 Post Street, San Francisco.

$75.00 to $250.00 A MONTH can be made working for us. Persons preferred who can furnish a horse and give their whole time to the business. Spare moments may be profitably employed also. A few vacancies in towns and cities. B. F. JOHNSON & CO., 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va.

Ask Him! Who? JONES OF BINGHAMTON, BINGHAMTON, N. Y. What? Why on Scales "He Pays the Freight."

...re for blind, bleeding and itching Piles. ... has cured the worst cases of ten years' standing. No one need suffer ten minutes after using Kirk's German Pile Ointment. It absorbs tumors, allays the itching, acts as a poultice, gives relief. Dr. Kirk's German Pile Ointment is prepared only for Piles and itching of the private parts, and nothing else. Every box is warranted. Sold by druggists and sent by mail on receipt of price, $1.00 per box. J. J. Mack & Co., Wholesale Agents, San Francisco.

"Do you ever think?" "No; don't pay." "Why not?" "Never was offered more than a penny for my thoughts."

For Catarrhal and Throat Disorders, "Brown's Bronchial Troches" are renowned and marvellously effective, giving immediate relief.

The world doesn't care how you got beat; anybody can do that. It wants to know how you got there.

AN ELEGANT PACKAGE OF FINE CARDS.

Including 15 rare novelties, shapes and artistic imported oleographic and chromatic cards. This large and beautiful collection sent by mail to any one who will do this:—Buy a box of the genuine Dr. C. McLane's Celebrated Liver Pills from any druggist, price 25 cents, and mail us the outside wrapper with your address, plainly written and 4 cents in stamps. The genuine McLane's Pills are prepared only by Fleming Bros., Pittsburg, Pa., and have been in constant use for over sixty years. They are superior to all others in purity and effectiveness. A certain cure for indigestion and sick headache. Address, Fleming Bros. Pittsburgh, Pa.

Beware of imitations of the genuine Seal of North Carolina Plug Cut Tobacco.

MANLY PURITY AND BEAUTY

CUTICURA REMEDIES CURE SKIN AND BLOOD DISEASES FROM PIMPLES TO SCROFULA

NO PEN CAN DO JUSTICE TO THE ESTEEM in which the CUTICURA REMEDIES are held by the thousands upon thousands whose lives have been made happy by the cure of agonizing, humiliating, itching, scaly, and pimply diseases of the skin, scalp, and blood, with loss of hair.

CUTICURA, the great Skin Cure, and CUTICURA SOAP, an exquisite Skin Beautifier, prepared from it, externally, and CUTICURA RESOLVENT, the new Blood Purifier, internally, are a positive cure for every form of skin and blood disease, from pimples to scrofula.

Sold everywhere. Price, CUTICURA, 50c; SOAP, 25c; RESOLVENT, $1. Prepared by the POTTER DRUG AND CHEMICAL CORPORATION, Boston, Mass.

Send for "How to Cure Skin Diseases."

Pimples, blackheads, chapped and oily skin prevented by CUTICURA SOAP.

Rheumatism, Kidney Pains and Weakness speedily cured by CUTICURA ANTI-PAIN PLASTER, the only pain-killing plaster

For Gout, Rheumatism, Neuralgia, Sciatica, bathe the parts affected freely with Perry Davis' PAIN KILLER taking also a teaspoonful in sugar and water 3 times a day, and you'll get relief at once and a Cure after faithful use of this remedy. Pain Killer Cures Coughs, Colds, Sore Throat, Diphtheria, Frost Bite.

GILES' CREOSOZONE

FOR THE DESTRUCTION OF

VERMIN and PARASITES AFFECTING POULTRY AND BIRDS.

Price, FULL QUART, 75c. FULL DIRECTIONS ON EACH CAN.

SOLD BY ALL GROCERS AND DRUGGISTS.

Prepared only by Nelson Giles, Jr., Manufacturing Co., National City Cal.

ONE REQUEST

We have only one thing to ask this week and that is easily granted. Please send postal card with your address and ask for copy of

MAY HOME CIRCLE.

It will be ready May 1st, and sample copies are offered free to all who ask for it. We know you will be interested in it. Quotes many thousand articles at lowest price to consumers, and gives information how to order, how to buy, how to ship, how to live well and cheaply in any part of the world. Address Smith's Cash Store 418 Front St., San Francisco, Cal.

THE SMOKER
Will have no other Tobacco
Who once tries
"SEAL OF NORTH CAROLINA"
Plug Cut.
This is the secret of its
Immense sale.

ST JACOBS OIL

CURES PROMPTLY

STIFFNESS, STIFF NECK.

Violent Pains in Neck.

Friendship, Wis., June 14, 1888.
My wife had violent pains in her neck, which was very sore and stiff. She was cured entirely by St. Jacobs Oil. JAMES STOWE.

In Terrible Pain.

Ames M'f'g. Co., Chicopee, Mass., June 18, 1888.
From over-exertion every bone was made stiff and sore; in terrible pain. I was cured promptly by St. Jacobs Oil.
J. C. BUCKLEY, Paymaster.

AT DRUGGISTS AND DEALERS.

THE CHARLES A. VOGELER CO., Baltimore, Md.

To cure Biliousness, Sick Headache, Constipation, Malaria, Liver Complaints, take the safe and certain remedy, SMITH'S

BILE BEANS

Use the SMALL SIZE (40 little beans to the bottle). They are the most convenient; suit all ages. Price of either size, 25 cents per bottle.

KISSING at 7, 17, 70 Photo-gravure, panel size of this picture for 4 cents (coppers or stamps).

J. F. SMITH & CO.,
Makers of "Bile Beans," St. Louis, Mo.

CLEARLY SHOWN.

How you can have a Vigorous Nervous System.

The Marvelous Success of Paine's Celery Compound is shown with Living Examples, and it is Proven to be Nature's True Health Restorative.

The most skeptical should be convinced by the following brief extracts from letters recently received by us, that Paine's Celery Compound is an unfailing means of cure in all diseases which are caused by weakened nerves.

"For some months before using Paine's Celery Compound, I was afflicted with insomnia and more or less vertigo—all brought on by overwork and protracted anxiety.

"Since using the Compound I feel much better, sleep soundly, and my head troubles me less. I have not, meanwhile, intermitted or materially slackened my work.

"For the benefit I have gained from your preparation I am grateful to God and thankful to you." L. B. W. SHRYOCK, Pastor of Presbyterian Church, Reynoldsville, Pa.

Three months after writing the above Rev. Mr. Shryock said: "The symptoms for which I used Paine's Celery Compound have not returned, although I have had no leisure or vacation from work."

"For a long time I was so nervous and worn out that I could not work. I tried many medicines, but none gave me relief until I used Paine's Celery Compound, which at once strengthened and invigorated my nerves. Many of my friends have used it at my recommendation, and they all agree with me in pronouncing it the best nerve tonic ever discovered."
HARLEY SHERMAN, Burlington, Vt.

Facts like these are the best reason why you should not despair of a cure. What the Compound has done for others it will do for you.

CHICHESTER'S ENGLISH

PENNYROYAL PILLS

RED CROSS DIAMOND BRAND.

Safe and always reliable. Ladies, ask Druggist for Diamond Brand, in red, metallic boxes, sealed with blue ribbon. Take no other. All pills in pasteboard boxes, pink wrappers, are dangerous counterfeits. Send 4c. (stamps) for particulars, testimonials and "Relief for Ladies," in letter, by return mail. Name Paper.
Chichester Chem'l Co., Madison Sq., Phila., Pa.

10,000 AGENTS WANTED AT ONCE

To sell the complete history of the murder of Dr. CRONIN. Giving a full and complete account of the conspiracy, murder, discovery of the body, arrests, coroner's inquest, the trial and verdict. The book contains over 100 illustrations. One large 12 mo. volume of about 500 pages, price only $1.50. OUTFITS NOW READY. Send, at once, 25 cents for an outfit; first come, first served. This is the chance of your lifetime; big commissions. Address, LAIRD & LEE, Publishers, 203-205 Jackson Street, Chicago, Ill.

S. F. N. U. No. 412. New Series No. 19

Statement Jan. 1st, 1890.

A. H. McDonald PREST. F. W. McDonald CASHIER.

ESTABLISHED 1863. Oldest Chartered Bank on the Pacific Coast.

PACIFIC BANK

Capital Stock $1,000,000.00.
SURPLUS $ 750,000.00.
AVERAGE RESOURCES $4,500,000.00

During the past year we have paid our regular dividends and have added another $50,000 to our surplus fund.

Thanking our friends for past favors we respectfully ask continuance of the same.
San Francisco, Cal. A. H. McDonald, Prest.

Deposits Received from $1 upwards.

Money Saved is Money Earned. Deposit in a good Savings Bank.

PEOPLES HOME SAVINGS BANK

808 Market St., cor. 4th St. Hobart Building, San Francisco, California.

Guarantee Capital, $1,000,000

Interest apportioned from date of deposit. Deposits from any part of the Pacific Coast States may be sent by registered letter, post office money order, bank draft or express. By-laws and list of shareholders in Sixth Ward Capital sent free on application. Sixth Ward Home Savings Bank has exceptional facilities for safe, profitable and satisfactory investment of funds at good rates of interest. Thankful for past favors and asking for continuance of the same. Respectfully, Colphus Waterhouse, Prest.

TIGER FRONT-CUT MOWER!

The Best Mower in the Market,

AND

The Only Machine to Buy!

"The best Mower I have ever seen work."—David Hall, Cloverdale.

"The best Mower I have ever used, and my experience extends over thirty years and with all the different kinds."—Andrew Moore, Sunol.

"I can conscientiously recommend it to all."—William Armstrong, Petaluma.

"Lightest draft Mower I have ever used."—George C. Hanley, Livermore.

"Has given perfect satisfaction."—Thomas Richardson, Oakdale.

"Would not exchange it for any Mower I know of."—A. W. Collis, Brentwood.

"Best Mower I ever used."—Thomas Holden, San Buenaventura.

"The Lightest Draft and Strongest-Cutting Mower in the market."—John Worswick, Grangeville.

Write for Special Circulars.

Baker & Hamilton,

San Francisco and Sacramento.

DR. SYKES' SURE CURE FOR CATARRH

ESTABLISHED CHICAGO 1879 — 1888 Removed TO CINCINNATI

Has cured many cases pronounced hopeless by physicians. Send for Free Book "Common Sense Talk" and numerous testimonials. They will convince you.

Dr. SYKES' SURE CURE CO., 326 Race St., Cincinnati, O.

USE NEW WELLINGTON COAL.

A CASE OF MISTAKEN IDENTITY.

"You certainly are mistaken," said one young man to another at an evening party, "but that cannot be the young lady I met last winter, though the name is the same. Judge for yourself. This girl has a glorious complexion, while the other young lady—Good heavens, what a skin she had! Covered with blotches and red-headed pimples; it was like a nutmeg grater. Oh no, this cannot be the young lady." But it was, though, and Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery had worked the miracle. As a remedy for pimples, blotches, eruptions and all Skin and Scalp diseases, it is the most wonderful medicine extant. Of all the many blood-purifiers and remedies for skin diseases, "Golden Medical Discovery" is the only one guaranteed to do all that's claimed for it, or money promptly refunded! Especially has it manifested its potency in curing Salt-rheum, Tetter, Erysipelas, Eczema, Boils, and Carbuncles. In all Scrofulous Sores and Swellings, "Fever-sores," "Hip-joint Disease" and all impurities of the blood, no matter from whatever cause arising, it effects the most marvelous cures. WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Manufacturers, 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

$500 OFFERED for an incurable case of Catarrh in the Head by the proprietors of DR. SAGE'S CATARRH REMEDY.

SYMPTOMS OF CATARRH.—Headache, obstruction of nose, discharges falling into throat, sometimes profuse, watery, and acrid, at others, thick, tenacious, mucous, purulent, bloody, putrid and offensive; eyes weak, ringing in ears, deafness; offensive breath; smell and taste impaired, and general debility. Only a few of these symptoms likely to be present at once. Dr. Sage's Remedy cures the worst cases. Only 50 cents. Sold by druggists, everywhere.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

COUNTY OFFICIAL PAPER.

C. MULHOLLAND, - - - Proprietor.

Independence, Cal.,

FRIDAY, - - - JUNE 20, 1890.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

VOL. XXII. NO. 2. INDEPENDENCE, INYO CO., CAL., JUNE 20, 1890. WHOLE NO. 1025.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

COUNTY OFFICIAL PAPER.

C. MULHOLLAND, - - - Proprietor.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One Year (post paid)	$4.00
Six Months	2.25
Three Months	1.50
One Month	50
Single Copies	10

PATAGONIA'S FATE.

How a South American Country Was Absorbed by Its Neighbors.

There used to be a place called Patagonia. It appears on our geographies now as a drear and uninhabitable waste, upon which herds of wild horses and cattle graze, that are hunted for their flesh by a few bands of savage Indians of immense stature." I am quoting from a school-book published in 1886, and in common use in this country. The same geography gives similar information about "the Argentine Confederation." It makes the Argentines roar with rage to call their country "the Argentine Confederation." It would be just as polite and proper to call this the "Confederate States of America." A bitter, bloody war was fought to wipe that name off the map, but our publishers still insist upon keeping it there. It is not a confederation; it is a Nation, with a big "N," like ours—one and inseparable, united we stand, divided we fall, and all that sort of thing—the Argentine Republic. To call it any thing else is an insult to the patriots who fought to make it so, and a reflection upon our own intelligence.

Several years ago Patagonia was divided between Chili and the Argentine Republic, the Ministers from the United States to those two countries doing the carving. The summits of the Cordilleras were fixed as the boundary lines. Chili took the Strait of Magellan and the strip along the Pacific coast, between the mountains and the sea, and the Argentine Republic the pampas, the archipelago of Tierra del Fuego being divided between them. Since the partition ranchmen have been pushing southward with great rapidity, and now the vast territory is practically occupied. There are no more wild cattle or horses there than in Kansas, and the dreary, uninhabited wastes of Patagonia have gone into oblivion with the "Great American Desert." The remnant of a vast tribe of aborigines still occupies the interior, but the Indian problem of the Argentine Republic was solved in a summary way. There was considerable annoyance on the frontier from bands of roving savages, who used to come north in the winter time, steal cattle, rob and ravish, and the outposts of civilization were not safe. General Roca, the Sheridan of the River Plate, was sent with a brigade of cavalry to the frontier to prevent this sort of thing. East and west across the territory runs the Rio Negro, a swift, turbid stream like the Missouri, with high banks. Fifty miles or so from the mountains the river makes a turn in its course, and leaves a narrow pathway through which every thing that enters or leaves Patagonia by land must go. Across this pass of fifty miles General Roca dug a ditch twelve feet deep and fifteen feet wide. The Indians, to the number of several thousand, were north when the work was done, raiding the settlements. As spring came they turned to go southward as usual, in a long caravan, with their stolen horses and cattle. Roca galloped around their rear, and drove them night and day before him. When they reached the ditch they became bewildered, for they could not cross it, and after a few days of slaughter the remnant that survived surrendered and were distributed through the army as soldiers, while the women were sent into a semi-slavery among the ranchmen they had robbed. The dead animals and men were buried together in the ditch, and there has been no further annoyance from Indians on the frontier.

The few that remain seldom come northward, but remain around Punta Arenas, the only settlement in the Strait, hunting the ostrich and other wild game, trading the skins for whisky, and making themselves as wretched as possible. The robes they wear are made of the skins of the guanaco, a species of the llama, and the breasts of young ostriches. There is nothing finer than an ostrich robe, but each one represents the slaughter of from sixteen to twenty young birds, and they are getting rare and expensive as the birds are being exterminated, as our buffaloes have been.—William E. Curtis, in Harper's Magazine.

A Spider's Fatal Mistake.

A small gardener spider had spun his web in a corner where a perpendicular column and a horizontal rail met, and from the ambush of a hidden crack awaited his dipterous prey. A handsome yellow wasp passing that way espied the graceful trap and made for it. Setting his feet lightly on two or three of the meshes he started up a great buzzing, which shook the web from end to end. The watchful spider ran out a little way, stretched forth a delicate foot to make sure of the location of the supposed fly, and then rushed for it, alighting on the wasp with a gleeful jump, and no doubt a grin of hideous triumph. But Mr. Spider had reckoned without his host. Like a flash of lightning the wasp's six nimble legs closed upon him, the graceful body bent nearly double, and once, twice, thrice, again and again, the sharp sting pierced the luckless spider. As his struggles grew fainter, and finally ceased, the wasp, with a spring, disentangled himself from the silken net and bore away his spidery victim in triumph.—Albany Journal.

—Wife—"What absurd nonsense, that to raise an umbrella in the house is an omen of ill luck!" Husband—"Not at all. Didn't Mrs. Hobson, to whom you lent your umbrella a couple of weeks ago, open it in the hallway?" Wife—"I believe she did." Husband—"Well, have you seen the umbrella since?"—N. Y. Sun.

TAKEN FROM LIFE.

An Instructive Conversation Overheard in a Photograph Gallery.

"Do I look all right, Mame?"

"Y-e splendid."

"I just know I'll laugh right out."

"No, you mustn't; that would spoil every thing."

"O, I think it horrid to have one's photo taken. I'd rather have a tooth pulled any day."

"So would I."

"I never do take a good picture."

"Nor I; mine are horrid always."

"If these are not good I'll never sit again. How does my hair look?"

"Ever so nice."

"I'm so nervous. I just know I'll spoil every thing."

"No; you mustn't; you'd just have to sit again."

"Don't you dare to look at me, Mame, or I'll giggle right out."

"O, I'm going to get behind the screen and point my finger at you all the time."

"O, if you do!"

"See if I don't."

"You shan't even stay in the room."

"I will too. It'll be such fun."

"O, you mean thing! Do you think this dress will take well?"

"Yes, indeed."

"I do hope the jet trimmings will sow well. I can't decide what position to assume."

"I'd have a side view."

"Would you? But I'm so long-faced."

"No, you're not."

"O, but I am, and—oh, they're ready for me. I do wish I looked so."

"Pshaw! I wouldn't mind it a bit."

"Yes, you would. Now don't you dare look at me."

"I will too."

"Mame!"

"O, I will!"

"I'll laugh right out, sure."

And she does. She spoils two or three plates by "giggling right out," and she goes away declaring that she "just knows" she'll look "too perfectly awful for any thing in the picture."

It is living through such scenes as these daily that causes photographers to have a worn and faded look, and makes them old before their time. Many of them break down under the strain and die young.—Detroit Free Press.

BARNS FOR HORSES.

Where and How They Should be Constructed and Arranged.

Horse stables should be located on land that is high enough so it can be well drained, the surface water carried off rapidly. Stagnant water is very injurious to horses, especially when it is filled with the refuse matter from the stable. Damp, badly ventilated stables are a fruitful source of disease, causing fevers, coughs and trouble with the eyes, also such affections of the legs as scratches, grease heel, etc. Dampness is specially liable to cause inflammation of the throat and lungs. In such stables good grooming and the best of care will not ward off disease, but many ailments may be expected to make their appearance.

Having selected a good location for the horse barn, it should be arranged and built in such a way as to secure the most comfort for its occupants and convenience for those who have the care of them. As sunshine and pure air are so essential to the good health of horses, the barn should, if possible, be so located as to have a southern exposure, and in this way get the full benefit of the sun.

Ventilation is a most important consideration in the building of barns, and special pains should be taken to secure the ingress of pure air and the escape of the foul air, caused by the ammonia that arises from the manure. This is necessary in order to secure good health. In arranging a stable for horses, several box-stalls should be provided, as these will be found specially useful for mares at foaling time, for the care of sick or lame horses, and also for keeping valuable horses in during the winter. In these there is an opportunity for exercise to be taken when the weather is such that horses can not be turned out in a lot, or driven on the road. A well-fenced lot adjoining the stable, with an open shed in it, will be found very convenient, as horses that are not in use can be turned out for exercise in it when the weather is not too inclement.—National Live-Stock Journal.

He Felt Reassured.

"Have you seen papa's new dog, Carlo?" she asked, as they sat in the parlor.

"Yes," he replied, uneasily, "I have had the pleasure of meeting the dog."

"Isn't he splendid? He is so affectionate."

"I noticed that he was very demonstrative," returned he, as he moved uneasily in his chair.

"He is very playful, too. I never saw a more playful animal in my life."

"I am glad to hear you say that."

"Why?"

"Because I was a little bit afraid that when he bit that piece out of me the other evening he was in earnest. But if he was only in play of course it's all right. I can take fun as well as anybody."—Merchant Traveler.

—"My house was entered by a burglar last night." "Is that so?" "What did you do?" "Nothing but look at him." "Did he carry off any thing?" "No; he saw that there was only wood stoves in the house and not a particle of coal on the premises, so he went away.—Nebraska State Journal.

—A brand of blasting powder is marked "f. f.," and the marking probably has the same meaning as in music—very loud.

MR. AND MRS. BOWSER.

Richard Moses Makes an Unfortunate Attempt at Oratory.

I hope the public has not conceived the idea that Mr. Bowser and I are constantly quarreling, or that he is a failure as a husband. No family is happier than ours, and Mr. Bowser is one of the best husbands in the world. He is simply a little bit queer. That is, we haven't been married quite long enough for me to tone him down. Like many other young husbands he wears a much larger hat now than he will a couple of years hence, but that is a fault instead of an evil. The other evening he came home in a state of excitement, promenaded around the house with his nose in the air for a while, and then inquired:

"Did those books come up, Mrs. Bowser?"

"There was a package came up. Have you been getting another batch of useless books?"

"All books are useless to some people, Mrs. Bowser! If you were like some wives I know of you'd encourage your husband instead of insulting him."

"Well, I shall be glad to have you read every evening. History or politics?"

"Neither. They are works on oratory."

"What?"

"Mrs. Bowser, I have been advised by my many friends to take a few lessons in elocution and delivery, and to then accept some of the numerous invitations tendered me to address this or that society or organization."

"Richard Moses Bowser, you can't be in earnest!"

"That's it! Yell out at the top of your voice and tell every body in Detroit that my name is Richard Moses! Maybe it sounds better than Major. Why shouldn't I pluck the laurels from the field of oratory? If some people are satisfied to grovel in the dust they needn't try to prevent others from soaring to the clouds."

"But you have no presence—no voice."

"I haven't, eh? I was present enough, and made myself pretty well understood when I asked your hand in marriage! You don't know me, Mrs. Bowser. See here."

And he drew himself up to his full hight, which is a trifle over five feet swelled his stomach out, and as he lifted himself up on his toes he waved his arm and began:

"Gentlemen may cry peace, peace, but there is no peace. The next gale which sweeps from the North will bring to us the clash of arms."

"Yes, Mr. Bowser, but your voice is squeaky, and you are very, very short. Please give it up. I should feel awfully bad if you made a failure."

"Squeaky voice! Very, very short! Make a failure! Mrs. Bowser, you want to choke me off, but you can't do it! You will yet be deafened by the plaudits of the multitude who cheer my oratory."

He had five or six books of speeches, dialogues and lessons in preparatory greatness, and as soon as supper was over he locked himself in the library and began. He was still going at when I went to bed, and at midnight I was awakened to see him before the glass on the dresser and to hear him saying:

"I tell you, gentlemen, that the bulwarks of American liberty are tottering to their foundations. A few more such acts as these and—a few more—a few more—a few more such acts as—as—"

"If you wake up the baby he may have cramps," I said.

Mr. Bowser was so indignant that he would not utter a word in reply, nor did he address me until after dinner next day. He continued his labors for a week, or ten days, ranging in his outbursts of oratory from "The Dying Child" to "An Appeal for Liberty." Then, from what I could overhear, I made up my mind that he was preparing an address for a special occasion. He couldn't keep the news to himself, but soon informed me that he was to soon address the Young Men's Liberty Club.

I pity the poor man when I look back over those days. He wrote and re-wrote. I think he prepared as many as six or seven addresses before he got one to suit, and he spent at least fourteen hours per day trying to commit it to memory. He looked upon me as his enemy and refused to have any further conversation on the subject until the day of the evening when he was to speak. Then, being apparently very nervous, he remarked:

"Do you think my voice has improved?"

"I hope it has."

"There you go! Do your very best to discourage me!"

At midnight they brought Mr. Bowser home in a hack. He was in a nervous chill. He went upon the platform to deliver his address, and began:

"FELLOW CITIZENS—Let me assure you that I highly appreciate the great honor paid me by this club in selecting—in choosing—in picking me out to deliver—deliver—in picking me out—in—in——"

That was as far as he got; one boy yelled out: "Go it, Shorty!" and others told him to take his nose off, put a brick on his tongue, etc., and he broke right down. The papers next morning charitably refrained from even mentioning his name. I was looking to see if any thing was said, when Mr. Bowser came down to breakfast. I smiled at him kindly, but he shook one fist at the baby and the other at me and hoarsely replied:

"It's all right—all right, but I'll pay you off if I have to wade in gore knee-deep!"—Detroit Free Press.

HINTS TO HOUSEKEEPERS.

How to Keep a Family on 'Steen Dollars a Month.

He was a thin man, so thin that his clothes did not touch him, particularly around the waist. He shuffled into the World office, took a seat and said:

"I see the newspapers are taking considerable interest in kitchen economy, and the many letters from housewives describing how they furnish their tables and the cost thereof are read by me with much interest. My wife asked me if I wouldn't call and tell you how she manages to supply our table on 'steen dollars a month."

"How many dollars?" asked the reporter.

"'Steen dollars," said the man and then proceeded:

"In the first place my wife doesn't keep a girl. She is not strong enough to do the additional work that would be required, and so she gets along without one. We live in the top flat, and by means of an improvised apple-picker we gather a great many icicles from the roof for household purposes. The children are quite fond of them. We find also that snow pudding makes a very nice and economical dessert, but we have not had much pudding this winter on account of the mild weather."

The reporter made a note of it.

"If you use discretion, and buy when the meat inspector is not around you can get a piece of meat at the butcher's for five cents that will last for a month. This can be prepared in many ways, and though you keep a dog he will not touch it, therefore all the nutriment contained in it goes to the family."

The reporter lost none of these points.

"It is a mistaken notion that only the rich and proud can have fruit and nuts for dessert. For the sake of variety get an apple with a green and red side. Look at the green side one day, and for the next day turn the other side. When you get tired of fruit and want nuts you will find that a double-jointed North Carolina peanut will do very well for two persons, to be eaten, of course, without attracting the attention of the children, as nuts are too rich for their blood."

The reporter was matrimonially inclined himself and was all attention.

"One day in the week we have salt mackerel, and if salt mackerel is scientifically and economically prepared you will not want any thing else for several days but water. When the landlord pays the water rent this is a point worth knowing."

"And these are all facts that will interest house-keepers?" asked the reporter, who didn't know whether there was any thing new in them or not.

"Oh, decidedly."

"And this costs you"——

"To be exact," said the thin man, "it costs me just 'steen dollars and sleben cents per month," and taking a section of dried apple from his pocket he looked at it awhile, carefully replaced it and then withdrew, picking his teeth with a pine sliver.—N. Y. World.

HE WAS GREAT SOCIALLY.

And He Knew How to Make Money Without Work, Too.

An old negro was chopping down sassafras sprouts in a fence corner when a white man came along and asked: "Can you direct me to Colonel Phil Henderson's house?"

"I could do it sah, ef I had de time."

"If you had the time?" the man exclaimed.

"Yas, sah, ef I had de time. Been rainin' er good 'eal lately, an' I couldn' work much, an' now dat I has got at hit, w'y I hatter make de licks count."

"That's a strange idea. How long would it take you tell me?"

"Wall, sah, it's dis way wid me: I kin talk all along in de sociable widout no trouble, jes' like I am er talkin' ter you right now, but ez soon ez I ginter give d'reckshuns ter er place, w'y I git ter stutterin' an' it takes er powerful long time fur me ter git through, an' er gin I does git through, I has get sich er start dat I kain' stop, an' long atter de man is dun gone I stan's dar a talkin' an' er losin' my mighty valuable time."

"I never heard of any thing like that before," said the man.

"No, sah, I reckon not, an' de doctors demse'fs say dat it is mighty cu'is."

"Try it now and see if you can't tell me."

"Dar ain't no use'n tryin' it, sah, 'caze I knows my 'fermity. Like mighty well ter 'blige you, but den I'se got er wife an' chullun ober yander in de cabin an' ef I doan work, w'y da's gwine suffer, sho'."

"You can talk all right in a sociable way, can you?"

"Oh, I am ez fine ez a fiddle den. Nobody kin beat me in de sociable. Folks comes fur miles an' miles ter yere me talk in de sociable, but da doan ax me ter gin 'em de d'reckshuns ter er place."

"Well, is there not some way by which we could turn the giving of directions into a sociable talk?"

"Lemme see. I wonders now ef dat fact couldn't be done? Oh, yas, I's got it now—jes' happen ter recollect dat dar ain't nothin' dat mecks me feel so sociable ez er few dimes—say twenty-fi' cents."

"All right, here is a quarter. Now, which way must I go?"

"Wait er minit," said the old negro, taking the money. "I hasten sorter feel my way er long, fur dis is er sort o' er spiryment atter all." He looked up and down the fence, wiped his mouth, pulled out his upper lip and worked it around and then said: "I 'gratulates you, sah, dat this un'ertakin' is gwine be a success. Go right down dar ter de end o' de fence an' take de lef' han' road—hol' on, sah. You kin see de house frum yere. Yander it is ober on the hill."—Arkansaw Traveler.

Heroism Rewarded.

Railway Official—Is this the man that has just saved the train from destruction?

Several Bystanders—Yes, this is the man.

Railway Official (with emotion)—My friend, you have saved a hundred human lives and many thousand dollars worth of property. I will see that you are rewarded. (To subordinate): Wilkins, take up a collection among the passengers.—Chicago Tribune.

STARTLING INNOVATION.

Chinese and Corean Ladies Attend a Theater Performance in Washington.

Mme. Tsni Kwo Yin, the wife of the Chinese Minister, appeared in public to-day for the first time in her life. It was very much in public, too, for though it was the first time in her life, it was with all the freedom and publicity of an American woman.

Mme. Tsni was accompanied by the wife of the first secretary, Mrs. Pung Kwang Yu, and two other Chinese ladies, wives of attaches. The four were escorted by Mr. Lew, the interpreter, and three secretaries. There was delightful mystery about the first appearance of the Minister's wife because the Minister himself was not with the party. The party filled the two lower boxes on the left of the stage, the four ladies by themselves in one box and the four men by themselves in the other. But the boxes were separated only by the open-work screen, so there was much sociable smiling and nodding throughout and occasional bending forward to talk over the front rail.

Hardly had the flutter of the Chinese ladies subsided when another stir rustled over the audience and the Corean charge d'affaires and secretary, with their wives, entered the lower box on right of the stage. The Chinese interpreter was there to receive the Coreans, and there was much bowing and smiling. Then it came out that the Chinese were giving box parties and that the Coreans were their guests. The Corean men sat in the same box with their wives, the little ladies sitting directly in front, quite after the American fashion, displaying toilets to the best advantage, and it was an Oriental display of gorgeous suits and shining silks, making the boxes far more picturesque than one often sees them. The combination of colors in the gowns of the celestials is much beyond the most daring of Worth's experiments. Mme. Tsni and the three ladies with her wore long wraps of blue brocade, lined with fur. When these were laid off their full skirts and tunics were of blue mauve and maroon brocades. Their shining black hair was done up in coils at the back, and bands of jewels were worn around the head. Mrs. Ye Wan Yong, wife of the Corean charge d'affaires, wore a short waist of bright blue silk, with a skirt of wine-colored silk. Mrs. Ye Cha Yann's short waist was of bright lemon-colored silk, with a blue silk skirt.

The Coreans are much younger than the Chinese ladies, very much smaller and very much prettier. Indeed, Mrs. Ye Wan Yong is very pretty.

It did not appear that the ladies were acquainted. From their use of the opera-glasses it looked very much as though feminine curiosity in China and Corea was very much like feminine curiosity in America. The Corean women were trying to make out the Chinese women, and the latter returned the polite interest by curiosity equally polite. There was no interchange of visits in the boxes other than the visits of the Chinese interpreter and one of the secretaries, who paid their respects to the Coreans.

Mme. Tsni's debut at the theater was not, it seems, a hasty step, but had been seriously considered beforehand, and was the subject of diplomatic correspondence.—Washington Letter.

FRENCH ULTRA REALISM.

Dr. Holmes Analyzes the Mistakes of Flaubert and Zola.

The first great mistake made by the ultra-realists, like Flaubert and Zola, is, as I have said, their ignoring the line of distinction between imaginative art and science. We can find realism enough in books of anatomy, surgery and medicine. In studying the human figure we want to see it clothed with its natural integuments. It is well for the artist to study the ecorche in the dissecting room, but we do not want the Apollo or the Venus to leave their skins behind them when they get into the gallery for exhibition. Lancisi's figures show us how the great statues look when divested of their natural covering. It is instructive, but useful chiefly as a means to aid in the true artistic reproduction of nature. When the hospitals are invaded by the novelist, he should learn something from the physician as well as from the patients. Science delineates in monochrome. She never uses high tints and strontian lights to astonish lookers-on. Such scenes as Flaubert and Zola describe would be reproduced in their essential characters, but not dressed up in picturesque phrases. That is the first stumbling-block in the way of the reader of such realistic stories as those to which I have referred. There are subjects which must be investigated by scientific men which most educated persons would be glad to know nothing about. When a realistic writer like Zola surprises his reader into a kind of knowledge he never thought of wishing for, he sometimes harms him more than he has any idea of doing. He wants to produce a sensation and he leaves a permanent disgust not to be got rid of. Who does not remember odious images that can never be washed out from the consciousness which they have stained? A man's vocabulary is terribly retentive of evil words, and the images they present cling to his memory and will not loose their hold. One who has had the mischance to soil his mind by reading certain poems of Swift will never cleanse it to its original whiteness. Expressions and thoughts of a certain character stain the fiber of the thinking organ, and in some degree affect the hue of every idea that passes through the discolored tissues.—Oliver Wendell Holmes, in Atlantic.

—A youth of sixteen, at Fort Benton, Mont., recently performed a difficult feat of capturing a gray wolf with a lariat from his horse. Twice the animal got away by biting the noose in two. But the third time it was caught firmly around the body and dragged behind the speedy broncho until it was dead.

—A new kind of door hinge has been invented for the use of those who never think of closing doors after them. Its peculiarity is that the door not only shuts quickly and noiselessly, but it hits the person who leaves the door open a fierce blow on the back.

ABOUT REFORM SCHOOLS.

A Discouraging Picture of Their Evil Influence Upon Boys.

In the United States are about seventy institutions designed for the reformation of young offenders. Their inmates number more than nine thousand boys and girls. The causes of commitment embrace nearly every offense, from petty larceny to manslaughter. The means of amendment employed include not only the removal of the offender from the opportunity of indulging his criminal tastes, but also the teaching of some trade, instruction in the elementary branches of knowledge, and endeavor to form an upright character. Concerning the success of the reform school in the reformation of those intrusted to it, there is room for two contrary opinions. In an examination of the convicts of the prisons of New York, which was ordered by the Prison Association of the State in 1875, it was found that of the inmates of the Sing Sing penitentiary, 22.31 per cent. had been "refuge" boys. As the usual number of inmates of the reformatories of New York exceeds three thousand, it is plain that the large portion of them do not become inmates of prisons within the State.

As to the reforms accomplished, estimates vary from 60 per cent. to 75. But in these percentages are included many children who without being vicious, but exposed and homeless, are received into the houses of refuge. The proportion, therefore, of those who have served in reform schools who are afterward convicted of crimes is small, not exceeding 30 or 40 per cent. Yet statistics indicate that the influence of these schools in impressing evil habits upon a certain class of their boys is exceedingly strong. Of the 22.31 per cent. of the Sing Sing convicts examined who had been in these schools, 98 per cent.—fifty-one out of fifty-two—were habitual criminals. Some light is thrown upon the methods by which the reform school helps to fix the habit of criminality by the following conversation between a convict at Sing Sing and an examiner:

"Please, sir, may I ask you a question?" asks the convict.

"Certainly," is the examiner's reply.

"Why do they send boys to the house of refuge?"

"I suppose it is to teach them to be better boys."

"That's a great mistake, for they get worse."

"How should that be?"

"I wouldn't be here only I was sent to the refuge."

"What did you learn there that should have caused you to be sent here?"

"I didn't know how to pick pockets before I went, and I didn't know no fences; that's where you sell what you steal, you know."

"What else did you learn in the way of thieving?"

"I learned how to put up a job in burglary."

Another inmate—who at the age of seven stole fruit, and was sent to a reform school at Albany for nine months; at eight was found guilty of petit larceny, and sent to the house of refuge; at twelve was committed to a juvenile asylum, and escaped three times in four days; and three other times before reaching his majority was sentenced to reformatories, and who between the ages of twenty-one and forty-one had been committed to prison no less than ten times—remarked to the examiner:

"I never learned a thing in my life in prison to benefit me outside. The house of refuge is the worst place a boy could be sent to."

"Why so?"

"Boys are worse than men; I believe boys know more mischief than men. In the house of refuge I learned to sneak-thief, shop-lift, pick pockets and open a lock."

"How did you get an opportunity to learn all this?"

"There's plenty of chance. They learn it from each other when at play."

In respect to the evil influence of the reform school upon certain boys, it is, moreover, worth while to refer to the experience of one of the most learned and humane judges of the Supreme Bench of Maine. Before his court was brought a boy who had, evidently in a fit of extreme rage, shot his father. He had, so far as known, borne a good reputation, and was a church member. He pleaded that he believed the gun was not loaded, and only intended to frighten his parent. The jury returned a verdict of guilty. Never before, confesses the Judge, did he spend so many sleepless nights in determining upon a sentence. It lay in his power to commit the lad either to the reform school of the State during the remainder of his majority or to the State prison for a term of years. He chose the latter alternative, and on the ground that in the reform school he would learn certain vicious and criminal habits, which would probably render his whole life criminal and vicious. In the prison, separated from other convicts, he would be in less peril of contamination. Having solely in view the interests of the boy, the Judge decided that the disgrace of being a State prison convict was less perilous than the danger of education in evil which the baser members of the reform school give their purer associates.—Rev. Charles F. Thwing, in Harper's Magazine.

—"What is that big iron thing full of holes?" asked Laura. "Locomotive boiler," said Tom. Laura looked very thoughtful. After a moment's silence she asked: "Why do they boil locomotives?" Tom looked amazed. "To make them tender," he said, slowly.

PROSPEROUS INDIANS.

Besides Lands and Cattle They Own Millions of Hard Dollars.

Usis-Tah Wah-Tin-Kah, chief of the Osages, with a small party, was in the city this morning. The company, in addition to the chief, consisted of Cyprian Tayrien and Paul Aiken, who are half-breeds and talk English very well, Strike Axe, Eto-Kah, Wah-Tin-Kao and Um-Bago Bo-Han-Non. They are returning from Washington, where they have been as a delegation from their tribe to treat with the Government concerning their annuity. The Osages are the richest people in the world. There are only about 1,600 in the tribe, and they own one and one-half million acres of land in the Territory, on which they have large herds of cattle. Then they lease their land to cattle men and derive an income of $20,000 per annum, which is used in running their government. But the greater part of their wealth is in cold cash in the vaults of the Treasury Department. The original grant to the tribe was eight million acres of land in Southern Kansas. By the treaty of 1866 they were paid $1.25 per acre for this land, and were also given their present reservation. Of the amount of the purchase price about eight million dollars is now placed to the credit of the tribe, not one cent of which they can touch, but are paid interest at the rate of 5 per cent. For some reason they have not been receiving the full amount of the interest, and there has accumulated almost a million dollars, drawing no interest and remaining idle. This is the business which has taken the delegation to Washington. They were there eleven days and made satisfactory arrangements, the Department promising that if the condition of the tribe was as satisfactory as represented they would increase the amount of the annuity until this accrued interest was all paid.

Paul Aiken and Cyprian Tayrien, the half-breeds, are educated and intelligent men and talked freely to a reporter regarding the condition of their people. "Our tribe at present is neither increasing nor decreasing in numbers, but it is at a standstill," they said. "The old ones, who are full bloods, cling to the traditions and superstitions of their tribe and will never probably discard their blankets and fringed leggings. But they are willing for their children to be educated and the young people are taking great interest in education. Their progress is good, and when the next generation is in power the Osages, instead of being the least civilized tribe in the Territory, will be among the leaders of civilization.

"We elect a chief every two years, and the country is divided into five districts, from each of which representatives are elected to our council, which is our legislative body. We have officers corresponding to sheriffs and constables who administer the law and preserve order. Our people are almost unanimously opposed to the allotment of their land in severalty, feeling that at present instead of being a benefit it would work harm. They are satisfied with the present condition of things and desire to remain as they are. However, they look with friendly eyes on the opening of the Cherokee outlet to settlement by the whites. They wanted Oklahoma opened and think white neighbors a benefit. They have no rights on the land now rendered useless and would prefer it settled by whites than held by the Cherokees. Our chief is a full-blood as is also our council. The full-bloods are in power on account of their majority, and the progress of the tribe is retarded on this account. It will not be so when the young and educated class get into power."—Kansas City Star.

Outwitting a Detective.

One of the brightest detectives at police headquarters is the subject of a joke. He recently was out looking for a well-known "crook," and one of the toughest young men in Buffalo. The officer spotted his game on Front avenue, and started towards him. The latter "tumbled," very quickly and made off, turning down Fifth street on a run. The detective gave chase and the race was getting so hot that the crook bolted into a saloon. A pail of water was standing on the floor of the barroom, and quick as a flash the pursued threw down his hat and began washing his face in it. In an instant the detective burst in, asking: "Did a man run in here just now?" "Yes," answered the crook, vigorously rubbing his face. "Just went out the back door." The detective took the bait and went through the rear exit on a gallop, while Mr. Crook was out of reach.—Buffalo Courier.

—On the Hotel Piazza—"What do you think of Mrs. Jones?" "I don't know, I—" "Oh, I guess she's a nice person enough; but then she's so egotistical." "Yes." "Yes; I was asking her something or other about the Brookses, and she said that she never troubled herself about anybody's business but her own. Don't you call that egotistical?" "Really, you shouldn't be so severe. It may be only narrow-mindedness."

—Arbitration is preferable to litigation.

LITTLE'S

CHEMICAL FLUID

NON-POISONOUS

SHEEP DIP.

One gallon, mixed with 60 gallons of cold water will dip thoroughly 150 sheep, at a cost of 1 cent each. Easily applied, a nourisher of Wool; a certain cure for SCAB. Also,

Little's Patent Powder Dip.

(Poisonous.)

Mixes instantly with water. Prevents the fly from striking. In a 2 pound package there is sufficient to dip twenty sheep, and in a 7 pound package there is sufficient to dip one hundred sheep.

CATTON, BELL & CO.

SUCCESSORS TO FALKNER, BELL & CO.

Office, 406 California St. and Wool Agency Warehouse, cor. 6th and Townsend Sts

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

C. Mulholland,
EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.
PUBLISHED EVERY FRIDAY

INDEPENDENCE, CAL

FRIDAY JUNE 20 1890

County Official Paper.

Last week began the twenty-second year of the INYO INDEPENDENT. It is very gratifying to the publisher to be able to say that the paper grows steadily in public favor as the years roll on. It is an aim kept steadily in view in the management of the paper to promote the welfare of the County and of every citizen in it in all honorable ways.

If Congress is to give money for building a monument to General Grant the remains of the honored dead should be taken to some American city and the monument be erected there. In manners and customs New York is un-American and her people seem willing to sacrifice American interests for their personal gain.

The statements aattributed to Mr. Adams, President of the Union Pacific Railroad, that his Company have no intention of extending their road beyond Pioche is hard to understand, and still harder to believe If the road is not to be extended beyond Pioche then the money spent in building from Milford to that place is wasted. If it be said that one object of the extension was to reach the coal fields of Western Utah then the question will be asked, "What is to be done with the coal?" It will not be hauled East because the coal fields of Wyoming are nearer to any possible market in that direction. It will not be taken toward Puget Sound because there is plenty of coal at hand. The only opening for the coal fields of Utah is toward Los Angeles and the transcontinental railroads south. Here will be found a great market and the only one that needs it. Mr. Adams may not have been correctly reported or he may have been interrupted before finishing all he meant to say on the subject. The Eureka Sentinel is informed that the railroad going to Pioche is to build a branch out through Bristol Pass and on to Belmont. This branch may ultimately become the main line, as it will stand in an excellent position to be extended through to the coast From Belmont to a junction with the Carson and Colorado at Sodaville the distance is not great and the country is open. A stage carrying mail now runs twice a week between Sodaville and Belmont. The crop of rumors keeps on growing without let or hindrance.

NEW ADVERTISEMENTS.

DEMOCRATIC COUNTY COMMITTEE

Meeting.

A MEETING OF THE DEMOCRATIC CENtral Committee of Inyo county is hereby called for

WEDNESDAY, JULY 16th.

At Independence, at the hour of 7 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of selecting two delegates to represent Inyo county in the State Convention, which will meet in San Jose on August 19, 1890, and for the transaction of such other and further business as may come before the meeting.

COMMITTEE:

Round Valley—C. H. Parsons
Lincoln—T. K. Hutchison
Bishop—I. P. Yaney
Laws—Barton McGee
Big Pine—R. P. Hessian
Fish Spring—James Lane
Cottonwood—S. P. Roberts
Poleta—George Storey
Independence—D. Stubblefield
Keynot—T. McDonough
Georges Creek—W. L. Hunter
Lone Pine—John Lucas
Keeler—John Barnes
Cerro Gordo—R. B. Nickerson
Darwin—J. A. McKenzie
Lookout—F. Fitzgerald
Panamint—H. G. Chickering
Olancha—El. Walker
At Large—W. J. Lake, J. J. Gunn, E. Robinson, J. W. Murphy, J. White Smith.

E. ROBINSON, Chairman.
IRV. H. MULHOLLAND, Secretary.

DELINQUENT SALE NOTICE.

INYO MARBLE COMPANY.

Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Inyo county, Cal.

NOTICE There are delinquent upon the the following described stock, on account of assessment No. 9, levied on the 17th day of April, 1890, the several amounts set opposite the names of the respective shareholders, as follows:

Names.	No. Cert.	No. Sh's.	Am't
P G Keeler, Trustee	269	1000	$100 00
P G Keeler, Trustee	2[illegible]1	250	25 00
P G Keeler, Trustee	261	250	25 00
P G Keeler	5	5	50
W. H. Adams	270	200	25 00
		1755	$175 50

And in accordance with law, and an order of the Board of Directors, made on the 17th day of April, 1890, so many shares of each parcel of such stock as may be necessary, will be sold at public auction, at the office of the Inyo Marble Co., No. 39 Sutter St., San Francisco, California, on Thursday, the 26th day of June, 1890, at the hour of 12 o'clock m. of said day, to pay said delinquent assessment thereon, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

G. W. LUCE, Sec.

Office—No. 39 Sutter St., San Francisco, California.

POLITICAL ANNOUNCEMENTS.

All announcements under this head will be charged for at the uniform rate of Ten Dollars

For Superior Judge.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Superior Judge, subject to the action of the Republican County Convention.

GEORGE M. GILL.

For Superior Judge.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Superior Judge, Subject to the action of the Democratic county convention.

JOHN A. HANNAH.

For Superior Judge.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY DECLARE myself as a candidate for the office of Superior Judge, subject to the action of the Republican county convention.

A. R. CONKLIN.

For Sheriff.

ANNOUNCEMENNT IS HEREBY MADE that I respectfully declare myself as a candidate for the office of Sheriff, subject to the action of the Republican County Convention.

JOHN S. GORMAN.

For Treasurer.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Treasurer, subject to the action of the Democratic county convention.

J. J. MOORE.

For Sheriff.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Sheriff, subject to the action of the Democratic Convention.

BEN. T. WILLIAMS.

For Supervisor.

ANNOUNCEMENT IS HEREBY MADE that I will be a candidate for the office of Supervisor of the Third District subject to the action of the Republican Convention.

CHARLES A. WALTER.

For Assessor.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Assessor, subject to the action of the Democratic Convention.

C. W. GARRETSON.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE.

STEVENS DITCH COMPANY.

Location of principal place of business, Independence, California Location of ditch, near Independence, Inyo county.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of a Board of Directors, held on the 31st day of May, 1890, an assessment (No. 4) of Ten (10) cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary at the office of the company, Independence, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 26th day of July, 1890 will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Saturday, the 30th day of August, 1890 to pay the delinquent assessment together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.

P. H MACK, Secretary.

S. H. BIGLAND,

—DEALER IN—

Owens Valley Lands

39 SUTTER STREET.

SAN FRANCISCO.

1-26

A. K. EUGLEY,

BIG PINE INYO CO. CAL.

Dealer in GENERAL MERCHANDISE, GROCERIES MINERS Supplies

PROVISIONS, &c., &c., &c.

Deputy County Clerk.

A. K. EUGLEY,
Big Pine, Cal.

A $20 A Day Man!

A VOICE from Ohio. Here is a portrait of Mr. Garrison, of Salem, Ohio. He writes: "Was at work on a farm for $30 a month; I now have an agency for E. C. Allen & Co's albums and publications and often make $20 a day." (Signed) W. H. GARRISON.

William Kline, Harrisburg, Pa., writes: "I have never known anything to sell like your album. Yesterday I took orders enough to pay me over $35." W. J. Elmore, Bangor, Me., writes: "I take an order for your album almost every house I visit. My profit is often as much as $20 for a single day's work." Others are doing quite as well; we have not space to give extracts from their letters. Every one who takes hold of this grand business piles up grand profits. Shall we start YOU in this business, reader? Write to us and learn all about it for yourself. We are starting many; we will start you if you don't delay until another gets ahead of you in your part of the country. If you take hold you will be able to pick up gold fast. Bear in mind—On account of a forced manufacturer's sale 125,000 ten dollar Photograph Albums are to be sold to the people for $3 each. Bound in Royal Crimson Silk Velvet Plush. Charmingly decorated insides. Handsomest albums in the world. Largest Size. Greatest bargains ever known. Agents wanted. Liberal terms. Big money for agents. Any one can become a successful agent. Sells itself on sight—little or no talking necessary. Wherever shown, every one wants to purchase. Agents take thousands of orders with rapidity never before known. Great profits await every worker. Agents are making fortunes. Ladies make as much as men. You, reader, can do as well as any one. Full information and terms free, to those who write for same, with particulars and terms for our Family Bibles, Books and Periodicals. After you know all, should you conclude to go no further, why no harm is done.

Address E. C. ALLEN & CO., AUGUSTA, MAINE

OFFICIAL.

Application for Patent.

Mining Application No. 247.

UNITED STATES LAND OFFICE,
INDEPENDENCE, CAL.,
April 25, 1890.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT PATrick Reddy, whose post office address is San Francisco, California, has this day filed his application for a patent for fourteen hundred and forty-eigh and seven-tenths linear feet of the Bernon Quartz Mine or vein bearing galena, lead and silver, with surface ground six hundred feet in width, situated in Coso Mining District, County of Inyo and State of California and designated by the field notes and official plat on file in this office as Lot No. 42, in Township 19 South, Range No. 40 East, of Mt. Diablo Base and Meridian.

Said Lot No. 42 being described as follows, to wit:

Survey of Connecting Line:

Commencing at corner common to Sections 14, 15, 22 and 23 of T 19 S., R. 40 E., M. D. B. and M., and running with Mag. Var. of 15 deg. 37 min. E. as follows:

N. 73 deg. 52 min. E., Needle varying along the line from N. 58 1-8 deg. E. to N. 58 3-8 deg. E, Magnetic. 71.99 chs to the S W cor. post of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine, being the S. E. cor. of the Bernon claim.

Survey of the Exterior Boundaries:

Commencing at a stake in high stone Mont. having pencil marks too dim to be read, being the S. W. cor. of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine, and the S. E. cor. of the Bernon claim, thence deflecting L. 180 deg. 86 deg. 57 min. from connecting line extended N. 73 deg 52 min. E. as assumed standard bearing of the survey, upon West boundary line of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine and East boundary line of the Bernon claim, and running as follows: 1. N. 19 deg. 11 min. W., upon East boundary of claim, local variation of declination of 0 deg. 18 min. E.; 0.90 chs to summit of limestone reef; 1 65 chs crossing high reef of limestone, 1.93 chs; whence bears S. 70 3 4 deg., W. 0.46 chs., face of open cut five feet wide. 1. N. 19 deg. 11 min., W. 4.09 chs, centre of ravine bearing Easterly 7.42 chs, summit of high croppings of lime rock; whence bears N. 59 degrees 11 min. W 4.53 chs centre incline prospect shaft 15 ft deep, no marks, 10.14 chs to centre of wash bearing Easterly from summit towards Defiance Works; 10.90 chs to old stake in high stone Mont. marked in pencil as follows: — of Bernon and Defiance Ledge—surveyed by Joseph Seely, U. S. M. Surveyor; being the side line Mont. of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine; 749.7 ft., or 11.36 chs., Set 3 by 4 post in mound of stone marked Defiance West line and Bernon East line; whence bears N. 35 deg. 19 min. E. 1 28 chs. centre of incline prospect cut 12 ft. deep; whence bears N. 70 deg. 49 min E 0.76 chs centre of small prospect cut, whence bears N 79 deg. 07 min. E 5.37 chs centre of mouth of Defiance and Bernon Tunnel; whence bears N. 70 deg. 45 min. W. 2 43 chs. the face of Defiance and Bernon Tunnel; 14.39 chs centre of wash leading Easterly; 15.61 chs; whence bears N 70 deg. 49 min. E 0.03 chs an old stake in stone Mont. having Seely's name in pencil and other marks too dim to be read, being a side line Mont. of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine; 1. N. 19 deg. 11 min. W 16.18 chs summit of ridge bearing Easterly; 20 31 chs, whence bears S 42 deg. 04 min. W. 1 76 chs a stake in stone Mont. marked Kerso Ledge, S W cor. Post No. 6; whence bears N 42 deg. 04 min. E 6.91 chs a stake in stone Mont. marked Kerso Ledge N E Post; whence bears N 35 deg. 45 min E 2.41 chs a stake in stone Mont. marked Kerso centre point 1448.7 ft., or 21.95 chs to stake in stone Mont., no marks, being the N W cor. of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine, set 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon N E cor. No. 1, and Defiance N W cor. No. 4; thence deflecting L. 90 deg. from Co. 1 extended N. 19 deg. 11 min. W making interior angle 90 deg. ran; 2 S. 70 deg. 49 min. W upon the North boundary line of the Bernon claim; local variation of declination of 0 deg. 18 min. E, 2, S 70 deg. 49 min, W 0.30 chs centre old sled road from summit of hill, 1.09 chs, whence bears N 60 deg. 07 min., W 3.06 chs a stake in stone Mont. being the Northerly end of Lode line and centre of Hidalgo claim. 2.10 chs whence bears N 79 deg. 57 min. W 0.61 chs the centre of Hidalgo incline shaft, 4.07 chs, crossing summit of Darwin Range, whence bears S 19 deg 31 min. E 2.91 chs. centre small shaft 300 ft or 4.545 chs, set 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked, Bernon L. L. P. No. 1; being the Northerly end of Lode Line and centre of Bernon claim, 7.80 chs centre mouth of tunnel bearing Northerly 6.0 ft, or 9.09 chs, set a 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon N W Cor. No. 4, being the N W Cor. of the Bernon claim; thence deflecting L 90 deg. from Co. 2 extended S 70 deg. 49 min. W making the interior angle 90 deg. and ran 3, S 19 deg. 11 min. E upon West boundary line of Bernon Claim, local variation of declination of 0 deg. 18 min. E, 0.15 chs centre wash bearing Westerly 4.07 chs, summit of ridge bearing Westerly, 9.01, center deep gulch bearing Westerly 10.15 chs, whence bears S 28 deg. 47 min. W 9.19 chs a stone Mont. being the S E cor. of the Hidalgo Claim; whence bears S 56 deg. 51 min. W 11.17 chs a stone Mont. being the Southerly end of Hidalgo Lode Line; whence bears S 76 deg. 25 min. W 12.46 chs a stone Mont. being the S W Cor. of the Hidalgo Claim 3, S 19 deg. 11 min. E 14 25 chs, summit of spur bearing Westerly, 14.61 chs, crossing head of wash bearing Westerly 16.28 chs, summit of spur bearing Westerly 18.09 chs, whence bears N 86 deg. 28 min. E 3.32 chs the centre of mouth of Carry Tunnel, No. 1, whence bears N 83 deg. 20 min. E 4.22 chs the centre of mouth of Carry Tunnel No. 2, whence bears N 56 deg. 46 min. E 2.71 chs the centre of mouth of Carry Tunnel, No. 3, 21.65 chs, centre of ravine bearing Westerly, 21.47 chs, intersection with connecting line; whence bears S 73 deg. 52 min. W 62.89 chs the corner common to Sections 14, 15, 22 and 23 of T 19 S, R 40 E, M D B and M, 1448.7 ft, or 21.95 chs, in south side of ravine, set 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon S W Cor. No. 3, being the S W Cor. of the Bernon Claim; thence deflecting L. 90 deg. from Co. 3, extended S 19 deg. 11 min. E, making interior angle 90 deg. and ran; 4, N 70 deg. 49 min. E, upon South boundary line of Bernon, local variation of declination of 0 deg. 03 min. E, 1.26 chs, edge of ravine, 2.51 chs, ridge of spur bearing Westerly 3.90 ft, or 4.545 chs, set 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon L. L., P. No. 2, being the Southerly end of Lode Line and centre of claim, 7.66 chs, crossing high reef of lime rock, 4, N 70 deg. 49 min. E, 600 ft, or 9.09 chs back to place of beginning, and set a 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon S E Cor., No. 2, and Defiance S W Cor., No. 3.

Containing 19.95 acres.

Survey of Lode Line.

Commencing at the L. L., P., No. 1, of Claim and deflecting thence L. 90 deg. from Co. 2, extended S 70 deg. 49 min W, making the interior angle 90 deg. ran, 5, S, 19 deg. 11 min. E, upon lode line; ascending 3.94 chs, whence bears S 74 deg. 41 min. W 2.91 chs a stone Mont. claimed to be the centre of Hidalgo Claim; whence bears S 72 deg. 36 min. 0.71 chs centre small shaft; descending; 10.30 chs, whence bears S 70 deg. 49 min. W 0.30 chs centre prospect hole 11.82 chs, whence bears N 70 deg. 49 min. E 0.50 chs centre incline shaft 60 ft deep. Ascending; 13.03 chs, summit of spur bearing Westerly. Descending; 13.36 chs, whence bears S 70 deg. 06 min. E. 0.80 chs centre shaft 45 ft deep, 14.41 chs, whence bears S 70 deg. 49 min. W 0.10 chs centre mouth of tunnel, 16.66 chs, whence bears S 70 deg. 49 min. W 0.12 chs centre shaft 6 ft deep 1448 ft, or 21.94 chs to L. L. P., No. 2, of Claim.

Magnetic variation 15 deg. 37 min. E containing 19.95 acres.

THE LOCATION of this mine is recorded in the Recorder's office of Coso Mining District in Book C of page 186. The adjoining claim is the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. mine.

Any and all persons claiming adversely any portion of said Bernon Quartz mine or surface ground are required to file their adverse claims with the Register of the United States Land Office at Independence in the State of California during the sixty days period of publication hereof, or they will be barred by virtue of the provisions of the Statute.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD,
Register.

6-n24

INDEPENDENCE

SHAVING SALOON.

Shaving, Hair Cutting, etc., done in the best manner.

WM. H. HUFF, Prop'r

MISCELLANEOUS.

J. R. ELDRED,
Sheriff and Tax-Collector.
INYO CO., CAL.

P. H. MACK,
COUNTY CLERK,
—AND—
Ex-officio Auditor and Recorder,
INYO CO., CAL.

GEO. M. GILL,
District Attorney,
INYO CO., CAL.

J. J. MOORE,
County Treasurer,
INYO CO., CAL.

S. P. M'KNIGHT, C. E.
COUNTY SURVEYOR
—AND—
U. S. Deputy Mineral Surveyor
For California and Nevada.
—BISHOP CREEK, INYO CO., CAL.—

The obtaining of United States mineral patents a specialty.

All kinds of surveying given the most careful and accurate attention.

JUSTICE OF PEACE,
C. MULHOLLAND.
Office in the "INDEPENDENT" building, Independence, Inyo County, Cal.

A. R. CONKLIN,
Attorney-at-Law.
Independence, Cal.
Will practice in all the Courts of the States of California and Nevada.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
Independence, Cal.

P. W. FORBES,
ATTORNEY AT LAW.
NOTARY PUBLIC.
Cases in U. S. Land Office a Specialty.
BISHOP, INYO COUNTY, CALIFORNIA.

IRVING J. WOODIN, M D.,
Physician & Surgeon,
(COUNTY PHYSICIAN)
Louise L. Woodin, M. D.
PHYSICIAN & SURGEON.
NIGHT CALLS ATTENDED.
Office and residence at the Reddy place, Independence.

W. H. GEORGE, M. D.,
Physician and Surgeon,
Bishop Creek, Cal.,
Offers his professional services to the people of Bishop Creek and vicinity. Office and residence opposite Andrew Clark's.

F. E. Bunting, M. D.
Physician & Surgeon
LONE PINE, CAL
OFFICE IN GELCICH BUILDING
All calls attended to immediately.

Lodge 221, F. & A. M.

Regular meetings of Lodge No. 221, F. & A. M., for the year 1889, will be held at the Lodge room at Independence as follows:

Saturday ..... February 1st
" ..... March 1st
" ..... March 29th
" ..... May 3rd
" ..... May 31st
" ..... June 28th
" ..... July 26th
" ..... August 30th
" ..... September 27th
" ..... October 25th
" ..... November 22nd
" ..... December 20th

P. H. MACK, W. M.
C. MULHOLLAND Sec.

P. W. FORBES. P. H. MACK.

MACK & FORBES.
Real Estate Agents,
Address, P. W. FORBES, Bishop, Cal.
P. H. MACK, Independence, Cal.

FRED BURCKHARDT
Watchmaker & Jeweler,
LONE PINE, CAL.
Time pieces of all descriptions repaired and regulated, satisfaction guaranteed. Jewelry made to order. Firearms repaired and loaded.
All orders from any part of the country will be promptly attended to, at the most reasonable charges. At the old stand "Mechanics' Hall," Lone Pine.
FRED BURCKHARDT.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CROCKER'S HOTEL.
BIG PINE - CAL.
New House.
New Furniture.
Low Rates
Splendid hunting and fishing near by, in act, it is a veritable paradise for tourists and pleasure seekers.
Special attention given to the wants of every guest.
CROCKER BROS., Props.
sep1-tf

ANTONS SALOON
KEELER, CAL.
BEER, WINES, LIQUORS and CIGARS
All kinds of Fancy Drinks, including pure water. A comfortable and pleasant Hall.
JOHN C. ANTON, Prop.

IRWIN'S SALOON
Cor. Edwards and Market Streets,
Independence . Cal.
THE PUBLIC GENERALLY ARE RESPECTFULLY invited to call and inspect my establishment, which has been entirely rebuilt and furnished in a style second to no one on this side of the mountains. A SPLENDID NEW BILLIARD TABLE provided for the amusement of patrons.
THE BAR
Is supplied with the most celebrated brands of pure Wines and Liquors and the Finest Havana Cigars.
JOHN C. IRWIN, Proprietor.
feb12tf

Palace Saloon.
WALTER OBER, Lessee.
—THE BAR—
Is constantly supplied with the best kinds of
WINES, LIQUORS, & CIGARS.
The most careful attention given to the amusement and comfort of patrons.
A FINE BILLIARD TABLE
Is always at the disposal of visitors to the Palace Saloon Dec. 20 89

Pioneer Livery & Feed Stables.
INDEPENDENCE, CAL.
Having returned and resumed the management of the above well known feed and livery stables, patrons can be assured of finding there the best of Buggy Teams, Saddle Horses, and
Livery Accommodations
in general. Also, Hay and Grain for sale by the pound or ton.
O. I. MAIRS, Proprietor.

E. H. Edwards,
—DEALER IN—
General Merchandise,
LONE PINE,
INYO COUNTY - - - CALIFORNIA.

BLACKSMITHING,
Horseshoeing, General Iron
—AND—
WAGON WORK.
PIONEER BLACKSMITH SHOP
Cor. Main St. & Depot Ave.,
INDEPENDENCE, CAL.
W. F. MATLACK ..... PROPRIETOR.
Horseshoeing ..... $2 00 for Cash
For particulars, call and see
W. F. MATLACK.

LONE PINE
Blacksmith Shop.
R. C. Spear, Prop'r
—ALL WORK ON—
MINING TOOLS,
FARMING IMPLEMENTS
& FREIGHTING OUTFITS
—PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO—
HORSE SHOEING,
CARRIAGE WORK,
GENERAL REPAIRING
All work attended to with neatness and despatch. Prices to suit the times.

BOOTS AND SHOES
MADE AND REPAIRED.
THE BEST MATERIAL.
FIRST-CLASS WORK.
Repairs done Promptly.
Prices Reasonable.
A. J. DAVIS,
nov 30-tf Independence,

TO ADVERTISERS
A list of 1000 newspapers divided into STATE AND SECTIONS will be sent on application—FREE.
To those who want their advertising to pay, we can offer no better medium for thorough and effective work than the various sections of our Select Local List.
GEO. P. ROWELL & CO.,
Newspaper Advertising Bureau
10 Spruce Street, New York

MISCELLANEOUS.

Railroad Time Table.

CARSON & COLORADO R R

TAKING EFFECT

Sunday, May 10th, 1889.

STATIONS.	From Mound House. No. 1	To Mound House. No. 2.
	Leave—	Arrives—
Mound House	12.30 p. m	5.55 p. m
Dayton	1:00 p. m.	5.15 p. m.
Wabuska	3.05 p. m	3.00 p. m
Hawthorne	6.50 p. m.	11.20 a. m.
Luning	7.30 p. m.	10.05 a. m
Soda Springs	9.15 p. m.	9.05 a. m
Belleville	10.25 p. m.	7.45 a. m.
Candelaria Ar.	11.10 p. m	Lv. 7.10 a. m
	No. 3. Leave—	No. 4. Arrives—
Belleville	8.10 a. m	5.25 p. m
Benton	11.40 a. m
Bisaop Creek	1.50p. m.	11.30 a. m
Alvord	2.25 p. m.	10.00 a. m
Independence	4.10 p. m.	8.30 a. m.
Lone Pine	5.00 p. m.	7.40 a. m
Keeler Ar	5.45 p. m.	Lv. 7.00 a. m.

Trains 1 and 2 run daily.
Train 3 runs Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays.
Train 4 runs Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays

Passenger trains make close connection at Mound House with express trains of V. & T. R. R., which connect at Reno with east and west bound trains of Central Pacific Railroad.

Stage Connections:

AT HAWTHORNE with United States Stage Company's coaches for Aurora (26 miles); Bodie (35 miles); Lundy and Bridgeport.

AT LUNING (12½ miles from Mound House) with Gilmer, Salisbury & co's. tri weekly stages for Ione Monday, Wednesdays and Fridays; for Downieville, Grantsville and Belmont.

AT CANDELARIA with U. S. Stage Co's. stages for Columbus (8 miles), Silver Peak, Montezuma, Alida Valley, Gold Mountain, etc.

H. M. YERINGTON,
General Superintendent.
R. J. LAWS, Assistant Superintendent.
D. A. DENNER,
General Freight and Passenger Agent.

Lake View Hotel
Keeler, Cal.
John Barnes, Prop'r.
First-class hotel in every respect. The table always supplied with the best in the market. Clean, nicely furnished rooms. Transient visitors will receive every courtesy and attention.
THE BAR
—Is constantly supplied with the finest—
Wines, Liquors, & Cigars.

EDWARD CHENOT
Independence, Cal.,
INVITES PUBLIC ATTENTION TO HIS Extensive Stock of
GENERAL MERCHANDISE
....Consisting of....
GROCERIES.
PROVISIONS
Tobacco, Cigars,
WINES AND LIQUORS
FLOUR & GRAIN
Together with an Assortment of
DRY GOODS AND CLOTHING
ETC., ETC
Buyers and consumers should call and examine my stock and prices before purchasing elsewhere.
E. CHENOT.
Independence, Cal., March 9, 1884.
047tf

R. J. WHITTAKER
—PAINTER—
BIG PINE, - - - - CAL.
HOUSE PAINTING,
SIGN WRITING,
PAPER HANGING,
GRAINING,
GILDING ON WOOD AND GLASS
Wagons Painted
The best of materials used and satisfaction guaranteed.

J. W. Murphy.
BLACKSMITHING
—AND—
General Iron Work.
Wagons and Carriages Repaired.
HORSESHOEING, $2.00 for CASH
Shop on Edwards St., opposite the Court House, Independence.

NATHAN RHINE.

NATHAN RHINE
(Successor to Harris & Rhine.)
MERCHANT,
INDEPENDENCE
Inyo Co. Cal.
Wholesale & Retail
—DEALER IN—
General Merchandise
MY STOCK
CONSISTING OF
almost every needed article is well calculated to satisfy the wants of everybody; and, as in the past, it will be our aim in the future to retain the extensive patronage enjoyed heretofore.
NATHAN RHINE.

NATHAN RHINE
BANKER
Independence, Cal.
SELL EXCHANGE
—ON—
SAN FRANCISCO
Draw Direct
—ON—
NEW YORK,
LONDON, England.
BERLIN, FRANKFORT-on the Main, GERMANY.
I AM PREPARED TO TRANSACT ALL Kinds,
—OF—
GENERAL
BANKING & EXCHANGE,
BUSINESS.
Wechsel in beliebigen Summen auf Berlin und Frankfort am de Main.
Deutsche Vollmachten gelten für.
Geldsendungen von und nach Deutschland besorgt.
AGENT FOR
WELLS FARGO & CO'S.
EXPRESS
MUTUAL Life Insurance Co. OF NEW YORK
CAPITAL - - - - $5,000,000
LIVERPOOL AND LONDON AND GLOBE
INSURANCE - COMPANY
Capital - - - - - $21,000,000
NATHAN RHINE.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY, JUNE 20 1890

MARKET REPORT.

Bar silver, 104¼
Lead, 4.12½
Copper, 15
Tin, 21.25
Sugar, .05½
Coffee, 17 @ 19¾
Wool, foothill, 17 @ 20.

Religious Services.

Rev. E. McEvers will preach at Lone Pine at 11 o'clock a. m. Georges Creek at 2:30 p. m. Independence at 7:30 evening. Sunday School at Independence and Lone Pine at 11 o'clock a. m.

COURT NOTES.

Superior Court of Inyo County California Hon. John A. Hannah, Judge.

SATURDAY, June 14th.

Swansea Mining Company vs. John Dunphy et al.—Filed stipulation dismissing action.

MONDAY, June 16th.

Estate of James W. Harvey deceased—Issued letters testamentary to Cinderella E. Harvey. W. J. Dunn, John McCown and James McBride appointed appraisers.

Mr. James McDonald has left Darwin and gone to Cerro Gordo.

Not a pound of oats, barley or corn is now for sale at Independence.

Last Wednesday was the seventy-fifth anniversary of the battle of Waterloo.

Young quail are running about in great numbers; the flocks appear to be large.

Mr. C. S. Swan left town yesterday for Los Angeles. He expects to be gone about three weeks.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Fitzgerald came up to Independence on Wednesday and visited several days here.

John Baxter has one and a half tons of honey ready for shipment. It is in one pound sections and of very fine quality.

Mr. W. Walker of Olancha lost four horses the past week or two by some unknown disease. The animals swell up inside the forelegs and die.

Mr. W. W. Vaughn, wife and son, arrived at Independence yesterday from Ventura. The family left Bishop six years ago and are now on their way back there.

Mr. Lawson Newton and wife arrived at Independence yesterday. Mrs. Newton is a sister to Mr. O. I. Mairs and it is twenty years since they last met. Mr. and Mrs. Newton live in Nebraska.

Mr. W. H. Russell came down from Benton last Monday to pay the men employed at the San Carlos mine. The tunnel that has so long been in progress in the mine is evidently close to the ledge.

A good deal of ore is now being sent down from Cerro Gordo, some from the Union mine and some from the Dunphy & O'Keefe mine. Several carloads were sent out at the beginning of the week.

At the beginning of the week Messrs. Gunn and Fitzgerald sent out about fifty tons of ore from the Minnietta and Lookout. It is all high grade ore and the single shipment will net several thousand dollars.

There is some talk of asking a change of venue on behalf of the People in the Elliott case. Evidently it is useless to try the case again in Kern County but justice may be had in another county and the People have a right to ask for a change of venue.

Mr. C. A. Walter of Camp Independence gives notice that he will be a candidate for Supervisor. Mr. Walter is known to every tax-payer in the Third District and no one needs to be told that he is one of the best citizens in the District. See his card.

Mrs. Walter and her daughters are now making a large assortment of jellies for display at the coming Fair at Independence. Mr. Walter has plenty of currants, raspberries, gooseberries and other fruits for sale so that there is opportunity for others to compete for premiums at the Fair.

Mr. Henry Thomson who left Independence about two months ago is engaged in a butcher business at Williams, Colusa County. The Farmer says the firm is doing a big business. Mr. Thompson will make plenty of friends wherever he is known.

Mr. Frank Fitzgerald has taken the oath of office and filed his bond as Postmaster of the new office at Modock. The mail will be taken by special carrier from Darwin. This new office will be highly appreciated by miners who are now prospecting all over that country.

Mr. J. H. Roberts had a boiler and crystallizing tanks delivered at Alvord some days ago. The machinery will be taken to Saline valley and put in operation making borax. The capacity of the plant is said by Mr. Roberts to be from fifteen to twenty tons of borax a month. This can be easily doubled as the boiler is of capacity equal to that.

Last Monday evening the new building for the Chronicle was opened at San Francisco for public inspection. The prosperous career of the Chronicle is the best proof of the great business capacity of its manager. Many growls are uttered against the paper but every body reads it. The new building is a very costly structure and is filled with all the latest improvements pertaining to printing. Over five thousand invitations were issued to attend the opening of the building.

The State Superintendent of Public Instruction has issued circulars to all the presidents of Colleges and Principals of private schools in California, asking for reports of the most important facts in connection with all such institutions. The intention of Mr. Hoitt is to make as accurate a report as possible of all material facts in connection with education in the state. These facts will be included in his next Annual Report.

Yesterday a telegram from Big Pine stated that Doctor Middleton had shot Sam Spratt. It is reported that the men had quarreled; that Middleton struck Spratt on the head and that the latter then knocked Middleton down. Middleton then fired wounding Spratt in the abdomen. It is said that the wound is not serious. Middleton was arrested and taken to Bishop and will be examined before Justice Bunney.

A Valuable Property.

Mr. W. L. Hunter, so far as we know, had the first ripe apricots of the season about Independence. They were grown on his place at Georges Creek and were ripe on June 10th. When Mr. Hunter took charge of the Joslin place five years ago there was no fruit upon it of any kind. Last year he had apricots, peaches and plums. This year in addition to these he has pears and apples. For a wind-break a row of mulberry trees was set out on the south side of the orchard; these having made very good growth are affording excellent shelter. The trees are covered with berries and the birds seem well enough satisfied with these to let other fruits alone. A dish of these ripe berries covered with cream is not bad. They are very much like blackberries in size, color and flavor. In the spring-time of last year Mr. Hunter got five hundred rooted vines from Fresno of the raisin producing kind. So far as growth is concerned these vines have settled the question as to the suitability of that land for producing raisins. The vines have made great growth and are now full of young grapes. It is known already that the climate is not surpassed for curing raisins. Mr. Hunter has one hundred acres of alfalfa that will produce as much as any other tract of like area in the country. He began cutting last Monday.

At Cerro Gordo.

It is reported that five or six hundred tons of ore are in sight in the mine recently sold by Dunphy and O'Keefe at Cerro Gordo. The ore is said to be worth at least one hundred dollars per ton. Teams are now hauling ore from this mine to Keeler. Thorough tests have been made of the old ore dumps at Cerro Gordo which prove that there are several thousand tons of ore there that will have a big profit by jigging. Several improved machines have been ordered from San Francisco of the same kind as that recently sent to Darwin by Hon. P. Reddy. When the machines are delivered the work of jigging will be prosecuted vigorously. This will produce a large amount of lead and silver formerly wasted. A crosscut is now being run on the seven hundred feet level of the Union mine. Surveys showed that this crosscut would tap the ledge one hundred and fifty feet below the old workings where so much rich ore was formerly taken out. In other parts of the mind a few men are taking out ore on tribute.

At Monache.

Mr. J. R. Moffett came in a few days ago from a trip through the Monache country. He says there is still a good deal of snow in upper Whitney meadow and in the other higher meadows. Whitney Creek below the tunnel is a great torrent, too deep and rapid to be forded on horseback. The Kern, above Kunkle's, is bank full and could not be forded. There appears to be a great deal of snow in that vicinity. It was necessary to be very careful in attempting to ford the North Fork in Monache. Twice as many sheep are now in the mountains as Mr. Moffett ever saw there before. At least twenty-one bands of these will keep north till they get west from Bishop and then cross the line into Inyo. Mr. Moffett thinks that at least $2,100 of license tax can be collected from these bands if the effort be made.

Undeveloped Resources.

In the year 1889 five hundred carloads of condensed milk were imported into California. This is equal to the milk from 12,500 cows. Alfalfa is the best milk producing feed known to dairymen. Owens Valley producers the best alfalfa in California and it would be very easy to grow enough to feed all the cows necessary to produce condensed milk enough to supply the quantity now imported from other States. Here is an opening for the development of a big business. During the year there was imported into the State nearly three million dollars worth of eggs. This vast sum could be kept at home, as there is no State better suited to poultry raising than California.

Postponed.

Last Monday District Attorney Gill was telegraphed from Bakersfield that on motion of defendant the trial of Elliott is postponed. No time has yet been fixed for the new trial of the case. When the people of Inyo asked for a postponement of the case and showed what loss it would cause so many farmers to be taken away from their homes at a time when their hay crop must be harvested no attention was paid to their reasonable request; but as soon as Elliott asked for a postponement it was granted.

Rev. E. McEvers came down from Bishop on Thursday. He will fill the appointments on Sunday of Rev. J. H. De La Matyr, who has gone to Bishop to attend the commencement exercises at the Academy.

The Committee in charge has prepared an an excellent programme for the Fourth of July. The footrace between Rosenthal and Ober will attract a large crowd. About four hundred dollars has been subscribed and plenty of amusements will be provided. The ball in the pavilion will be an attractive feature.

Mr. Ben. T. Williams gives notice that he is a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Sheriff. Mr. Williams is well known to the voters of the county, and his courtesy, good character and ability to perform the duties of the office are generally conceded.

John Brown came from Pennsylvania yesterday. He says the rapid progress is making with building and grading roads. The output of ore goes on steadily and the dumps are increasing accordingly. About one hundred men are now at work in the camp.

Charles W. Garretson announces that he is a candidate for the office of Assessor. Mr. Garretson is an old time resident of Bishop; he is an intelligent, energetic man with a good knowledge of business and values of property of all kinds. These are the qualifications needed in a good assessor.

People who make inquiry about churches and schools are the most desirable to have for settlers. The Methodist Church at Independence with its grounds and parsonage are now quite creditable to the town. Rev. J. H. De La Matyr has made great improvement upon the buildings and ground during the year, doing most of the work with his own hands. Some repairs yet remain to do upon the parsonage and for the credit of the town should be completed.

Very thorough prospecting has been done of the ore dumps and the various levels and drifts of the Defiance mine at Darwin. From all this Mr. Reddy is satisfied that extensive improvements may safely be made. He has bought about five and one half miles of water pipe and will at once put in new waterworks. He bought out the Darwin waterworks some months ago. As soon as the waterworks are put in thorough order work on the mine will be extended. At present only four or five men are employed there.

OFFICERS.

President of the Day—GEO. M. GILL.
Orator—A. R. CONKLIN.
Reader—C. MULHOLLAND.
Speaker—F. E. DENSMORE.
Marshall—W. OBER.
Chaplain—J. H. DE LA MATYR.

PROGRAMME.

SALUTES—Sunrise, Noon and Sunset.
MUSIC—By the Band.
PRAYER.
READING—Declarat'n of Indep'nd'nce.
SONG—Star Spangled Banner.
ORATION.
SONG—Red, White and Blue.
RECITATION—Drake's Address.
SONG—America.
MUSIC—By the Band.

FOOT-RACE FOR $900, WALTER OBER AND B. ROSENTHAL.

GRAND BALL IN PAVILION.

FLOOR DIRECTOR—J. W. Murphy.
FLOOR MANAGERS—J. C. Irwin, Henry Rhine, I. H. Mulholland, N. E. Conklin and J. D. Blair.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE—J. C. Irwin, J. W. Murphy, D. Cofer, P. H. Mack and Irv. H. Mulholland.
FINANCE COMMITTEE—Henry Rhine, O. I. Mairs and J. W. Murphy.

SPORTS.

Wheelbarrow race	$ 5 00
Footrace, girls under 12 years	3 00
Footrace, girls under 16 years	5 00
Footrace, boys under 12 years	3 00
Footrace, boys under 15 years	5 00
Sack race	5 00
Piute race, 200 yards	5 00
Egg race for girls	3 00
Greased pig	5 00
And pig, to be caught by the tail.
Match race, Ober and Rosenthal	300 00

Other sports to be added.

HALE BROS. & CO.

IN ORDERING BY MAIL OF HALE BROS. & CO.

YOU CAN DEPEND

UPON GETTING

FREE, OUR NEW Fashion Book

1. Your orders filled with pleasing promptness.
2. The same price and attention as though you were at their counters.
3. Lower prices on the whole than elsewhere. They allow no one to undersell them.
4. Courteous and satisfactory treatment. Goods may be exchanged or money refunded if satisfaction is not given.
5. The best styles. They carry no unseasonable goods.
6. The benefits of their dealing direct with manufacturers. It makes small prices.

AND PRICE LIST 100 PAGES.

HALE BROS & CO.,
—Dealers In—
DRYGOODS, CLOTHING, SHOES,
Hats, Notions and Household Supplies.
Nos. 825 to 835 K St.,
Sacrameoto, Cal.

JEWELRY, DIAMONDS, WATCHES.
Hyman Fredrick, Reno, Nev.

The attention of the people of Inyo and neighboring counties is respectfully invited to the
LARGEST AND BEST STOCK
of Watches, Diamonds, Ear and Finger Rings, Bracelets and all other kinds of Jewelry this side of San Francisco. Knives, Forks, Spoons, and other Table Ware of the Best quality.
PRICES DEFY OUTSIDE COMPETITION.
All repairs done promply and in a workmanlike manner.
Address orders and packages to
HYMAN FREDRICK, Jeweler,
m30-tf RENO, NEVADA.

MISCELLANEOUS.

NORMAN HOUSE,
Independence, - - Cal.
New House,
New Furniture,
Low Rates.
Special attention will be given to secure the comfort of guests.
O. I. MAIRS, Prop.
feb12tf

BELL'S Flouring Mills,
A. N. BELL, Prop.
TRY BELL'S
EXTRA PATENT ROLLER FLOUR.
Having added Patent Rolls and other Improvements to our Mills, I am now turning out Flour that is fully
Equal to the Best.
Corn, Oats and Barley Cracked on Short Notice.
A. N. BELL,
Independence, Cal.

PIONEER BREWERY
INDEPENDENCE
BEER ICE COLD.
The Bar is supplied with the Best of all kinds of Liquors and Cigars.
The Coolest Hall in the town. Call in and see what comfort you can have this hot weather.
PHILIP GEHRIG, PROPRIETOR

MISCELLANEOUS.

BUHACH
THE UNRIVALED
Insect Exterminator
Manufactured solely from Pyrethrum flowers, grown in California, in a locality where the soil and climate are peculiarly adapted to the production of flowers rich in the essential oil which makes them so remarkably destructive to insect life.
Avoid the Worthless and Spurious Preparations, sold as Insect Powders, and use Buhach from original packages, and clear your premises of all Annoying and Destructive Insect Pests.
None Genuine Without the Trade Mark.
If your dealer doesn't keep it, order directly from the
Buhach Producing & Manufacturing COMPANY,
SOLE MANUFACTURERS,
STOCKTON, - - CALIFORNIA.

Wm. Muth-Rasmussen.
Bee Keeper.
Manufacturer of Comb Foundation.
Independence, Inyo Co. Cal

IF YOU WISH A GOOD REVOLVER PURCHASE ONE OF SMITH & WESSON'S

Finest small arms ever manufactured and the first choice of all experts. In calibres 32, 38 and 44-100. Single or double action, Safety Hammerless and Target models. Best quality wrought steel, carefully inspected for workmanship and stock. Unrivaled for finish, durability and accuracy. Do not be deceived by cheap malleable iron imitations often sold for the genuine article. They are unreliable and dangerous. The SMITH & WESSON REVOLVERS are stamped upon the barrels with firm's name, address and dates of patents, and are guaranteed perfect. Insist upon having them, and if your dealer cannot supply you, an order sent to address below will receive prompt attention. Descriptive catalogue and prices upon application.
SMITH & WESSON,
Springfield, Mass.

BISHOP ADVERTISEMENTS.

A. COHN & CO.
DEALERS IN—
General Merchandise.
—ALL KINDS OF—
Farm Implements
—AND—
--MACHINERY--
Farm Produce
—OF ALL KINDS BOUGHT—
Orders for all kinds of supplies needed in mining camps promptly filled.

GIVEN & INGALLS.
—DEALERS IN—
FARM PRODUCE.

J. E. DUNLAP.
Harness Maker.
Harness of all kinds, from the lightest to the heaviest. Any kind of new work made promptly and of the best material. Repairing done on the shortest notice. A full line of saddles and harness.

Valley View Hotel.
O. H. Hill, Prop'r.
A New House Newly Furnished Throughout. Guests will receive every courtesy and attention.

NEVADA STABLE
BISHOP.
Opposite Valley View Hotel, Main St
In the Livery Department nothing is kept but safe and good traveling carriage and saddle horses. Conveyances of all kinds first class. Good attendance and the best of hay and grain for all animals boarding at the stable
S. P. SMITH, Prop.

BISHOP CREEK
BREWERY,
MUNZINGER, PHILLIPPAY & CO., Proprietors.
All the appliances and conveniences of First Class Brewery, including a beautiful grove for out-door parties.
Customers supplied on all points
Of the U. & C. Railroad.
Send orders to
MUNZINGER, PHILLIPPAY & CO.
Bishop Creek, Cal.

F. E. Bosworth,
Watchmaker & Jeweler.
BISHOP, CAL.
Fine and Complicated Watch Repairing a Specialty.
Guns, Sewing Machines, Organs and Music Boxes Put in Perfect Condition and Warranted.
I Prefer to do all work at your house and will call if you will write to me at Bishop.

A NEW DEAL!
BISHOP CREEK
Livery. Feed & Sale Stable.
ROBERT O'NEIL, Prop'r.
Horses are boarded by the day, week or month. Stock bought and sold.
Bishop Creek, Cal., Nov. 20, 1883.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Newest Styles
OF
Fashionable Clothing, Dry Goods, Ladies' Wear, etc., etc
AT
L. WOOD'S
CASH STORE
A small stock of fresh groceries & canned goods constantly renewed.
Fresh Produce, and Grain Flour, etc., constantly on hand.
CANDIES,
PEANUTS,
WALNUTS,
TOYS!
THE CASH STORE
Is Where You Get
WORTH OF YOUR MONEY

THOMAS & HILL,
—DEALERS IN—
GENERAL MERCHANDISE
BIG PINE, INYO COUNTY, CAL,
We keep constantly on hand goods of all kinds needed in a country home. We order only First-Class Goods and ask no more than a reasonable profit. Give us a trial.
THOMAS & HILL.

J. FORBES. W. D. TOBEY.
FORBES & TOBEY,
HAWTHORNE, NEV.,
—DEALERS IN—
LUMBER
OF ALL KINDS.
DOORS,
SHINGLES,
SASH AND BLINDS,
LATH,
RUSTIC
MOULDINGS,
DRESSED LUMBER.
Matched and Dressed Flooring.
sept 11-tf

COLONEL QUARITCH, V.C.

By H. RIDER HAGGARD.

"It may as well stand," he said aloud. "If anything happens to me she'll take about ten thousand under it, and that was what she brought me." Taking a pen he went through the document carefully, and wherever the name of "Belle Quest" occurred he put a cross, and inserted these words: "Gennett, commonly known as Belle Quest"—Gennett being Belle's maiden name—and initialed the correction. Next he glanced at the statement. It contained a full and fair account of his connection with the woman who had ruined his life. "I may as well leave it," he thought. "Some day it will show Belle that I was not quite so bad as I seemed."

So replaced the statement in a brief envelope, sealed and directed to Belle, and finally marked it: "Not to be opened till my death. Quest." Then he put the envelope away in the safe and took up the will for the same purpose. Next it on the table lay the deeds executed by Edward Cossey, transferring the Honham mortgages to Mr. Quest in consideration of his abstaining from the commencement of a suit for a divorce in which he proposed to join Edward Cossey as co-respondent. "Ah!" he thought to himself, "that game is up. Belle is not my legal wife, therefore I cannot commence a suit against her in which Cossey would figure as co-respondent, and so the consideration fails. I am sorry for that, for I should have liked him to lose his thirty thousand pounds as well as his wife, but it can't be helped. It was a game of bluff, and now that the bladder has been pricked I haven't a leg to stand on."

Then, taking a pen, he wrote on a sheet of paper which he inserted in the will—"Dear B.,—You must return the Honham mortgages to Mr. Edward Cossey. As you are not my legal wife, the consideration upon which he transferred them fails, and you cannot hold them in equity, nor I suppose would you wish to do so.—W. Q."

Having put all the papers away, he shut the safe at the moment that the clerk, whom he had deputed to watch the Tiger, knocked at the door and entered.

"Well?" said his master.

"Well, sir, I watched the woman. She stopped in the passage for a minute, and then George, Squire de la Molle's man, came out and spoke to her. I got quite close, so as to hear what he said, and he said: 'You'd better get out of this.'

"'Where to?' she answered. 'I'm afraid.'

"'Back to London,' he said, and gave her a sovereign, and she got up without a word and slunk off to the station followed by a mob of people. She's in the refreshment room now, but George sent word to say that they ought not to serve her with any drink."

"What time does the next train go—7:15, does it not?" said Mr. Quest.

"Yes, sir."

"Well, go back to the station and keep an eye upon that woman, and when the time comes get me a first class return ticket to London. I shall go up myself and give her in charge there. Here is some money," and he gave him a five pound note, "and look here, Jones, you need not trouble about the change."

"Thank you, sir, I'm sure," said Jones, to whom, his salary being a guinea a week, on which he supported a wife and family, a gift of four pounds was sudden wealth.

"Don't thank me, but do as I tell you. I will be down at the station at 7:10. Meet me outside and give me the ticket. That will do."

When Jones had gone Mr. Quest sat down to think.

So it was George who had loosed this woman on him, and that was the meaning of his mysterious warning. How had he found her? That did not matter, he had found her, and in revenge for the action taken against the De la Molle family he had brought her here to denounce him. It had been cleverly managed, too. Mr. Quest reflected to himself that he should never have given the man credit for the brains. Well, that was what came of underrating people.

And so this was the end of all his hopes, ambitions, shifts and struggles. The story would be in every paper in England before another twenty-four hours were over, headed "Remarkable occurrence at Boisingham quarter sessions.—Alleged bigamy of a solicitor." No doubt, too, the treasury would take it up and institute a prosecution. This was the end of his strivings after respectability and the wealth that brings it. He had overreached himself. He had plotted and schemed, and hardened his heart against the De la Molle family, and fate had made use of his success to destroy him. In another few months he had expected to be able to leave this place a wealthy and respected man—and now! He laid his hand upon the table and reviewed his past life—tracing it from year to year, and seeing how the shadow of this accursed woman had haunted him, bringing disgrace and terror and mental agony with it—making his life a misery. And now what was to be done? He was ruined. Let him fly to the utmost parts of the earth, let him burrow in the recesses of the cities of the earth and his shame would find him out. He was an impostor, a bigamist, one who had seduced an innocent woman into a mock marriage and then taken her fortune to buy the silence of his lawful wife. More, he had threatened to bring an action for divorce against a woman to whom he knew he was not really married, and made it a lever to extort vast sums of money or their value.

What is there that a man in this position can do?

He can do two things—he can revenge himself upon the author of his ruin, and if he be bold enough, he can put an end to his existence and his sorrows at a blow.

Mr. Quest rose and walked to the door. Halting, he turned and looked round the office in that peculiar fashion wherewith the eyes take their adieu. Then with a sigh he went.

Reaching his own house he hesitated whether or not to enter. Had the news reached Belle? If so, how was he to face her? Her hands were not clean, indeed, but at any rate she had no mock marriage in her record, and her dislike of him had been unconcealed throughout. She had never wished to marry him, and never for one single day regarded him otherwise than with aversion.

After reflection he turned and went round by the back way into the garden. The curtains of the French windows were drawn, but it was a wet and windy night, and the draught occasionally lifted the edge of one of them. He crept like a thief up to his own window and looked in. The drawing room was lighted, and in a low chair by the fire sat Belle. She was, as usual, dressed in black, and to Mr. Quest, who loved her, and who knew that he was about to bid farewell to the sight of her, she looked more beautiful now than ever. A book lay open on her knee, and he noticed not without surprise that it was a Bible. But she was not reading it, her dimpled chin rested on her hand, and her violet eyes were fixed on vacancy, and even from where he was he thought that he could see the tears in them.

She had heard nothing; he was sure of that from the expression of her face; she was thinking of her own sorrows, not of his shame.

Yes, he would go in.

CHAPTER XXXV.

HOW THE GAME ENDED.

Mr. Quest entered the house by a side door, and, having taken off his hat and coat, went into the drawing room. He had still half an hour to spare before starting to catch the train.

"Well," said Belle, looking up, "why are you so pale?"

"I have had a trying day," he answered.

"What have you been doing?"

"Nothing in particular."

"Reading the Bible, I see."

"How do you know that?" she asked, coloring a little, for she had thrown a newspaper over the book when she heard him coming in. "Yes, I have been reading the Bible. Don't you know that when everything else in life has failed them women generally take to religion?"

"Or drink," he put in. "Have you seen Mr. Cossey lately?"

"No. Why do you ask that? I thought that we had agreed to drop that subject."

As a matter of fact, it had not been alluded to since Edward left the house.

"You know that Miss de la Molle will not marry him after all?"

"Yes, I know. She will not marry him because you forced him to give up the mortgages."

"You ought to be much obliged to me. Are you not pleased?"

"No. I no longer care about anything. I am tired of passion, and sin, and failure. I care for nothing any more."

"It seems that we have both reached the same goal, but by different roads."

"You?" she answered, looking up; "at any rate you are not tired of money, or you would not do what you have done to get it."

"I never cared for money itself," he said. "I only wanted money that I might be rich and therefore respected."

"And you think any means justifiable so long as you get it?"

"I thought so. I do not think so now."

"I don't understand you to-night, William. It is time for me to go to dress for dinner."

"Don't go just yet. I'm leaving in a minute."

"Leaving? Where for?"

"London; I have to go up to-night about some business."

"Indeed; when are you coming back?"

"I don't quite know; to-morrow, perhaps. I wonder, Belle," he went on, his voice shaking a little, "if you will always think as badly of me as you do now."

"If" she said, opening her eyes widely; "who am I that I should judge you? However bad you may be I am worse."

"Perhaps there are excuses to be made for both of us," he said, "perhaps, after all, there is no such thing as free will, and we are nothing but pawns moved by a higher power. Who knows? But I will not keep you any longer. Good-by—Belle!"

"Yes."

"May I kiss you before I go?"

She looked at him in astonishment. Her first impulse was to refuse. He had not kissed her for years. But something in the man's face aroused her. It was always a refined and melancholy face, but to-night it wore a look which to her seemed almost unearthly.

"Yes, William, if you wish," she said; "but I wonder that you care to."

"Let the dead bury their dead," he answered, and stooping he put his arm round her delicate waist, and drawing her to him kissed her tenderly, but without passion, on the forehead. "There, good night," he said, "I wish that I had been a better husband to you. Good night," and he was gone.

When he reached his room he flung himself for a few moments face downward upon his bed, and from the convulsive motion of his back an observer might almost have believed that he was sobbing. When he rose, however, there was no trace of tears or tenderness upon his features. On the contrary, they were stern and set, like the features of one bent upon some terrible endeavor. Going to a drawer, he unlocked it and took from it a Colt's revolver of the small pattern. It was loaded, but he took the cartridges out and replaced them with fresh ones from a tin box. Then he went down stairs, put on a large ulster with a high collar and a soft felt hat, the brim of which he turned down over his face, placed the pistol in the pocket of the ulster and started.

It was a dreadful night, the wind was blowing a very heavy gale, and between the gusts the rain came down in sheets of driving spray. Nobody was about the streets—the weather was far too bad, and Mr. Quest reached the station without meeting a living soul. Outside the circle of light from the lamp over the doorway he paused and looked about for the clerk Jones. Presently he saw him walking backward and forward under the shelter of a lean to, and, going up, touched him on the shoulder.

The man jumped up and started back.

"Have you got the ticket, Jones?" he asked.

"Lord, sir," said Jones, "I didn't know you in that get up. Yes, here's the ticket."

"Is the woman there still?"

"Yes, sir; she's taken a ticket, third class, to town. She has been going on like a wild thing because they would not give her any liquor at the refreshment bar, till at last she's frightened them into letting her have six of brandy. Then she began and told the girl all sorts of tales about you, sir—said she was going back to London because she was afraid that if she stopped here you would murder her—and that you were her lawful husband, and that she would have a warrant out against you, and I don't know what all. I sat by there, and heard her with my own ears.

"Did she—did she, indeed?" said Mr. Quest, with an attempt at a laugh. "Well, she's a a common thief, and worse, that's what she is, and by this time to-morrow I hope to see her safe in jail. Ah! here comes the train. Good night, Jones. I can manage for myself now."

"What's his game?" said Jones to himself, as he watched his master slip on to the platform by a gate instead of going through the booking office. "Well, I've had four quid out of it, any way, and it's no affair of mine," and Jones went home to tea.

Meanwhile Mr. Quest was standing on the wet and desolate platform quite away from the lamps, watching the red lights of the approaching train come rushing on through the storm and night. Presently the train drew up. No passengers got out.

"Now, ma'am, look sharp if you're going," cried the porter, and the woman Edith came out of the refreshment room.

"There's the third, forward there," said the porter, going to the other end to see about the packing away of the mails.

On she came, passing quite close to Mr. Quest, so close that he could hear her swearing at the incivility of the porter. There was a third class carriage just opposite, and into this she got. It was one of those carriages that are still often to be seen on provincial lines in which the partitions do not go up to the roof and was, if possible, more vilely lighted than usual. Indeed the light which should have illuminated the after half of it had either never been lighted or had gone out. There was not a soul in the whole length of the carriage.

As soon as the Tiger was in Mr. Quest watched his opportunity and, slipping up to the dark carriage, opened and shut the door as quietly as possible and took his seat in the gloom.

The engine whistled, there was a cry of "Right, forward," and they were off.

Presently he saw the woman stand up in her compartment and peep over into the gloom.

"Not a blessed soul!" he heard her mutter, "and yet I feel as though that devil Billy was creeping about after me. Ugh! it must be the horrors. I can see the look he gave me now."

A few minutes later the train stopped at a station, but nobody got in, and presently it moved on again. "Any passengers for Effry?" shouted the porter, and there had been no response. If they did not stop at Effry there would be no halt for forty minutes. Now was his time. He waited a little till they got up the speed. The line here ran through miles and miles of fen country, more or less drained by dikes and rivers, but still wild and desolate enough. Over this great flat the storm was sweeping furiously—even drowning in its turmoil the noise of the traveling train.

Very quietly he rose and climbed over the low partition which separated his compartment from that in which the woman sat. She was seated in the corner, her head back, so that the feeble light from the lamp fell on it, and her eyes were closed.

He slid himself along the seat till he was Very quietly he rose and climbed over.

now, a fraudulent, ruined outcast. All his life seemed to flash before his inner eye in these few seconds of contemplation, all his long weary years of struggle, and crime, and deceit. And this was the end of it, and there was the cause of it. Well, she should not escape him, he would be revenged upon her at last. There was nothing but death before him, she should die too.

He set his teeth, drew the loaded pistol from his pocket, cocked it, and lifted it to her breast.

What was the matter with the thing? He had never known the pull of a pistol to be so heavy before.

No, it was not that. He could not do it. He could not shoot a sleeping woman, devil though she was, he could not kill her in her sleep. His nature rose against it.

He placed the pistol on his knee, and as he did so she opened her eyes. He saw the look of wonder gather in them and grow to a stare of agonized terror. Her face became rigid like a dead person's, and her lips opened to scream, but no sound came. She could only point to the pistol.

"Make a sound and you are dead," he said fiercely. "Not that it matters, though," he added, as he remembered that the scream must be loud which could be heard in that raging gale.

"What are you going to do?" she gasped at last. "What are you going to do with that pistol? And where do you come from?"

"I come out of the night," he answered, raising the weapon: "out of the night into which you are going."

"You are not going to kill me?" she moaned, turning up her ghastly face. "I can't die. I'm afraid to die. It will hurt, and I've been wicked. Oh, you are not going to kill me, are you?"

"Yes, I am going to kill you," he answered. "I told you months ago that I would kill you if you molested me. You have ruined me now; there is nothing but death left for me, and you shall die, too, you fiend!"

"Oh, no! no! no! anything but that. I was drunk when I did it; that man brought me there, and they had taken all my things, and I was starving," and she glanced wildly round the empty carriage to see if help could be found, but there was none. She was alone with her fate.

She slipped down upon the floor of the carriage and clasped his knees. Writhing in her terror there upon the ground, in hoarse accents she begged and prayed for mercy.

"You used to kiss me," she said; "you cannot kill a woman you used to kiss years ago. Oh, spare me! spare me!"

He set his lips and placed the muzzle of the pistol against her head, and at the contact she shivered and her teeth began to clatter.

He could not do it. He must let her go, and leave her to her fate. After all she could hurt him no more, for before another sun had set he would be beyond her reach.

His pistol hand fell against his side, and he looked down with loathing not unmixed with pity at the abject human snake who was writhing at his feet.

She caught his eye, and her faculties, sharpened by the imminent peril, read relentment there. For the moment at any rate he was softened. If she could master him now while he was off his guard—he was not a very strong man. But the pistol——

Slowly, still groaning out supplications, she rose to her feet.

"Yes," he said, "be quiet while I think if I can spare you," and he half turned his head away from her, and for a moment nothing was heard but the rush of the gale and the roll of the wheels running over the bridges.

This was her opportunity. All her natural ferocity arose within her, intensified a hundred times by the instinct of self protection. With a sudden blow she struck the pistol from his hand, and it fell upon the floor of the carriage, and then, with a frightful yell, she sprung like a wildcat straight at his throat. So sudden was the attack that the long, lean hands were gripping his windpipe before he knew that it had been made. Back she bore him, though he seized her round the waist. She was the heavier of the two, and back they went crash! against the carriage door.

It gave. Oh, God, the worn catch gave! Out together, out with a yell of despair into the night and the raging gale, down together through sixty feet of space into the black river beneath! Down together, deep into the watery depths—down into the abyss of Death!

The train rushed on, the wild winds blew, and the night was as the night had been. But there in the black water, though there was never a star to see them, there, locked together in death, as they had been locked together in life, the fierce glare of hate and terror yet staring from their glazed eyes, two bodies rolled over and over as they sped silently toward the sea!

(To be Continued.)

—A shoemaker at Natchez, Miss., has just finished a pair of No. 18 shoes for a citizen of Louisiana.

—Aroostook County, Me., which used to be regularly written up as a wilderness a few years ago, is now a well-settled, highly civilized community.

—Gatesville (Tex.) Star: We will take anything that is fit to eat on subscription to the Star. We want two or three turkeys on subscription. Who will accommodate us?

—Says the Virginia (Nev.) Enterprise: Halleck is the coldest place on the line of the Central Pacific. It is a terror to railroad men. At that point a current of air comes down from the north through a series of valleys—a sort of trough that extends up into arctic regions.

—One of the sights at Buffalo is the Cyclone, a huge pneumatic grain transfer barge. It looks like a gigantic hopper on a raft. It is said that by means of an air exhaust it can elevate two hundred bushels a minute, which is very much more than the ordinary elevator can do.—Boston Budget.

—The health authorities of Clinton, Ct., have spoiled the famous hermit, known as "the leather man." These callous persons unfeelingly cleaned out the hermit's hovel and then forcibly washed him and cut his hair. It runs a hermit professionally to wash him, just as it does an Anarchist.

SAVED FROM A DANGER THAT BESETS US ALL.

Manufacturers of the Great Sierra Kidney and Liver Cure:

Gentlemen:—I send to you this testimonial and consider it no more than my duty. I have given your Great Sierra Kidney and Liver Cure a fair trial. My kidneys were in a very bad condition, verging on to Bright's Disease and strong symptoms of Diabetes. I had severe pains in my back, my water was very much discolored, with heavy sediment. Since using your truly wonderful remedy all these troubles have ceased and I consider myself saved from a very dangerous as well as troublesome disease. Your valuable remedy I can recommend to all that suffer from kidney, bladder or liver troubles.

Faithfully yours,
John J. Lennox,
115 Eighth St., San Francisco, Cal.

It improves your memory to lend a friend $5, but it destroys the memory of your friend.

$30,000 FOR A MALDEN MAN.

Cornelius C. Conroy of 28 Ashland street, Malden, held one-tenth of ticket No. 8122, which drew the first capital prize of $300,000 at the drawing of the Louisiana State Lottery on the 11th of March. He takes his good fortune in a very philosophical way, and says he was always a firm believer in luck. He was born in Eureka, Cal., about 35 years ago, and his mother and other members of the family reside there now. Most of his life has been passed in the West, and he came to Malden to reside about two years ago. A year ago last Thanksgiving he married Miss Stella Pierce of this city, a popular young lady who was formerly a compositor on the Mirror. While living in the West he frequently purchased tickets in the Louisiana State Lottery, and several times drew prizes on one occasion getting $500. Eight years ago he had the misfortune, while in the West, to lose his eyesight by a premature blast. He spent weeks and months in various hospitals and had many operations performed upon his eyes, and is now able to read very large print, but no book or paper. Probably what brought Mr. Conroy to Malden was the fact that Clarence Pierce, Mrs. Conroy's brother, has previously married Mr. Conroy's sister, and they reside here. Everybody is congratulating Mr. and Mrs. Conroy, and they can hardly realize that they have come into possession of such a fortune. A short time ago Mr. Conroy's former partner, a Mr. Walker, died in New York City, and Mr. and Mrs. Conroy started for that city on Thursday last to settle up some business. It is a strange coincidence that Peter Tufts, who resides about fifteen rods away from Mr. Conroy, drew $15,000 in the same lottery about a year ago. A number of Malden people drew small sums in the last drawing including A. E. Bliss, J. G. Tilden, S. C. Jones, H. E. Nourse and others.—Malden, (Mass.) Mirror, March 29.

New York Girl—Have you rapid transit in Philadelphia? Philadelphia Girl—Horrors! No!

DON'T GO OFF BEFORE YOU ARE READY,

Particularly on a long journey. Be fully prepared. You cannot be, permit us to say, unless you are accompanied with the traveler's and tourist's vade mecum, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, most genial of appetizers, acclimatizers and promoters of digestion. Against sea sickness, malaria, cramps and colics begotten of badly cooked or unwholesome food and brackish water, costiveness, increased by travel, chronic biliousness and constipation, the Bitters is a sovereign preventive. It imparts a relish for food not altogether to your taste, and prevents it from disagreeing with you. Never was there such a capital thing for the unfortunate dyspeptic who stands in dread of the best cooked meal. Sounds in trouble caused by ill prepared viands aboard ship, on steamboats, and rations hastily bolted at railway restaurants, is soon remedied by the Bitters, which gives a quietus also to rheumatism, kidney troubles and insomnia.

The gentleman who owns a dog would probably feel rather hurt if told that he is a bark keeper.

Six Novels Free, will be sent by Cragin & Co., Philada., Pa., to any one in the U. S. or Canada, postage paid, upon receipt of 25 Dobbins' Electric Soap wrappers. See list of novels on circulars around each bar. Soap for sale by all grocers.

The nearer in front you get the more people there are to criticise your round shoulders and sidehill heels.

For the cure of a Cough or Sore Throat, "Brown's Bronchial Troches" are a simple remedy.

Politeness is as natural to refined natures as perfume is to flowers.

INCREASED BUSINESS.

The Pacific Bank, of San Francisco, pursues the even tenor of its way, simply pointing to its $1,000,000 of paid up capital; its $750,000 of surplus fund, (showing an increase of $200,000 within two years); and its regular dividends as large as ever, leaving business men to draw their own inferences.

Those who are greedy of praise prove that they are poor in merit.

Traveling men smoke "Tansill's Punch."

Truth is of importance only as it ministers to life.

PILES! PILES! PILES!

Dr. William's Indian Pile Ointment is the only sure cure for Blind, Bleeding or Itching Piles ever discovered. It never fails to cure old chronic cases of long standing.

Judge Collinbury, Cleveland, O., says: "I have found by experience that Dr. William's Indian Pile Ointment gives immediate relief."

Do not suffer an instant longer. Sold by William's Manufacturing Co., Props., Cleveland, Ohio. 50c. and $1.

Beware of imitations of the genuine Seal of North Carolina Plug Cut Tobacco.

Try Germea for Breakfast.

One Reason

Why nearly everybody should take a good medicine in the spring is because at this season the system is especially susceptible to the benefit to be derived from a reliable preparation like Hood's Sarsaparilla. In the winter various impurities accumulate in the blood, the effect of which is most felt when spring comes on, in general weakness and languor. The system craves assistance to maintain the health tone and expel impurities, which Hood's Sarsaparilla readily gives. Try it.

"I have suffered for some years with eruptions on my face and neck. After using five bottles of Hood's Sarsaparilla, every blemish disappeared, and now my general health is excellent. I believe it to be the best medicine in the world."
E. F. Walsh, Olalla, Oregon.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Sold by all druggists, $1; six for $5. Prepared only by C. I. Hood & Co., Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar

SURE CURE FOR PILES.

Sure cure for blind, bleeding and itching Piles. One box has cured the worst cases of ten years' standing. No one need suffer ten minutes after using Kirk's German Pile Ointment. It absorbs tumors, allays the itching, acts as a poultice, gives relief. Dr. Kirk's German Pile Ointment is prepared only for Piles and itching of the private parts, and nothing else. Every box is warranted.

Sold by druggists and sent by mail on receipt of price, $1.00 per box. J. J. Mack & Co., Wholesale Agents, San Francisco.

"Johnny can you tell me what are the five senses?" "Nickels."

SORE SHOULDER CURED.

Charles A. Stiles, 180 Carroll St., Buffalo, N. Y., writes:

"I have been a clerk in the Continental Hotel, corner Exchange and Michigan Sts., for some years, and first used Allcock's Porous Plasters three years ago for a sore shoulder. I fell down stairs and got a terrible wrench and bruise. For several weeks I suffered acute pain in the shoulder joint and, getting no relief, or only temporary, from numerous liniments, I put on an Allcock's Porous Plaster; kept it on for two or three weeks and my shoulder was well. They also cured me in six weeks of a most obstinate form of dyspepsia."

"See that poor tramp! What a futile sort of a life his is!" "Yes; even his feet are bootless."

AN ELEGANT PACKAGE OF FINE CARDS.

Including 15 rare novelties, shapes and artistic imported oleographic and chromatic cards. This large and beautiful collection sent by mail to anyone who will do this:—Buy a box of the genuine Dr. C. McLane's Celebrated Liver Pills from any druggist, price 25 cents, and mail us the outside wrapper with your address, plainly written and 4 cents in stamps. The genuine McLane's Pills are prepared only by Fleming Bros., Pittsburg, Pa., and have been in constant use for over sixty years. They are superior to all others in purity and effectiveness. A certain cure for indigestion and sick headache. Address, Fleming Bros. Pittsburgh, Pa.

The buzz saw is generally temperate, but once in awhile it takes "two or three fingers."

When in San Francisco stop at Straub's Restaurant and Saloon, 327 and 329 Bush Street. Best to eat and drink. No fancy prices.

BEAUTY of Skin & Scalp RESTORED by the CUTICURA Remedies.

Nothing is known to science at all comparable to the Cuticura Remedies in their marvellous properties of cleansing, purifying and beautifying the skin, and in curing torturing, disfiguring, itching, scaly and pimply diseases of the skin, scalp and blood, with loss of hair.

Cuticura, the great Skin Cure, and Cuticura Soap, an exquisite Skin Beautifier, prepared from it, externally, and Cuticura Resolvent, the new Blood Purifier, internally, cure every form of skin and blood diseases, from pimples to scrofula.

Sold everywhere. Price, Cuticura, 50c.; Resolvent, $1; Soap, 25c. Prepared by the Potter Drug and Chemical Corporation, Boston, Mass.

Send for "How to Cure Skin Diseases."

Pimples, blackheads, chapped and oily skin prevented by Cuticura Soap.

Pain Aches, Pains, and Weaknesses instantly relieved by the Cuticura Anti-Pain Plaster, the only pain-killing plaster. 25c.

PATENTS obtained. Fees moderate. Information and advice FREE. J. R. Litteell, Opp. Patent Office, Washington, D.C. (Mention this paper.)

Damiana Bitters.

TRADE MARK

The great Mexican Remedy for Disorders of the Kidneys and Bladder. Damiana is recognized by physicians as the best Nervous Stimulant gives health and strength to the Generative and Urinary Organs. For sale everywhere.

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE,
123 & 325 Market St., S. F., Agents.

GILES' CREOSOZONE

FOR THE DESTRUCTION OF

VERMIN and PARASITES

AFFECTING POULTRY AND BIRDS.

Price, FULL QUART, 75c. FULL DIRECTIONS ON EACH CAN.

SOLD BY ALL GROCERS AND DRUGGISTS.

Prepared only by Nelson Giles, Jr., Manufacturing Co., National City Cal.

$40 FOR A MOWER!

The manufacturers are largely overstocked with the celebrated Victor Mower, and have authorized us to sell as follows: 4-ft. Mower, $40; 5-ft. Mower, $50; 6-ft. Mower, $55.

This machine has no superior and few equals, as everyone who has used it will testify. These prices mean business. Be quick about it. Terms Cash with order. All family and farm supplies at equally advantageous rates. Send for full list to Smith's Cash Store, 418 Front St., San Francisco, Cal.

Not a cheap and nasty "marriage guide," so called, by a quack, but a strictly scientific work by an experienced English physician. HOW TO MAKE MARRIAGE A SUCCESS. It is the marriage question from a physiological standpoint. More marital troubles are caused by purely physical reasons than anything else. This book advocates early marriages virtue and continence. It points out the physical defects which should debar marriage by either sex. The organism of woman is exhaustively treated. Married ladies are given valuable advice and hints. The dangers of many common practices, use of quack medicines, etc., are dwelt upon at length. Useful recipes, valuable formulas and prescriptions are given. To all who contemplate marriage and to thousands of the married this book will prove a revelation. No one of marriageable age should be without it. $1.00 in cloth, free on receipt of price. Sample pages and table of contents for 2 cent stamp. Knowlton & Co., Station C, San Francisco.

BEECHAM'S PILLS

PAINLESS. EFFECTUAL. WORTH A GUINEA A BOX.

For BILIOUS & NERVOUS DISORDERS

Such as Wind and Pain in the Stomach, Fullness and Swelling after Meals, Dizziness, and Drowsiness, Cold Chills, Flushings of Heat, Loss of Appetite, Shortness of Breath, Costiveness, Scurvy, Blotches on the Skin, Disturbed Sleep, Frightful Dreams, and all Nervous and Trembling Sensations, &c.

THE FIRST DOSE WILL GIVE RELIEF IN TWENTY MINUTES.

BEECHAM'S PILLS TAKEN AS DIRECTED RESTORE FEMALES TO COMPLETE HEALTH.

For Sick Headache, Weak Stomach, Impaired Digestion, Constipation, Disordered Liver, etc.,

they ACT LIKE MAGIC, Strengthening the muscular System, restoring long-lost Complexion, bringing back the keen edge of appetite, and arousing with the ROSEBUD OF HEALTH the whole physical energy of the human frame. One of the best guarantees to the Nervous and Debilitated is that BEECHAM'S PILLS HAVE THE LARGEST SALE OF ANY PROPRIETARY MEDICINE IN THE WORLD.

Prepared only by THOS. BEECHAM, St. Helens, Lancashire, England. Sold by Druggists generally. B. F. ALLEN CO., 365 and 367 Canal St., New York, Sole Agents for the United States, who (if your druggist does not keep them) WILL MAIL BEECHAM'S PILLS on RECEIPT of PRICE, 25cts. A BOX. (MENTION THIS PAPER.)

NERVE-PAINS.

St Jacobs Oil Cures Neuralgia. Neuralgia. Neuralgia.

Salt Point, N. Y., April 16, 1889.
I suffered six weeks with neuralgia; a half bottle of St. Jacobs Oil cured me; no return of pain in three years. Have sold it to many, and have yet to hear of a single case it did not relieve or permanently cure.
G. JAY TOMPKINS, Druggist.

Green Island, N. Y., Feb. 11, 1889.
I suffered with neuralgia in the head, but found instant relief from the application of St. Jacobs Oil, which cured me.
E. P. BELLINGER, Chief of Police.

To cure Biliousness, Sick Headache, Constipation, Malaria, Liver Complaints, take the safe and certain remedy, SMITH'S

BILE BEANS

Use the SMALL SIZE (40 little beans to the bottle). They are the most convenient; suit all ages. Price of either size, 25 cents per bottle.

KISSING at 7, 17, 70: Photo-gravure, panel size of this picture for 4 cents (coppers or stamps).

J. F. SMITH & CO.,
Makers of "Bile Beans," St. Louis, Mo.

The Oldest Medicine in the World is probably
DR. ISAAC THOMPSON'S CELEBRATED EYE-WATER.

This article is a carefully prepared physician's prescription, and has been in constant use for nearly a century. There are few diseases to which mankind are subject more distressing than sore eyes, and none, perhaps, for which more remedies have been tried without success. For an external inflammation of the eyes it is an infallible remedy. If the directions are followed it will never fail. We particularly invite the attention of physicians to its merits. For sale by all druggists. John I. Thompson, Sons & Co., Troy, N. Y. Established 1795.

WILEY B. ALLEN'S MUSICAL PASTIME.

A journal of music, issued monthly (16 pages reading matter and 16 pages latest and most popular vocal and instrumental music) for 75c per annum. Sample copy 10c. Stamps taken. Send 40c for the latest popular Song "Drifting Apart" by Edward J. Fink, and 50c for "Chapel in the Sierras," Piano Solo by E. Cook. (Mention this paper). Address: The Wiley B. Allen Music Store, 211 First street, Portland, Oregon.

PATENTS NO DELAY. Circular free. W. E. BOULTER, Washington, D. C.

HAZELTON BROS., AND HEMME & LONG PIANOS

Sold on Easy Installments. Also dealer in Sheet Music and Musical Merchandise. CHAS. S. EATON, General Agent, 735 Market St., S. F., Cal. Send for Catalogues of Pianos and Sheet Music.

10,000 AGENTS WANTED AT ONCE

To sell the complete history of the murder of Dr. CRONIN. Giving a full and complete account of the conspiracy, murder, discovery of the body, arrests, coroner's inquest, the trial and verdict. The book contains over 100 illustrations. One large 12mo. volume, of about 500 pages, price only $1.50. OUTFITS NOW READY. Send, at once, 25 cents for an outfit; first come, first served. This is the chance of your life time; big commissions. Address, LAIRD & LEE, Publishers, 308-310 Jackson Street, Chicago, Ill.

STEINWAY, KRANICH, PEASE & BACH, Gabler, Roenisch Pianos; Burdett Organs, Band Instruments. Largest stock of Sheet Music and Books. Bands supplied at Eastern Prices. MATTHIAS GRAY CO., 206 Post Street, San Francisco.

MONEY

Can be made easy by raising Chickens. A large 32-page Illustrated Catalogue describing Incubators, Brooders, Brooding Houses, How and What to Feed, How long to keep them in the Brooder, Drinking Fountains, Diseases and their Cure, in fact more information than is given in many 25-cent books. Sent to any address on receipt of 2c. stamp. Wire Netting, Bone Mills, Bone Meal and all kinds of Poultry Supplies.

Address,
Petaluma Incubator Co., Petaluma, Cal.

CHICHESTER'S ENGLISH
PENNYROYAL PILLS

RED CROSS DIAMOND BRAND.

Safe and always reliable. Ladies, ask Druggist for Diamond Brand. In red, metallic boxes, sealed with blue ribbon. Take no other. All pills in pasteboard boxes, pink wrappers, are dangerous counterfeits. Send 4c. (stamps) for particulars, testimonials and "Relief for Ladies," in letter, by return mail. Name Paper.
Chichester Chem'l Co., Madison Sq., Phila., Pa.

S. F. N. U. No. 413. New Series No. 20

TIGER

SELF-OPERATING

Sulky Hay Rakes

157,000 NOW IN USE.

—THE ONLY—

Perfect Self-Dump Hay Rake

EVER INVENTED.

Has been on the market for eleven years, and its sales are more than double that of any other Rake in the world.

If there is one of these Rakes which has failed to satisfy the purchaser in any particular we have never heard of it.

Special Circulars and Price-Lists on application

SOLE AGENTS,

Baker & Hamilton

Dealers in and Manufacturers of

AGRICULTURAL IMPLEMENTS.

WHOLESALE HARDWARE.

San Francisco and Sacramento, Cal.

FOR TABLE USE. THE BEST FOR DAIRY USE.

It is more highly refined than any Salt. All harmful ingredients found in most Salt are removed; therefore it is the safest to use.

It is free from lime and pan scales, requires no sifting. It is the strongest and altogether the most economical.

It dissolves very easily, therefore does not spoil butter by the gritty particles as often happens with other Salt.

Common Salt is too risky for anybody to use in making Butter. The poorest families use so little Salt on their table that they can afford to get that which is the most healthy and the best.

HOLMES' EXTRA SIFTED SALT is used by the best dairymen in California, and has never failed to please better than any other brand whenever tried.

Packed in 230, 100 and 50 pound Pure Linen Bags; also in 5 pound Cotton Bags and Cartons. Insist on having this brand from your grocer.

C. E. WHITNEY & CO.,
Pacific Coast Agents, 101 and 103 California St., San Francisco.

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. H. G. ROOT, M. C., 183 Pearl St. New York.

USE NEW WELLINGTON COAL.

KISSES.

(A la Romeo and Juliet.)

A prominent physician calls the kiss "an elegant disseminator of disease." He says, "fever is spread by it, so are lung diseases." He maintains that if the kissing custom were driven out of the land "it would save one-tenth of one per cent. of human lives" which are now sacrificed. Out upon the gnarled and sapless vagabond! Evidently kisses are not for such as he, and the old fox says the grapes are sour. Let him devote himself to making our women healthy and blooming that kisses may be kisses. This can surely be done by the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription which is simply magical in curing diseases peculiar to females. After taking it for a reasonable length of time there will be no more irregularity, backache, bearing-down sensations, nervous prostration, general debility and kindred ailments. "Favorite Prescription" is an invigorating, restorative tonic and as a regulator and

INYO INDEPENDENT.

COUNTY OFFICIAL PAPER.

C. MULHOLLAND, - - - Proprietor.

Independence, Cal.,

FRIDAY, - - - JUNE 27, 1890.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

VOL. XXII. NO. 3. INDEPENDENCE, INYO CO., CAL., JUNE 27, 1890. WHOLE NO. 1026.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

COUNTY OFFICIAL PAPER.

C. MULHOLLAND, - - - Proprietor.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One Year (post paid)	$4.00
Six Months	2.25
Three Months	1.50
One Month	50
Single Copies	20

THE SELF-MADE MAN.

And the Serious Case of Dyspepsia He Encouraged.

ONE never knows which is the impression that is going to stay, which of the characters, events, circumstances, sayings, tableaux of the passing day is to be the uneffaceable one. We try to know, and ever make, with human pertness, selections. "This is striking," "this is important," and important as it is, we fear to forget it, and write it down in the nowadays inevitable note-book—date, place and sensations—quite orderly and methodically, as we were taught to do at school; and then, if we do not forget the notebook or crowd it out under the necessary accumulation of them, we are able at any time to resurrect any recollection, and, if we have been prolix, sensation and other et cætera of data, at best often the withered or withering specimens of a herbarium. Thus life flows, depositing within us an ever-increasing "batture," a vague border-land, our limbo of things we are trying not to forget. Per contra, an insignificant occurrence there is no getting rid of; it is a veritable crooked bone in the memory.

"Madam," said the hotel-keeper to me the day after my arrival at the "Greenwood" Springs, "you are going to have a fellow-boarder—Prof. Tubbs, president of the Male and Female College at Olympus. Prof. Tubbs is what we call a self-made man, and, considering the material, I think he has made a pretty good job of it."

"Is there nothing unique in this world? Not even a taste for out-of-the-season visits to remote little watering places?"

"He comes to drink the waters for his health," continued the hotel-keeper. "He has chronic dyspepsia. Here he is now, ma'am."

The "material" was, concretely, at least six feet two in height, garmented in black broadcloth, the ample frock coat of which swung open over a very expansive shirt front, which carried on its uppermost billow a patented satin cravat with a patented pin in it. He had a long, thin face, with something in the way of beard over it, and his abundant hair shone with a gloss which was a credit to its author, whoever he was.

He bowed with an oratorical sweep of the right hand, and said: "I am very glad to see you, ma'am," sat down in his place with careful thought of his coat tails, surveyed the squadron of little dishes, which contained fractional portions of what was supposed in these regions to make a whole meal, and proceeded incontinently to take the office of entertainer out of the hands of the waiter in this wise:

"Fried mutton, ma'am? I never eat mutton. Some people can, but my taste is delicate. My stomach is my weak point, ma'am. As an organ, it gets out of order very easily. My wife's stomach is much stronger than mine, ma'am. I look strong, but I am not, ma'am. I suffer from chronic dyspepsia. I may say—"

"Tea or coffee, sir?"

"Coffee! I always drink coffee, ma'am. It is my only stimulant. Theoretically and practically, ma'am, I am a total abstainer, but I sometimes need as many as four cups of coffee at one meal. My wife makes elegant coffee, ma'am. I do not drink milk generally; it is apt to produce bile in my system, ma'am."

"Eggs, sir?"

"Yes, eggs. Eggs suit my digestion very well, ma'am; eggs— Oh, of course, ma'am, you can go. Do not let me detain you. I eat slow, ma'am. Some people can eat fast, but I can not, ma'am. I take my time over my meals. My stomach— Certainly, ma'am— certainly, I will excuse you," with the same oratorical wave of the hand, which now held his knife.

Sitting in the quiet and darkness of this out-of-the-way night and place, it was pleasant to listlessly track the constellations through the tree-tops, while thoughts came slowly drifting home, thoughts which had been on furlough for ages, thoughts which—

"Ah! here you are waiting for me, ma'am. Don't rise, ma'am; I have a chair. Looking at the stars, eh? Are you any thing of an astronome, ma'am? Astronomy is a very pretty science. I am very partial to astronomy; in fact, I am considered right much of an astronomer. My wife, now, she knows nothing about the stars. As for me, ma'am, I have dipped into pretty much every thing. I am self-taught, entirely, ma'am. I am what is called in these parts, ma'am, a self-made man, and I am not ashamed of it. What did you say, ma'am? Oh, certainly! good-night, ma'am. It does not agree with me to retire early, ma'am. Brain-workers, ma'am, are night-workers. I am not an early riser either, ma'am. I have told the hotel-proprietor so. My wife, now, is an early riser. My wife rises pretty generally about daybreak; but the morning nap seems to be necessary for my constitution. My constitution, ma'am—"

"Hurry up, ma'am!" he called to me from the breakfast table, as I entered the door the next morning. "We did not wait for you, ma'am. Waiting does not agree with me, ma'am, as I told the proprietor of the hotel. I rested only tolerably last night, ma'am; suffered from an uneasiness of the stomach."

"Chicken, ham, eggs, buckwheat cakes"—the waiter recited his litany, dropping the little dishes on the table like beads from his fingers.

"I do not care for chicken, ma'am. Some people like chicken; find it nourishing. My labors seem to require a stronger food. My wife likes chicken. I generally make my breakfast, ma'am, of ham — smoked-dried ham — and eggs. Ham seems to agree with my stomach better than most any kind of food, and I always taper off on cakes and sirup. My wife makes elegant cakes, ma'am. You seem to have a very strong stomach, like my wife, ma'am. My wife can eat almost any thing.

"Well, now that we have finished our breakfast, what shall we do with our morning, ma'am? Going to the springs? I shall just come along with you, ma'am. . . .

"I shall take the sulphur water, ma'am, to make a beginning, and then I shall take the iron water. The sulphur water, as I calculate, washes the dyspepsia out of me, and the iron builds me up. It just depends upon how I feel, the number of cups I drink during the day. I consult my stomach entirely. You had better consult your stomach, ma'am. Going back to the hotel? Certainly, I'm agreeable. I'll just go with you. You are like my wife, ma'am—always on the go. I do not mind telling you, ma'am, that my wife is not quite up to me; in fact, I am considered to have married beneath myself."

His knees had rounded sockets in his trousers, which stood out, as he walked along, in an ungainly fashion, but when he sat down all fitted easily and smoothly, particularly when he bent his shoulders a little forward and clasped his hands over his crossed leg that swung its foot like a pendulum to time his words.

"Some of my friends go as far as to say that it was a mistake. I could do much better now, ma'am; that is the truth. But when I married her, ma'am, I considered it a good thing for me. I don't mind telling you, ma'am, but at that time she was very poor. She taught in the public school until her ma took sick of galloping consumption, and when her ma died, I married her. They used to be quite considerable folks. Her pa was a Baptist minister. He was killed in the war. Sister Annie, too, my wife's sister, had a situation in the public school, but when she heard her ma was dying, she gave it up, and came home to help in the nursing. But I have taken Sister Annie in, too. Sister Annie's health isn't very good, ma'am, but she teaches the primaries, and she can help my wife in the house. I intend to let Sister Annie live right along with us. Sister Annie—Lord! Sister Annie can iron a shirt just as good as my wife. Have you observed my shirts, ma'am? Sister Annie and my wife launder them all; and between them they prepare the meals for the boarders—we have six boarders, ma'am, male and female—and they take care of the baby between them, and between-times they do sewing for their little pockets. I've got no objections. I just humor them, and tell them to do just as they please. Would you believe it, ma'am, they bought a sewing-machine last year between them. Sister Annie used to have an elegant voice, ma'am, but I consider that she has just coughed it away. She takes after her ma in coughing, ma'am."

"LET ME INTRODUCE MY WIFE."

As he talked, the man's eyes kept continually glancing up the yellow-streaked road, and in the clear light, under his beard, his long thin-lipped mouth could be seen nervously biting the postprandial tooth-pick. One would have said that he was expecting the messenger who shortly afterward made his appearance, waving a yellow envelope in his hand. He appropriated the message when it arrived without hesitation, opening it, and reading it aloud:

"Sister Annie died during the night."

The messenger rode his horse quietly away in the direction of the stable. The professor's food, for the moment, disappeared from his eyes, and presumably rested easy on his stomach.

"It will be a heavy blow to Olympus—it will be a mighty heavy blow to Olympus, ma'am."

He got his huge frame doubled up into his self-made attitude of sitting again, but his foot remained quiet, and his bony hands clasped the telegraphic dispatch instead of his knee.

"I don't know what the parson will do without her. The parson will miss her, ma'am, more than any one in Olympus. I consider that she just founded the church there; and as for the Sunday-school—there isn't a child in the place that wouldn't go to Sunday-school to have Sister Annie for a teacher. She played the melodeon and taught them hymns, and she was the organist of the church. Then there's the prayer-meeting Wednesday night, and the reading every Friday evening. Sister Annie did the reading. She got up a magazine club, too. I consider Sister Annie a very accomplished woman, ma'am. She was universally beloved." He pronounced this slowly and impressively, as if he or Sister Annie were originating the time-worn commendation.

"She never used to complain, ma'am. I do not believe she knew how to complain. If it had not been for the coughing, like as not no one would have known she was sick. When I told her good-bye yesterday noon, she smiled the moment she stopped coughing, and pretended it was nothing. I told my wife not to mind me, just to go on and look after her sister. She was most worried to death about my dyspepsia." He paused, nibbling at his toothpick. "I do not believe that that sulphur water is going to agree with me, or may be it is the fried eggs. Of course, ma'am! Certainly, if you have letters to write, President Tubbs had the pleasure of eating his dinner alone. For supper he was a few minutes late. There was another place prepared at the table. He interrupted inquiries about it by presenting himself opportunely with the occupant, a lady.

"Let me introduce my wife to you, ma'am. I telegraphed her this morning after you left me. I told her to come right along here and divert her mind. I can stand the expense. She didn't want to come in to supper but I told her you would excuse her appearance, ma'am. She hasn't had any time to fix up; been traveling ever since three. The funeral came off at ten. Sister Annie passed away easy and quiet as a baby going to sleep."

Mention has not been made of his voice. It was trumpetal in its volume of sound, and his words, heavy, unmodulated projections, fell like missiles of wood on the ears.

"It was an elegant funeral, my wife says, and the parson's address she considers a triumph of oratory." This last sentence seemed also a matter of pride with him. "I told my wife that she would like you. Mary, didn't I tell you you that you would like—" He touched her on the shoulder to corroborate his statement, and so she was forced to look up at last.

His wife! That his wife! Twenty, perhaps more. An oval face, black hair in a heavy mass at the back of her neck, and eyes that would have been called the most beautiful in the world if they had not to be called the most grief-stricken—eyes of supernatural beauty and divine suffering. Her mouth!—her mouth was quivering from lips to chin. One of the two women had to leave the table; she could now.

The professor came in to the breakfast table the next morning alone, but radiant.

"I never slept better in my life, ma'am, and no disturbance of the stomach. Did you notice that I eat the fried mutton last night, ma'am? Well, I thought I would hear from that mutton before morning; but I did not, ma'am. All quiet; all serene. My wife she did not sleep so well—she is a poor sleeper—and the baby did not sleep at all, she says. She says she walked him up and down the room pretty much all night long. I told her not to mind me, to do just exactly as she pleased; not to worry about my breakfast and my dyspepsia. I had brought her here to have her pleasure and I could manage to get along. And now, ma am, what shall we do this morning?

"What! Going to leave? Going away Oh, you had better not go! You had better stay a day or two longer. Why, I am not going for two or three days yet. Well, if you can't stay— But I am real sorry. I never did meet a lady whose society I enjoyed more than yours. Is that your hack, now?"

"Yes."

"Well, I am sorry. I thought we were going to have a real good time together. You can't change your mind? Well, I am sorry. Let me call my wife to tell you good-bye. Oh, it's no disturbance; she is just in her room. Mary Mary!"

There was no answer either to the call or the knock upon the door, near which we unfortunately were standing. Before a preventive could be thought of, it was flung open by his strong, quick hand.

"Come in! Come right in, ma'am. Here's Mary! She will be delighted to see you, and right sorry to hear that you are going away."

The woman, not attempting to rise, sat as she was, nursing her baby. The black dress of last night lay thrown across a trunk. She wore a faded red calico wrapper; her hair, which had not yet been combed, hung in two long, thick, tangled plaits. Her face was still as beautiful as the night before, only the daylight showed what the dim light had not, the hectic spot in each transparent cheek and the feverish brilliancy in her eyes.

"Yes, ma'am, the baby is considered to favor me; he is what is called in these parts 'growthy.' I tell Mary he looks as if he were going to be self-made, too."

"Undoubtedly."

Growthy! with a six months' progress of nose and mouth toward the original self-made type, and breakfasting as if he too had chronic dyspepsia, his heavy little hands grasping and pulling the breasts to which his large mouth clung determinately. And she had to be the mother of this, and the wife of that! Oh destiny!

A photograph had dropped from her hand to the floor. It was easy enough to see the face—not so pretty as Mary's, but stronger. And this was her first day in the grave; her first day of rest on earth, perhaps.

"Well, ma'am, you must excuse Mary. She is only a country girl, and has not had advantages like you and me."

The professor was forced to the apology, for when the photograph was silently laid in the hand that clasped the baby, Mary bowed her head and wept bitterly.

"Well, ma'am, I really have enjoyed your conversation. I appreciate culture wherever I find it. I am sorry you can not see the Male and Female College, ma'am. I would take pleasure in showing you over it, ma'am. I would have been pleased to explain to you my system of co-education of the sexes, ma'am. Some people are afraid to tackle co-education, but I consider, ma'am, that I have made a success of it. I would have liked you to see my class in higher mathematics, ma'am. Why, ma'am, I have a blackboard as tall as I that extends all around the room! At every recitation it is covered with figures and problems. We use up one entire box of chalk every day, ma'am. I—"

Here the driver of the hack whipped up his mules.—Grace King, in Harper's.

—"So you are really going to marry old Moneybags?" said a friend to a New York belle. "Yes, indeed; but it's merely a dollars and sense arrangement; he furnishes the dollars and I the sense, you know."

—The Freshness of Youth.—

When we're getting along in years,
And more of the world we see,
It almost makes us weep to think
How fresh we used to be

RESTORING BREATH.

A Discovery That Will Be of Great Use to the Scientific World.

A miraculous surgical experiment has been performed at Buffalo by Dr. George E. Fell, professor of physiology at the University of Niagara. Dr. Fell is an enthusiastic vivisectionist, and has made a number of experiments whereby he claims he has discovered a means of saving human life after the patient has taken poison. Several weeks ago a man named Patrick Burns, who had been on a debauch, took a large dose of morphia, and was given up as dead. After Burns had been unconscious for five hours, Dr. Fell was called in. It had occurred to him that if he had an artificial respiratory apparatus he would be able to bring back the patient to life. He had often applied artificial respiration to dogs and cats at college during his lectures, to show the action of their hearts and lungs. Burns was a poor patient, and the physician had very little hope of being successful. There was no pulse, and only a slight flutter around the region of the heart, which showed that it had not ceased to beat. There were a number of physicians present, and the experiment was considered a chimerica one as far as success was concerned. An incision was made in the throat, and a respiratory tube was placed in the trachea. The blood which oozed from the wound was a dark coffee color. The lungs of the patient were useless, and when air was blown into them they were so stiff that they could not contract. Artificial means were used, pressure on the chest to expel the air and cause the expirations. This was kept up for fifteen minutes before any change was noticed. The blood soon became more arterial in color as it came from the wound, and the face assumed a life-like expression. The muscles of the eyes twitched when pressed by the finger. After a time the eyes opened, and the legs and arms began to move. Water was placed to the patient's lips and he drank greedily. For two hours the artificial breathing was kept up. The tube was removed, and the wound was closed with antiseptic dressing. The patient, an hour after breathing was restored, had an attack of delirium tremens, the result of drinking. It took five men to hold him, and the wound commenced to bleed afresh. This was stopped, and when the poison passed from the system, after three days the respiration increased, and it was evident that the patient would recover. In two weeks he was able to go out and attend to his business. Dr. Fell used a very crude apparatus which he employs in vivisection. He is now perfecting an instrument which can be used by an operator in such cases as the one described. The discovery is a valuable one, and will be of great use to the scientific world.—Demorest's Monthly.

TRAVELING ABROAD.

The Wagon-lit of Europe and the Pullman Car of America.

The wagon-lit is a French substitute for Pullman sleeping-car. It has its advantages and its disadvantages. The "Orient express" of the grandest vitesse known in France, at least so far as our experience goes, of thirty-eight miles an hour, coming through from Constantinople to Paris in two days and two nights picked us up at Oos, to which station we came over a branch road from Baden-Baden in fifteen minutes. This express train was made up entirely of mail and baggage-car, three wagon-lits carrying twenty-four passengers each, and a dining car. On one side of the wagon-lit there is a narrow alley, with doors opening into compartments, some of which are devoted to four passengers and others to two. In the day-time these are seen to contain in the first case two narrow, athwartship sofas, in the latter one. At night the cushion, serving by day for a back rest, is tried up and converted into a bed. The whole affair has the appearance of an oyster-saloon's private compartments. Seclusion and comfort are attained at a great sacrifice of space. Two persons occupy the whole width of the carriage and one-third more of its length than four persons occupy in a Pullman car. At the same time the beds are much more narrow. I should think that corpulent people would partly hang over the sides, and that a strip of them would pass an uncomfortable night. On the other hand, there is better air, because of the windows in each compartment, than in the Pullman, and there is greater privacy. It is astonishing how the conventionalities are dispensed with in American sleeping-cars; how gentlemen who elsewhere would not take off their coats in the presence of ladies, and how ladies who regard every article of their outward make-up as an essential part of themselves in parlor or in the street, do not hesitate to reduce their apparel to a minimum when they are about to turn in.

Traveling in Germany and France, excepting in third class cars, which, sooth to say, are about equal to many we call first-class at home, as much more expensive than with us. In this "Orient express" we paid about $16 each for a distance of about 350 miles from Baden-Baden to Paris. The high charges are mainly due to the extra room that passengers occupy. As to the dining-room car, the meals are bad and expensive, and the service filthy and abominable. I was representing these facts to a Gallicized American lady this evening. She admitted them to be true, but said: "I can put up with all the cost and inconvenience, and even the bad cuisine, in preference to a 'first-class American car' where a stranger can crowd himself upon my seat, and where there are tobacco puddles on the floors, or to the uncomfortable pivots of a parlor-car and a fetid atmosphere and personal exposure of a 'sleeper!'"—Paris Cor. N. Y. Post.

AMERICAN DEGREES.

They Are Not Recognized by the Medical Faculties of Europe.

The University of Berlin has decided not to recognize the degrees conferred by American medical colleges, on the ground that such institutions differ greatly in character and that time can not be spared to separate the good from the bad. That there is excellent reason for the complaint is generally known. If our best colleges were fairly typical there would be no question of the reception of American degrees abroad. But they are not. On the contrary they form but a small fraction of the whole. Berlin is not unique in the respect of refusing to recognize American degrees. Knowing the utterly worthless character of many of our colleges, it has long been a rule in the army and navy to accept no certificates as conclusive. A rigid examination of the applicant for a surgeon's position is conducted in both branches of the Government, and this is done without the slightest reference to the medical institution which has already granted its diploma. Is it reasonable, then, to blame the University of Berlin for following a precedent which has the sanction of our Government? No doubt there are colleges in America which will compare favorably with those abroad but it would be foolish to argue that the average standard of ability is so high here as it is on the continent. Germany and France have made their medical schools public institutions, and their reputation is so excellent that diplomas issued by them command world-wide respect, and are just as valuable in America as anywhere else. Ignorance in medicine and ignorance in law are matters of vital concern to the public. It is a shocking condition of affairs when the State guarantees no protection to the individual against the incompetency of those whose right to act in a professional capacity is guaranteed by institutions operating under its charter. New York was among the first of the States to show its appreciation of the danger, and six years ago a bill was passed providing that law students should pass an examination which would guarantee fitness to enter upon their legal studies. Last year the same provision was made to apply to medicine, and the Regents' Academic examination is now one of the best possible safeguards. So that in this commonwealth, at least, very material progress has been made along lines of improvement. The American students at Berlin must keenly feel their position. But what are they to do? Privy Counselor Klueffel is perfectly correct when he says that we have "institutions of real worth established side by side with those that are practically humbugs," and that the laxity of American laws and regulations concerning the conferring of degrees is remarkable."—Brooklyn Eagle.

CHANGES IN WARFARE.

What Will be the Effect of the Revolution in Infantry Arms.

In future wars (1) the bullets will have much greater penetrative power and will therefore be less readily stopped by covering obstacles, whether natural or artificial. (2.) The trajectory is flattened; that is, the billets at decisive battle ranges rise less above the ground, thus not only widening the dangerous space and reducing the number of misses due to a defective estimate of distance, but also extending point-bank range, and thus in a measure doing away with adjustment of the sights under heavy fire. (3.) The power of firing a few rounds with excessive rapidity when needful will make charges more bloody than ever before. Every rush in the close approaches to a position defended even by a thin line of skirmishers will be met by volleys more intolerable than the heaviest fire of a line of battle twenty-five years ago. (4.) The reduction in weight of ammunition will enable the soldier to carry about double the number of rounds and to receive fresh supplies in action with correspondingly greater ease. (5.) The use of smokeless powder will make it more easy to overlook the ground in front by reason of the absence of the clouds of smoke that heretofore have spread a merciful veil between modern armies in the death struggle; but on the other hand, the readiest mode of detecting the precise position of the enemy—his puffs of smoke—will be lacking, and surprises and unexpected movements of skirmishers will probably be more frequent than of old. There will be no longer a curtain to hide the ghastly spectacle immediately around them. Experience has proved that many men who fight steadily in battle turn faint and sick in a field hospital; how will it be when the two experiences are to a certain extent combined?—General Henry L. Abbot, in Forum.

Courtesy in the Household.

To abbreviate and neglect the forms of politeness is really to diminish the sentiments and the needs of the heart. As soon as one ceases to express outwardly even the most essential sentiments, these sentiments become weakened to a certain degree in the soul; they lose something of their delicacy and of their energy. The cultivation of the forms of politeness must be begun in family life between husbands and wives, parents and children, brothers and sisters. Till courtesy is honored in the household it will not appear elsewhere. —N. Y. Ledger.

Reasons for Keeping Awake.

The sermon was fearfully dry and half the congregation was dozing.

"Why don't you follow their example?" whispered one sitter to an unnaturally wide-awake man next to him.

"You see I can't with any courtesy; I don't belong to this church."—Philadelphia Times.

In the Street Car.

Old Gentleman (excitedly) — Didn't you know that was a fifty cent piece I gave you that you put in the box?

His Vis-a-Vis (calmly)—Oh, yas! But such a bore to make change.—Racket.

Since the Extradition Treaty.

Professional Boodler—There's Canada!

Bystander—What about her?

Former (dejectedly)—She isn't what she used to be.—Chicago Times.

JACK-AT-ALL-TRADES.

Persons Who Are Able to Make the Best of "a Bad Fix."

That great Briareus, the civilized world, is certainly a Jack-at-all-trades, but as a general rule, each of its multitudinous pairs of hands has only one particular kind of cunning. The gunsmith can not make a coat, nor the tailor a weapon. Consequently the individual man of civilized life would, if segregated from his fellows, be much more helpless than a savage. The former depends, for the supply of most of his wants, upon others, the latter upon himself alone. The division of labor is a glorious thing for society. If it did not take nine men to make a pin, pins would be much dearer than they are. But it is very clear that the craftsman, who can make nothing else than pins' heads, or do nothing else than sharpen pins' points, would starve to death where an Indian would live in comparative comfort.

Under these circumstances is it a good thing for any one to confine himself exclusively to a specialty? Does it not tie one's hands and blunt one's wits to labor exclusively at one trade, or profession, or calling? Mutual dependence is admirable as long as we live in a hive. But suppose the hive broke up and its workers scattered over the world. Verily the mutually dependent people, thus separated, would be the most shiftless of human creatures. It is a good thing to be perfect in one art, but it is also a good thing to know something of all arts that are useful. The man thus accomplished is a microcosm—a world in himself. Place him where you will, he is independent and equal to every emergency.

Versatility, then, is not to be despised, and the profound specialist who scoffs at the handy fellow who knows a little of every thing, as a mere smatterer, would be very glad to have such a person for a companion were he cast on a desert island or placed in any other awkward dilemma where his specialty would be useless. Your classical scholar with Greek and Latin, and nothing else, at his fingers' ends, is not the sort of person one would desire as a comrade on board a raft a hundred miles at sea.

The man of the wild who can make a tool out of a flint, and with that tool a bow and arrows, get fire out of two pieces of dry wood, fashion hooks out of fish bones, ropes out of vegetable fibers, a canoe from the bark of a tree, and a wigwam out of the skins of the animals he kills, is the superior of any civilized, one-trade man, everywhere except in these thick solitudes called social."

Boys appreciate this fact, if philosophers do not, and hence their admiration of "Robinson Crusoe," and sympathy with the rare doings of the "Swiss Family Robinson." It may not be as delightful as youngsters think it is to build a hut and live in it, shape a boat and fish from it, and "do for one's self" generally after the manner of the aforesaid castaways; but it is a good thing to be able to make the best of "a bad fix" by the exercise of skill and ingenuity. Let every boy try to make himself, to a certain extent, a Jack-at-all-trades."—N. Y. Ledger.

SIRIUS, THE DOG STAR.

Something About One of the Greatest of the Fixed Stars.

It is difficult to conceive that this beautiful star is a globe much larger than our sun, yet it is a fact that Sirius is a sun many times more mighty than our own. That splendid star, which even in our most powerful telescopes appears as a mere point of light, is in reality a globe emitting so enormous a quantity of light and heat that, were it to take the place of our sun, every creature on this earth would be consumed by its burning rays.

Sirius, shining with a far greater luster than any other star, it was natural that astronomers should have regarded this as being the nearest of all the "fixed" stars, but recent investigation on the distances of the stars has shown that the nearest to us is Alpha Centauri, a star belonging to the southern latitudes, though it is probable that Sirius is about fourth on the list in order of distance. For, though there are about fifteen or twenty stars whose distances have been conjectured, the astronomer knows that in reality all of them, save three or four, lie at distances too great to be measured by any instruments we have at present. Astronomers agree in fixing the distance of the nearest star at twenty-two million of millions of miles, and it is certain that the distance of Sirius is more than three and less than six times that of Alpha Centauri, most likely about five times; so that we are probably not far from the truth if we set the distance of Sirius at about one hundred million of million miles! What a vast distance is this that separates us from that bright star; words and figures of themselves fail to convey to our minds any adequate idea of its true character.

To take a common example of illustrating such enormous distances: It is calculated that the ball from an Armstrong hundred-pounder quits the gun with a speed of about four hundred yards per second. Now, if this velocity could be kept up it would require no fewer than 10,000,000 years before the ball could reach Sirius! Again, take the swiftest form of velocity of which we have any knowledge, light, which travels at the rate of nearly 200,000 miles per second, or about 12,000,000 miles a minute, yet the distance of Sirius is so vast that it takes nearly twenty years for its light to reach us; so that if Sirius was suddenly to become extinct, we should not be acquainted with the fact until twenty years hence.—Chamber's Journal.

How Lord Macauley Read.

When a boy I began to read very earnestly, but at the foot of every page I read, I stopped and obliged myself to give an account of what I had read on that page. At first I had to read it three or four times before I got my mind firmly fixed. But I compelled myself to comply with the plan, until now, after I have read a book through once, I can almost recite it from beginning to end. It is a very simple habit to form in early life, and is valuable as a means of making our reading serve the best purpose. —Lord Macauley.

BACTERIA IN ICE.

The Latest Scare Promulgated by New York's Scientific Men.

Determined to save the human race from as many evils as possible, but not always very certain what is or is not an evil, one of our esteemed contemporaries is making things hot for the bacterium even in his frozen home, the crystal cake of North river ice; and it postulates as a great truth the statement that the ice we use is full of bacteria, some of which are deadly. So we may say the woods are full of crows, some of which are white; or the river is full of fishes, some of which are eels; or the world is full of seeds, some of which are poisonous. There is no doubt that some seeds are poisonous. One handful of the seeds of that wayside weed the datura stramonium would keep an undertaker busy all winter, and a single quaker button would clean out a Fourth ward lodging-house. But suppose because some seeds are poisonous man should abjure the use of all seeds. His lovely dish of rice is made of seeds; his Vienna roll is but a baked paste made of crushed seeds; his pork and beans, his buckwheat cakes, his corn bread—how can he have any of them, and not eat seeds. It would not be wise to abjure all seeds because some seeds are deadly, and it is foolish to tremble in the presence of every bacterium because some of the family are bad. It is by no means certain that the lively bacteria are not more of a help than a hindrance to man in his little life. We can not live without air, and the bacterium may be one of its necessary elements. We can not live without water, and we swallow millions of bacteria in every drink, and it may be that they give it the taste we like. There is not a tissue of your body that the bacterium does not inhabit—and probably he considers us his own. He may feel a sentiment of patriotism toward us. Who can say that our vital functions are not the mere evolutions of squadrons of bacteria? Perhaps the great problem of cerebration may yet resolve itself into the mere squirmings of bacteria in the brain. Let us think kindly of the bacterium while we are yet in doubt.—N. Y. Mail and Express.

Overworked Pall-Bearers.

There are men in Atlanta who carry a helpless arm at their sides as the result of acting as pall-bearer at the funeral of a friend. A metallic casket weighs about five hundred pounds; with a man's body enclosed over six hundred pounds. The handles by which the casket is carried are awkwardly placed and cruel to the hand. Pall-bearers as a rule are men of sedentary life and unaccustomed to lifting heavy weights. By carrying unevenly, the larger weight of the coffin is often thrown on one man. He will not drop it, and the result is an arm permanently sprained. It is notorious that two or three pall-bearers at each funeral suffered from the effects of it for days afterward. What should be done is this: Every undertaker should have four trained men to carry the coffin. These could do it easily and without the delay incident to the present method. The pall-bearers, wearing badges and crape, could follow the coffin walking, as testimony of their love for the deceased and sympathy for the family. The change might be a shock at first, but the undertaker who inaugurates the custom will prevail at last.—Atlanta Constitution.

—The four-year-old daughter of a Boston druggist has already picked up some of the words belonging to her father's business, as the following shows: This little miss had prepared to recite in Sabbath-school the line: "Search the Scriptures." When the teacher asked for her verse, however, she hesitated, then bravely uttered the words: "Hunt for the prescriptions."—Golden Days.

—"Yes," he said, "I retired from business six months ago. I had made an ample fortune in the hardware line, and I thought that I had earned rest and—" Just then a messenger boy opened the door and said: "St. Paul off five points." "Great scott!" shouted the retired business man. "Another ten thousand gone."—Puck.

—According to Mr. E. G. Ravenstein, the English foot is used as the standard of length by countries having 471,000,000 inhabitants, the metre by 347,091,000 people, and the Castilian foot by 5,905,000. Denmark and Russia are the only countries in continental Europe which have not adopted the metre.—Arkansaw Traveler.

—Love, the child of trust, is, in time, the mother of service.—Dr. John Hall.

LITTLE'S
CHEMICAL FLUID
NON-POISONOUS
SHEEP DIP.

One gallon, mixed with 60 gallons of cold water will dip thoroughly 150 sheep, at a cost of 1 cent each. Easily applied, a nourisher of Wool; a certain cure for SCAB. Also,

Little's Patent Powder Dip,
(Poisonous.)

Mixes instantly with water. Prevents the fly from striking. In a 2 pound package there is sufficient to dip twenty sheep, and in a 7 pound package there is sufficient to dip one hundred sheep.

CATTON, BELL & CO.
SUCCESSORS TO FALKNER, BELL & CO.
Office, 406 California St. and Wool Exchange Warehouse, cor. 6th and Townsend Sts.
SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

C. Mulholland,
EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.
PUBLISHED EVERY FRIDAY

INDEPENDENCE, CAL

FRIDAY JUNE 27 1890

County Official Paper.

DEMOCRATIC COUNTY COMMITTEE

Meeting.

A MEETING OF THE DEMOCRATIC CENtral Committee of Inyo county is hereby called for

WEDNESDAY, JULY 16th.

At Independence, at the hour of 7 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of selecting two delegates to represent Inyo county in the State Convention, which will meet in San Jose on August 19, 1890, and for the transaction of such other and further business as may come before the meeting.

COMMITTEE:

ROUND VALLEY—C. H. Parsons
LINCOLN—T. K. Hutchison
BISHOP—I. P. Yancy
LAWS—Barton McGee
BIG PINE—R. P. Hessian
FISH SPRINGS—James Lane
COTTONWOOD—S. P. Roberts
POLETA—George Storey
INDEPENDENCE—D. Stubblefield
KEYNOT—T. McDonough
GEORGES CREEK—W. L. Hunter
LONE PINE—John Lucas
KEELER—John Barnes
CERRO GORDO—R. B. Nickerson
DARWIN—J. A. McKenzie
LOOKOUT—F. Fitzgerald
PANAMINT—H. G. Chickering
OLANCHA—Ed. Walker
AT LARGE—W. J. Lake, J. J. Gunn, E. Robinson, J. W. Murphy, J. White Smith.

E. ROBINSON, Chairman.
IRV. H. MULHOLLAND, Secretary.

POLITICAL ANNOUNCEMENTS.

All announcements under this head will be charged for at the uniform rate of Ten Dollars

For Superior Judge.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Superior Judge, subject to the action of the Republican County Convention.

GEORGE M. GILL.

For Superior Judge.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Superior Judge, Subject to the action of the Democratic county convention.

JOHN A. HANNAH.

For Superior Judge.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY DECLARE myself as a candidate for the office of Superior Judge, subject to the action of the Republican county convention.

A. R. CONKLIN.

For Sheriff.

ANNOUNCEMENNT IS HEREBY MADE that I respectfully declare myself as a candidate for the office of Sheriff, subject to the action of the Republican County Convention.

JOHN S. GORMAN.

For Treasurer.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Treasurer, subject to the action of the Democratic county convention. J. J. MOORE.

For Sheriff.

I HEREBY REPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Sheriff, subject to the action of the Democratic Convention. BEN. T. WILLIAMS.

For Supervisor.

ANNOUNCEMENT IS HEREBY MADE that I will be a candidate for the office of Supervisor of the Third District subject to the action of the Republican Convention.

CHARLES A. WALTER.

For Assessor.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Assessor, subject to the action of the Democratic Convention. G. W. GARRETSON.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE.

STEVENS DITCH COMPANY.

Location of principal place of business, Independene, California. Location of ditch, near Independence, Inyo county.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of a Board of Directors, held on the 31st day of May, 1890, an assessment (No. 4) of Ten (10) cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary at the office of the company, Independence, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 26th day of July, 1890 will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Saturday, the 30th day of August, 1890 to pay the delinquent assessment together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.

P. H MACK, Secretary.

DELINQUENT SALE NOTICE.

INYO MARBLE COMPANY.

Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Inyo county, Cal.

NOTICE—There are delinquent upon the the following described stock, on account of assessment No. 9, levied on the 17th day of April, 1890, the several amounts set opposite the names of the respective shareholders, as follows:

Names.	No. Cert.	No. Sh's.	Am't
P G Keeler, Trustee	269	1000	$100 00
P G Keeler, Trustee	254	250	25 00
P G Keeler, Trustee	261	250	25 00
P G Keeler	5	5	50
W. H. Adams	270	200	25 00
		1755	$175 50

And in accordance with law, and an order of the Board of Directors, made on the 17th day of April, 1890, so many shares of each parcel of such stock as may be necessary, will be sold at public auction, at the office of the Inyo Marble Co., No. 39 Sutter St., San Francisco, California, on Thursday, the 26th day of June, 1890, at the hour of 12 o'clock m. of said day, to pay said delinquent assessment thereon, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. G. W. LUCE, Sec.

Office—No. 39 Sutter St., San Francisco, California.

FOURTH ANNUAL FAIR.

Agricultural District No. 18.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA.

Composed Of The Counties Of

Alpine, Mono & Inyo

TO BE HELD AT

Independence.

Commencing Tuesday, September 23d, and Continuing Four Days

A. R. CONKLIN.....President.
C. MULHOLLAND.....Secretary.
O. I. MAIRS.....Treasurer.

DIRECTORS;

A. R. CONKLIN, W. S. ENOS, N. RHINE,
J. S. GORMAN, E. ROBINSON, F. McINER,
A. W. EIBESHUTZ, C. A. WALTER.

FIRST DEPARTMENT.

In this Department the same animal shall not be entered more than once, except in sweepstakes, or as a member of a family exhibited with its sire or dam. Any stallion, mare, gelding or colt competing in a race shall not be excluded from competing for premiums in their respective classes.

Tuesday.

CLASS I—THOROUGHBREDS.

Best stallion, any age	$25 00
Second best	15 00
Best mare, any age	20 00

CLASS II—STANDARD TROTTERS.

Best stallion, aged	$25 00
2 year old	15 00
Best mare	20 00

CLASS III—ROADSTERS.

Best roadster, aged	$20 00
2 year-old	15 00
team to buggy	20 00

Wednesday.

CLASS IV—HORSES OF ALL WORK.

Best stallion, aged	$20 00
2 year-old	15 00
1 year-old	10 00
Best colt	10 00
Best mare, any age	20 00
2 year-old	15 00
1 year-old	10 00
and family of 3 or more	20 00

CLASS V—DRAFT HORSES.

Best stallion, aged	$20 00
2 year-old	15 00
Best mare, aged	15 00
2 year old	10 00
and colt	15 00

CLASS VI—MATCHED TEAMS.

To be shown in harness.

Best matched carriage team	$15 00
buggy team	15 00

CLASS VII—SWEEPSTAKES.

Best stallion, any breed or age	$20 00
Best mare, any breed or age	20 00

Thursday.

CLASS VIII—JACKS.

Best jack, any age	$20 00
Second best	15 00

CLASS IX—MULES.

Best span, aged, owned by one person	$15 00
3 years or under " " " "	10 00

CLASS X—BULLS.

Best 3-year old or over, any breed	$20 00
2 year-old, any breed	15 00
1 year-old, any breed	10 00

CLASS XI—COWS.

Best 3 year old or over	$20 00
2-year-old	10 00
cow and calf	15 00
cow and 2 calves	20 00

All of the above to be exhibited at Race Track. Entries to be made with the Secretary not later than 6 o'clock p. m. on day preceding their exhibition.

Friday.

CLASS XII—SHEEP AND GOATS.

Best display of angora goats	$20 00
Best display of sheep	20 00

CLASS XIII—SWINE.

Best display of hogs	$15 00
Best sow and litter of 4 pigs	10 00

CLASS XIV—POULTRY.

Best display of fowls, any breed	$8 00
Second best	6 00
Best display of turkeys	5 00

Classes, 12, 13 and 14 to be exhibited at the Pavilion. Entries to be made with Secretary not later than 6 p. m. on day preceding their exhibition.

All stock to be exhibited must be on the ground at 10 o'clock a. m. on the day intended for their exhibition. No animal to leave place of exhibit on until 4 o'clock p. m. without permission of the Park Director.

SECOND DEPARTMENT.

All exhibits in the following departments must be produced in the District.

CLASS I—AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS.

	1st.	2d.
100 pounds of flour	$3 00	$2 00
barley	3 00	2 00
wheat	3 00	2 00
oats	3 00	2 00
rye	3 00	2 00
shelled corn	3 00	2 00
50 pounds corn in the ear	2 00
alfalfa seed	3 00	2 00
Display of Egyptian corn	2 00
Bale of timothy hay	4 00
alfalfa hay	4 00
Display of grasses	8 00
agricultural products	20 00	15 00

CLASS II—VEGETABLES, ROOTS ETC.

50 pounds Early Rose potatoes	$2 50	$2 00
100 pounds any variety of potatoes	2 50	2 00
25 pounds of sweet potatoes	2 50
20 pounds of parsnips	2 00	1 00
carrots	2 00	1 00
turnips	2 00	1 00
beets	2 00	1 00
tomatoes	2 00	1 00
50 pounds of onions	2 00	1 00
10 pounds of garden peas	2 00
white beans	2 00
bayou beans	2 00
lima beans	2 00
Sample of peppers	2 00
1 dozen cabbage	2 00	1 00
½ dozen squash	2 00	1 00
pumpkins	2 00	1 00
watermelons	2 00	1 00
cantaloupes	2 00	1 00
1 dozen cucumbers	2 00	1 00

CLASS III—DAIRY AND FARM PRODUCE.

10 pounds butter in 2 pound rolls	$3 00	$2 00
20 pound jar of butter	4 00	3 00
Cheese	3 00
10 pounds lard	2 00
Display of honey	5 00	3 00
Apiary display	10 00	5 00
Variety of fruit in jars	10 00	5 00
jellies	5 00	3 00
preserves	5 00	3 00
pickles	5 00	3 00
50 pounds ham	10 00
bacon	10 00

THIRD DEPARTMENT.

CLASS I—HORTICULTURAL PRODUCTS.

Display of apples	$7 50	$5 00
peaches	7 50	5 00
pears	6 00	4 00
plums	6 00	4 00
prunes	6 00	4 00
quinces	5 00
grapes	7 50	5 00
table grapes	3 00
raisin grapes	3 00
wine grapes	3 00
raisins	5 00
dried fruits	7 50	5 00
fruits of all kinds	20 00	10 00
½ dozen bottles of wine	5 00

FOURTH DEPARTMENT.

CLASS I—ARTISTIC.

Oil painting on canvas	$10 00
Second best	5 00
Crayon drawing	10 00
Satin and Japanese panel	10 00
Pastel drawing	5 00
Collection of paintings on canvas	10 00
Photograph of scenery in district	5 00
Collection of photographs, Dist. scenery	10 00

FIFTH DEPARTMENT.

CLASS I—MINERALS ETC.

Cabinet of minerals from District	$25 00
Collection of curios from District	15 00
Display of marble	20 00
borax etc	10 00
soda	10 00
silver ore	10 00
gold ore	10 00
silver lead ore	10 00

SIXTH DEPARTMENT.

CLASS I—NEEDLE AND OTHER WORK.

Handsomest pillow shams	$5 00
and best patchwork quilt	5
crazy quilt	5
knitted quilt	5
sofa cushion	5
set of sofa tidies, 3 pieces	5
set of bureau tidies, 3 pieces	5
Greatest variety of crochet work	10
Best crochet quilt	5
embroidered ladies dress	5
childs dress	5
ottoman cover	5
table cover, 4 corners	5
scarf, 2 ends	5
pair of lambrequins	5
wall panel, or banner	5
silk on flannel	5
linen	5
Kensington, or wool	5
toilet set, 3 pieces	5
lace work, hand made	5
darned net, 3 pieces	5
crochet shawl	5
table scarf, hand painted	5
hearth rug	5
made lady's dress	5
display hand knit work	5
fancy articles	10
wax work	5
Spanish needle work	5
hair work	5
hand knit stockings	5
calico dress made by girl under 14	5
hand sewing, 4 pieces, girl under 16	5
crochet work, girl under 14	5
patchwork, girl under 14	5
hand made shirt, girl under 14	5

SPEED PROGRAMME.

TUESDAY.

RUNNING—½ mile dash for untried horses. Purse, $75.
TROTTING—¾ and repeat, for 2 year-olds. Purse, $100.

WEDNESDAY.

TROTTING—2 in 3, mile heats, for stallions owned in district. Purse, $150.
RUNNING—½ mile and repeat for saddle horses Purse, $75.

THURSDAY.

RUNNING—2 in 3, mile heats. Free for all horses owned in district. Purse, $150.
TROTTING 2 in 3 mile heats, for double team. Purse, $100.

FRIDAY.

RUNNING—½ mile dash, free for all owned in district. Purse, $100.
TROTTING—2 in 3, mile heats. Free for all owned in district. Purse, $150.
RUNNING—1 mile, for Indian horses. No entrance fee. Purse, $25.

RULES.

In all the above races 3 or more to enter, 2 or more to start. Entrance fee, 10 per cent. of purse.

All entries to be made with the Secretary on or before 12 o'clock m. of the day preceding the race.

California State Agricultural Society Rules to govern running races. National Trotting Association Rules to govern trotting races.

In all exhibits of animals for premiums, other things being equal, blooded stock will be preferred.

All articles included in the above list, except the first department, to be on exhibition at the Pavilion on second day and remain during the Fair.

Special premiums will be allowed for articles exhibited not included in above list

If you have entries to make, attend to it at once, and when your entries are made, see to it that they are on time and at place for examination by the committee.

Accept no rumors in regard to the business of the exhibition. If you do not know what to do, inquire of the officers whose duty it is to tell you. One half of the trouble and disappointment at the Fair is caused by relying on hearsay. Attend to your business yourself. If it is done wrong you know where the blame lies.

Read the rules, and, by example, at least, assist in enforcing them; but don't forget that mistakes will occur where many people are congregated. The Board endeavors to do justice to all.

If the Superintendents and Committeemen are not always ready at the appointed hour, keep your stock and articles where you can command them at any time. Remember that we have but little time to do much business; patience, with a little system, will overcome many obstacles.

The Board will give the same special attention to details that has contributed to success in the past. It remains for the exhibitors to achieve still better results for the Fair of 1890.

ADMISSION.

Life Membership	$30 00
Membership ticket, admitting member, wife and minor children	5 00
Single season ticket	2 50
To Pavilion, each	50
To Race Track, each	50

OFFICIAL.

Application for Patent.

Mining Application No. 247.

UNITED STATES LAND OFFICE,
INDEPENDENCE, CAL.,
April 25, 1890.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT PATrick Reddy, whose post office address is San Francisco, California, has this day filed his application for a patent for fourteen hundred and forty-eigh and seven-tenths linear feet of the Bernon Quartz Mine or vein bearing galena, lead and silver, with surface ground six hundred feet in width, situated in Coso Mining District, County of Inyo and State of California and designated by the field notes and official plat on file in this office as Lot No. 42, in Township 19 South, Range No. 40 East, of Mt. Diablo Base and Meridian.

Said Lot No. 42 being described as follows, to wit:

Survey of Connecting Line:

Commencing at corner common to Sections 14, 15, 22 and 23 of T. 19 S., R. 40 E., M. D. B. and M., and running with Mag. Var. of 15 deg. 37 min. E. as follows:

N. 73 deg. 52 min. E., Needle varying along the line from N. 58 1-8 deg. E. to N. 58 3-8 deg. E, Magnetic, 71.99 chs to the S W cor. post of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine, being the S. E. cor. of the Bernon claim.

Survey of the Exterior Boundaries:

Commencing at a stake in high stone Mont. having pencil marks too dim to be read, being the S. W. cor. of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine, and the S. E. cor. of the Bernon claim, thence deflecting L. 180 deg. 36 deg. 57 min. from connecting line extended N. 73 deg. 52 min. E. as assumed standard bearing of the survey, upon West boundary line of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine and East boundary line of the Bernon claim, and running as follows: 1. N. 19 deg. 11 min. W., upon East boundary of claim, local variation of declination of 0 deg. 18 min. E., 0.99 chs to summit of limestone reef; 1.65 chs crossing high reef of limestone, 1.93 chs; whence bears S. 70 3-4 deg., W. 0.46 chs., face of open cut five feet wide. 1. N. 19 deg. 11 min., W. 4.00 chs, centre of ravine bearing Easterly 7.42 chs, summit of high croppings of lime rock; whence bears N. 59 degrees 11 min. W 4.53 chs centre incline prospect shaft 15 ft deep, no marks, 19.14 chs to centre of wash bearing Easterly from summit towards Defiance Works; 10.90 chs to old stake in high stone Mont. marked in pencil as follows: — of Bernon and Defiance Ledge—surveyed by Joseph Seely, U. S. M. Surveyor; being the side line Mont. of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine; 740.7 ft., or 11.36 chs., S 1 3 by 4 post in mound of stone marked Defiance West line and Bernon East line; whence bears N. 35 deg. 19 min. E. 1.28 chs. centre of incline prospect cut 12 ft. deep; whence bears N. 70 deg. 49 min E. 0.75 chs centre of small prospect cut, whence bears N 79 deg. 01 min. E. 5.57 chs centre of mouth of Defiance and Bernon Tunnel; whence bears N. 75 deg. 45 min. W. 2.43 chs. the face of Defiance and Bernon Tunnel; 14.59 chs centre of wash leading Easterly; 15.61 cos; whence bears N 70 deg. 49 min. E 0.03 chs an old stake in stone Mont. having Seely's name in pencil and other marks too dim to be read, being a side line Mont. of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine; 1. N. 19 deg. 11 min. W 16.18 chs summit of ridge bearing Easterly; 20.31 chs, whence bears S 42 deg. 01 min. W. 1.76 chs a stake in stone Mont. marked Kerso Ledge, S W cor. Post No. 6; whence bears N 42 deg. 04 min. E. 6.91 chs a stake in stone Mont. marked Kerso Ledge N E Post; whence bears N 35 deg. 45 min E. 2.41 chs a stake in stone Mont. marked Kerso centre point 1448.7 ft., or 21.95 chs. to stake in stone Mont., no marks, being the N W cor. of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L Mine, set 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon N E cor. No. 1, and Defiance N W cor. No. 4; thence deflecting L. 90 deg. from Co. 1 extended N. 19 deg. 11 min. W making interior ang e 99 deg. ran 2, S. 70 deg. 49 min. W upon the North boundary line of the Bernon claim; local variation of dec ination of 0 deg. 18 min. E., 2, S 70 deg. 49 min, W 0.30 chs centre old sled road from summit of hill, 1.09 chs, whence bears N 60 deg. 07 min., W 3.06 chs a stake in stone Mont. being the Northerly end of Lode Line and centre of Hidalgo claim, 2.10 chs whence bears N 79 deg. 57 min. W 0.61 chs the centre of Hidalgo incline shaft, 4.07 chs, crossing summit of ridge in Range, whence bears S 19 deg 31 min. E 2.91 chs. centre small shaft 300 ft or 4.545 chs, set 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked, Bernon L. L. P. No. 1; being the Northerly end of Lode Line and centre of Bernon claim, 7.86 chs centre mouth of tunnel bearing Northerly 6.04 ft, or 9.09 chs, set a 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon N W Cor. No. 4, being the N W Cor. of the Bernon claim; thence deflecting L 90 deg. from Co. 2 extended S 70 deg. 49 min. W making the interior angle 90 deg. and ran 3, S 19 deg. 11 min. E. upon West boundary line of Bernon Claim, local variation of declination of 0 deg. 18 min. E. 0.45 chs centre wash bearing Westerly 4.07 chs, summit of ridge bearing Westerly 9.01, center deep gulch bearing Westerly 10.15 chs, whence bears S 28 deg. 47 min. W 9.19 chs a stone Mont. being the S E cor. of the Hidalgo Claim; whence bears S 56 deg. 51 min. W 11.17 chs a stone Mont. being the Southerly end of Hidalgo Lode Line; whence bears S 76 deg. 25 min. W 12.46 chs a stone Mont. being the S W Cor. of the Hidalgo Claim 3, S 19 deg. 11 min. E 13.25 chs, summit of spur bearing Westerly, 14.61 chs, crossing head of wash bearing Westerly 16.28 chs, summit of spur bearing westerly 18.00 chs, whence bears N 86 deg. 28 min. E 3.32 chs the centre of mouth of Carry Tunnel, No. 1, whence bears N 83 deg. 20 min. E 4.22 chs the centre of mouth of Carry Tunnel No. 2, whence bears N 56 deg. 46 min. E 2.71 chs the centre of mouth of Carry Tunnel, No. 3, 21.65 chs, centre of ravine bearing Westerly, 21.47 chs, intersection with connecting line; whence bears S 73 deg. 52 min. W 62.80 chs the corner common to Sections 14, 15, 22 and 23 of T 19 S, R 40 E M D B and M, 1448.7 ft, or 21.95 chs, in south side of ravine, set 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon S W Cor. No. 3, being the S W Cor. of the Bernon Claim; thence deflecting L. 90 deg. from Co. 3, ex ended S 19 deg. 11 min. E, making interior angle 99 deg, and ran; 4, N 70 deg. 49 min. E, upon South boundary line of Bernon. local variation of declination of 0 deg. 03 min. E. 1.26 chs, edge of ravine, 2.51 chs, edge of spur bearing Westerly 3.30 ft, or 4.245 chs, set 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon L. L. P. No. 2, being the Southerly end of Lode Line and centre of claim, 7.06 chs, crossing high reef of lime rock, 4, N 70 deg. 49 min. E. 600 ft, or 9.09 chs back to place of beginning, and set a 3x4 post in Mont. of stone marked Bernon S E Cor., No. 2, and Defiance S W Cor., No. 3.

Containing 19.95 acres.

Survey of Lode Line.

Commencing at the L. L. P., No. 1, of Claim and deflecting thence L. 90 deg. from Co. 2, extended S 70 deg. 49 min W, making the interior angle 99 deg. ran, 5, S, 19 deg. 11 min. E, upon lode line; ascending 3.94 chs, whence bears S 71 deg. 41 min. W 2.91 chs a stone Mont. claimed to be the centre of Hidalgo Claim; whence bears S 72 deg. 36 min. 0.71 chs centre small shaft; descending; 10.50 chs, whence bears S 70 deg. 49 min. W 0.30 chs centre prospect hole 11.82 chs, whence bears N 70 deg. 49 min. E 0.30 chs centre incline shaft 60 ft deep. Ascending; 13.63 chs, summit of spur bearing Westerly. Descending; 13.36 chs, whence bears S 70 deg. 06 min. E. 0.80 chs centre shaft 45 ft deep, 14.41 chs, whence bears S 70 deg. 49 min. W 0.10 chs centre mouth of tunnel, 16.66 chs, whence bears S 70 deg. 49 min. W 0.12 chs centre shaft 6 ft deep 1448 ft, or 21.94 chs to L. L. P., No. 2, of Claim.

Magnetic variation 15 deg. 37 min. E containing 19.95 acres.

THE LOCATION of this mine is recorded in the Recorder's office of Coso Mining District in Book C of page 136. The adjoining claimant is the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. mine.

Any and all persons claiming adversely any portion of said Bernon Quartz mine or surface ground are required to file their adverse claims with the Register of the United States Land Office at Independence in the State of California during the sixty days period of publication hereof, or they will be barred by virtue of the provisions of the Statute.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD,
Register.

o n24

INDEPENDENCE

SHAVING SALOON.

Shaving, Hair-Cutting, etc., done in the best manner.

WM. H. HUFF, Prop'r

MISCELLANEOUS.

J. R. ELDRED,
Sheriff and Tax-Collector.
INYO CO., CAL.

P. H. MACK,
COUNTY CLERK,
—AND—
Ex-officio Auditor and Recorder,
INYO CO., CAL.

GEO. M. GILL,
District Attorney,
INYO CO., CAL.

J. J. MOORE,
County Treasurer,
INYO CO., CAL.

S. P. M'KNIGHT, C. E.
COUNTY SURVEYOR
—AND—
U. S. Deputy Mineral Surveyor
For California and Nevada.
—BISHOP CREEK, INYO CO., CAL.—
The obtaining of United States mineral patents a specialty.
All kinds of surveying given the most careful and accurate attention.

JUSTICE OF PEACE,
C. MULHOLLAND.
Office in the "INDEPENDENT" Building, Independence, Inyo County, Cal.

A. R. CONKLIN,
Attorney-at-Law,
Independence, Cal.
Will practice in all the Courts of the States of California and Nevada.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
Independence, Cal.

P. W. FORBES,
ATTORNEY AT LAW.
NOTARY PUBLIC.
Cases in U. S. Land Office a Specialty.
BISHOP, INYO COUNTY, CALIFORNIA.

IRVING J. WOODIN, M D.,
Physician & Surgeon,
(COUNTY PHYSICIAN)
Louise L. Woodin, M. D.
PHYSICIAN & SURGEON.
NIGHT CALLS ATTENDED.
Office and residence at the Reddy place, Independence.

W. H. GEORGE, M. D.,
Physician and Surgeon,
Bishop Creek, Cal.,
Offers his professional services to the people of Bishop Creek and vicinity. Office and residence opposite Andrew Clark's.

F. E. Bunting, M. D.
Physician & Surgeon
LONE PINE, CAL
OFFICE IN GELCICH BUILDING
All calls attended to immediately.

Lodge 221, F. & A. M.

Regular meetings of Lodge No. 221, F. & A. M., for the year 1889, will be held at the Lodge room at Independence as follows:

Saturday	February 1st
"	March 1st
"	March 29th
"	May 3rd
"	May 31st
"	June 28th
"	July 26th
"	August 30th
"	September 27th
"	October 25th
"	November 22nd
"	December 20th

P. H. MACK, W. M.
C. MULHOLLAND Sec.

P. W. FORBES. P. H. MACK.
MACK & FORBES.
Real Estate Agents,
Address,
P. H. MACK, Independence, Cal.
P. W. FORBES, Bishop, Cal.

FRED BURCKHARDT
Watchmaker & Jeweler,
LONE PINE, CAL.
Time pieces of all descriptions repaired and regulated, satisfaction guaranteed. Jewelry made to order. Firearms repaired and loaded.
All orders from any part of the country will be promptly attended to, at the most reasonable charges. At the old stand "Mechanics' Hall," Lone Pine.
FRED BURKHARDT.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CROCKER'S HOTEL.
BIG PINE - CAL.
New House.
New Furniture.
Low Rates
Splendid hunting and fishing near by, in act, it is a veritable paradise for tourists and pleasure seekers.
Special attention given to the wants of every guest.
CROCKER BROS., Props.
sept-tf

ANTONS SALOON
KEELER, CAL.
BEER, WINES, LIQUORS and CIGARS
All kinds of Fancy Drinks, including pure water. A comfortable and pleasant Hall.
JOHN C. ANTON, Prop.

IRWIN'S SALOON
Cor. Edwards and Market Streets,
Independence, Cal.
THE PUBLIC GENERALLY ARE RESPECTFULLY invited to call and inspect my establishment, which has been entirely rebuilt an furnished in a style second to none on this side of the mountains. A SPLENDID NEW BILLIARD TABLE provided for the amusement of patrons.
THE BAR
Is supplied with the most celebrated brands of pure Wines and Liquors and the Finest Havana Cigars.
JOHN C. IRWIN, Proprietor.
feb12tf

Palace Saloon.
WALTER OBER Lessee.
—THE BAR—
Is constantly supplied with the best kinds of
WINES, LIQUORS, & CIGARS.
The most careful attention given to the the amusement and comfort of patrons.
A FINE BILLIARD TABLE
Is always at the disposal of visitors to the Palace Saloon Dec. 20 89

Pioneer Livery & Feed Stables.
INDEPENDENCE, CAL.
Having returned and resumed the management of the above well known feed and livery stables, parties can be assured of finding there the best of Buggy Teams, Saddle Horses, and
Livery Accommodations
in general. Also, Hay and Grain for sale by the pound or ton.
O. I. MAIRS, Proprietor.

E. H. Edwards,
—DEALER IN—
General Merchandise,
LONE PINE,
INYO COUNTY - - - CALIFORNIA.

BLACKSMITHING,
Horseshoeing, General Iron
—AND—
WAGON WORK.
PIONEER BLACKSMITH SHOP
Cor. Main St. & Depot Ave.,
INDEPENDENCE, CAL.
W. F. MATLACK.....PROPRIETOR.
Horseshoeing .....$2 00 for Cash
For particulars, call and see
W. F. MATLACK.

LONE PINE
Blacksmith Shop.
R. C. Spear, Prop'r
—ALL WORK ON—
MINING TOOLS,
FARMING IMPLEMENTS
& FREIGHTING OUTFITS
—PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO—
HORSE SHOEING,
CARRIAGE WORK,
GENERAL REPAIRING
All work attended to with neatness and despatch. Prices to suit the times.

BOOTS AND SHOES
MADE AND REPAIRED.
THE BEST MATERIAL.
FIRST-CLASS WORK.
Repairs done Promptly.
Prices Reasonable.
nov 30-tf A. J. DAVIS, Independence,

TO ADVERTISERS
A list of 1000 newspapers divided into STATES AND SECTIONS will be sent on application—FREE.
To those who want their advertising to pay, we can offer no better medium for thorough and effective work than the various sections of our Select Local List.
GEO. P. ROWELL & CO.,
Newspaper Advertising Bureau,
10 Spruce Street, New York.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Railroad Time Table.

CARSON & COLORADO RR

TAKING EFFECT,

Sunday, May 10th, 1889.

STATIONS.	From Mound House. No. 1		To Mound House. No. 2.
	Leave—		Arrives—
Mound House		12:30 p. m	5.55 p. m
Dayton		1:00 p. m.	5:15 p. m.
Wabuska		3:05 p. m	3 00 p. m
Hawthorne		6:50 p. m.	11:20 a. m.
Luning		7:30 p. m.	10:05 a. m.
Sodа Springs		9:15 p. m.	9:05 a. m
Belleville		10:25 p. m.	7:45 a. m.
Candelaria	Ar.	11:10 p. m	Lv. 7:10 a. m
	No. 3. Leave—		No. 4. Arrives—
Belleville		8 10 a. m	5:25 p. m.
Benton		11:40 a. m	-
Bishop Creek		1:50p. m.	11:00 a. m.
Alvord		2. 5 p. m	10 00 a. m
Independence		4 10 p. m.	8:30 a. m.
Lone Pine		5 00 p. m.	7:40 a. m
Keeler	Ar	5:45 p. m.	Lv. 7:00 a. m.

Trains 1 and 2 run daily.
Train 3 runs Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays.
Train 4 runs Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays

Passenger trains make close connection at Mound House with express trains of V. & T. R., which connect at Reno with east and west bound trains of Central Pacific Railroad.

Stage Connections:

AT HAWTHORNE with United States Stage Company's coaches for Aurora (26 miles); Bodie (37 miles); Lundy and Bridgeport.

AT LUNING (125 miles from Mound House) with Gilmer, Salsbury & Co's. tri weekly stages (leaving Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays) for Downeyville, Grantsville and Belmont.

AT CANDELARIA with U. S. Stage Co's. stages for Columbus (8 miles), Silver Peak, Montezuma, Alida Valley, Gold Mountain, etc.

H. M. YERINGTON,
General Superintendent.
R. J. LAWS, Assistant Superintendent.
D. A BENDER,
General Freight and Passenger Agent.

Lake View Hotel
Keeler, Cal.
John Barnes, Prop'r.

First-class hotel in every respect. The table always supplied with the best in the market. Clean, nicely furnished rooms. Transient visitors will receive every courtesy and attention.

THE BAR
—Is constantly supplied with the finest—
Wines,
Liquors,
& Cigars.

EDWARD CHENOT
Independence, Cal.,
INVITES PUBLIC ATTENTION TO HIS extensive Stock of
GENERAL MERCHANDIS
....Consisting of....
GROCERIES.
PROVISIONS
Tobacco, Cigars,
WINES AND LIQUORS
FLOUR & GRAI
Together with an Assortment of
DRY GOODS AND CLOTHING
ETC., ETC
Buyers and consumer should call and examine my stock and prices before purchasing elsewhere.
E. CHENOT.
Independence, Cal., March 9, 1884.
n47tf

R. J. WHITTAKER
—PAINTER,—
BIG PINE, - - - - CAL.
HOUSE PAINTING,
SIGN WRITING,
PAPER HANGING,
GRAINING,
GILDING ON WOOD AND GLASS
Wagons Painted
The best of materials used and satisfaction guaranteed.

J. W. Murphy.
BLACKSMITHING
—AND—
General Iron Work.
Wagons and Carriages Repaired.
HORSESHOEING, $2.00 for CASH
Shop on Edwards St., opposite the Court House, Independence.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY, JUNE 27 1890

MARKET REPORT.

Bar silver, 104¼
Lead, 4 52½
Copper, 16
Tin, 21 55
Sugar, .05½
Coffee, 17 @ 19¾
Wool, foothill, 17 @ 20.

Religious Services.

Rev. J. H. De La Matyr will preach at Independence at 7:30 o'clock in evening. Sunday School at Independence and Lone Pine at 11 o'clock a. m.

COURT NOTES.

Superior Court of Inyo County California
Hon. John A. Hannah, Judge.

MONDAY, June 23d.

Estate of Charles D. Begole, deceased—Filed application of Public Administrator for letters of administration.

BORN.

GUNN—At Independence, June 25th, to Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Gunn, a daughter

FOORMAN—At Bishop June 14th, to Mr. and Mrs. Sol. Foorman, a son.

DIED.

BEGOLE—At Lone Pine, June 21st, Charles D. Begole, a native of Michigan, aged about 53 years.

Tom Crough is working in a mine at Caster City, Idaho.

Mr. James McDonald has been appointed foreman of the Union mine at Cerro Gordo.

Miss Nellie Squires of Round Valley started last Saturday on a trip East to visit relatives.

Messrs. J. C. and E. Crocker and H. H. Spears came down from Big Pine on Wednesday.

The Supervisors will meet as a Board of Equalization on the first Monday in July. See notice.

Davis & Key have a fine lot of ore ready for shipment at the White Hill. Scarcity of sacks has delayed getting the ore to the railroad.

Given & Ingalls have bought the whole fruit crop of J. W. Symmes. The buyers will pick and ship the fruit, most of it going to Candelaria.

Miss Grace McAfee arrived at Independence last Wednesday on a visit to her sister, Mrs. Eldred. She will stay till after the Fourth of July.

There is some talk of Mr. R. C. Spear of Lone Pine coming out as candidate for Assessor. Mr. Spear is well known as a faithful Republican.

Three cents a pound is offered at Independence for oats, barley or corn and none can be had even at that price. Every year the supply falls short of the demand.

Sheriff Eldred gives notice that a license must be procured for standing horses, jacks or bulls for hire and failure to comply with the law will be followed by suit to recover said license.

H. H. Spears has made four locations at Sylvania. In one of them he reports a large ledge that carries eighty-seven and a half ounces silver per ton. All of the claims show up good prospects.

Judge Arick of Kern County has taken a vacation. It is very likely that he will not return to Court sooner than the first of August and this will put the third trial of Elliott back till after that date.

Surveyors are at work in the neighborhood of Bakersfield. It is reported that they are surveying for the Santa Fe Company whose road is expected to be continued north from Mojave by way of Tejon Pass.

A Coroner's jury brought in a verdict justifying John Kelley for killing Charles Jardine at Bonie. Jardine is described as a blackguard and quarrelsome bully and general satisfaction is expressed at the fate he met.

It is expected that the new furnace at Sylvania will be ready for work about July 20th. At least a thousand tons of ore are now on the dump and more is being added daily. In the bottom of the main shaft the ledge is sixteen feet wide, all solid ore.

A stockman came in to Bishop last Sunday and reported that many cattle are dying in Long Valley. The great amount of snow up there and consequent excess of water together with cold nights may account for the fatality among stock.

Some weeks ago Mr. J. W. P. Laird sent to Washington his resignation as Register of the U. S. Land Office at Independence. It is reported that Mr. C. W. Craig has been appointed to succeed Mr. Laird and Mr. J. W. Clark of Bishop to succeed Mr. Eibeshutz as Receiver.

The citizens of Big Pine are not in a mood to have a repetition of all the expense, trouble and loss of valuable time occasioned by the Elliott murder case. It is too much to expect of men that they will patiently bear afflictions brought upon them by others who have no regard for law or the usages of decent society.

Ad Smith got back to Independence from Bakersfield yesterday. He took over thirty horses and reports the market dull. Mr. Smith saw Elliott at Bakersfield and says he looks quite self-important and very well satisfied with himself. Elliott had driven into town from the home of an acquaintance with whom he is staying for the present.

The tornado is getting its usual summer work in east of the Rocky Mountains. Death and destruction are scattered in its path. That incident in Illinois of a school house carried bodily to a height of three hundred feet in the air with the teacher and pupils in it and not one of them left alive, is terrible evidence of the awfully destructive power of tornados. Nebraska had her phase of such calamity also, when the town of Pleasanton was swept out of existance Sunday afternoon. It is a wonder that people who can get away from states visited every year by such fearful calamities do not come to California where they can be certain of safety.

Railroad Rumor.

The Los Angeles Herald says: "The news reaches us from Death valley that developments of ore of a very promising description are reported from that section; The Herald for some time past has prepared its readers for such developments. On his last visit to Los Angeles Senator John P. Jones told the writer that he and his partner, Mr. D. O. Mills, had made extensive purchases in that region and that sensational developments would be shortly recorded therefrom. These announcements of new ore discoveries must be taken in connection with the recent declaration that the Carson and Colorado railway is shortly to be extended to a connection with a transcontinental railway. In other words, that it is to be pressed past Keeler to a junction with the Utah Central branch of the Union Pacific railway. We fearlessly assure our readers that great railway developments in the interest of Los Angeles are ahead for the immediate future."

A few days ago Sheriff Eldred went up to Onion Valley to collect sheep license; he was accompanied by Arlie Mairs. While the Sheriff was after the sheep men Arlie fished in the lake and in a few hours caught a hundred and fifty trout. The lake is about twelve miles distant from Independence at an elevation of ten thousand feet above sea level. The fish made quite a load for the horses of the party.

Potatoes were planted at Lone Pine Station in April last and fifty-four days from the day of planting new potatoes were gathered. At the same place wheat was sown and is of such great growth that a few sheaves will be preserved for exhibition at the Fair of the 18th District. The potatoes are of very excellent quality. This shows what the land under the East side canal will do as the tract at Lone Pine Station is below average quality.

Last Sunday evening Rev. E. McEvers occupied the pulpit of the M. E. Church, the pastor, Mr. De La Matyr, being absent at Bishop. Mr. McEvers preached an excellent sermon from the text "It is finished." On Monday morning he went around town and in a little while got enough subscribed to put a roof on the parsonage. This will be very agreeable news to Mr. De La Matyr who has already done a great deal to improve the buildings and grounds about the church.

It is reported that foxtail is spreading about Lone Pine. If the weed is not checked heavy loss will be the consequence. The Porterville Tidings says: "Foxtail is of luxuriant growth this year, and we hear of much damage to stock from it, large numbers of hogs going blind from getting it in their eyes and sheep suffering from it in their wool. Whole fields of alfalfa have been cut and burned to get rid of it and much grain hay is rendered valueless for horse feed."

Last week Mr. James McDonald was at Independence and directed to have published in the INYO INDEPENDENT his card that he would be a candidate for the Republican nomination for Sheriff. After returning to Keeler and consulting with his friends in the lower end of the county he decided not to be a candidate and telegraphed to this paper not to publish his announcement. Mr. McDonald is a staunch Republican and his withdrawal as a candidate comes from his desire to promote harmony in the party and do all in his power to secure success for the candidates in the coming election.

After a lingering illness Charles D. Begole died at Lone Pine last Saturday. He was a native of Michigan aged about 53 years. He came to Owens Valley when a very young man and settled at Lone Pine where he located land and spent the rest of his life. He was not married. Mr. Begole was a man of exceeding kindness of heart, liked by all who knew him and without an enemy in the world. A brother of his was governor of Michigan a few years ago. The remains were buried at Lone Pine last Sunday; Rev. Edward McEvers conducted the funeral services and a large number of people attended.

Attention is invited to the premium list of the 18th District Fair. In preparing the list the end aimed at was to encourage all the resources of the District. It is quite possible that some things may have been overlooked for which premiums might well be offered but if any such oversight has been made it is unintentional on the part of the committee appointed to prepare the list. This committee consisted of Directors Eibeshutz, Robinson and Gorman and they gave careful study to the subject. Certain rules are published for the guidance of exhibitors and a due observance of those rules will save trouble and dissatisfaction to all who may have exhibits of any kind at the Fair.

DESERT LAND FINAL PROOF.

D. E. No. 414.

LAND OFFICE AT INDEPENDENCE, CAL., June 25, 1890.

Notice is hereby given that Charles Mulholland, of Independence, Inyo County, California, has filed notice of intention to make proof on his desert land claim No. 414, for the N ½ E ½ of Sec. 32, Tp. 13 S., R. 36 E., M. D. M., before the Register and Receiver at Independence, California, on Saturday, the 2d day of August, 1890.

He names the following witnesses to prove the complete irrigation and reclamation of said land: Finlay McIver, Gilbert Christie, David Johnson and David Vaughn, all of Citus, Inyo County, California.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD, Register.

DESERT LAND FINAL PROOF

D. E. No. 415.

LAND OFFICE AT INDEPENDENCE, CAL., June 25, 1890.

Notice is hereby given that John A. Hannah, of Independence, Inyo County, California, has filed notice of his intention to make proof on his desert land claim, No. 415, for the S E ¼ of Sec. 32, Tp. 13 S., R. 36 E., M. D. M., before the Register and Receiver at Independence, on Saturday, the 2d day of August, 1890.

He names the following witnesses to prove the complete irrigation and reclamation of said land: Finlay McIver, Gilbert Christie, David Johnson and David Vaughn, all of Citrus, Inyo County, Cal.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD, Register.

Notice to Stockmen.

All parties in Inyo County standing horses, jacks, or bulls, for hire, are required to procure a Propagation License. If such license is not procured immediately action will be at once commenced to recover the cost thereof as required by law.

J. R. ELDRED, Tax Collector.

NOTICE.

Notice is hereby given that the Board of Supervisors of Inyo County, State of California, will meet as a

BOARD OF EQUALIZATION

—ON—

MONDAY, JULY SEVENTH, 1890.

At the office of the said Board, in the town of Independence, to examine the assessment book and equalize the assessment of property in said County for the year 1890, and will continue in session for that purpose until the business of equalization is disposed of.

P. H. MACK,
Clerk of the Board of Supervisors.

OFFICERS.

President of the Day—GEO. M. GILL.
Orator—A. R. CONKLIN.
Reader—C. MULHOLLAND.
Speaker—F. E. DENSMORE.
Marshall—W. OBER.
Chaplain—J. H. DE LA MATYR.

PROGRAMME.

SALUTES—Sunrise, Noon and Sunset.
MUSIC—By the Band.
PRAYER.
READING—Declarat'n of Indep'nd'nce.
SONG—Star Spangled Banner.
ORATION.
SONG—Red, White and Blue.
RECITATION—Drake's Address.
SONG—America.
MUSIC—By the Band.

FLOOR DIRECTOR—J. W. Murphy.
FLOOR MANAGERS—J. C. Irwin, Irv. H. Mulholland, N. E. Conklin and J. D. Eldred.

FOURTH OF JULY!

GRAND BALL IN HOLTWOOD'S HALL!

NOTICE!

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE—J. C. Irwin, J. W. Murphy, D. Cofer, P. H. Mack and Irv. H. Mulholland.
FINANCE COMMITTEE—Henry Ribbe, O. I. Mairs and J. W. Murphy.

SPORTS.

Wheelbarrow race	$ 5 00
Footrace, girls under 12 years	3 00
Footrace, girls under 16 years	5 00
Footrace, boys under 12 years	3 00
Footrace, boys under 15 years	5 00
Sack race	5 00
Pinto race, 200 yards	5 00
Egg race for girls	3 00
Greased pig	5 00
—And pig, to be caught by the tail.
Match race, Ober and Rosenthal	300 00

Other sports to be added.

HALE BROS. & CO.

IN ORDERING BY MAIL OF HALE BROS. & CO.

YOU CAN DEPEND

UPON GETTING

FREE, OUR NEW Fashion Book

1. Your orders filled with pleasing promptness.
2. The same price and attention as though you were at their counters.
3. Lower prices on the whole than elsewhere. They allow no one to undersell them.
4. Courteous and satisfactory treatment. Goods may be exchanged or money refunded if satisfaction is not given.
5. The best styles. They carry no unseasonable goods.
6. The benefits of their dealing direct with manufacturers. It makes small prices.

AND PRICE LIST 100 PAGES.

HALE BROS & CO.

—Dealers In—

DRYGOODS, CLOTHING, SHOES,

Hats, Notions and Household Supplies.

Nos. 825 to 835 K St.,

Sacramento, Cal.

JEWELRY, DIAMONDS, WATCHES.

Hyman Fredrick, Reno, Nev.

The attention of the people of Inyo and neighboring counties is respectfully invited to the

LARGEST AND BEST STOCK

of Watches, Diamonds, Ear and Finger Rings, Bracelets and all other kinds of Jewelry this side of San Francisco. Knives, Forks, Spoons, and other Table Ware of the Best quality.

PRICES DEFY OUTSIDE COMPETITION.

All repairs done promptly and in a workmanlike manner.

Address orders and packages to

HYMAN FREDRICK, Jeweler,

m30-tf RENO, NEVADA.

MISCELLANEOUS.

NORMAN HOUSE,

Independence, - - Cal.

New House.
New Furniture.
Low Rates.

Special attention will be given to secure the comfort of guests.

O. I. MAIRS, Prop.
feb12tf

BELL'S Flouring Mills,

A. N. BELL, Prop.

TRY BELL'S

EXTRA PATENT ROLLER FLOUR.

Having added Patent Rolls and other improvements to our Mills, I am now turning out Flour that is fully

Equal to the Best.

Corn, Oats and Barley Cracked on Short Notice.

A. N. BELL,
Independence, Cal.

PIONEER BREWERY

INDEPENDENCE

BEER ICE COLD.

The Bar is supplied with the Best of all kinds of Liquors and Cigars.

The Coolest Hall in the town. Call in and see what comfort you can have this hot weather.

PHILIP GEHRIG, PROPRIETOR

MISCELLANEOUS.

BUHACH

THE UNRIVALED

Insect Exterminator

Manufactured solely from Pyrethrum flowers, grown in California, in a locality where the soil and climate are peculiarly adapted to the production of flowers rich in the essential oil which makes them so remarkably destructive to insect life.

Avoid the Worthless and Spurious Preparations, sold as Insect Powders, and use Buhach from original packages, and clear your premises of all Annoying and Destructive Insect Pests.

None Genuine Without the Trade Mark.

If your dealer doesn't keep it, order directly from the

Buhach Producing & Manufacturing COMPANY,
SOLE MANUFACTURERS,
STOCKTON, CALIFORNIA.

Wm. Muth-Rasmussen.

Bee Keeper.

Manufacturer of Comb Foundation.

Independence, Inyo Co. Cal

IF YOU WISH A GOOD REVOLVER PURCHASE ONE OF SMITH & WESSON'S

Finest small arms ever manufactured and the first choice of all experts. In calibres 32, 38 and 44-100. Single or double action, Safety Hammerless and Target models. Best quality wrought steel, carefully inspected for workmanship and stock. Unrivaled for finish, durability and accuracy. Do not be deceived by cheap malleable iron imitations often sold for the genuine article. They are unreliable and dangerous. The SMITH & WESSON REVOLVERS are stamped upon the barrels with firm's name, address and dates of patents, and are guaranteed perfect. Insist upon having them, and if your dealer cannot supply you, an order sent to address below will receive prompt attention. Descriptive catalogue and prices upon application.

SMITH & WESSON,
Springfield, Mass.

BIG TOP ADVERTISEMENTS.

GIVEN & INGALLS,

—DEALERS IN—

FARM PRODUCE.

J. E. DUNLAP.

Harness Maker.

Harness of all kinds, from the lightest to the heaviest. Any kind of new work made promptly and of the best material. Repairing done on the shortest notice. A full line of saddles and harness.

Valley View Hotel.

O. H. Hill, Prop'r.

A New House Newly Furnished Throughout. Guests will receive every courtesy and attention.

NEVADA STABLE BISHOP.

Opposite Valley View Hotel, Main St

In the Livery Department nothing is kept but safe and good traveling carriage and saddle horses. Conveyances of all kinds first-class. Good attendance and the best of hay and grain for all animals boarding at the stable

S. P. SMITH, Prop.

BISHOP CREEK

BREWERY,

MUNZINGER, PHILLIPPAY & CO., Proprietors.

All the appliances and conveniences of First Class Brewery, including a beautiful grove for outdoor parties.

Customers supplied on all points

Of the C. & C. Railroad.

Send orders to

MUNZINGER, PHILLIPPAY & CO.
Bishop Creek, Cal.

F. E. Bosworth,

Watchmaker & Jeweler.

BISHOP, CAL.

Fine and Complicated Watch Repairing a Specialty.

Guns, Sewing Machines, Organs and Music Boxes Put in Perfect Condition and Warranted.

I Prefer to do all work at your house and will call if you will write to me at Bishop.

A NEW DEAL!

BISHOP CREEK

Livery, Feed & Sale Stable.

ROBERT O'NEIL, Prop'r.

Horses are boarded by the day, week or month. Stock bought and sold.
Bishop Creek, Cal., Nov. 20, 1883.

A. K. EUGLEY,

BIG PINE, INYO CO. CAL.

Dealer in GENERAL MERCHANDISE, GROCERIES MINERS Supplies

PROVISIONS, &c., &c., &c.

Deputy County Clerk.
A. K. EUGLEY,
Big Pine, Cal.

MISCELLANEOUS.

The Newest Styles OF Fashionable Clothing, Dry Goods, Ladies' Wear, etc., etc AT L. WOOD'S

CASH STORE

A small stock of fresh groceries & canned goods constantly renewed.

Fresh Produce, and Grain Flour, etc., constantly on hand.

CANDIES,
PEANUTS,
WALNUTS,
TOYS!

THE CASH STORE Is Where You Get WORTH OF YOUR MONEY

THOMAS & HILL,

—DEALERS IN—

GENERAL MERCHANDISE

BIG PINE, INYO COUNTY, CAL,

We keep constantly on hand goods of all kinds needed in a country home. We order only First Class Goods and ask no more than a reasonable profit. Give us a trial.

THOMAS & HILL

J. FORBES. W. D. TOBEY.

FORBES & TOBEY,

HAWTHORNE, NEV.,

—DEALERS IN—

LUMBER

OF ALL KINDS.

DOORS,
SHINGLES,
SASH AND BLINDS,
LATH,
RUSTIC
MOULDINGS,
DRESSED LUMBER.

Matched and Dressed Flooring.

sept 11-tf

COLONEL QUARITCH, V.C.

By H. RIDER HAGGARD.

CHAPTER XXXVI.

SISTER AGNES.

Ten days had passed. The tragedy of which the foregoing is a record had echoed through all the land. Numberless articles and paragraphs had been written in numberless papers, and numberless theories had been built upon them. But the echoes were already commencing to die away. Both actors in the dim event were dead, and there was no pending trial to keep the public interest alive.

The two bodies, still linked in that fierce, dying grip, had been picked up upon a mud bank. An inquest had been held, at which an open verdict was returned, and they had been buried. Other tragedies had occurred, the papers were filled with the reports of a noted and remarkably full flavored divorce case, and the affair of the country lawyer who committed bigamy and together with his lawful wife came to a tragic and mysterious end began to be forgotten.

In Boisingham and its neighborhood much sympathy was shown with Belle, whom people still called Mrs. Quest, though she had no title to that name, but she received it coldly and kept herself secluded.

As soon as her supposed husband's death was proved beyond a doubt, Belle had opened his safe, for he had left his keys on his dressing table, and found therein his will and other papers, including the mortgage deeds, to which, as Mr. Quest's memorandum advised her, she had no claim. Nor, indeed, had her right to them been good in law, would she have retained them, seeing that they were a price wrung from her late lover under threat of an action that could not be brought.

So she made them into a parcel and sent them to Edward Cossey, together with a formal note of explanation, greatly wondering in her heart what course he would take with reference to them. She was not left long in doubt. The receipt of the deeds was acknowledged, and three days afterward she heard that a notice calling in the borrowed money had been served upon Mr. de la Molle on behalf of Edward Cossey.

So he had evidently made up his mind not to forego this new advantage which chance threw in his way. Pressure and pressure alone could enable him to attain his end, and he was applying it unmercifully. Well, she had done with him now, it did not matter to her, but she could not help faintly wondering at the extraordinary tenacity and hardness of purpose which his action showed. Then she turned her mind to the consideration of another matter, in connection with which her plans were approaching maturity.

It was some days after this, exactly a fortnight from the date of Mr. Quest's death, that Edward Cossey was sitting one afternoon brooding over the fire in his rooms. He had much business waiting his attention in London, but he would not go to London. He could not tear himself away from Boisingham, and such of the matters as could not be attended to there were left without attention. He was still as determined as ever to marry Ida, more determined if possible, for from constant brooding on the matter he had arrived at a condition approaching monomania. He had been quick to see the advantage resulting to him from Mr. Quest's tragic death and the return of the deeds, and though he knew that Ida would hate him the more for doing it, he instructed his lawyers to call in the money, and make use of every possible legal means to harass and put pressure upon Mr. de la Molle. At the same time he had written privately to the squire, calling his attention to the fact that matters were now once more as they had been at the beginning, but that he was as before willing to carry out the arrangements which he had already specified, provided that Ida could be persuaded to consent to marry him. To this Mr. de la Molle, notwithstanding his grief and irritation at the course his would be son-in-law had taken about the mortgages on the death of Mr. Quest, and the suspicion that he now had as to the original cause of their transfer to the lawyer, had answered courteously enough, saying what he had said before, that he could not force his daughter into a marriage with him, but that if she chose to agree to it he should offer no objection. And there the matter stood. Once or twice he had met Ida walking or driving. She had bowed to him coldly, and that was all. Indeed, he had only one crumb of comfort in his daily bread of disappointment, and that hope deferred which, where a lady is concerned, makes the heart more than normally sick, and that was, he knew his hated rival, Col. Quaritch, had been forbidden the castle, and that intercourse between him and Ida was practically at an end.

But he was a dogged and persevering man, and he knew the power of money, and the shifts to which people can be driven who are made desperate by the want of it. He knew, too, that it is no unusual thing for women who are attached to one man to sell themselves to another of their own free will, realizing that love may pass, but wealth, if the settlements are properly drawn, does not. Therefore, he still hoped that with so many circumstances bringing an ever increasing pressure upon her Ida's spirit would in time be broken, her resistance would collapse, and he would have his will. Nor, as the sequel will show, was that hope a baseless one.

As for his infatuation there was literally no limit to it. It broke out in all sorts of ways, and was for miles around a matter of public notoriety and gossip. Over the mantelpiece in his sitting room was a fresh example of it. He had, by one means and another, obtained several photographs of Ida, notably one of her in a court dress, which she had worn two or three years before, when her brother James had insisted upon her being presented. These photographs he had caused to be enlarged, and had then commissioned a well known artist to paint from them a full length life size portrait of Ida in her court dress, at a cost of £500. This order had been executed, and the portrait which, although, as might be expected, the coloring was not entirely satisfactory, was still an effective likeness, and a fine piece of work now hung in a splendid frame over his mantelpiece.

There, on the afternoon in question, he was sitting before the fire, his eyes fixed upon the portrait, of which the outline was beginning to grow dim in the waning December light, when a servant girl came in and announced that a lady wanted to speak to him. He asked what her name was, and the girl said that she did not know, because she had her veil down and was wrapped up in a big cloak.

In due course the lady was shown up. He had relapsed into his reverie, for nothing seemed to interest him much now unless it had to do with Ida—and he knew that the lady was not Ida, because the girl said that she was short. As it happened, he was sitting with his right ear, in which he was stone deaf, to the door, so that between his infirmity and his dreams he never heard Belle—for it was she—enter the room.

For a minute or more she stood looking at him as he sat with his eyes fixed upon the picture, and as she looked an expression of pity stole across her sweet, pale face.

"I wonder what curse there is laid upon us that we should be always doomed to seek for what we cannot find," she said, aloud.

He heard her now, and looking up saw her standing in the glow and flicker of the fire light, which played upon her white face and black draped form. He started violently, and as he did so she loosed the heavy cloak and hood that she wore, and it fell behind her. But where was the lovely rounded form, and where the clustering, golden curls? Gone, and in their place a coarse robe of blue serge, on which hung a crucifix and the white hood of the nun.

He sprung from his chair with an exclamation, not knowing if he dreamed or if he really saw the woman who stood there like a ghost in the firelight.

"Forgive me, Edward," she said presently, in her sweet, low voice. "I dare say that this all looks theatrical enough, but I have put on this dress for two reasons; firstly, because I have to leave this town in an hour's time, and wish to do so unknown; and secondly, to show you that you need not fear that I have come to be importunate. Will you light the candles?"

He did so mechanically and then pulled down the blinds. Meanwhile Belle had seated herself near the table, her face buried in her hands.

"What is the meaning of all this, Belle?" he said.

"'Sister Agnes,' you must call me now," she said, taking her hands from her face. "The meaning of it is that I have left the world and entered a sisterhood, which works among the poor in London, and that I have come to bid you farewell, a last farewell."

He stared at her in amazement. He did not find it easy to connect the idea of this beautiful, passionate, human, loving creature with the cold sanctuary of a sisterhood. He did not know that it is natures like this, whose very greatness and intensity is often the cause of their destruction, when they come in adverse contact with laws which are fitted to the average of their race, that are most capable of these strange developments. The man or woman who can really love and endure—and they are rare—can also, when their passion has utterly broken them, turn to climb the stony paths that lead to love's antipodes.

"Edward," she went on, "you know in what relation we have stood to each other, and all that that relationship means to woman. You know that I have loved you with all my heart, and all my strength, and all my soul; that your voice has been music to me, and your kindness heaven." Here she trembled and broke down.

"You know, too," she continued presently, "what has been the end of all this, the shameful end. I am not come to blame you. I do not blame you, for the fault was mine, and if I have anything to forgive I forgive it freely, and whatever memories may still live in my heart I swear I put away all bitterness, and that my most earnest wish is that you may be happy, as happiness is to you. The mistake was mine; that is, it would have been mine were we free agents, which, perhaps, we are not. I should have loved my husband, or rather the man whom I thought my husband, for with all his faults he was of a different clay to you, Edward."

He looked up, but said nothing.

"I know," she went on, pointing to the picture over the mantelpiece, "that your mind is still set upon her, and that I am nothing, and less than nothing, to you. When I am gone you will scarcely give me a thought. I do not know if you will succeed in your end, and I think that the methods you are adopting are wicked and shameful. But whether you succeed or not, your fate also will be what my fate is—to love a person who is not only indifferent to you, but who positively dislikes you, and reserves all her secret heart for another man, and I know no greater penalty than is to be found in that daily misery."

"You are very consoling," he said, sulkily.

"I only tell you the truth," she answered. "What sort of life do you suppose mine has been when I am so utterly broken, so entirely robbed of hope that I have determined to leave the world and hide myself and my misery in a sisterhood? And now, Edward," she went on after a pause, "I have something to tell you, for I will not go away, if, indeed, you allow me to go away at all after you have heard it, until I have confessed"—and she leaned forward and looked him full in the face—"I shot you on purpose, Edward."

"What!" he said, springing from his chair, "you tried to murder me?"

"Yes, yes; but don't think too hardly of me. I am only flesh and blood, and you drove me mad with jealousy—you taunted me with having been your mistress, and said I was not fit to associate with the lady whom you were going to marry. It made me mad, and the opportunity offered—the gun was there, and I shot you. God forgive me. I think that I have suffered more than you did. Oh! when day after day I saw you lying there and did not know if you would live or die, I thought I should have gone mad with remorse and agony!"

He listened so far, and then suddenly walked across the room toward the bell. She placed herself between him and it.

"What are you going to do?"

"Going to do! I am going to send for a policeman and give you into custody for attempted murder, that is all."

She caught his arm and looked him in the face. In another second she had loosed it.

"Of course," she said, "you have a right to do that. Ring and send for the policeman, only remember that the whole truth will come out at the trial."

This checked him, and he stood thinking.

"Well," she said, "why don't you ring?"

"I do not ring," he answered, "because, on the whole, I think I had better let you go. I do not wish to be mixed up with you any more. You have done me mischief enough. you have finished by attempting to murder me. Go; I think that the convent is the best place for you; you are too bad and too dangerous to be left at large."

"Oh!," she said, like one in pain. "Oh! and you are the man for whom I have come to this! Oh, God! it is a cruel world." And she pressed her hands to her heart and stumbled rather than walked to the door.

Reaching it, she turned, and her hands still pressing the coarse blue gown against her heart, she leaned her back against the door.

"Edward," she said, in a strained whisper, for her breath came thick, "Edward—I am going forever—have you no kind word to say to me?"

He looked at her, a scowl upon his handsome face, and then by way of answer he turned upon his heel.

And then by way of answer he turned upon his heel.

And so, still holding her hands against her poor broken heart, she went out of the house, out of Boisingham, and of touch and knowledge of the world. These two were, though she knew it not, once and once only, fated to meet again, in after years, and under circumstances sufficiently tragic, but the story of that meeting does not lie within the scene of this history. To the world Belle was dead, but there is another world of sickness, and sorrow, and sordid unchanging misery and shame, where the lovely face of Sister Agnes moves to and fro like a ray of God's own light, and there those who would know her must go to seek her.

Poor Belle! Poor, shamed, deserted woman! She was an evil doer, and the fatality of love and the rush of her quick blood, and the unbalanced vigor of her mind, which might, had she been more happily placed, have led her to all things that are pure, and true, and of good report, had combined to drag her into shame and misery. But the evil that she did has been paid back to her in full measure, pressed down and running over. Few of us need to wait for a place of punishment to get the due of our follies and our sin. Here we expiate them. They are with us day and night, about our path and about our bed, scourging us with the whips of memory, mocking us with empty longing, and the hopelessness of despair. Who can escape the consequence of sin, or even of the misfortune which led to sin? Certainly Belle did not, nor did Mr. Quest, nor even that fierce hearted harpy who haunted him to his grave.

And so good-by to Belle. May she find peace in its season.

CHAPTER XXXVII.

COL. QUARITCH EXPRESSES HIS VIEWS.

Meanwhile things had been going very ill at the castle. Edward Cossey's lawyers were carrying out their client's instructions to the letter with a perseverance and ingenuity worthy of a county court solicitor. Day by day they found some new point upon which to harass the wretched squire. Some share of the first expenses connected with the mortgages had, they said, been improperly thrown upon their client, and they again and again demanded, in language which was almost insolent, the immediate payment of the amount. Then there was three months' interest over due, and this also they pressed and clamored for, till the old gentleman was nearly driven out of his senses, and, as a consequence, drove everybody about the place out of theirs.

At first this state of affairs began to tell upon his constitution, which, strong as he was, could not at his age withstand such constant worry. He grew to look years older, his shoulders acquired a stoop, and his memory began to fail him, especially on matters connected with the mortgages and farm accounts. Ida, too, became pale and ill; she caught a heavy cold, which she could not throw off, and her face acquired a permanently pained and yet listless look.

One day, it was on the 15th of December, things reached a climax. When Ida came down to breakfast she found her father busy poring over some more letters from the lawyers.

"What is it now, father?" she said.

"What is it now?" he answered, irritably. "Why, it's another claim for £20, that's what it is. I keep telling them to write to my lawyers, but they won't, at least they write to me, too. There, I can't make head or tail of it. Look here," and he showed her two sides of a big sheet of paper covered with statements of accounts. "Anyhow, I have not got £200, that's clear. I don't know where we are going to find the money to pay the three months' interest. I'm worn out, Ida, I'm worn out; that's the long and short of it. I get so confused with all these figures. I'm an old man now, and all these troubles are too much for me."

"You must not talk like that, father," she answered, not knowing what else to say, for affairs were indeed desperate.

"Yes, yes, it's all very well to talk so, but facts are stubborn. Our family is ruined, and we must accept it."

"Cannot the money be got anyhow? Is there nothing to be done?" she asked, desperately.

"What is the good of asking me that? There is only one thing that can save us, and you know what it is as well as I do. But you are your own mistress. I have no right to put pressure on you. You must please yourself. Meanwhile I think we had better leave this place at once and go and live in a cottage somewhere, if we can get enough to support us; if not, we must starve, I suppose. I cannot keep up appearances any longer."

Ida rose and with a strange, sad light of resolution shining in her eyes came to where her father was sitting and, putting her hands upon his shoulders, looked him in the face.

"Father," she said, "do you wish me to marry that man?"

"Wish you to marry him? What do you mean?" he said, not without irritation and avoiding her gaze. "It is no affair of mine. I don't like the man, if that's what you mean. He is acting like—well, like the cur that he is, in putting on the screw as he is doing, but of course that is the way out of it and the only way, and there you are."

"Father," she said again, "will you give me ten days, that is, until Christmas day? If nothing happens between this and then, I will marry Mr. Edward Cossey."

A sudden light of hope shone in his eyes. She saw it, though he tried to hide it by turning his head away.

"Oh, yes," he answered, "as you wish; settle it one way or the other on Christmas day, and then we can go out with the New Year. You see, your brother James is dead, and I have no one left to advise me now, and I suppose that I am getting old. At any rate, things seem to be too much for me. Settle it as you like. Settle it as you like," and he got up, leaving his breakfast half swallowed, and went off to moon aimlessly about the park.

So she made up her mind at last. This was the end of her struggling. She could not let her old father be turned out of house and home to starve, for practically they would starve. She knew her hateful lover well enough to be aware that he would show no mercy. It was a question of the woman or the money, and she was the woman. Either she must let him take her or they must be destroyed, there was no middle course. And in these circumstances there was no room for hesitation. Once more her duty became clear to her. She must give up her love, she must give up herself. Well, so be it. She was weary of the long endeavor against fortune, now she would yield and let the tide of utter misery sweep over like a sea—and bear her away till at last it brought her to that oblivion in which, perchance, all things come right or are as though they had never been.

She had scarcely spoken to her lover, Harold Quaritch, for some weeks. She had, as she understood it, entered into a kind of unspoken agreement with her father not to do so and that agreement Harold had understood and respected. Since their last letters to each other they had met once or twice casually or at church and interchanged a few different words, though their eyes spoke another story, and touched each other's hands and parted, and that was absolutely all. But now that she had come to this momentous decision, she felt that he had a right to learn it, and so once more she wrote to him. She might have gone to see him or told him to meet her, but she would not. For one thing she did not dare to trust herself on such an errand in his dear company, for another she was too proud, thinking that if her father came to hear of it he might consider that it had a clandestine and underhand appearance.

And so she wrote. With all she said we need not concern ourselves. The letter was passionate, more passionate than one would perhaps have expected from a woman of Ida's calm and stately sort. But a mountain may have a heart of fire, although it is clad in snows, and so it sometimes is with women who look cold and unemotional as marble. Besides, it was her last chance—she could write him no more letters, and she had much to say.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

The boiler of the steamer "Vill de Tangier" exploded at Marseilles. Three were killed and four badly injured. The steamer is much damaged.

Ten thousand dollars is now the highest recorded price for a violin. The Alard Stradivarius has passed from France to England for that sum, to go into the collection of a Scotchman. It is dated 1716.

BE CONVINCED BY PROOF POSITIVE.

March 25, 1890.

Manufacturers of the Great Sierra Kidney and Liver Cure:

GENTLEMEN:—I have been taking your Great Sierra Kidney and Liver Cure for Kidney troubles, and I am so much better I thought I would drop you a line. In fact I feel that I am cured. I have taken four bottles and am on my fifth now. I can truly say many thanks for your wonderful and great remedy. I would recommend it to all that are afflicted with any kidney trouble. Very thankfully yours,

L. D. HEARNE,

SEATTLE, Wash.

When you hear a young man say that a girl has no heart you may be pretty sure that she has his.

OUR LITTLE WORRIES AND ILLS.

It is the little things of life, the worries of to-day and to-morrow, that make the crow's feet around our eyes. So the little pains of an hour or a minute break down the constitution. Look after the little ills. BRANDRETH'S PILLS cure dyspepsia, or indigestion, headache, pain in the shoulders, coughs, tightness of the chest, dizziness, sour stomach, bad taste in the mouth, bilious attacks, palpitation of the heart, inflammation of the lungs. Pain in the region of kidneys, and a hundred other painful symptoms are the offspring of dyspepsia. One or two pills every night is sufficient. BRANDRETH'S PILLS are sold in every drug and medicine store, either plain or sugar coated.

Better use, on a rainy day, mind and pen than tongue and jack knife.

SELECT PULLMAN TOURIST EXCURSIONS.

Select Pullman Tourist Excursions. Commencing Wednesday, June 4th, the Northern Pacific Railroad will inaugurate a series of select tourist excursions to all Eastern cities, to leave San Francisco semi-monthly. Our route—S. P. Co., "Shasta Line" to Portland. Northern Pacific Railroad via Columbia River and Tacoma to St. Paul. Choice of routes east of that point. Our Cars—Pullman's tourist cars furnished completely with every necessary comfort, in charge of Pullman porter, and under the supervision of one of our traveling passenger agents. Our rates same as via other lines. Send for descriptive tourist folder, together with maps, illustrated pamplets, etc. T. K. Statler, Passenger Agent, 618 Market street, San Francisco, California.

It takes a man with a pretty strong constitution to rise with the lark after being out on one all night.

CONSUMPTION SURELY CURED.

TO THE EDITOR—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the above named disease. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been permanently cured. I shall be glad to send two bottles of my remedy free to any of your readers who have consumption if they will send me their express and post-office address. Respectfully,

T. A. SLOCUM, M. C., 181 Pearl St., New York.

A man who owns a goat has only to earn his bread; he has his butter for nothing.

AN ELEGANT PACKAGE OF FINE CARDS.

Including 15 rare novelties, shapes and artistic imported oleographic and chromatic cards. This large and beautiful collection sent by mail to anyone who will do this:—Buy a box of the genuine Dr. C. McLane's Celebrated Liver Pills from any druggist, price 25 cents, and mail us the outside wrapper with your address, plainly written and 4 cents in stamps. The genuine McLane's Pills are prepared only by Fleming Bros., Pittsburg, Pa., and have been in constant use for over sixty years. They are superior to all others in purity and effectiveness. A certain cure for indigestion and sick headache. Address, Fleming Bros., Pittsburg, Pa.

The man who ought to listen and learn usually does most of the talking.

A FORTUNATE YOUNG MAN.

James T. Gough Wins $15,000 in The Louisiana State Lottery.

Young James T. Gough son of the well known butcher of that name, who keeps the Hudson Market on Grove street, is one of the happiest men in Jersey City just now. Though only twenty-two years of age, young Gough has acquired in a single day by a fortunate stroke in The Louisiana State Lottery a sum of money which it has taken many another man years of toil and sacrifice to accumulate.

He was the lucky holder of one-twentieth of the ticket which won the capital prize of $300,000 in the April drawing, and on Monday evening he received the sum of $15,000.

Mr. Gough is a bright looking young man and has been engaged during the past few years in managing a branch of his father's market on Harrison avenue, opposite the bell tower.

The story of his good fortune having been received with a great deal of incredulity, a reporter for the Jersey City News met him in his father's market on Grove street and asked him about the rumor.

"It is perfectly true," he said, "that I won $15,000 in the April drawing of The Louisiana State Lottery and received the money on Monday evening. You see I bought tickets off and on, but never met with any success, and last December I stopped altogether.

"Then, this Spring, something put it into my head to buy a ticket, and I invested a dollar for the April drawing. You can imagine how surprised I was when I saw that my ticket had won a twentieth of the capital prize. Fifteen thousand for one is a pretty good investment, don't you think so?" The reporter replied that it was and asked Mr. Gough what he proposed to do with the money. He replied that he had not thoroughly made up his mind yet, but he would invest it in some good security.

"The butcher business," he added "is good enough for me yet."

Jersey City seems to be particularly fortunate in lottery matters. Another young man living on the Heights some time ago won $15,000 in The Louisiana State Lottery and with the money built a row of houses in the vicinity of the Jackson avenue station.

Then the luck of Noah D. Taylor which enabled that gentleman to erect the hotel now bearing his name, is a part of Jersey City's history.—Jersey City's (N. J.) News, May 1.

The ruler of Morocco is able to do a Dey's work.

A pocket match-safe free to smokers of "Tansill's Punch" 5c. Cigar.

No Time to Spare—Minister (seeing pack of cards on the table)—Do you play cards, Mrs. Goody? Mrs. Goody—You really must excuse me, I haven't time now.

Your Blood

Needs a good cleaning this spring, in order to overcome the impurities which have accumulated during the winter, or which may be hereditary, and cause you much suffering. We confidently recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla as the very best spring medicine. By its use the blood is purified, enriched and vitalized, that tired feeling is entirely overcome and the whole body given strength and vigor. The appetite is restored and sharpened, the digestive organs are toned, and the kidneys and liver invigorated.

"After suffering for over two years from general debility and dyspepsia, I was finally persuaded to try Hood's Sarsaparilla, and I take great pleasure in saying that after taking three bottles I feel greatly relieved. I hope that any sufferers from the above complaints who happen to see this will take courage and try Hood's Sarsaparilla. MRS. L. N. PETERSON, 6 Oak Grove Ave., San Francisco, Cal.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Sold by druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared only by C. I. HOOD & Co., Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar

BEECHAM'S PILLS

ACT LIKE MAGIC

ON A WEAK STOMACH.

25 Cents a Box.

OF ALL DRUGGISTS.

A Dahlonega (Ga.) boy, in addition to attending school, carries the mail twenty miles each day.

For relieving Throat Troubles and Coughs "Brown's Bronchial Troches" have a world-wide reputation. Sold only in boxes. Price 25 cents.

The man who believes in nothing is as big a fool as he who believes in everything.

DON'T GO OFF BEFORE YOU ARE READY,

Particularly on a long journey. Be fully prepared. You cannot be, permit us to say, unless you are accompanied with the traveler's and tourist's vade mecum, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, most genial of appetizers, acclimatizers and promoters of digestion. Against sea sickness, malaria, cramps and colics begotten of badly cooked or unwholesome food and brackish water, nervousness, increased by travel, chronic biliousness and constipation, the Bitters is a sovereign preventive. It imparts a relish for food not altogether to your taste, and prevents it from disagreeing with you. Never was there such a capital thing for the unfortunate dyspeptic who stands in dread of the best cooked meal. Stomachic trouble caused by ill prepared viands aboard ship, on steamboats, and rations hastily bolted at railway restaurants, is soon remedied by the Bitters, which gives a quietus also to rheumatism, kidney troubles and insomnia.

It is the skirt of a lady's ball dress that costs; the corsage does't come high.

Six Novels Free, will be sent by Cragin & Co., Philada., Pa., to any one in the U. S. or Canada, postage paid, upon receipt of 25 Dobbins' Electric Soap wrappers. See list of novels on circulars around each bar. Soap for sale by all grocers.

The London Enquirer says the United States has the best torpedo service of any nation in the world.

Beware of imitations of the genuine Seal of North Carolina Plug Cut Tobacco.

When in San Francisco stop at Straub's Restaurant and Saloon, 327 and 329 Bush Street. Best to eat and drink. No fancy prices.

Try Germea for Breakfast.

INFANTILE Skin & Scalp DISEASES cured by CUTICURA Remedies.

FOR CLEANSING, PURIFYING AND BEAUTIFYING the skin of children and infants and curing torturing, disfiguring, itching, scaly and pimply diseases of the skin, scalp and Blood, with loss of hair, from infancy to old age, the CUTICURA REMEDIES are infallible.

CUTICURA, the great Skin Cure, and CUTICURA Soap, an exquisite Skin Beautifier, externally, and CUTICURA RESOLVENT, the new Blood Purifier, internally, cure every form of skin and blood diseases, from pimples to scrofula.

Sold everywhere. Price CUTICURA, 50c.; SOAP, 25c.; RESOLVENT, $1. Prepared by the POTTER DRUG AND CHEMICAL CORPORATION, Boston, Mass. Send for "How to Cure Skin Diseases."

Baby's Skin and Scalp preserved and beautified by CUTICURA SOAP.

KIDNEY PAINS, Backache and Weakness cured by CUTICURA ANTI-PAIN PLASTER, an instantaneous pain subduing plaster. 25c.

Colds Coughs Croup.

are surely cured by Perry Davis'

Pain Killer

read the directions carefully

To cure Biliousness, Sick Headache, Constipation, Malaria, Liver Complaints, take the safe and certain remedy, SMITH'S

BILE BEANS

Use the SMALL SIZE (40 little beans to the bottle). They are the most convenient; suit all ages. Price of either size, 25 cents per bottle.

KISSING at 7, 17, 70: Photo-gravure, panel size of this picture for 4 cents (coppers or stamps).

J. F. SMITH & CO.,
Makers of "Bile Beans." St. Louis, Mo.

$40 FOR A MOWER!

The manufacturers are largely overstocked with the celebrated Victor Mower, and have authorized us to sell as follows: 4-ft. Mower, $40; 5-ft. Mower, $50; 6-ft. Mower, $55.

This machine has no superior and few equals, as everyone who has used it will testify. THESE PRICES MEAN BUSINESS. Be quick about it. Terms Cash with order. All family and farm supplies at equally advantageous rates. Send for full list to Smith's Cash Store, 418 Front St., San Francisco, Cal.

PUMPS

FORCE and SUCTION.

For hand, wind-mill and power use.

TANKS, PIPE, HOSE, ETC.

Woodin & Little,

312 & 314

Market Street,

San Francisco, Cal.

Catalogue mailed free. Send for it.

STEINWAY. KRANICH, PEASE & BACH, Gabler, Roenisch Pianos; Burdett Organs, Band Instruments. Largest stock of Sheet Music and Books. Bands supplied at Eastern Prices. MATTHIAS GRAY CO., 206 Post Street, San Francisco.

S. F. N. U. No. 414. New Series No. 21

ST. JACOBS OIL

SURE CURE.

CURES PERMANENTLY

RHEUMATISM.

The Cripple. The Cure.

Lowell, Mass., July 9, 1887.

The boy Orrin Robinson, a poor cripple on crutches, who was cured by St. Jacobs Oil of rheumatism in 1881, is well; the cure has remained permanent. He is now at work every day at manual labor. GEO. C. OSGOOD, M. D.

AT DRUGGISTS AND DEALERS.

THE CHARLES A. VOGELER CO., Baltimore, Md.

Plump and rosy are the babies living upon

LACTATED FOOD

Physicians prescribe it.

Invalids use and relish it.

A picture of five charming babies, also valuable pamphlet, sent on application.

WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO., Burlington, Vt.

ANY ONE CAN DYE DIAMOND DYES

It's easy to dye with Diamond Dyes Because so simple.

It's safe to dye with Diamond Dyes Because always reliable.

It's economy to dye with Diamond Dyes Because the strongest.

You ought to dye with Diamond Dyes Because they are best.

Our new book, "Successful Home Dyeing," giving full directions for all uses of Diamond Dyes, sent free on application. Diamond Dyes are sold everywhere, or any color mailed on receipt of price, 10 cents.

WELLS, RICHARDSON & CO., Burlington, Vt.

THE SMOKER

Will have no other Tobacco

Who once tries

"SEAL OF NORTH CAROLINA"

Plug Cut.

This is the secret of its Immense sale.

TRADE MARK Damiana Bitters.

The great Mexican Remedy for Disorders of the Kidneys and Bladder. Damiana is recognized by all physicians as the best Nervous Stimulant, gives health and strength to the Generative and Procreative Organs. For sale everywhere

NABER, ALFS & BRUNE,

123 & 325 Market St., S. F., Agents.

Statement, Jan. 1st, 1890.

R. H. McDonald PRES'T. F. V. McDonald, CASHIER.

ESTABLISHED 1863.

Oldest Chartered Bank on the Pacific Coast.

PACIFIC BANK

Capital Stock $1,000,000.00.

SURPLUS $ 750,000.00.

AV. RESOURCES $4,500,000.00

We have just added another $50,000 to our surplus fund and thanking our friends and the public for past favors we respectfully ask a continuance of the same.

San Francisco, Cal. R. H. McDonald, Prest.

Deposits Received from $1 upwards.

Money Saved is Money Earned.

Deposit in a good Savings Bank.

PEOPLES HOME SAVINGS BANK

608 Market St., cor. 4th St. IN FLOOD BUILDING

San Francisco, California.

Guarantee Capital, $1,000,000

Interest apportioned from date of deposit. Deposits from any part of the Pacific Coast States may be sent by registered letter, post office money order, bank draft or express.

Copy of By-laws and list of shareholders in Guarantee Capital sent free on application.

The People's Home Savings Bank has exceptional facilities for safe, profitable and satisfactory investment of funds at good rates of interest. Thankful for past favors and asking for continuance of the same. Respectfully,

Columbus Waterhouse, Prest.

TIGER

FRONT-CUT MOWER!

The Best Mower in the Market,

AND

The Only Machine to Buy!

"The best Mower I have ever seen work."—David Hall, Cloverdale.

"The Best Mower I have ever used, and my experience extends over thirty years, and with all the different kinds."—Augustus Moore, Sunol

"I will cheerfully recommend it to all."—William Armstrong, Petaluma.

"Lightest draft Mower I have ever used."—George C. Hanley, Livermore.

"Has given perfect satisfaction."—Thomas Richardson, Oakdale.

"Would not exchange it for any Mower I know of."—A. W. Collis, Brentwood.

"Best Mower I ever used."—Thomas Holden, San Buenaventura.

"The Lightest Draft and Strongest Cutting Mower in the market."—John Worswick, Grangeville.

Write for Special Circulars.

Baker & Hamilton,

San Francisco and Sacramento.

5 TON SCALES $66 Beam Box Tare Beam ALL SIZES Send for Terms

JONES OF BINGHAMTON N. Y. HE PAYS THE FREIGHT

USE NEW WELLINGTON COAL.

A LOVELY WOMAN

overheard one say of her, "By Heaven, she's painted!" "Yes," retorted she indignantly, "and by heaven only!" Ruddy health mantled her cheek, yet this beautiful lady, once thin and pale, and suffering from a dry, hacking cough, night-sweats, and spitting of blood, seemed destined to fill a consumptive's grave. After spending hundreds of dollars on physicians, without benefit, she tried Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery; her improvement was soon marked, and in a few months she was plump and rosy again,—a perfect picture of health and strength.

This wonderful "Golden Medical Discovery," now world-famed as a remedy for consumption, which is really lung-scrofula, is not only an acknowledged remedy for that terribly fatal malady, when taken in time and given a fair trial, but also for all forms of Scrofulous, Skin and Scalp diseases, as White Swellings, Fever-sores, Hip-joint Disease, Salt-rheum, Tetter, Eczema, Boils, Carbuncles, Erysipelas and kindred ailments. All scaly, crusty, itching, troublesome eruptions yield readily to its curative powers. It invigorates the liver, enriches the blood and promotes all the bodily functions. It is the only liver, blood and lung remedy, sold by druggists, under a positive guarantee, that it will do all it is recommended to, or money paid for it will be promptly refunded. No ordinary remedy could be sold under such peculiar and trying conditions. To do so would bankrupt its manufacturers. Not so with "Golden Medical Discovery" which outsells every other liver, blood and lung remedy, throughout the civilized world. It's a legitimate medicine, not a beverage; contains no alcohol, to inebriate; no syrup or sugar to derange digestion; as peculiar in remedial effects as in its composition; it stands alone, transcendent in curative properties, unique in composition, its sale backed by a substantial forfeit in case of failure to do all that is claimed for it. There's nothing at all like it, either in composition or curative effects; therefore, don't be induced to take something else represented to be "just as good," that the dealer may make a larger profit. Every dealer knows it's the best and only guaranteed Liver, Blood and Lung Remedy.

WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Proprietors, No. 663 Main Street, Buffalo, N. Y.

SICK HEADACHE,

Bilious Headache, Dizziness, Constipation, Indigestion, Bilious Attacks, and all derangements of the stomach and bowels, are promptly relieved and permanently cured by the use of

DR. PIERCE'S PELLETS.

They are Purely Vegetable and Perfectly Harmless.

As a LIVER PILL, Unequaled!

ONE PELLET A DOSE! SMALLEST, CHEAPEST, EASIEST TO TAKE.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

COUNTY OFFICIAL PAPER.

C. MULHOLLAND, - - - Proprietor.

Independence, Cal.,

FRIDAY, - - - JULY 4, 1890.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

VOL. XXII. NO.4. INDEPENDENCE, INYO CO., CAL., JULY 4, 1890. WHOLE NO. 1027.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

COUNTY OFFICIAL PAPER.

C. MULHOLLAND, - - - Proprietor.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One Year (post paid)	$4.00
Six Months	2.25
Three Months	1.50
One Month	50
Single Copies	20

MR. AND MRS. BOWSER.

BY MRS. BOWSER.

After supper the other night Mr. Bowser went to his overcoat pocket and got out a small book and began reading it, and after waiting long enough to let him understand that I had no curiosity on the subject I queried:

"Something new on poultry?"

"No."

"It isn't Hoyle?"

"No."

"Well, what is it?"

"I can tell you the title of it, but you can't understand. It is a very, very deep work."

"Oh, it is! You can understand a very, very deep work and I can't."

"Naturally. Man has the stronger, deeper mind, of course. The title of this work is: 'Nature's Diseases and Remedies—Control of the Body by the Mind.' "

"Bosh!"

"What? What's that?"

"You are too old to waste time on such nonsense, Mr. Bowser."

"Nonsense! Why, it's the plainest principle of philosophy in the world. The human body is but clay, the soul is immortal. The soul is the mind. The mind ought to be able to control the body."

"Yes, in some cases."

"In all cases, Mrs. Bowser. For instance, you stub your toe. It hurts. You let your mind turn to something else and the pain ceases."

"Humph!"

"That's it! That's the usual way of the ignorant—ridicule what they can't argue and discuss in a sensible manner. I have often wondered if you really had a soul."

"Don't worry yourself, Mr. Bowser. If I haven't got any soul I've got some common sense."

"Very well. It's no use to talk to a person brought up in a log house on the edge of a huckleberry marsh. I know that the mind can control the body. You deny it. I hope to furnish you with proofs within the week."

He was to furnish them that night. We were about ready to go up stairs and he had been out bareheaded and in his slippers to see if the barn door was locked, when he suddenly gave a great start and cried out:

"Geo—mi—my to Johnson!"

"What's the matter?"

"That tooth tried to jump clean out of my head. Whew! Yi! Hang it!"

He sat down to hold his jaw and heave to and fro, and I said:

"Your tooth jumps. It hurts you. You let your mind turn to something else and the pain ceases."

He looked up at me with the glint of pounded glass in his eyes, and was about to reply in kind, when the jumper jumped in on him again and he seized his jaw and yelled:

"Great Scots to scatteration, but I can't stand this! Get me some camphor!"

I got him some, and after a time the pain eased up and he went to bed. He expected me to say something about "Control of the Body by the Mind," but I was waiting. I knew that he wouldn't get off so easily, and could afford to give him a little time. I was just falling asleep when Mr. Bowser suddenly lifted his feet high in air and uttered a whoop which set a neighbor's dog to barking, followed by the remark:

"Thunder and lightning!"

"Mr. Bowser, are you asleep?" I asked.

"Asleep! No! I'm dead! Say, this confounded thing has come back on me! Where's that camphor?"

"On the bureau, dear, but it won't do you no good."

"Oh-h-h-h! Jewhittaker! My stars and soul, but she's jumping my jaw right out of its socket! I've got to have something done for me or I won't live ten minutes!"

"Pshaw, Mr. Bowser—have some spunk about you! What is a little toothache?"

"Grit! grit!" he shouted, as he danced around on one leg. "I've got more grit than any seven families like yours rolled together; but this is awful—awful! Are you going to lie there and see me drop dead?"

"You can stop it if you will. Just lie down and put your mind at work. Think of something else. Think of being out in the woods at a May day festival—beautiful flowers—happy children—green"——

"Green—whoop——! ! !——shut up!" he yelled. "Haven't we got any paregoric in the house?"

I had to get up and go down and stir up the fire, and make a warm poultice for his jaw, and fuss around for an hour, and he finally grew easier. Then I said to him:

"Mr. Bowser, you brought home a book last night."

"Never."

"You brought home a book about the control of the body by the mind."

"No, I didn't!"

"In your argument you declared that the soul was the mind, and that the mind had control of the body."

"Get into bed and keep still."

"No, sir! You stub your toe. It hurts. You let your mind turn to some"——

"I never said it!"

"Mr. Bowser, what cured your toothache—faith, imagination or liquids?"

"I—I—who's talking about toothache? Mrs. Bowser, you get into bed and go to sleep, and in the morning I'll have a long talk with you. We don't seem to be mated to each other, and the matter can probably be arranged to our mutual satisfaction and without publicity."

Next morning he got down stairs and got hold of the book first, and I afterwards found some of the leaves scattered in the back yard.—Detroit Free Press.

Suspicious.

"What did hubby do while his wifey was away?" asked the dear creature on her return.

"I played solitaire nearly every evening," he replied, sheepishly.

"Who with?" was the next query, in a tone of deep suspicion.—New York Herald.

Injured Innocence.

Police Magistrate (to tough looking customer)—If you did not steal this watch, as you claim, how does it happen you were found with it hidden in your bootleg?

Prisoner (haughtily)—That's where I always carry my watch, your honor!—Chicago Tribune.

He Was Sorry.

Minister (to small boy)—Sonny, do you chew tobacco?

Small Boy—Sorry, mister; I just put the last in me mouth.—Jester.

The Starring Tour.

Fakir (the tragedian)—Ha, how fortunate I am! Just think of the rest of the company footing it home over the ties, weary and footsore, and without shelter!—Life.

THE SHOP-GIRL TALKS.

Her Feet Pain Her and She Feels That She's Terribly Ill-Used.

"Ah-h! I feel as if my feet had gone to Heaven!" said the sales-girl, as she exhibited a No. 3 foot in a No. 5 slipper. "I get solid comfort out of these old slippers when I come home in the evening with my feet hurting so I can hardly stand. Shoes too tight? Not a bit of it! My shoes are always too large for me, but standing all day swells my feet and makes them painful.

"The first day I went into the store I thought I'd die before six o'clock, but one can get used to any thing except being scolded—that I never can get used to, no matter how long I may stay in the store. Why am I so naughty as to need scolding? It ain't me that's naughty, it's the customers. I do get so mad sometimes that I could jump over the counter and beat 'em! They ain't got no notion of buying when they come in, but all the same they want to see this, that and the other thing, and so they make me take down box after box, and then they stand there, worrying the life out of me, asking no end of questions, and crowding out other folks who might buy if they could only get a chance; and when all's said and done, they walk away without my making a sale, and then I get a scolding from one of the bosses. Which one? Well, most always it's our buyer. I spoke back to him the other day! Says I: 'It takes a smarter girl than me to make folks buy when they ain't got no money to buy with.' Why, bless your heart! Sometimes women, wearing hats and wraps that I'd be ashamed to be seen in, will come to my counter and make me show 'em my highest priced lace. They ain't the only kind, though, that only come to look. There's them in sealskin sacks and $50 bonnets who will spend hours in a store, and go out without buying a penny's worth. Them's the sort that make me nervous when they come around, because I get my awfullest scoldings on their account. I s'pose it's fun for them to come and see what we've got, and then go on to see what they've got in other stores, but it ain't no fun for the girls who are expected to make sales.

"Are we expected to lie professionally? What do you mean by that? Oh, to 'get off goods on customers.' Well, some of the young ladies will do it because it's in 'em and they can't help it, but lies ain't paid extra, as in some stores where a girl gets a commission on her sales of out-of-style wraps and things. Employers Christian men? I don't know as our bosses are extra Christian, but I heard one of 'em say once that lying wasn't business-like. You see our store has a reputation to keep up. Talk about salesladies saying what ain't so, you ought to hear the customers! When I was in the cloak department last year I was every day sending off goods c. o. d. that did nothing but come back to me again. The ladies, when they said they'd take them, had no more idea of paying for them than I had.

"As for sass, let people say what they will, I'm sure there's them that come to buy that's sassier than any of them that sell. My, how sick and tired I used to get of trying sack after sack on a customer, and when I'd tell her it was a perfect fit, having her ask me if I 'called wrinkles a fit!' Of course a sack will be full of wrinkles when a woman is twisting around in front of the mirror, trying to see her own back. On my sacred word of honor, I've tried thirty sacks on one customer, and then, after taking up my time for two hours or more, and maybe preventing my getting my lunch till 3:30 in the afternoon, she'd go away saying that probably she'd come in again the next day, and then she hoped she would have a more obliging young woman to wait on her. Just the other day I was stooping down behind the counter, putting away some lace, when, the first thing I knew, somebody poked me in the back with a great umbrella, and when I looked up the customer that done it began business by threatening to report me for inattention.

"I tell you, with all the work I have to do, and all I have to put up with, nobody ought to grudge me my ten dollars a week. A fair salary, you say? Yes, I s'pose it is. I know it is twice as large as what some girls get in common stores, but then in common stores they employ common girls."—N. Y. Tribune.

THE GUILELESS PEDDLER.

He Is a Student of Human Nature and Makes the Study Pay.

Peddler (respectfully)—Madam, I have not called for the purpose of trying to sell you any thing, but to inquire if there is a man named Jones living in this vicinity.

Lady of the house—Mr. Jones lives next door.

"Thanks. He has a boy about twelve twelve years of age, has he not?"

"He has."

"I think he is the man I am looking for. I was directed a few moments ago by a friend of his to call on him. I'm making my last trip as a traveling vendor of merchandise, and have closed out all my juvenile wares except this brass-tipped drum with ebony sticks, which I shall offer to Mr. Jones at such a figure that—but pardon me. I had no intention of detaining you. Thanks for your kindness, madam. Good day."

"Hold on! What is that drum worth?"

"It is really worth $5, but I have decided to offer it to Mr. Jones for his boy at the merely nominal figure of 75 cents."

"I'll take it."

Same peddler (at house of Jones' family next day, with a job lot of tin whistles and kazoos to be sold in a lump)—"Madam, I have not called for the purpose of trying to sell you any thing, but to inquire if there is a man named Brown," etc.—Chicago Tribune.

—An alchemist when experimenting in earths for the making of crucibles found that he had invented porcelain; and a watchmaker's apprentice while holding a spectacle glass between his thumb and forefinger noticed through it that the neighboring buildings appeared larger, and thus discovered the adaptability of the lens to the telescope.

OVER A BATH TOWEL.

How Three Women Drove a Clerk to the Verge of Madness.

The soul and body of the dry goods clerk waxeth weary when he sees three women headed for his counter. One is bad enough; two are worse, but three women in counsel over the merits of a bath towel are enough to make a poor worn-out clerk wish he might depart from earth by the electricity method.

"It seems like quite a good one for the money, don't it?" says the intending purchaser.

"Well, I don't know," says the other, holding the towel up at full length and eyeing it critically. "I got one quite as good for thirty-seven and a half cents at White's."

"You did?"

"Yes, but it was eight or nine weeks ago and I don't s'pose they've any more like it."

"I may be mistaken, but I've an idea it would shrink," says number three, taking the towel from number two and wrapping a corner of it ever her finger. "See, it's a little thin."

"Well, I wouldn't mind if it did shrink a little, because—oh, look at this one! Isn't it lovely?"

"Beautiful! How much is it?"

"A dollar and a half."

"Mercy! I'd never pay that for a bath towel."

"Nor I."

"Those colors would fade."

"Of course they would."

"Do you know I like good plain crash as well as any thing for towels."

"I don't know but—see these towels for fifteen cents I paid twenty-five for some last week not a bit better."

"Let's see; are they full length? Yes, they are cheap. I've a notion to—but I guess I won't. I have so many towels now."

"They're a bargain if one really needed them."

"How do you like towels used as tidies?"

"Horrid!"

"I think so, too."

"So do I—oh, let me tell you, I saw a woman on the street one day with an apron made out of a red and white fringed towel."

"Mercy! Looked like fury, didn't it? How was it made?"

"Oh, one end was simply gathered to a band, and—there, the towel was just like this one; and she'd taken it so and gathered it in so, and—really, it didn't look so bad after all."

"Do you suppose the colors would run in this border?"

"Well, I hardly know. I had one very much like it once, and the colors in it ran dreadfully the very first time I washed it."

"Then I'll not take this for I—why if it isn't four o'clock and—

"Who'd ever have thought—"

"I must go."

"So must I."

"And I—no, I'll not take the towel to-day."—Truax Dane, in Detroit Free Press.

THE SOCIETY BUD.

How She Makes Her Debut and What Usually Follows It.

A young girl who is about to enter society is termed a "bud" because she is an undeveloped blossom, even more attractive to many than the full-fledged society girl who has had experience of worldly things gained by going through a couple of seasons.

The first duty of a bud is to have a tea, to which all her father's and mother's friends as well as her own should be invited, and then she is really started on her career. Teas are rather tame affairs, not only because the ice cream, wafers and coffee are insufficient to satisfy the hunger of the sterner sex, who prefer, when they go out, to have something substantial if no dancing is in order, but because the attractive girls who are not receiving are apt to decline being present if there is another engagement of a more important character scheduled for the same evening. The tea, however, is a highly necessary event, and it is a cheap way of paying off any number of social obligations.

At her first tea the bud always looks charming in her attractive white garb, and her cousins or school friends who assist her in making the affair pass off pleasantly are particularly anxious to call attention to her good looks as they beam over huge corsage boquets and endeavor to prove even more attractive themselves.

After the tea, when the young girl has been flattered by the attention she has received, and has been called upon by young men, and older ones, who have had more experience in addressing compliments to the fair sex, she is ready for balls, germans and dancing classes, and if she has any personal charms and knows how to sway her form in time to waltz, polka, yorke, Berlin, Danish dance or militaire schottische music, she is sure to have a good time. Even if she knows but few people others are sure to solicit an introduction from her chaperon or other attendant, and her dances will soon be engaged.

The first season of a young girl is for her a delightful existence. Alas, that it is so quickly gone.—Philadelphia North American.

Paid for Wearing Fine Clothes.

A prominent tailor having noticed the article regarding the probable establishment here of a dress suit department for rent, said: "There is another new dodge now being introduced in Western cities; most of the leading houses employ society young men to introduce their new styles. Do you not hear people wonder where this and that young man, who is known to work for a small salary, gets his money to buy so many fine clothes. This explains the matter, for whenever a new style shoe, hat, suit of clothes, neckties, etc., etc., comes out these young men don them at once and pay therefor by a systematic plan of advertising. These men not only get their clothes, but many receive a good salary besides." This is what you might call traveling on one's shape and living on it, too.—St. Joseph Herald.

—The German Emperor appears to be a hard worker, giving himself up to his official duties so completely that he often does not get over five hours' sleep out of twenty-four.

THE LIMEKILN CLUB.

Hon. Candlelight Johnson Delivers His Famous Address on "Man."

When the meeting opened Brother Gardner announced that Hon. Candlelight Johnson, from Nova Scotia, was in the ante-room, and would deliver his celebrated address on "Man." The address, it was hoped, would contain many pointers of interest, and Samuel Shin was duly warned that any unnecessary agitation on his part during the delivery would result in a fine of at least $6,000, if not indefinite suspension.

When the orator was escorted into the hall, he proved to be a short, fat, one-story man of a faded raspberry color, but he had the dignity of a man who knows that he has five dollars in cash in his pocket and his board paid in advance, and no visible signs of embarrassment were apparent as he surveyed the audience before him and began:

"My frens, de subjick of my orashun to-night is 'Man.' It is an orashun dat I erected myself, widout any help. I didn't steal it from Shakspeare, an' I didn't hire no white man to write it. [Sensation.] I was ober ten y'ars gittin' dis orashun together. I went slow an' sure. I didn't propose to fall into any mistakes. I knowed dere was a heap to talk about, an' I wanted to git it all in whar' it oclonged. I will now purceed:

"Man! Who an' what is man? What was man created fur? Why was he created in de form of a man instead of a hyena? What use is he? What was he bo'n fur? In seekin' to answer dese queshuns, my friens, you insensibly find yourselves delving into de regions of philosophy an' follerin' de unknown paths of speculashun. In de fust place, what was de use of all dis world widout man? It would simply be so much land an' water gwine to waste. [Cries of 'Hear! Hear!'] 'Spose'n all dese yere rabbits an' 'possums an chickens were running around widout any body to make use of 'em—what a shameful waste of meat it would be! [Groans.] Dat's one reason man was put yere—to eat chickens and sich. ['Yum yum!']

"What is man?" continued the speaker, as he shifted his weight to his left leg. "He's a substance composed of skin, blood, bones, teeth, toe-nails, brains, ha'r, and so on. He was created fust, an' out of de best goods in de market. Dat's de reason he's a heap purtier dan a dog or cat. [Sensation.] If he had happened to hev bin created along about fifth or sixth he might hev been a ground-hog or a whale. [Involuntary shivers.] Dar ar' seberal different sorts of men, as moas' of you probably know. Dey wasn't all made of de same color nor in de same shape, kase dat would hev bin monotonous. It would hev tried de eye, same as lookin' at a flock of white sheep. Dar am no sort o' queshun in my mind dat black used to be de moas' popular color in de beginnin' of things ('hear! hear!'), but de white man fo'ced his way in an' got hisself boosted up to de top by some some sort of gum game. [Growls and mutterings.]

"Did you ever stop to think why man didn't grow to be ten feet high an' to weigh a ton? You probably neber did, an' yit de explanashuns ar' right to hand. If he was ten or 'leven feet high he could walk around no back yard widout sawin' his neck on a clothes-line, an' if he weighed a ton, an' de roof of his hen house sprung a leak, how'd he ever git up dar to fix it? [Great sensation.] Man was bo'n to walk uprightly. Why wasn't he bo'n to go on four legs, like a dog? Dis philosophical queshun probably nebber occurred to your intellect, but de reason is plain. You couldn't hev crowded ober ten of him into a street kyar at once." [Cries of "A-h-h!"]

The speaker here paused to wipe his heated brow and moisten his throat with a potash tablet, and, after a brief rest, continued:

"While man is de highest order of creashun, he has at de same time got de moas' low down traits of character about him. While on my way frew Canada some man stole my umbrella from under my very nose (decided sensation), an' on two odder occashuns efforts war' made to despoil me of my sachel. Dat was de work of man. Would de lion, de elephant or de grizzly b'ar descend to sich petty meanness? [Cries of 'No! never!'] Wolves lib together in harmony, but man is allus in a fuss. De hyena knows when he's got a good thing, but man is allus wantin' better. Take an old hoss or a mewl an' you kin depend upon him ebery day in de week. Take de aiverage man an' you needn't expect to find him twice alike de same day. [Applause from Elder Toots, which was broken short by Give-adam Jones giving him a kick.] Of what use is man? He think's he's a heap of use, but he's dun mistaken 'bout dat. De world was heah befo' he cum.

"My frens," continued the orator, as he tightened his left suspender an inch, "man is a pore, useless, misguided critter. He's generous one day an' stingy de next. He's way up on de pinnacle of greatness at ten o'clock in de mawnin', and at three in de afternoon he'll dodge round a co'ner to git shet of givin' a blind man a cent. [Cries of "That's so, old man!"] One day he'll put his hand into his pocket an' give an orphan asylum a hundred dollars, an' de next he'll sue a pore man fur de value of two shillin's. ['Yes! Yes!'] It ar' my candid opinyun, based upon long y'ars of observashun, dat man ar' a failure, as a man. [Sensation.] He would hev made a fust-rate animal or a bird, and would hev bin a decided success as an alligator. I hev no recommends to make. Man is as he is, an' he can't be no different. [Groans.] Arter de meetin' is out a collecksbun will be tooken up fur de benefit of de undersigned, who's mighty sorry he wasn't bo'n a rhinoceros. Thankin' you fur your interest an' courtesy, will now bid you a percolated good night an' stand at de doah as you go out."

The finis was received with a whoop of applause, but for some unexplained reason the applause and the collection didn't gibe within a mile, the cash taken in amounting to only seven cents. That was another proof of the fact that man is a failure.—Detroit Free Press.

QUEER WAYS IN TIBET.

How the Natives Make and Serve Tea—Other Peculiar Customs.

"The people of Tibet have the funniest way of making tea you ever heard of," said Lieutenant Rockhill, that far-away country's most recent explorer. "To begin with, the tea they use comes from Western China in the shape of bricks, which are pressed into such convenient shape for carrying overland. All sorts of teas are made into bricks for purposes of transportation across Asia, it being very well understood by connoisseurs in the herb that a sea trip spoils it. But the tea imported into Tibet is of very poor quality as a rule. There is in it as much weight of twigs as of leaves.

"Having pounded a portion of the brick tea in some sort of mortar, the Tibetan housewife puts in a large copper vessel and there permits it to boil over a fire made from dry manure. The resulting solution she pours into a queer-looking wooden churn through a coarse willow basket that serves as a strainer. To the liquid in the churn, before proceeding further, she adds a portion of butter and some salt. The mixture is then churned up in ordinary fashion, and, when it is thoroughly mixed, is poured into a teapot of bronze. From the teapot it is dispensed into the little cup-shaped vessels which each Tibetan carries with him or her.

"The cup-shaped vessel I refer to is usually of wood, sometimes lined with silver. Tibetans employ it not only as their sole drinking utensil, but also as a dish for solid food. What they consume mainly as a substantial diet is parched barley. When a gentleman of Tibet feels hungry he sits down, and taking from a leather pouch a portion of barley he mixes a little water with it, and stirring it up into a dough eats it in that shape. Thus hunger is satisfied and he goes on his way rejoicing. In what we call the pleasures of the table the Tibetan takes no stock whatever. There never was a typical Asiatic yet who cared any thing about amusement in the ordinary sense of the word. He doesn't go to the theater—there is no such institution in the land of the lamas. Nor does he indulge in any other rational enjoyment of civilization, though he does not scorn what might be called the primary vices.

"Tibet is a very cold country, but its inhabitants do not warm themselves by the consumption of fuel. When the weather is chilly they simply put on more clothes in proportion as the mercury might fall, if there was a thermometer to register the temperature by. Their garments consist mainly for each individual of a voluminous cloak with sleeves and a high collar, under which a shirt is sometimes worn. Boots, with soles of rawhide and uppers of cloth and cotton, are made for them in China. For rainy days a circular cape of felt is provided. The gun used by a Tibetan has a long fork attached to it, which is stuck in th ground for use as a rest for the weapon. Naturally, the deadly instrument is of primitive pattern, intended to be set off with a priming, and the native wears attached to his belt a number of little brass cones, each of them containing an exact load of gunpowder. Those people of the country who live on the great elevated plains or steppes dwell in black tents; but the villagers reside usually in two-story stone houses, the lower story being given up to a stable for the cattle. Not all of Tibet, as is popularly supposed, is actually subject to China. The country is divided up, politically speaking, into many tribes, and not a few of these tribes are governed by chiefs who owe no allegiance to anybody—not even to the Chinese Emperor."—Washington Star.

A MOHAMMEDAN WEDDING.

Some of the Peculiarities of the Moslem Marriage System.

An "English marriage in high life" without either bride, bride-maids or other palpitating ladies on view, would smack strongly of Hamlet with the character role omitted. What, too, could the assembled gentlemen do, deprived, as they would be, of those pleasant feminine criticisms of the guests and dresses which obtain on such occasions? There are some masculine cynics who consider weddings rather melancholy affairs, even under the best circumstances, but they would be infinitely more so without the presence of lovely woman. That is, from the European standpoint. Mohammedans of good position take precisely the opposite view. The Calcutta native papers lately gave a long and graphic account of the marriages of two young men, the sons of a local magnate. Nautches, illuminations, flags, furniture and decorations are described in the most minute details. But no mention is made of the brides, nor does a single feminine name appear in the lengthy list of guests who attended. Fifteen hundred turned up, including maharajahs, nawabs, mirzahs and syuds galore, and the affair went off beautifully in every way. But poor Nourmahal did not even get a peep at it, unless surreptitiously through some chink in the tenana. It is further stated that all the guests made a point of offering felicitations to the bridegrooms, but no good wishes did they bring for the brides. Yet, odd to say, all seem to have enjoyed themselves greatly, or the festivities would not have been prolonged until far into the night. Unless, therefore, we assume that Asiatic human nature is altogether different from European, some advantage might possibly accrue to English society from experimenting with the Moslem marriage system.—London Globe.

—Rich Potatoe Cakes: Bake a dozen of very fine potatoes, remove the peels and cut away all the dark spots; weigh off three-fourths pound, and pound into it one-fourth pound of butter; then add one-fourth pound of pulverized sugar, two ounces of dry and sifted flour, the yelks of two eggs and a pinch of salt. Form it into a rather soft paste, then flour the board, roll it out nice and sleek, stamp or cut into any shape preferred, place them on a greased baking-sheet, egg them over, and bake in a moderate oven. Bake rather crisp. These can be flavored with essence, if approved.

AMERICA'S DISCOVERY.

How the Expedition Led by Columbus was Fitted Out.

The statement is sometimes made that Queen Isabella of Spain pawned her jewels in order to provide funds for fitting out the expedition for the discovery of America. This is a very old story, first told not long after the death of Columbus, and though it is not true, its origin is not difficult to discover. As every fact about the great voyage is of interest to Americans, especially now that we are soon to celebrate its four hundredth anniversary, we will briefly give the facts about the raising of the money.

Columbus went to the Spanish court to lay his ambitious project before the King and Queen just as the last great stronghold of the Moors, Granada, had surrendered to the forces of Ferdinand and Isabella.

In some respects it was an inopportune time. The country was exhausted by the war which had just closed with this splendid success, and the joint monarchs were not inclined to embark upon any new and uncertain adventure; and what was more important, the treasuries of both Aragon and Castile were nearly empty. Queen Isabelle, in fact, had been obliged to pledge her jewels to get money for the prosecution of the war against the Moors.

The Genoese navigator pleaded his cause in vain. Both King and Queen listened coldly to his enthusiastic plans, in which the recovery of the Holy Sepulchre from the Turks was strangely mingled. They refused to assist his enterprise, and Columbus in despair left Granada, intending to make a final effort for assistance at the French court.

At his audience with the Spanish monarchs, however, there were two persons who were convinced of the truth of his daring theories, or at last of the wisdom of attempting to prove them to be true. They were, singularly, the finance ministers of the two crowns, St. Angel for Aragon and Quintanilla for Castile.

St. Angel obtained an audience as soon as possible with the Queen, and so warm was his advocacy of the theories of the Genoese stranger, so convincing his arguments for assisting him, that Isabella, fired by his enthusiasm, exclaimed, "I undertake the enterprise for my own crown of Castile, and will pledge my private jewels to raise the necessary funds."

The minister assured her that this generous measure would be unnecessary, and hastened from the royal presence to send a messenger after Columbus, who speedily returned to Granada. The arrangements for the expedition were speedily made. St. Angel supplied about seventeen thousand florins from the treasury of Aragon.

The three Pinzon Brothers, ship-builders at Palos de Mogner, loaned Columbus one-eighth of the necessary money, he having assumed this share of the expense in consideration of his receiving one-eighth of the profits. They also furnished additional money and two of the vessels, and all three of the brothers went upon the expedition, two as captains of the caravels La Nina and La Pinta, the other as a pilot. The third vessel, La Pinta, was impressed, to the great terror of the owner and the crew.

It may be well to add that Columbus repaid the loan made by St. Angel with the gold which he brought back from the New World on his first voyage. A portion of this gold was employed in gilding the vaults and ceilings of the royal saloon of King Ferdinand's grand palace at Zaragoza, or Saragossa, the Aljaferia, where possibly it may still be visible to the American pilgrim.—Youth's Companion.

WOMEN AND NOVELS.

A Word of Advice to the Alert, Practical Women of America.

We have thousands of novels every season sown broadcast over the land and we are asked, "Shall women read novels?" She simply will read them. As well ask if, thirsting, she would not drink of the spring gushing from its source, or the stream rushing past. It may have tonic iron or even a sulphurous flavor, but she will drink or sip "you may depend on't."

If you ask, "to advantage?" that is not as clear and largely depends. Still one need not take dark views and marshal long arguments, "in starched procession of If and But." The old dangers are averted by the very conditions of the time. The higher education has created an appetite for wholesome mental food—the radical temperament is active and one thing follows fast on the footsteps of another; if our girls are reading more, they are dancing, riding, dressing more; going more into music, athletics, nursing, charity, literary work; in short, realities force themselves on the attention to such a degree that few women are in danger of neglecting their duties to waste long hours in fictitious joys and woes alone.

Many women are exiles through life. They do not even hear afar the music of existence, all for which a woman longs instinctively; they are shut out by poverty, by illness, by a monotonous round of prosaic duty none the less well performed.

A repast without bread lacks the essential, but a repast all bread—! The condemnation of novel reading would shut out from such lives the tenderness, the grace, the inspiration of Dickens, Thackeray, MacDonald; of Black, Hardy and Wallace; of George Eliot, Miss Woolson, Mrs. Spofford, Mrs. Whitney; even the divertisement of Haggard, Jules Verne and the "Duchess"—seeing that a little syllabub does not hurt a sound digestion.

Then a word in the ear, oh, keen-eyed, alert, practical women of America! Do not "throw away" time in novel reading, but use it wisely in doing that same.

"When the brain gets dry as an empty nut,
When the reason stands on its squarest toes," seat yourself in the easiest of easy chairs and read a novel, but see to it that it be a good one.—Ladies' Home Journal.

—Two Chester (Pa.) fishermen quarreled about the ownership of a boat and neither would surrender his claim. The boat was finally sawed in two, and each took a part UNION WAR-SONGS.

How Some Boys in Blue Entertained a Party of Confederates.

A day or two after Lee's surrender in April, 1865, I left our ship at "Dutch Gap," in the James river, for a run up to Richmond, where I was joined by the ship's surgeon, the paymaster and one of the junior officers. After "doing" Richmond pretty thoroughly we went in the evening to my rooms for dinner. Dinner being over and the events of the day recounted, the doctor, who was a fine player, opened the piano, saying: "Boys, we've got our old quartette here; let's have a sing." As the house opposite was occupied by paroled Confederate officers, no patriotic songs were sung. Soon the lady of the house handed me this note:

"Compliments of General —— and Staff. Will the gentlemen kindly allow us to come over and hear them sing?" Of course we consented and they came. As the General entered the room, I recognized the face and figure of one who stood second only to Lee or Jackson, in the whole Confederacy. After introductions and the usual interchange of civilities, we sang for them glees and college songs, until at last the General said:

"Excuse me gentlemen, you sing delightfully, but what we want to hear is your army songs." Then we gave them the army songs with unction, the "Battle Hymn of the Republic," "John Brown's Body," "We're Coming, Father Abraham," "Tramp, Tramp, Tramp, the Boys are Marching," through the whole catalogue, to the "Star Spangled Banner"—to which many a foot beat time as if it had never stepped to any but the "music of the Union"—and closed our concert with "Rally Round the Flag, Boys." When the applause had subsided, a tall, fine looking fellow in a Major's uniform exclaimed: "Gentlemen, if we'd had your songs we'd have licked you out of your boots! Who could'nt have marched or fought with such songs? While we had nothing, absolutely nothing, except a bastard 'Marseillaise,' the 'Bonny Blue Flag,' and 'Dixie,' which were nothing but jigs. 'Maryland, my Maryland' was a splendid song, but the old 'Lauriger Horatius' was about as inspiring as the 'Dead March in Saul,' while every one of these Yankee songs is full of marching and fighting spirit." Then turning to the General he said: "I shall never forget the first time I heard 'Rally Round the Flag.' 'Twas a nasty night during the 'Seven Days' Fight,' and if I remember rightly it was raining. I was on picket, when, just before 'taps,' some fellow on the other side struck up that song and others joined in the chorus until it seemed to me the whole Yankee army was singing. Tom B——, who was with me, sung out, 'Good heavens, Cap, what are those fellows made of, anyway? Here we've licked 'em six days running, and now on the eve of the seventh, they are singing "Rally Round the Flag."' I am not naturally superstitious, but I tell you that song sounded to me like the 'knell of doom,' and my heart went down into my boots; and though I've tried to do my duty, it has been an uphill fight with me ever since that night."

The little company of Union singers and Confederate auditors, after a pleasant and interesting interchange of stories of army experience, then separated, and as the General shook hands at parting, he said to me: "Well, the time may come when we can all sing the 'Star Spangled Banner' again." I have not seen him since.—Richard Wentworth Browne, in Century.

KING GAMBRINUS.

The Mythical History of the Inventor of Germany's Amber Drink.

Gambrinus, Gambrivius or Cambrinus (the name is also given as Campfer, Gamber or Cimber) is the mythical inventor of beer or ale. He is usually spoken of as a King or a Duke of Flanders and Brabant who flourished at some uncertain period in the remote past. But a tradition, favored by mediæval German historians, made him a king of the Tuiscones, or ancient Germans, the seventh in descent from Noah, who succeeded his father, Marso, about 1730 B. C., and founded the cities of Cambray and Hamburg (the latter was in effect known to the Romans as Gambrivium), and after a glorious reign of forty-four years, during which he extended the boundaries of his kingdom from the Rhine to Asia, passed away and was deified by his subjects. Gambrinus is represented as a portly gray-beard, rubicund, but dignified with a crown on his head, the regal ducal ermine on his shoulders, and a foaming tankard in his hand. Not infrequently he is set astride of a beer barrel. In German taverns his portrait is usually accompanied by verses of which the following is a translation: "My name when I was living was Gambrinus, King of Flanders and of Brabant; I made malt from barley, and invented the brewing of beer. That is why the goodly company of brewers can truly claim that they have a king for a master. Let any other guild of workmen show the like of their patron!" Tacitus mentions that beer, or the juice of barley, was the favorite drink among the Germans of his time. Before then, however, beer was known in Egypt and in Greece, though never in Rome. The Egyptians attributed its invention to their god, Osiris, and it is a curious coincidence that German tradition gives Isis to Gambrinus as his wife.—Lippincott's Magazine.

—Deadwood, D. T., has an anti-fat society, the members of which pledge themselves to abstain from eating any thing that will add to their corpulency.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

C. Mulholland,
EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.
PUBLISHED EVERY FRIDAY

INDEPENDENCE, CAL

FRIDAY JULY 4 1890

County Official Paper.

DEMOCRATIC COUNTY COMMITTEE Meeting.

A MEETING OF THE DEMOCRATIC CENtral Committee of Inyo county is hereby called for

WEDNESDAY, JULY 16th,

At Independence, at the hour of 7 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of selecting two delegates to represent Inyo county in the State Convention, which will meet in San Jose on August 19, 1890, and for the transaction of such other and further business as may come before the meeting.

COMMITTEE:

ROUND VALLEY—C. H. Parsons
LINCOLN—T. K. Hutchison
BISHOP—I. P. Yaney
LAWS—Barton McGee
BIG PINE—R. P. Hessian
FISH SPRING—James Lane
COTTONWOOD—S. P. Roberts
POLETA—George Storey
INDEPENDENCE—D. Stubblefield
KEYNOT—T. McDonough
GEORGES CREEK—W. L. Hunter
LONE PINE—John Lucas
KEELER—John Barnes
CERRO GORDO—P. B. Nickerson
DARWIN—J. A. McKenzie
LOOKOUT—F. Fitzgerald
PANAMINT—H. G. Chickering
OLANCHA—E. I. Walker
AT LARGE—W. J. Lake, J. J. Gunn, E. Robinson, J. W. Murphy, J. White Smith.

E. ROBINSON, Chairman.
IRV. H. MULHOLLAND, Secretary.

POLITICAL ANNOUNCEMENTS.

All announcements under this head will be charged for at the uniform rate of Ten Dollars

For Superior Judge.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Superior Judge, subject to the action of the Republican County Convention.

GEORGE M. GILL.

For Superior Judge.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Superior Judge, Subject to the action of the Democratic county convention.

JOHN A. HANNAH.

For Superior Judge.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY DECLARE myself as a candidate for the office of Superior Judge, subject to the action of the Republican county convention.

A. R. CONKLIN.

For Sheriff.

ANNOUNCEMENNT IS HEREBY MADE that I respectfully declare myself as a candidate for the office of Sheriff, subject to the action of the Republican County Convention.

JOHN S. GORMAN.

For Treasurer.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Treasurer, subject to the action of the Democratic county convention.

J. J. MOORE.

For Sheriff.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Sheriff, subject to the action of the Democratic Convention.

BEN. T. WILLIAMS.

For Supervisor.

ANNOUNCEMENT IS HEREBY MADE that I will be a candidate for the office of Supervisor of the Third District subject to the action of the Republican Convention.

CHARLES A. WALTER.

For Assessor.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Assessor, subject to the action of the Democratic Convention.

C. W. GARRETSON.

For Sheriff.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT I RESpectfully declare myself as a candidate for the office of Sheriff, subject to the action of the Democratic Convention.

ALNEY I. McGEE.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE.

INYO MARBLE COMPANY.

Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Inyo county, Cal.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT AT A meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 26th day of June, 1890, an assessment (No. 10) of Ten Cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, No. 132 California street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 5th day of August, 1890, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on TUESDAY, the 26th day of August, 1890, by order of the Board of Directors.

G. W. LUCE, Sec.

Office—No. 132 California St., San Francisco, California.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE.

STEVENS DITCH COMPANY.

Location of principal place of business, Independence, California. Location of ditch, near Independence, Inyo county.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of a Board of Directors, held on the 31st day of May, 1890, an assessment (No. 4) of Ten (10) cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary at the office of the company, Independence, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 26th day of July, 1890 will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Saturday, the 30th day of August, 1890 to pay the delinquent assessment together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.

P. H MACK, Secretary.

FOURTH ANNUAL FAIR.

Agricultural District No. 18.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA.

(Composed Of The Counties Of

Alpine, Mono & Inyo

TO BE HELD AT

Independence.

Commencing Tuesday, September 23d, and Continuing Four Days

A. R. CONKLIN.....President.
C. MULHOLLAND.....Secretary.
O. I. MAIRS.....Treasurer.

DIRECTORS;

A. R. CONKLIN, W. S. ENOS, N. RHINE,
J. S. GORMAN, E. ROBINSON, F. McINER,
A. W. EIBESHUTZ, C. A. WALTER.

FIRST DEPARTMENT.

In this Department the same animal shall not be entered more than once, except in sweepstakes, or as a member of a family exhibited with its sire or dam. Any stallion, mare, gelding or colt competing in a race shall not be excluded from competing for premiums in their respective classes.

Tuesday.

CLASS I—THOROUGHBREDS.

Best stallion, any age	$25 00
Second best	15 00
Best mare, any age	20 00

CLASS II—STANDARD TROTTERS.

Best stallion, aged	$25 00
2-year old	15 00
Best mare	20 00

CLASS III—ROADSTERS.

Best roadster, aged	$20 00
2-year-old	15 00
team to buggy	20 00

Wednesday.

CLASS IV—HORSES OF ALL WORK.

Best stallion, aged	$20 00
2 year-old	15 00
1 year-old	10 00
Best colt	10 00
Best mare, any age	20 00
2-year-old	15 00
1-year-old	10 00
and family of 3 or more	20 00

CLASS V—DRAFT HORSES.

Best stallion, aged	$20 00
2-year-old	15 00
Best mare, aged	15 00
2-year old	10 00
and colt	15 00

CLASS VI—MATCHED TEAMS.

To be shown in harness.

Best matched carriage team	$15 00
buggy team	15 00

CLASS VII—SWEEPSTAKES.

Best stallion, any breed or age	$20 00
Best mare, any breed or age	20 00

Thursday.

CLASS VIII—JACKS.

Best jack, any age	$20 00
Second best	15 00

CLASS IX—MULES.

Best span, aged, owned by one person	$15 00
3 years or under " " " "	10 00

CLASS X—BULLS.

Best 3-year old or over, any breed	$20 00
2-year old, any breed	15 00
1-year-old, any breed	10 00

CLASS XI—COWS.

Best 3 year-old or over	$20 00
2-year-old	10 00
cow and calf	15 00
cow and 2 calves	20 00

All of the above to be exhibited at Race Track. Entries to be made with the Secretary not later than 6 o'clock p. m. on day preceding their exhibition.

Friday.

CLASS XII—SHEEP AND GOATS.

Best display of angora goats	$20 00
Best display of sheep	20 00

CLASS XIII—SWINE.

Best display of hogs	$15 00
Best sow and litter of 4 pigs	10 00

CLASS XIV—POULTRY.

Best display of fowls, any breed	$8 00
Second best	6 00
Best display of turkeys	5 00

Classes, 12, 13 and 14 to be exhibited at the Pavilion. Entries to be made with Secretary not later than 6 p. m. on day preceding their exhibition.

All stock to be exhibited must be on the ground at 10 o'clock a. m. on the day intended for their exhibition. No animal to leave place of exhibit on until 4 o'clock p. m. without permission of the Park Director.

SECOND DEPARTMENT.

All exhibits in the following departments must be produced in the District.

CLASS I—AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS.

	1st.	2d.
100 pounds of flour	$3 00	$2 00
barley	3 00	2 00
wheat	3 00	2 00
oats	3 00	2 00
rye	3 00	2 00
shelled corn	3 00	2 00
50 pounds corn in the ear	2 00
alfalfa seed	3 00	2 00
Display of Egyptian corn	2 00
Bale of timothy hay	4 00
alfalfa hay	4 00
Display of grasses	8 00
agricultural products	20 00	15 00

CLASS II—VEGETABLES, ROOTS ETC.

50 pounds Early Rose potatoes	$2 50	$2 00
100 pounds any variety of potatoes	2 50	2 00
25 pounds of sweet potatoes	2 50
20 pounds of parsnips	2 00	1 00
carrots	2 00	1 00
turnips	2 00	1 00
beets	2 00	1 00
tomatoes	2 00	1 00
50 pounds of onions	2 00	1 00
10 pounds of garden peas	2 00
white beans	2 00
bayou beans	2 00
lima beans	2 00
Sample of peppers	2 00
1 dozen cabbage	2 00	1 00
½ dozen squash	2 00	1 00
pumpkins	2 00	1 00
watermelons	2 00	1 00
cantaloupes	2 00	1 00
1 dozen cucumbers	2 00	1 00

CLASS III—DAIRY AND FARM PRODUCE.

10 pounds butter in 2 pound rolls	$3 00	$2 00
20 pound jar of butter	4 00	3 00
Cheese	3 00
10 pounds lard	2 00
Display of honey	5 00	3 00
Apiary display	10 00	5 00
Variety of fruit in jars	10 00	5 00
jellies	5 00	3 00
preserves	5 00	3 00
pickles	5 00	3 00
50 pounds ham	10 00
bacon	10 00

THIRD DEPARTMENT.

CLASS I—HORTICULTURAL PRODUCTS.

Display of apples	$7 50	$5 00
peaches	7 50	5 00
pears	6 00	4 00
plums	6 00	4 00
prunes	6 00	4 00
quinces	5 00
grapes	7 50	5 00
table grapes	3 00
raisin grapes	3 00
wine grapes	3 00
raisins	5 00
dried fruits	7 00	5 00
fruits of all kinds	20 00	10 00
½ dozen bottles of wine	5 00

FOURTH DEPARTMENT.

CLASS I—ARTISTIC.

Oil painting on canvas	$10 00
Second best	5 00
Crayon drawing	10 00
Satin and Japanese panel,	10 00
Pastel drawing	5 00
Collection of paintings on canvas	10 00
Photograph of scenery in district	5 00
Collection of photographs, Dist. scenery	10 00

FIFTH DEPARTMENT.

CLASS I—MINERALS ETC.

Cabinet of minerals from District	$25 00
Collection of curios from District	15 00
Display of marble	20 00
borax etc	10 00
soda	10 00
silver ore	10 00
gold ore	10 00
silver lead ore	10 00

SIXTH DEPARTMENT.

CLASS I—NEEDLE AND OTHER WORK.

Handsomest pillow shams	$5 00
and best patchwork quilt	5
crazy quilt	5
knitted quilt	5
sofa cushion	5
set of sofa tidies, 3 pieces	5
set of bureau tidies, 3 pieces	5
Greatest variety of crochet work	10
Best crochet quilt	5
embroidered ladies dress	5
childs dress	5
ottoman cover	5
table cover, 4 corners	5
scarf, 2 ends	5
pair of lambrequins	5
wall panel, or banner	5
silk on flannel	5
linen	5
Kensington, or wool	5
toilet set, 3 pieces	5
lace work, hand made	5
darned net, 3 pieces	5
crochet shawl	5
table scarf, hand painted	5
hearth rug	5
made lady's dress	5
display hand-knit work	5
fancy articles	10
wax work	5
Spanish needle work	5
hair work	5
hand-knit stockings	5
calico dress made by girl under 14	5
hand sewing, 4 pieces, girl under 16	5
crochet work, girl under 14	5
patchwork, girl under 14	5
hand made skirt, girl under 14	5

SPEED PROGRAMME.

TUESDAY.

RUNNING—½ mile dash for untried horses. Purse, $75.

TROTTING—½ and repeat, for 2 year-olds. Purse, $100.

WEDNESDAY.

TROTTING—2 in 3, mile heats, for stallions owned in district. Purse, $150.

RUNNING—½ mile and repeat for saddle horses Purse, $75.

THURSDAY.

RUNNING—2 in 3, mile heats. Free for all horses owned in district. Purse, $150.

TROTTING—2 in 3, mile heats, for double team. Purse, $100.

FRIDAY.

RUNNING—½ mile dash, free for all owned in district. Purse, $100.

TROTTING—2 in 3, mile heats. Free for all owned in district. Purse, $150.

RUNNING—1 mile, for Indian horses. No entrance fee. Purse, $25.

RULES.

In all the above races 3 or more to enter, 2 or more to start. Entrance fee, 10 per cent. of purse.

All entries to be made with the Secretary on or before 12 o'clock m. of the day preceding the race.

California State Agricultural Society Rules to govern running races. National Trotting Association Rules to govern trotting races.

In all exhibits of animals for premiums other things being equal, blooded stock will be preferred.

All articles included in the above list, except the first department, to be on exhibition at the Pavilion on second day and remain during the Fair.

Special premiums will be allowed for articles exhibited not included in above list

If you have entries to make, attend to it at once, and when your entries are made, see to it that they are on time and at place for examination by the committee.

Accept no rumors in regard to the business of the exhibition. If you do not know what to do, inquire of the officers whose duty it is to tell you. One half of the trouble and disappointment at the Fair is caused by relying on hearsay. Attend to your business yourself. If it is done wrong you know where the blame lies.

Read the rules, and, by example, at least, assist in enforcing them; but don't forget that mistakes will occur where many people are congregated. The Board endeavors to do justice to all.

If the Superintendents and Committeemen are not always ready at the appointed hour, keep your stock and articles where you can command them at any time. Remember that we have but little time to do much business; patience, with a little system, will overcome many obstacles.

The Board will give the same special attention to details that has contributed to success in the past. It remains for the exhibitors to achieve still better results for the Fair of 1890.

ADMISSION.

Life Membership	$30 00
Membership ticket, admitting member, wife and minor children	5 00
Single season ticket	2 50
To Pavilion, each	50
To Race Track, each	50

NATHAN RHINE.

NATHAN RHINE,
(Successor to Harris & Rhine.)
MERCHANT,
INDEPENDENCE
Inyo Co. Cal.
Wholesale & Retail
—DEALER IN—
General Merchandise

MY STOCK
CONSISTING OF
Almost every needed article is well calculated to satisfy the wants of everybody; and, as in the past, it will be our aim in the future to retain the extensive patronage enjoyed heretofore.

NATHAN RHINE.

NATHAN RHINE
BANKER
Independence, Cal.
SELL EXCHANGE
—ON—
SAN FRANCISCO
Draw Direct
—ON—
NEW YORK,
LONDON, England.
BERLIN, FRANKFORT-on-the-Main, GERMANY.

I AM PREPARED TO TRANSACT ALL KINDS,
—OF—
GENERAL
BANKING
&
EXCHANGE
BUSINESS.

Wechsel in beliebigen Summen auf Berlin und Frankfurt am der Main, Deutsche Vollmachten geter ligt. Geldsendungen von und nach Deutschland besorgt.

AGENTS FOR
WELLS FARGO
& CO'S.
EXPRESS

MUTUAL
Life Insurance Co.
OF NEW YORK
CAPITAL - - - - $5,000,000

LIVERPOOL
AND LONDON AND GLOBE
INSURANCE - COMPANY
Capital - - - - - $21,000,000

NATHAN RHINE.

MISCELLANEOUS.

J. R. ELDRED,
Sheriff and Tax-Collector.
INYO CO., CAL.

P. H. MACK,
COUNTY CLERK,
—AND—
Ex-officio Auditor and Recorder,
INYO CO., CAL.

GEO. M. GILL,
District Attorney,
INYO CO., CAL.

J. J. MOORE,
County Treasurer,
INYO CO., CAL.

S. P. M'KNIGHT, C. E.
COUNTY SURVEYOR
—AND—
U. S. Deputy Mineral Surveyor
For California and Nevada.
—BISHOP CREEK, INYO CO., CAL.—
The obtaining of United States mineral patents a specialty.
All kinds of surveying given the most careful and accurate attention.

JUSTICE OF PEACE,
C. MULHOLLAND.
Office in the "Independent" Building, Independence, Inyo county, Cal.

A. R. CONKLIN,
Attorney-at-Law.
Independence, Cal.
Will practice in all the Courts of the states of California and Nevada.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
Independence, Cal.

P. W. FORBES,
ATTORNEY AT LAW.
NOTARY PUBLIC.
Cases in U. S. Land Office a Specialty.
BISHOP, INYO COUNTY, CALIFORNIA.

IRVING J. WOODIN, M D.,
Physician & Surgeon,
(COUNTY PHYSICIAN)
Louise L. Woodin, M. D.
PHYSICIAN & SURGEON.
NIGHT CALLS ATTENDED.
Office and residence at the Reddy place, Independence.

W. H. GEORGE, M. D.,
Physician and Surgeon,
Bishop Creek, Cal.
Offers his professional services to the people of Bishop Creek and vicinity. Office and residence opposite Andrew Clark's.

F. E. Bunting, M. D.
Physician & Surgeon
LONE PINE, CAL
OFFICE IN GELCICH BUILDING
All calls attended to promptly.

Lodge 221, F. & A. M.
Regular meetings of Lodge No. 221, F. & A. M., for the year 1890 will be held at the lodge room at Independence on the following Saturday ..... January 18
" ..... February 15
" ..... March 1st
" ..... March 29th
" ..... May 3rd
" ..... May 31st
" ..... June 28th
" ..... July 26th
" ..... August 30th
" ..... September 27th
" ..... October 25th
" ..... November 22nd
" ..... December 20th
P. H. MACK, W. M.
C. MULHOLLAND Sec.

P. W. FORBES. P. H. MACK
MACK & FORBES.
Real Estate Agents,
Address, P. H. MACK, Independence, Cal.
P. W. FORBES, Bishop, Cal.

FRED BURCKHARDT
Watchmaker & Jeweler,
LONE PINE, CAL.
Time pieces of all descriptions repaired and regulated, satisfaction guaranteed. Jewelry made to order. Firearms repaired and jacketed.
All orders from any part of the country will be promptly attended to, at the most reasonable charges. At the old stand "Mechanics' Hall," Lone Pine.
FRED BURKHARDT.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CROCKER'S HOTEL.
BIG PINE - - CAL.
New House.
New Furniture.
Low Rates
Splendid hunting and fishing near by, in act, it is a veritable paradise for tourists and pleasure seekers.
Special attention given to the wants of every guest.
CROCKER BROS., Props.
sep1-tf

ANTONS SALOON
KEELER, CAL.
BEER, WINES, LIQUORS and CIGARS
All kinds of Fancy Drinks, including pure water. A comfortable and pleasant Hall.
JOHN C. ANTON Prop.

IRWIN'S SALOON
Cor. Edwards and Market Streets,
Independence . Cal.
THE PUBLIC GENERALLY ARE RESpectfully invited to call and inspect my establishment which has been entirely rebuilt and refitted in a style second to none on this side of the mountains. A SUPERB NEW BILLIARD TABLE provided for the amusement of patrons.
THE BAR
is supplied with the most celebrated brands of Wines and Liquors and the Finest Havana Cigars.
JOHN C. IRWIN, Proprietor.
feb12tf

Palace Saloon.
WALTER DEER, Lessee
—THE BAR—
Is constantly supplied with the best kinds of
WINES, LIQUORS, & CIGARS
The most careful attention given to the amusement and comfort of patrons.
A FINE BILLIARD TABLE
Is always at the disposal of visitors to the Palace Saloon. Dec 29-89

Pioneer
Livery & Feed Stables.
INDEPENDENCE, CAL.
Having returned and resumed the management of the above well known feed and livery stables, patrons can be assured of finding there the best of Horses, Teams, Saddle Horses, and
Livery Accommodations
in general. Also, Hay and Grain for sale by the pound or ton.
O. I. MAIRS, Proprietor.

E. H. Edwards,
—DEALER IN—
General Merchandise,
LONE PINE,
INYO COUNTY - - - CALIFORNIA.

BLACKSMITHING,
Horseshoeing, General Iron
—AND—
WAGON WORK.
PIONEER BLACKSMITH SHOP
Cor. Main St. & Depot Ave.,
INDEPENDENCE, CAL.
W. F. MATLACK.....PROPRIETOR.
Horseshoeing ..... $2 00 for Cash
For particulars, call and see
W. F. MATLACK.

LONE PINE
Blacksmith Shop.
F. C. Spear, Prop'r
—ALL WORK ON—
MINING TOOLS,
FARMING IMPLEMENTS
& FREIGHTING OUTFITS
—PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO—
HORSE SHOEING,
CARRIAGE WORK,
GENERAL REPAIRING
All work attended to with neatness and dispatch. Prices to suit the times.

BOOTS AND SHOES
MADE AND REPAIRED.
THE BEST MATERIAL.
FIRST-CLASS WORK.
Repairs done Promptly.
Prices Reasonable.
A. J. DAVIS,
nov 30-tf Independence,

TO ADVERTISERS
A list of 1000 newspapers divided into STATES AND SECTIONS will be sent on application—FREE.
To those who want their advertising to pay, we can offer no better medium for thorough and effective work than the various sections of our Select Local List. GEO. P. ROWELL & CO., Newspaper Advertising Bureau, 10 Spruce Street, New York

OFFICIAL.

Application for Patent.

Mining Application No. 247.

UNITED STATES LAND OFFICE, INDEPENDENCE, CAL., April 25, 1890.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT PATrick Reddy, whose post office address is San Francisco, California, has this day filed his application for a patent for fourteen hundred and forty-eigh and seven-tenths linear feet of the Bernon Quartz Mine or vein bearing galena, lead and silver, with surface ground six hundred feet in width, situated in Coso Mining District, County of Inyo and State of California and designated by the field notes and official plat on file in this office as Lot No. 42, in Township 19 South, Range No. 40 East, of Mt. Diablo Base and Meridian.

Said Lot No. 42 being described as follows, to wit:

Survey of Connecting Line:

Commencing at corner common to Sections 14, 15, 22 and 23 of T. 19 S., R. 40 E., M. D. B. and M., and running with Mag. Var. of 15 deg. 37 min. E. as follows:

N. 73 deg. 52 min. E., Needle varying along the line from N. 58 1-8 deg. E. to N. 58 3-8 deg. E. Magnetic. 71.99 chs to the S W cor. post of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine, being the S. E. cor. of the Bernon claim.

Survey of the Exterior Boundaries:

Commencing at a stake in high stone Mont. having pencil marks too dim to be read, being the S. W. cor. of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine and the S. E. cor. of the Bernon claim, thence deflecting L. 180 deg. 86 deg. 57 min. from connecting line extended N. 73 deg. 52 min. E. as assumed standard bearing of the survey, upon West boundary line of the Buena Ventura and the Defiance S. and L. Mine and East boundary line of the Bernon claim, and running as follows: 1. N. 19 deg. 11 min. W., upon East boundary of claim, local variation of declination of 0 deg. 18 min. E., 10.90 chs to a stake in front of [illegible] 2. [illegible] 3. [illegible] 4. [illegible] 5. [illegible] 6. [illegible] 7. [illegible] 8. [illegible] 9. [illegible] 10. [illegible] 11. [illegible] 12. [illegible] 13. [illegible] 14. [illegible] 15. [illegible] 16. [illegible] 17. [illegible] 18. [illegible] 19. [illegible] 20. [illegible] 21. [illegible]

INYO INDEPENDENT.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY, JULY 4.....1890

MARKET REPORT.

Bar silver, 104½
Lead, 4 52½
Copper, 16
Tin, 21 55
Sugar, .05½
Coffee, 17 @ 19¾
Wool, foothill, 17 @ 20.

Religious Services.

Rev. J. H. De La Matyr will preach at Lone Pine at 11 a. m.; Georges Creek 2:30 Independence at 7:30 o'clock in evening. Sunday School at Independence and Lone Pine at 11 o'clock a. m.

COURT NOTES.

Superior Court of Inyo County, California
Hon. John A. Hannah, Judge.

FRIDAY, June 21st.

Estate of B. Peeler, deceased—Filed Order for publication of notice to creditors.

WEDNESDAY, July 2d.

Owen Neylon vs. John F. Milner—Filed Defendant's demurrer to Plaintiff's complaint.

THURSDAY, July 3d.

Filed application of James Hutchings for admission to practice as an attorney and counsellor at law.

BORN.

ANGER—At Camp Independence, June 25 to Mr. and Mrs. L. A. Anger, a son.

DIED.

McGOVERN—At Georges Creek, June 29th, infant daughter of Mr. and Mrs. A. G. McGovern, aged 27 days.

D. Holland came up from Lone Pine yesterday.

Independence is handsomely decorated for the Fourth.

Jacob Vagt has commenced work on the racetrack at the Fort.

J. Wilson and J. G. McLean came up from Darwin yesterday.

J. W. P. Laird went to Big Pine last Tuesday, returning next day.

Farmers complain of great scarcity of labor; men cannot be had.

J. A. Waddell and Robert Stewart came down from Hawthorne on Wednesday.

Independence has a footrace fever. Four pairs of spiked shoes were out on the track this week.

Arthur Smith and J. E. Reynolds came in on Wednesday from Lookout and will help celebrate the Fourth.

A. J. Davis has again opened his shoe shop at Independence. All orders for new work will be attended to promptly.

P. W. Forbes of Bishop was in town several days early in the week. It is said that Pete's favorite song is "Sally In Our Alley."

Mr. E. W. Clark and Mrs. Clark, Dr. C. E. Reed and Mr. B. Rosenthal arrived at Independence last Monday from Hawthorne.

Manuel Diaz went to Bishop last Tuesday to take part in the footrace. He is the fastest man entered and in all probability will win the purse.

A party consisting of Messrs. Lowell Eugley, George Gilliam and F. E. Smith came down from Big Pine on Wednesday to spend the Fourth.

A hearty laugh on Wednesday evening gave notice that Jake Miller was in town. Jake will take in the Fourth and anything else that comes his way.

Terrible hot weather prevails in the East and many deaths have been the consequence. From all the large cities come reports of fatal cases of sun stroke.

Last Monday Boots Conklin and an Indian stacked twenty-two tons of hay. One Buffrake and loader was used to gather the hay and deliver it on the stack.

Harry Jiggins got back from a trip to Mojave last Wednesday morning. He preferred traveling at night on his return the heat out on the desert being excessive during the day.

On Wednesday Ray Yaney, son of Mr. I. P. Yaney of Bishop, had a leg broken. He was riding after cattle when his horse fell with the foregoing result. The boy is aged nearly fourteen years.

Pap Walker has beaten the record this year with his garden at Oancha. Parties who have been there recently say his raspberries and cream, apricots and ditto and peaches just make one think of Paradise.

Harry Jiggins reports the road south from Lone Pine very much in need of repair. At the Diaz pond the road is under water and washed out and along by the Johnson place the wheels sink in mud to the hubs.

Conn and Trudo make regular shipments of borax from their works in Saline Valley. They have now demonstrated that their borax field is large and valuable. It is due to them that the value of the Saline borax deposit has been proven.

A. G. McGovern and William Pierson fitted up a small apparatus and have made a test for borax on a location in Saline Valley. They find that three tons of the crude stuff yield two tons of borax. This is a big paying yield and they will at once put in a boiler and pans and make borax in shipping quantities. Mr. McGovern says they have three thousand acres of ground that appears to be uniform in character.

The Bakersfield Californian says the INYO INDEPENDENT was in error when it stated that a postponement of the Elliott case had been asked by the people of Inyo County and was refused. About June 1st District Attorney Gill of Inyo telegraphed District Attorney Fay of Kern requesting him to ask for a postponement of the case. Mr. Fay replied that a postponement could not be granted. This was the authority for the article in the INDEPENDENT referred to by the Californian.

In The Mountains.

At Independence it is very warm, but a ride of three hours up Kearsarge canyon takes one to a region where there is coolness enough. In that time the camping place at the head of Onion Valley can be reached. The altitude is 9,400 feet above sea level. Under a pine tree of vast size spread out the blankets, lie down and look around. Just across the valley, not more than half a mile distant, is the base of the peak Rex Monte, the summit of which rises in the air to a height of 13,380 feet above sea level. West from this are several other peaks of equal or greater altitude. On the south, rising up vertically, is the tremendous wall of Williamson, the peak fully 14,500 feet above sea level. Close to camp on the south a cataract comes down in one straight shoot of quite 500 feet. The water seems like snow, not falling, but rolling down the precipice. West from the camp about 300 yards another cataract of equal height but greater volume comes down into the valley, and north from that is a third waterfall of similar character. At one point the latter stream has a clean fall of over 100 feet. All of these streams unite near the lower end of Onion valley. For a short distance below this the stream flows between grassy banks, then plunges over into the canyon, down which it rushes in one continuous stream of snow-like foam till it reaches Owens valley and is divided into many channels and is conducted over the land for irrigation. A staff climb up the canyon of the middle stream, and about one and a half miles from camp, is a lovely little lake. A short distance above that a vast snow field stretches across the canyon and at present horses can not well be taken any further. Tying the animals in a little grove of stunted pines we go on afoot. The snow is cut into deep furrows by the wind and is difficult to pass. Rolling, sliding and crawling we get over it and about half a mile further reach the second lake. This is at least four times the size of the one below. All about the lake on the sides of the mountains are vast fields of snow. On the south side of the lake for about one-third its length is a great bank of snow which touches the water. The willows are just beginning to leave out and vast numbers of flowers are blooming, all of them small and startlike. Around the margin of the lake it is like April; just above it is January. Snow, snow, everywhere snow, and well of rock nearly as white towering above. Only a small circular canopy of the heaven's delicious blue can be seen above the towering peaks. All over the surface of the lake trout are leaping at insects, darting out of the blue water like flashes of light. These trout will not at this season take worms or other similar bait, but the angler who is skilled in the mysteries of minnie flies, and is provided with a proper assortment, will here find abundant reward. Want of time and space prevent writing more on the subject at this time. Thousands of Americans rush to Europe every year and spend millions of dollars visiting scenes that are tame and uninteresting compared to the far grander scenery of California, and right here in Inyo county is the grandest scenery in our grand State.

The Record Broken.

In a race against six other horses at Chicago last Saturday Stanford's stallion Racine ran a mile in 1:39¾. He was ridden by a California jockey, Joe Navice. The performance of Racine beats all previous records for a mile, being a quarter of a second faster than that of the famous Ten Broeck, who on May 24, 1877 when five years old covered the distance in 1:39¾, over the Louisville course. This was made against time. For over thirteen years this record stood at the head of the list, the most famous horses of the intervening time never getting below 1:40 with one exception. This was in the case of Maori, who, in a race at Washington park, Chicago, last year, in 1:39 4 5, which was up to today the best time ever made in a race. Maori was an imported horse and carried 105 pounds at 4 years of age. Ten Broeck in his famous trial against time carried 110 pounds and ran on a specially prepared track.

Mr. J. J. Parrot, representing the firm of H. C. Shaw at Stockton, has been in the Valley this week. All kinds of farm machinery, wagons and buggies, harness etc. This is the first time Stockton ever was represented here. Mr. Parrot has been quite successful and says he will come once in three months in the future.

The announcement of A. L. McGee as a candidate for the nomination for Sheriff will be found in this issue. Mr. McGee is a pioneer of Inyo county, being one of the first who came here. He is well and favorably known to all the old timers and will make a conscientious officer.

DESERT LAND FINAL PROOF.

D E No. 414.

LAND OFFICE AT INDEPENDENCE, CAL., June 25, 1890.

Notice is hereby given that Charles Mulholland of Independence, Inyo County, California, has filed notice of intent on to make proof on his desert land claim No. 414, for the N E ¼ of Sec. 32, Tp. 13 S., R. 36 E., M. D. M., before the Register and Receiver at Independence, California, on Saturday, the 2d day of August 1890.

He names the following witnesses to prove the complete irrigation and reclamation of said land: Finlay McIver, Gilbert Carlstie, David Johnson and David Vaughn, all of Citrus, Inyo County, Cal.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD, Register.

DESERT LAND FINAL PROOF

D. E. No. 415.

LAND OFFICE AT INDEPENDENCE, CAL., June 25, 1890.

Notice is hereby given that John A. Hannah, of Independence, Inyo County, Cal for m, has filed notice of his intention to make proof on his desert land claim, No. 415, for the S E ¼ of Sec. 32, Tp. 13 S., R. 36 E., M. D. M., before the Register and Receiver at Independence, on Saturday, the 2d day of August, 1890.

He names the following witnesses to prove the complete irrigation and reclamation of said land: Finlay McIver, Gilbert Carlstie, David Johnson and David Vaughn, all of Citrus, Inyo County, Cal.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD, Register.

NOTICE.

Notice is hereby given that the Board of Supervisors of Inyo County, State of California, will meet as a

BOARD OF EQUALIZATION

— ON —

MONDAY, JULY SEVENTH, 1890,

At the office of the said Board, in the town of Independence, to examine the assessment book and equalize the assessment of property in said County for the year 1890, and will continue in session for that purpose until the business of equalization is disposed of.

P. H. MACK,
Clerk of the Board of Supervisors.

S. H. BIGLAND,
—DEALER IN—
Owens Valley Lands
39 SUTTER STREET,
SAN FRANCISCO.
1-26

OFFICERS.

President of the Day—GEO. M. GILL.
Orator—A. R. CONKLIN.
Reader—C. MULHOLLAND.
Speaker—F. E. DENSMORE.
Marshall—W. OBER.
Chaplain—J. H. DE LA MATYR.

PROGRAMME.

SALUTES—Sunrise, Noon and Sunset.
MUSIC—By the Band.
PRAYER.
READING—Declarat'n of Indep'nd'nce.
SONG—Star Spangled Banner.
ORATION.
SONG—Red, White and Blue.
RECITATION—Drake's Address.
SONG—America.
MUSIC—By the Band.

FOOT-RACE FOR $900, WALTER OBER AND B. ROSENTHAL.

GRAND BALL IN PAVILION, INDEPENDENCE ON JULY 4.

FLOOR DIRECTOR—J. W. Murphy.
FLOOR MANAGERS—J. C. Irwin, Henry Rhine, I. H. Mulholland, N. E. Conklin and J. D. Blair.

EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE—J. C. Irwin, J. W. Murphy, D. Cofer, P. H. Mack and Ivy H. Mulholland.
FINANCE COMMITTEE—Henry Rhine, O. I. Mairs and J. W. Murphy.

SPORTS.

Wheelbarrow race	$ 5 00
Footrace, girls under 12 years	3 00
Footrace, girls under 16 years	5 00
Footrace, boys under 12 years	3 00
Footrace, boys under 15 years	5 00
Sack race	5 00
Piute race, 200 yards	5 00
Egg race for girls	3 00
Greased pig	5 00
—And pig, to be caught by the tail.
Match race, Ober and Rosenthal	300 00

Other sports to be added.

HALE BROS. & CO.

IN ORDERING BY MAIL
OF HALE BROS. & CO.
YOU CAN DEPEND
UPON GETTING

FREE, OUR NEW Fashion Book

1. Your orders filled with pleasing promptness.
2. The same price and attention as though you were at their counters.
3. Lower prices on the whole than elsewhere. They allow no one to undersell them.
4. Courteous and satisfactory treatment. Goods may be exchanged or money refunded if satisfaction is not given.
5. The best styles. They carry no unseasonable goods.
6. The benefits of their dealing direct with manufacturers. It makes small prices.

AND PRICE LIST 100 PAGES.

HALE BROS & CO,
—Dealers In—
DRYGOODS, CLOTHING, SHOES,
Hats, Notions and Household Supplies.
Nos. 825 to 835 K St.,
Sacrameoto, Cal.

JEWELRY, DIAMONDS, WATCHES.
Hyman Fredrick, Reno, Nev.

The attention of the people of Inyo and neighboring counties is respectfully invited to the

LARGEST AND BEST STOCK

of Watches, Diamonds, Ear and Finger Rings, Bracelets and all other kinds of Jewelry this side of San Francisco. Knives, Forks, Spoons, and other Table Ware of the Best quality.

PRICES DEFY OUTSIDE COMPETITION.

All repairs done promptly and in a workmanlike manner.

Address orders and packages to

HYMAN FREDRICK, Jeweler,
m30-tf RENO, NEVADA.

MISCELLANEOUS.

NORMAN HOUSE,
Independence, - - Cal.
New House,
New Furniture,
Low Rates.
Special attention will be given to secure the comfort of guests.
O. I. MAIRS, Prop.
feb12tf

BELL'S
Flouring Mills,
A. N. BELL, Prop.
TRY BELL'S
EXTRA PATENT ROLLER FLOUR.
Having added Patent Rolls and other Improvements to our Mills, I am now turning out Flour that is fully
Equal to the Best.
Corn, Oats and Barley Cracked on Short Notice.
A. N. BELL,
Independence, Cal.

PIONEER BREWERY
INDEPENDENCE
BEER ICE COLD.
The Bar is supplied with the Best of all kinds of Liquors and Cigars.
The Coolest Hall in the town. Call in and see what comfort you can have this hot weather.
PHILIP GEHRIG, PROPRIETOR

MISCELLANEOUS.

BUHACH
THE UNRIVALED
Insect Exterminator
Manufactured solely from Pyrethrum flowers, grown in California, in a locality where the soil and climate are peculiarly adapted to the production of flowers rich in the essential oil which makes them so remarkably destructive to insect life.
Avoid the Worthless and Spurious Preparations, sold as Insect Powders, and use Buhach from original packages, and clear your premises of all Annoying and Destructive Insect Pests.
None Genuine Without the Trade Mark.
If your dealer doesn't keep it, order directly from the
Buhach Producing & Manufacturing COMPANY,
SOLE MANUFACTURERS,
STOCKTON, - - CALIFORNIA.

Wm. Muth-Rasmussen.
Bee Keeper.
Manufacturer of Comb Foundation.
Independence, Inyo Co. Cal

IF YOU WISH A GOOD REVOLVER PURCHASE ONE OF SMITH & WESSON'S
Finest small arms ever manufactured and the first choice of all experts. In calibres 32, 38 and 44/100. Single or double action, Safety Hammerless and Target models. Best quality wrought steel, carefully inspected for workmanship and stock. Unrivaled for finish, durability and accuracy. Do not be deceived by cheap malleable iron imitations often sold for the genuine article. They are unreliable and dangerous. The SMITH & WESSON REVOLVERS are stamped upon the barrels with firm's name, address and dates of patents, and are guaranteed perfect. Insist upon having them, and if your dealer cannot supply you, an order sent to address below will receive prompt attention. Descriptive catalogue and prices upon application.
SMITH & WESSON,
Springfield, Mass.

BIG 40P ADVERTISEMENTS.

GIVEN & INGALLS,
— DEALERS IN —
FARM PRODUCE.

J. E. DUNLAP.
Harness Maker.
Harness of all kinds, from the lightest to the heaviest. Any kind of new work made promptly and of the best material. Repairing done on the shortest notice. A full line of saddles and harness.

Valley View Hotel.
O. H. Hill, Prop'r.
A New House Newly Furnished Throughout. Guests will receive every courtesy and attention.

NEVADA STABLE
BISHOP.
Opposite Valley View Hotel, Main St
In the Livery Department nothing is kept but safe and good traveling carriage and saddle horses. Conveyances of all kinds first-class. Good attendance and the best of hay and grain for all animals boarding at the stable
S. P. SMITH, Prop.

BISHOP CREEK
BREWERY,
MUNZINGER, PHILLIPPAY & CO., Proprietors.
All the appliances and conveniences of First Class Brewery, including a beautiful grove for out-door parties.
Customers supplied on all points Of the C. & C. Railroad.
Send orders to
MUNZINGER, PHILLIPPAY & CO.
Bishop Creek, Cal.

F. E. Bosworth,
Watchmaker & Jeweler.
BISHOP, CAL.
Fine and Complicated Watch Repairing a Specialty.
Guns, Sewing Machines, Organs and Music Boxes Put in Perfect Condition and Warranted.
I Prefer to do all work at your house and will call if you will write to me at Bishop.

A NEW DEAL!
BISHOP CREEK
Livery. Feed & Sale Stable.
ROBERT O'NEIL, Prop'r.
Horses are boarded by the day, week or month. Stock bought and sold.
Bishop Creek, Cal., Nov. 20, 1883.

A. K. EUGLEY,
BIG PINE, INYO CO. CAL.

PROVISIONS,
&c., &c., &c.
Deputy County Clerk.
A. K. EUGLEY,
Big Pine, Cal.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Railroad Time Table.

CARSON & COLORADO R R

TAKING EFFECT,

Sunday, May 10th, 1889

STATIONS.	From Mound House. No. 1	To Mound House No. 2.
	Leave—	Arrives—
Mound House	12:30 p m.	5.55 p. m
Dayton	1:00 p. m.	5:15 p. m.
Wabuska	3 05 p m.	3 00 p. m.
Hawthorne	6 50 p. m.	11:20 a. m.
Luning	7:30 p. m.	10:05 a. m
Sodа Springs	9:15 p m.	9:05 a. m
Belleville	10:25 p. m.	7:45 a. m.
Candelaria	Ar. 11.10 p. m	Lv. 7:10 a. m
	No. 3. Leave—	No. 4. Arrives—
Belleville	8 10 a. m.	5:25 p. m
Benton	11.40 a m
Bishop Creek	1:50p. m.	11:00 a. m
Alvord	2.55 p m.	10.00 a. m
Independence	4 10 p. m.	8:30 a. m.
Lone Pine	5 00 p. m.	7:40 a. m
Keeler	Ar 5:45 p. m.	Lv. 7.00 a. m.

Trains 1 and 2 run daily.
Train 3 runs Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays.
Train 4 runs Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays

Passenger trains make close connection at Mound House with express trains of V. & T. R. R., which connect at Reno with east and west bound trains of Central Pacific Railroad.

Stage Connections:

At HAWTHORNE with United States Stage Company's coaches for Aurora (26 miles); Bodie (35 miles); Lundy and Bridgeport.

At LUNING (125 miles from Mound House) with Gilmer, Salsbury & Co's. tri weekly stages (leave Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays) for Downeyville, Grantsville and Belmont.

At CANDELARIA with U. S. Stage Co's. stages for Columbus (8 miles), Silver Peak, Montezuma, Alida Valley, Gold Mountain, etc.

H. M. YERINGTON,
General Superintendent.

R. J. LAWS, Assistant Superintendent.

D. A. BENDER,
General Freight and Passenger Agent.

The Newest Styles
OF
Fashionable Clothing
Dry Goods, Ladies' Wear, etc., etc
AT
L. WOOD'S
CASH STORE
A small stock of fresh groceries & canned goods constantly renewed.
Fresh Produce, and Grain Flour, etc., constantly on hand.
CANDIES,
PEANUTS,
WALNUTS,
TOYS!
THE CASH STORE
Is Where You Get
WORTH OF YOUR MONEY

THOMAS & HILL,
DEALERS IN
GENERAL MERCHANDISE
BIG PINE, INYO COUNTY, CAL,
We keep constantly on hand goods of all kinds needed in a country home. We order only First-Class Goods and ask no more than a reasonable profit. Give us a trial.
THOMAS & HILL

INDEPENDENCE
SHAVING SALOON.
Shaving, Hair-Cutting, etc., done in the best manner.
WM. H. HUFF, Prop'r

COLONEL QUARITCH, V.C.

By H. RIDER HAGGARD.

"And so I have decided, Harold," she said, after telling him of all her doubts and troubles. "I must do it; there is no help for it, as I think you will see. I have asked for the ten days' respite. Well, I really hardly know why, except that it is a respite. And now, what is there left to say to you except good-by? I love you, Harold; I make no secret of it, and I shall never love any other. Remember all your life that I love you and have not forgotten you, and never can forget. For people placed as we are there is one hope—the grave. In the grave earthly considerations fail and earthly contracts end, and here I trust and believe we shall find each other—or at the least forgetfulness. My heart is so sore I know not what to say to you, for it is difficult to put all I feel in words. I am overwhelmed, and my spirit is broken, and I wish to God that I were dead. Sometimes I cease to believe in a God who can allow his creatures to be so tormented, and give us love only that it may be daily dishonored in our sight; but who am I that I should complain, and after all, what are our troubles compared to some we know of? Well, it will come to an end at last, and meanwhile pity me and think of me. Pity me and think of me; yes, but never see me more. As soon as this engagement is publicly announced, go away, the further the better. Yes, go to New Zealand, as you suggested once before, and in pity of our human weakness never let me see your face again. Perhaps you may write to me sometimes—if my—if Mr. Cossey will allow it. Go there and occupy yourself; it will divert your mind—you are still too young a man to lay yourself upon the shelf, mix yourself up in the politics of the place, take to writing, anything, so long as you can absorb yourself. I send you a photograph of myself, I have nothing better, and a ring that night and day I have worn since I was a child. I think that it will fit your little finger, and I hope that you will always wear it in memory of me. And now it is late and I am tired, and what is there more that a woman can say to the man she loves, and whom she must leave forever? Only one word—Good by. IDA."

When Harold got this letter it fairly broke him down. His hopes had been revived when he thought that all was lost, and now again they were utterly dashed and broken. He could see no way out of it, none at all. He could not quarrel with Ida's decision, shocking as it was, for the simple reason that he knew in his heart that she was acting rightly, and even nobly. But oh! the thought of it made him mad. It is probable that to a man of imagination and deep feeling hell itself can invent no more hideous torture than that he must undergo in the position in which Harold Quaritch found himself. To truly love some good woman or some woman whom he thinks good—for it comes to the same thing—to love her more than life, to hold her dearer even than his honor, to be, like Harold, beloved in turn, and then to know that that woman, that one thing for which he would count the world well lost and would even sacrifice his hope of heaven, that light that makes his days beautiful, that starry joy set like a diadem upon life's dark brows, has been taken from him by the mockery of fate, not by death, for that he could bear, taken from him and given—for money or money's worth—to some other man! It is, perhaps, better that a man should die than that he should pass through such an experience as that which threatened Harold Quaritch now; for though the man die not, yet will it kill all that is best in him, and whatever triumphs may await him, and whatever women may be ready in the future to pin their favors to his breast, life will never be for him what it might have been, because his lost love took its glory with her.

No wonder then that he despaired. No wonder, too, that there rose up in his breast a great anger and indignation against the man who had brought this last extremity of misery upon them both. He was a just man, and could make allowances for his rival's infatuation—which, indeed, Ida being concerned, it was not difficult for him to understand. But he was also, and above all things, a gentleman, and the spectacle of a woman being inexorably driven into a distasteful marriage by money pressure, put on by the man who wished to gain her, revolted him beyond measure, and, though he was slow to wrath, moved him to fiery indignation. So much did it move him that he took a resolution—Mr. Cossey should know his mind about the matter, and that at once. Ringing the bell, he ordered his dog cart and drove to Edward Cossey's rooms, with the full intention of giving that gentleman a very unpleasant quarter of an hour.

Mr. Cossey was in, and fearing lest he should refuse to see him, the colonel followed the servant up the stairs and entered almost as she announced his name. There was a grim and even formidable look upon his plain but manly face, and something of menace, too, in his formal and soldierly bearing; nor did his aspect soften when his eyes fell upon the full length picture of Ida over the mantelpiece.

Edward Cossey rose with astonishment and irritation, not unmixed with nervousness depicted on his face. The last person whom he wished to see and expected a visit from was Col. Quaritch, whom in his heart he held in considerable awe. Besides, he had of late received such a series of unpleasant visits that it is not wonderful that he began to dread these interviews.

"Good day," he said, coldly. "Will you be seated?"

The colonel bowed his head slightly, but he did not sit down.

"To what am I indebted for the pleasure?" began Edward Cossey, with much politeness.

"Last time I was here, Mr. Cossey," said the colonel, in his deep voice, speaking very deliberately, "I came to give an explanation; now I come to ask one."

"Indeed!"

"Yes. To come to the point, Miss de la Molle and I are attached to each other, and there has been between us an understanding that that attachment might end in marriage."

"Oh! has there?" said the younger man, calmly, with a sneer.

"Yes," answered the colonel, keeping down his rising temper as well as he could. "But now I am told, upon what appears to be good authority, that you have actually condescended to bring, directly and indirectly, pressure of a monetary sort to bear upon Miss de la Molle and her father in order to force her into a distasteful marriage with you."

"And what the devil business of yours is it, sir," asked Cossey, "what I have or have not done? Making every allowance for the disappointment of an unsuccessful suitor, for I presume that you appear in that character," again he sneered, "I ask what business is it of yours?"

"It is every business of mine, Mr. Cossey, because if Miss de la Molle is forced into this I shall lose my wife."

"Then you will certainly lose her. Do you suppose that I am going to consider you? Indeed," he went on, being now in a towering passion, "I should have thought that considering the difference between us, of age and fortune, you might find other reasons than you suggest to account for my being preferred to you, if I should be so preferred. Ladies are apt to choose the better man, you know."

"I don't quite know what you mean by the 'better man,' Mr. Cossey," said the colonel quietly. "Without wishing to make any comparisons, I may say that in birth, in breeding, perhaps even in education and the record of my life, in which at least I have not disgraced myself, I am fully your equal, though I admit that you have the advantage of me in money and in years. However, that is not the point; the point is that I have had the fortune to be preferred to you by the lady in question, and not you to me. I happen to know that you and the idea of marriage with you is as distasteful to Miss de la Molle as it is to me. This I know from her own lips. She will only marry you, if she does at all, under the direct necessity, and to save her father from the ruin you are deliberately bringing upon him."

"Well, Col. Quaritch," he answered, "have you quite done lecturing me? If you have, let me tell you, as you seem anxious to know, that if by any legal means I can marry Ida de la Molle, I certainly fully intend to marry her; and let me tell you another thing, that when once I am married to her it will be the last that you shall see of her if I can prevent it."

"Thank you for your admissions," said Harold, still more quietly. "So it seems that it is all true; it seems that you are using your wealth to harass this unfortunate gentleman and his daughter until you drive them into consenting to this marriage. That being so, I wish to tell you privately what I shall probably take some opportunity of telling you in public, namely, that a man who does such things is a cur, and worse than a cur, he is a blackguard, and you are such a man, Mr. Cossey."

Edward Cossey's face turned perfectly livid with fury, and he drew himself up as though to spring at his adversary's throat.

The colonel held up his hand. "Don't try that on with me," he said. "In the first place it is vulgar, and in the second you have only just recovered from an accident and are no match for me, though I am over forty years old. Listen: our fathers had a way of settling their troubles. I don't approve of that sort of thing as a rule, but in some cases it is salutary. If you think yourself aggrieved it does not take long to cross the water, Mr. Cossey."

Edward Cossey looked puzzled. "Do you mean to suggest that I should fight a duel with you?" he said.

"To challenge a man to fight a duel," answered the colonel, with deliberation, "is an indictable offense, therefore I make no such challenge. I have made a suggestion, and if that suggestion falls in with your views, as," and he bowed, "I hope it may, we might perhaps meet accidentally abroad in a few days' time, when we could talk this matter over further."

"I'll see you hanged first," answered Cossey.

"What have I to gain by fighting you except a very good chance of being shot? I have had enough of being shot as it is, and we will play this game out upon the old lines, until I win it."

"As you like," said Harold. "I have made a suggestion to you which you do not see fit to accept. As to the end of the game, it is not finished yet, and therefore it is impossible to say who will win it. Perhaps you will be checkmated after all. In the meanwhile, allow me again to assure you that I consider you both a cur and a blackguard, and to wish you good morning." And he bowed himself out, leaving Edward Cossey in a curious condition of concentrated rage.

CHAPTER XXXVIII.

THE COLONEL GOES TO SLEEP.

The condition of mind which could induce a peaceable, Christian natured individual, who had moreover in the course of his career been mixed up with enough bloodshed to have acquired a thorough horror of it, to offer to fight a duel is difficult to picture. Yet this condition had been reached by Harold Quaritch.

Edward Cossey had wisely enough declined to entertain the idea, but the colonel had been perfectly in earnest about it. Odd as it may appear in the latter end of this Nineteenth century, nothing would have given him greater pleasure than to pit his life against that of his unworthy rival. Of course, it was foolish and wrong, but human nature is the same in all ages, and in the last extremity we fall back by instinct on those methods which men have from the beginning adopted to save themselves from intolerable wrong and dishonor, or, be it admitted, to bring the same upon others.

But Cossey utterly declined to fight. As he said he had had enough of being shot, and so there was an end of it. Indeed, in after days the colonel frequently looked back upon this episode in his career with shame, not unmingled with amusement, reflecting when he did so on the strange potency of that passion which can bring men to seriously entertain the idea of such extravagances.

Well, there was nothing more to be done. He might, it is true, have seen Ida, and working upon her love and natural inclinations, have tried to persuade her to cut the knot by marrying him off hand. Perhaps he would have succeeded, for in such affairs women are apt to find the arguments advanced by their lovers weighty and well worthy of consideration. But he was not the man to adopt such a course. He did the only thing that he could do—answered her letter by saying that what must be must be. He had learned that on the day subsequent to his interview with his rival, the squire had written to Edward Cossey, informing him that a decided answer would be given to him on Christmas day, and that thereon all vexatious proceedings on the part of that gentleman's lawyers had been stayed for the time. He could now no longer doubt what that answer would be. There was only one way out of the trouble, the way that Ida had made up her mind to adopt.

So he set to work to make his preparations for leaving Honham and this country for good and all. He wrote to land agents, and put Molehill upon their books to be sold or let on lease, and also to various influential friends to obtain introductions to the leading men in New Zealand. But these matters did not take up all his time, and the rest of it hung heavily on his hands. He mooned about the place until he was tired. He tried to occupy himself in his garden, but it is weary work sowing crops for strange hands to reap, and so he gave it up.

Somehow the time wore on until at last it was Christmas eve; the eve, too, of the fatal day of Ida's decision. He dined alone that night, as usual, and shortly after dinner some waits came to the house, and began to sing their cheerful carols outside. The carols did not chime in at all well with his condition of mind, and he sent five shillings out to them, with a request that they would go away, as he had a headache.

Accordingly they went, and shortly after their departure the great gale, for which that night is still famous, began to rise. Then he fell to pacing up and down the quaint old oak paneled parlor, thinking until his brain ached. The hour was at hand—the evil was upon him and her whom he loved. Was there no way out of it—no possible way? Alas! there was but one way, and that a golden one; but where was the money to come from? He had it not, and as land stood it was impossible to raise it. Ah, if only that great treasure which old Sir James de la Molle had hid away and died rather than reveal could be brought to light now, in the hour of his house's sorest need! But the treasure was very mythical, and if it had ever really existed, it was not now to be found. He went to his dispatch box and took from it the copy he had made of the entry in the Bible, which had been in Sir James' pocket when he was murdered in the court yard. The whole story was a very strange one. Why did the brave old man wish that his Bible should be sent to his son, and why did he write that somewhat peculiar message in it?

Suppose that Ida was right, and that it contained a cipher or cryptograph which would give a clew to the whereabouts of the treasure. If so, it was obvious that it would be one of the simplest nature. A man confined by himself in a dungeon and under immediate sentence of death would not have been likely to pause to invent anything complicated. It would, indeed, be curious that he should have invented anything at all under such circumstances, and when he could have so little hope that the riddle would be solved. But, on the other hand, his position was desperate; he was quite surrounded by foes; there was no chance of his being able to convey the secret in any other way, and he might have done so.

Harold placed the piece of paper upon the mantelpiece and, sitting down in an arm chair opposite, began to contemplate it earnestly, as indeed he had often done before. In case the reader should not remember its exact wording, it is repeated here. It ran: "Do not grieve for me, Edward, my son, that I am thus suddenly and wickedly done to death by rebel murderers, for naught happeneth but according to God's will. And now farewell, Edward, till we shall meet in heaven. My money have I hid, and on account thereof I die unto this world, knowing that not one piece shall Cromwell touch. To whom God shall appoint shall all my treasure be, for naught can I communicate."

Well, Harold stared and stared at this inscription. He read it forward, backward, crossways and in every other way, but absolutely without result. At last, wearied out with misery of mind and the pursuit of a futile occupation, he dropped off sound asleep in his chair. That happened about a quarter to 11 o'clock. The next thing that he knew was that he suddenly woke up; woke up completely, passing as quickly from a condition of deep sleep to one of wakefulness as though he had never shut his eyes. He used to say afterward that he felt as though somebody had come and aroused him, it was not like a natural waking. Indeed, so unaccustomed was the sensation that for a moment the idea flashed through his brain that he had died in his sleep and was now awakening to a new state of existence.

This soon passed, however. Evidently he must have slept some time, for the lamp was out and the fire dying. He got up and hunted about in the dark for some matches, which at last he found. He struck a light, standing exactly opposite to the bit of paper with the copy of Sir James de la Molle's dying message on it. This message was neatly copied long ways upon a half sheet of large writing paper, such as the squire generally used. Its first line ran as it was copied:

"Do not grieve for me, Edward, my son, that I am thus suddenly and wickedly done."

Now, as the match burned up, by some curious chance, connected probably with the darkness and the sudden striking of the light upon his eyeballs, it came to pass that Harold, happening to glance thereon, was only able to read four letters of this first line of writing, all the rest seeming to him but as a blur connecting those four letters. They were: being respectively the initial letters of the first, the sixth, the eleventh and the sixteenth words of the line given above.

D E a d

The match burned out, and he began to hunt about for another.

"D-E-A-D," he said, aloud, repeating the letters almost automatically. "Why, it spells 'Dead.' That is rather curious."

Something about this accidental spelling awakened his interest very sharply—it was an odd coincidence. He lighted some candles, and hurriedly examined the line. The first thing that struck him was that the four letters which went to make up the word "dead" were about equidistant in the line of writing. Could it be? He hurriedly counted the words in the line, there were sixteen of them, that is, after the first; one of the letters occurred at the commencement of every fifth word.

This was certainly curious. Trembling with nervousness he took a pencil and wrote down the initial letter of every fifth word in the message, thus:

```
Do not grieve for me, Edward, my son, that I D                     E am thus suddenly and wickedly done to death by a                             d rebel murderers, for naught happeneth but ac m                         a cording to God's will. And now farewell, Edward,
                                  n till we shall meet in heaven. My moneys have I s                         m hid, and on account thereof I die unto this world, o                         u
knowing that not one piece shall Cromwell touch.
                                  n         t
To whom God shall appoint shall all my treasure a be, for naught can I communicate.
b                         c
```

When he had done he wrote these initials in a line:

DEad mans mount abc

Great heaven! he had hit upon the reading of the riddle.

The answer was "Dead Man's Mount," followed by the mysterious letters A. B. C.

Breathless with excitement, he checked the letters again to see if by any chance he had made an error. No, it was perfectly correct. "Dead Man's Mount." That was and had been for centuries the name of the curious tumulus or mound in his own back garden, the same that learned antiquarians had discussed the origin of so fiercely and that his aunt, the late Mrs. Massey, had, at the cost of two hundred and fifty pounds, erected a mushroom shaped roof over in order to prove that the hollow in the top had once been the agreeable country seat of an ancient British family.

Could it then be but a coincidence that after the first word the initial of every fifth word in the message should spell out the name of this remarkable place, or was it so arranged? He sat down to think it over, trembling like a frightened child. Obviously it was not an accident; obviously the prisoner of more than two centuries ago had in his helplessness invented this simple cryptograph in the hope that his son, or, if not his son, some one of his descendants would discover it and thereby become the master of the hidden wealth. What place would be more likely for the old knight to have chosen to secrete the gold than one that even in those days had the uncanny reputation of being haunted? Who would ever think of looking for modern treasure in the burying place of the ancient dead? In those days, too, Molehill or Dead Man's Mount, belonged to the De la Molle family, who had reacquired it on the break up of the Abbey. It was only at the Restoration, when the Dofferleigh branch came into possession under the will of the second and last baronet, Sir Edward de la Molle, who died in exile, that they failed to recover this portion of the property. And if this was so, and Sir James, the murdered man, had buried his treasure in the mount, what did the mysterious letters A. B. C. mean? Were they, perhaps, directions as to the line to be taken to discover it? Harold could not imagine, nor, as a matter of fact, did he or anybody else ever find out this either then or thereafter.

Ida, indeed, used afterward laughingly to declare that old Sir James meant to indicate that he considered the whole thing as plain as A B C, but that was an explanation which did not commend itself to Harold's practical mind.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Governor Steele of Oklahoma was inaugurated at Guthrie last week.

The Marquis of Salisbury in the House of Commons last week said: "The acquisition of the magnificent territory which Stanley has revealed must be viewed from the point of prudence as well as that of boldness. After our experience at Khartoum, the grave reflection and full assent of Parliament and the country are necessary before committing ourselves to the defense of a territory that is only accessible from the sea after months of travel."

Last Saturday night about 10 o'clock Mrs. Mary Ellis, a widow residing at Central Hill, started from her home for the house of Adam Jackson to meet her son, whom she was expecting from San Andreas. Since then nothing was seen of her until the next morning, when Mr. Jackson, going to the well, found her dead body floating in the water. She was an old resident of San Andreas and leaves a family of grown-up sons and daughters.

The shoot for the Peters medal for Southern California at Coronado beach was won by Martinez Chick of San Diego. Chick left for San Francisco to shoot with J. S. Brewer, champion of Australia. The contest will be three shoots of 100 birds each, thirty yards rise, for $250 a side shoot, to take place on May 28th, 29th and 30th.

WHAT THE DRUGGISTS SAY.

Manufacturers of the Great Sierra Kidney and Liver Cure:

March 24, 1890.

GENTLEMEN:—It pleases us to state that in our judgment California productions are coming to the front very rapidly. In the case of your remedy as in proportion to sales of any other Kidney and Liver Cure or medicine for the cure of kidney and liver disorders, The Great Sierra Kidney and Liver Cure is the best selling article on our shelves and is rapidly on the increase daily.

Respectfully yours,
COFFIN & MAYHEW,
Druggists,
20th & Mission Sts., San Francisco, Cal.

The ruler of Morocco is able to do a Dey's work.

THE LONE WOMAN.

No city in the United States can show as many women doing business for themselves and living in comfortable circumstances as San Francisco. And why? Go ask at least one half of them. They will tell you their money is taken care of for them at the PACIFIC BANK, whose motto is "True in Trusts."

The man who ought to listen and learn usually does most of the talking.

SPINAL WEAKNESS.

Henry J. Gallagher, 56 Prince Street, N. Y., writes:

"Having been troubled with pains in back and chest during the last Winter I was compelled to remain at home unable to attend to business, until I was advised by a friend to try one of ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS. After applying one to my chest and one to my back, in three hours I found relief which I had not got in over three months. I cheerfully recommend them to persons having spinal weakness and lung trouble."

"First I wrote for pay, and didn't get it. Then I wrote for glory." "And didn't get it! You have had hard luck."

AN ELEGANT PACKAGE OF FINE CARDS.

Including 15 rare novelties, shapes and artistic imported oleographic and chromatic cards. This large and beautiful collection sent by mail to anyone who will do this:—Buy a box of the genuine Dr. C. McLane's Celebrated Liver Pills from any druggist, price 25 cents, and mail us the outside wrapper with your address, plainly written and 4 cents in stamps. The genuine McLane's Pills are prepared only by Fleming Bros., Pittsburg, Pa., and have been in constant use for over sixty years. They are superior to all others in purity and effectiveness. A certain cure for indigestion and sick headache. Address, Fleming Bros., Pittsburg, Pa.

Don't be a clam! Be an oyster. He begins his vacation the 1st of May and keeps it up until the end of August.

LOUISIANA STATE LOTTERY.

Names of the Winners of the Big Prizes in the April Drawing.

Several of the tickets winning the biggest prizes in The Louisiana State Lottery Drawing of April 15th were either bought or cashed in New York. The National Bank of the Republic, corner of Wall and Broadway, collected, through Adams Express Company, $15,000 for the First National Bank of Reno, Nevada, which money represented the amount won by one-twentieth of ticket 21,363, which drew the first capital prize of $300,000. The ticket was the property of Moritz Lutz, a barber in Reno, and the money, after having been collected by the New York bank, was paid to Lutz by the First National Bank of Reno.

John P. Walker, address unknown, held two-tenths of ticket 27,591 which drew the second capital prize of $100,000.

Mr. Walker received $19,000 in cash, minus express charges, at the office of the Adams Express Company in this city. He said he was not a resident of New York and was supposed to be a Methodist minister, who bought his ticket somewhere in the country, and came to New York to have it cashed.

James E. Ward, of Ward & Co., owners of the New York & Cuba Mail Steamship Line, collected $5,000 for a customer in Cuba upon two-twentieths of ticket 11,669, which drew the third capital prize of $5,000.

George M. Manz, a journeyman silversmith employed at 860 Broadway, held one-twentieth of the same ticket and collected $2,500.

Mr. Manz is of the opinion that The Louisiana State Lottery is a great institution. It is seldom that a hard-working mechanic gets as much as $2,500 for almost nothing, and Mr. Manz gave the reporter to understand that he knows how to appreciate his prize.

Bernhard Gelb, a Russian Hebrew, 22 years old, who lives with his brother's family, on the second floor of a rear tenement house, at 91 Willett St., held one-twentieth of ticket No. 71,088, which drew the fourth capital prize of $25,000. Gelb is a vest maker by occupation, and keep a small shop at 236 Stanton St. He is only two years in the country but he has already with the assistance of his relatives built up quite a little business in supplying wholesale clothing houses with the product of his labor. He invests regularly in The Louisiana State Lottery.

S. Jarmulowsky, the Hebrew banker of 74 Canal St., collected Gelb's $1,250 for him.

Herman Ridder, publisher of the Catholic News, 15 Barclay St., collected also $1,250, minus the usual express charges, upon one twentieth of the same ticket. Mr. Ridder says that he collected the money for a farmer.—New York Daily News, May 16.

Mrs. Youngwife—Did you ever try any of my biscuits, Judge? Judge—No, I never did; but I dare say they deserve it.

Beware of imitations of the genuine Seal of North Carolina Plug Cut Tobacco.

Peculiar

That Hood's Sarsaparilla does possess curative power Peculiar to Itself is conclusively shown by the wonderful cures it has effected, unsurpassed in the history of medicine. This absolute merit it posseses by reason of the fact that it is prepared by a Combination, Proportion and Process Peculiar to Hood's Sarsaparilla, known to no other medicine, and by which the full medicinal power of all the ingredients used is retained. Hood's Sarsaparilla is a highly concentrated extract of Sarsaparilla, Dandelion, Mandrake, Dock, Juniper Berries, and other well known vegetable remedies. It has won its way to the leading place among medicines by its own intrinsic, undisputed merit, and has now a larger sale than any other similar preparation in the country. If you have never taken Hood's Sarsaparilla, a fair trial will convince you of its merits.

To Itself

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar

Teacher (to class)—In this stanza, what is meant by the line, "The shades of night were falling fast"? Bright Scholar—The people were pulling down the blinds.

In 1850 "Brown's Bronchial Troches" were introduced, and their success in relieving Coughs and Bronchial Troubles has been unparalleled.

Spare Us a Little—Chicago—Yes we are going for the Fair with both feet. St. Louis—Don't do that. The public will want to see some of it, whatever it is.

SELECT PULLMAN TOURIST EXCURSIONS.

Select Pullman Tourist Excursions. Commencing Wednesday, June 4th, the Northern Pacific Railroad will inaugurate a series of select tourist excursions to all Eastern cities, to leave San Francisco semi-monthly. Our route—S. P. Co., "Shasta Line" to Portland. Northern Pacific Railroad via Columbia River and Tacoma to St. Paul. Choice of routes east of that point. Our Cars—Pullman's tourist cars furnished completely with every necessary comfort, in charge of Pullman porter, and under the supervision of one of our traveling passenger agents. Our rates same as via other lines. Send for descriptive tourist folder, together with maps, illustrated pamplets, etc. T. K. Stateler, Passenger Agent, 618 Market street, San Francisco, California.

French Teacher—What does a la mean? Small Boy—Alabama.

DON'T GO OFF BEFORE YOU ARE READY,

Particularly on a long journey. Be fully prepared. You cannot be, permit us to say, unless you are accompanied with the traveler's and tourist's vade mecum, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, most genial of appetizers, acclimatizers and promoters of digestion. Against sea sickness, malaria, cramps and colics begotten of badly cooked or unwholesome food and brackish water, nervousness, increased by travel, chronic biliousness and constipation, the Bitters is a sovereign preventive. It imparts a relish for food not altogether to your taste, and prevents it from disagreeing with you. Never was there such a capital thing for the unfortunate dyspeptic who stands in

INYO INDEPENDENT.

COUNTY OFFICIAL PAPER.

C. MULHOLLAND, - - - Proprietor.

Independence, Cal.,

FRIDAY, - - - JULY 11, 1890.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

VOL. XXII. NO.5. INDEPENDENCE, INYO CO., CAL., JULY 11, 1890. WHOLE NO. 1028.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

COUNTY OFFICIAL PAPER.

C. MULHOLLAND, - - - Proprietor.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One Year (post paid)	$4.50
Six Months	2.25
Three Months	1.50
One Month	50
Single Copies	20

HEALTH AND HYSTERIA.

How to Treat Persons Afflicted With Nervous Derangement.

The supposed cause of hysteria I need hardly mention, there being none that would appeal to or be understood by the lay reader. One fact, however, deserves notice—namely, that we seldom find the ailment among those who work out of doors. In a great measure hysteria is a disease of polite society. It is sometimes found among men and here the causes are less obscure—over work, night work, high living and fast life with too little sleep, may induce hysteria in males, but it then usually goes by the name of nervous debility.

Now, as to the treatment. The hysterical patient generally expects and desires a great deal of sympathy, and some medical men recommend that this be withheld entirely. As I have already hinted, I deem this somewhat harsh. Let the medical man do as he pleases, however—and most certainly the physician should be consulted—and he is not always with the patient, but her friends and relatives are. Let them not be guilty of want of feeling. They may do their utmost to cheer and rouse the patient without actually turning a deaf ear to all her complainings. Besides, in doing so, there would be the danger of overlooking some real complaint. It is probably like the old fable of the shepherd and the wolf. Never mind, we must look out for the wolf just the same. But how are we to distinguish between a real or inflammatory pain, and that which is merely hysterical? We have that good little fairy yclept the clinical thermometer, and no house should be without one.

As to the treatment during a fit or paroxysm of hysteria, the dress is, of course, to be loosened, the patient kept as quiet as possible, and the window open. Smelling-salts will usually do the rest, or a dash of cold water.

As already stated, in every case of hysteria the family physician should be consulted and obeyed. But it is a consolation for those who can noteasily get medical assistance to know that drugs are not always essential. A few drops of the dialysed iran—say ten—may be given thrice daily in water, after meals, as this form of iron does not constipate; if there be no paleness of countenance, even this will hardly be needed. Aperients may be necessary, but they must be mild.—Cassell's Family Magazine.

PRINCE BISMARCK.

His Capability of Mastering His Appetites and Passions.

Bismarck's resignation has called up a host of reminiscences of the stalwart old Chancellor. A good share of them refer to his enormous capacity for eating, drinking and smoking, but the narrators of the anecdotes have omitted to note the fact that Bismarck, while a master of diplomacy and a man who held all of his associates, from the Emperor down, with a rigid hand, should be accredited with another achievement. He has shown his ability to master himself and all of his appetites and passions absolutely. For sixty-five years he ate, smoked and drank more in all probability than any other single man in the world. Six quarts of Rhine wine in the course of an afternoon when European complications were exciting, left the Chancellor with quite a sturdy thirst when dinner time arrived. Yet, on the prescription of his doctor and in order to reduce his weight—he had grown dangerously stout—he deliberately shut off on all liquids, ceased eating vegetables, and kept himself on a diet that would have tried the temper, pluck and will of the most enthusiastic of amateur athletes until he had reduced his bulk nearly seventy pounds. It is related that in a similar way he ceased smoking at an hour's notice so as to make an accurate test of the effect that smoking had upon his nerves. One of his physicians told him that a tremulousness of the hand, of which he complained, was the result of his inordinate use of tobacco. He thereupon broke off a life-long habit with as much ease as though his love for smoking was a mere caprice. At the end of six months he found that his hand still shook. Then he took up smoking again and has kept at it ever since.—Brooklyn Eagle.

AMBITIOUS YOUNGSTERS.

Many Boys Employed in Stores Make Their Way to the Front.

The other day I visited one of the wholesale houses on Adams street where a number of boys are employed.

"What percentage of these boys become merchants?" I asked of the gentleman who had them in charge.

He replied: "More than you would think. Now and then some are forced in here by a father or mother who confess that they only want to keep their boys off the streets. If such boys have any natural commercial instinct they pull out all right. If they haven't they are discharged. The majority, however, have an ambition to become commercial drummers. They see the drummer come in from the road. They see that he is generally well clothed, and they hear him relating his experiences on the road. That sort of thing catches the average boy. There is a good deal of the Arab in a boy after all. They are naturally wanderers. It is as natural for a boy to run away from school and go on a hunt for birds' nests or hens' nests as it is for him to have freckles in the spring. The life of a drummer has in it a dash of adventure they like. The drummer is the boy's hero. Do you see that red-headed boy over there at the telephone? I heard him talking to some of his associates the other day at the noon hour. He said he would never die happy until he got to be a drummer, so that he could get caught in railroad smashups. Of course he is an exception. But I'll gamble he gets there."—Chicago Tribune.

—Lemon juice and salt will take spots of iron rust from linen, which should be left in the sun to bleach.

—Boiled Spinach: Pick and wash a peck of spinach, put in a pot without water, sprinkle with salt, and let cook half an hour. Season with pepper and a large teaspoonful of butter. Take up, pour hot cream over, garnish the top with slices of hard-boiled egg.—Ladies' Home Journal.

AN EXPERIMENT WITH A BRIDE.

His Game Didn't Work, but There Is a Time Coming.

A bridal couple took our train from Buffalo for Philadelphia, and it was generally remarked that they conducted themselves as well as could be expected under the circumstances. After about four hours' ride the groom got off at a station where a short stop was made, saying to the bride that he wanted to speak to a man, but saying to one of the boys on the quiet:

"When the train starts I'll get into the car behind, and she'll think I was left. Then look out to see her go into fits. I'll appear on the scene in time to prevent consequences."

The programme was carried out. As the train started a drummer rushed into the car and plumped himself down beside the bride without a question, and in five minutes he was talking about the weather, Buffalo, Philadelphia and a dozen other things. She grew interested at once, and did not even appear to think of her newly made husband. The latter waited a quarter of an hour, and then sneaked into the car. He expected to find her half dead with anxiety, but she wasn't. She was talking in a very animated way, and when he came forward she looked up and said:

"That you, James? I thought you were left. Sit down back there somewhere."

And for two hours he "sot," while that drummer held the fort, and everybody was tickled to death. Later on one of the boys said to him:

"Your experiment didn't work as you thought it would, did it?"

"Not exactly," was the reply, "but you wait! You ought to be around to-night when I lick her with a wet towel!"—New York Sun.

Quite Different.

Justice (to student)—You are accused by Mr. Meyer, who lives across the street from your room, of insulting him.

Student (surprised)—In what way have I insulted him?

Justice—He alleges that you continually call your dog Meyer.

Student—May I be permitted to ask Mr. Meyer a question?

Mr. Meyer—Vat is it you vant to know?

Student—Mr. Meyer, how do you spell your name?

Mr. Meyer—I spells my name M-e-y-e-r.

Student—I thought so. Your honor will perceive at once how groundless Mr. Meyer's charges are when I inform your honor that my dog spells his name M-a-y-e-r.—Texas Siftings.

Revenge Is Sweet.

First Bootblack—You had er quarrel wid Nidsey, Billy?

Second Bootblack—Yes, I had, yer bet, and I'm agoin' to have my revenge, too.

F. B.—Goin' ter fight him?

S. B.—No, siree. I'm agoin' to stand aside of him when he's a shinin' a gent, and when he gets through I'm agoin' ter say, "Shine, sir?"—Boston Courier.

Had a Carload of His Own.

Scene—Interior of a sleeping car. Time—Midnight. Place—The Horshoe bend.

Enthusiastic Traveler (thrusting hand into berth and rudely shaking sleeping manager)—Wake up, quick, and look out at the beautiful scenery!

Manager (yawning)—Hang the beautiful scenery! I've got a carload of my own aboard this train.—Dramatic Mirror.

What Worried Him.

"You look worried."

"Yes," replied Charlie Cashgo.

"Do you find that you can't get out of debt?"

"Well, that isn't the trouble, exactly. My tailor has assured me that I can't get in any further."—Washington Post.

A Wise Conclusion.

"Did you ever think of going on the stage?"

"Yes, at one time I thought seriously of it."

"How seriously?"

"So seriously that I decided not to."—Lowell Citizen.

Yes and No.

"Do you get credit for all your articles that are copied?"

Humorist—Oh yes, I get credit for everything but my groceries.—Yankee Blade.

A Jar.

Leila—A present from Charlie, papa! Ah, he's a man after my own heart!

Father—Nonsense! He's a man after your own money!—Judy.

A Man with Some Feeling.

"Here, let that dog be—I'll teach you to be kind to animals!" said the kind hearted father as he knocked his 10-year-old boy down.—West Shore.

Not a New Kind.

Hawkins—What kind of jokes does young Tompkins write?

Jawkins—Alleged, I believe.—Puck.

Identified.

"Who is that fellow who has been talking about Withers all the evening?"

"That's Withers."—Puck.

An Interesting Interview.

Clerk—If you please, sir, I shall have to ask you to excuse me for the rest of the day. I have just heard of—er—an addition to my family.

Employer—Is that so, Penfold? What is it, boy or girl?

Clerk—Well, sir, the fact is—er—(somewhat embarrassed), it's two boys.

Employer—Twins, eh? Young man, I'm afraid you are putting on too many heirs.—Munsey's Weekly.

A Repetition.

My bondage of the past is broken,
I breathe the warm, free air again,
I've seen thy face and thou hast spoken,
Snapped are the links that made the chain.
The chain of years that held me fast
And bound me to that long ago;
That sad time when we parted last,
You answered me, "I do not know."

Six weary years since we had parted—
Again I sought thee yesterday;
I was not ever fickle hearted,
Yet I disliked the long delay.
"Lovest thou me?" I asked once more
And waited for thy answer low;
You spake the same words as before,
For you replied: "I do not—No."
—Flavel Scott Mines in Yonowine's News.

A GROWING MOUNTAIN.

Izalco, a Salvador Volcano, Which Gets Bigger Every Year.

Down on the coast of Central America in the little republic of Salvador, so near the ocean that it may be seen from the decks of passing ships, is a mountain that grows. There is another remarkable fact about Izalco, as the mountain is called, for it is not only increasing in height all the time, but it is the most violent and constant of all volcanoes. Every little while, from one year's end to the other, it spouts vast quantities of fire, lava and ashes, which fall in a shower and wrap its sides for a thousand feet below the summit with a blanket of living coals.

It is impossible to conceive a grander spectacle than is presented at night to the passengers upon ships that go that way. No one goes to bed on the steamer till the mountain is out of sight. Travelers go a long distance to see it and are always willing to admit that the journey repaid them. The mountain rises nearly 7,000 feet, and as its base is almost in the sea it looks much higher. An immense plume of smoke ascends from the crater. The incessant bursts of flame, mounting 500 feet every little while, can be seen for more than 100 miles in clear weather. The mountain has been called "the Light-House of Salvador," and the shipping on the coast needs no other beacon so far as the mountain can be seen.

Around the base of the volcano are productive sugar plantations, with a railroad running through them. Then comes a wide strip of timber—an almost impenetrable forest, whose foliage is perpetual and of the darkest green. Beyond the forest and between the timber line and the summit, is a belt of ashes and lava, which is constantly receiving accessions from the crater, and every few minutes changes from a livid yellow, when the ashes are hot, to a silver gray, as they begin to cool. At night the effect is very fine. At each eruption there is a violent explosion, like the discharge of a thousand cannons, and afterward a terrible rumbling is heard beneath the surface of the earth.

Izalco arose suddenly from a plain in the spring of 1770 in the midst of what had been for nearly a hundred years a profitable sugar plantation. The owner, Don Balthazar Erazo, was absent on a visit to Spain at the time, and was greatly amazed on his return to discover that his farm had been exchanged, without his knowledge or consent, for a first-class volcano. It was in December, 1769, that the peons on the plantation first noticed that something was wrong underneath. Although they were accustomed to "tremblers," as slight earthquakes are called, they became frightened at the unusual rumblings and growlings in the bowels of the earth. They decided to leave the place and got away not a moment too soon. A few days later, when some of the most venturesome went back to see how the animals were getting on, they discovered that all the buildings had been destroyed, that great trees had been uprooted, and large craters had opened in the fields, from which came smoke and flames, but apparently there had been no great eruption as yet.

A party of shepherds, braver than the rest, decided to remain in the neighborhood and await developments, and on the 23d of February, 1770, they were entertained by a spectacle that perhaps no other men were ever permitted to witness—the birth of a mountain. It was about ten o'clock in the morning, as they afterward said, when the grand upheaval took place. First came a series of terrific explosions which lifted the crust of the earth in a pile several hundred feet high, and from the opening issued flames and lava, with masses of smoke. An hour or two after there was another and grander convulsion, which shook the country for hundreds of miles and did great damage to the neighboring towns. Rocks weighing thousands of tons were lifted high in the air and fell several miles distant. The surface of the earth bulged up nearly 3,000 feet, and vast masses of rocks were piled up around the crater from which they issued.

These terrible earthquakes continued for several days, and great damage was done in the neighboring provinces of Nicaragua and Honduras, as well as in San Salvador. The volcano was a healthy and vigorous child. In less than two months from a level field arose a mountain more than 4,000 feet high. The discharges from the crater from that time to this have accumulated around the edges until the pile has reached nearly 7,000 feet, and it is still growing. Unfortunately the growth of the monster has not been scientifically observed or accurately measured. It would be difficult to measure it, for the surface of the cone, down to 2,000 feet from the summit, is always covered with hot lava, over which no man could climb, and the fumes of the sulphur would suffocate one if the heat could be endured.—Youth's Companion.

How Shoes Are Worn Out.

A writer, in answer to the question "Are more shoes worn out in wet than in dry weather?" says there are more actually worn out, particularly at the bottoms, when the walking is fine; but the destruction of shoes is at least twenty-five per cent. greater during wet spells. In the former case the shoes have not the protection of the rubber, and they grind out rapidly; but then again, in stormy seasons, hundreds of pairs of shoes are caught in drenching rains without overshoes, and they are more injured then than would be in a month of walking in dry weather. A long walk in a thoroughly soaked shoe causes it irreparable damage. The straining motions of the foot in this soft mass wreak damage that could never be possible in the same shoe when dry. Even the soles of shoes worn much in the wet, especially those of the poorer grades, have their term of usefulness considerably curtailed.—Troy (N. Y.) Times.

No, Evidently She Can Not.

Young Husband—Are the proceedings lively at your cooking-school, May?

Young Wife—We had quite a stir today.

Young Husband—Indeed!

Young Wife—Yes. We had a stirabout. Can a woman joke?—Boston Courier.

ABNER WAS INSURED.

Consequently He Was Able to Make a Thousand Dollars Without an Effort.

Abner Singleton was constantly annoyed with accident insurance agents. He spent much of his time on the road, and the agents assured him that unless he had himself insured, he should, ere long, be laid up with a broken leg, without any revenue coming in. Singleton had just returned from a trip to the northwest and was sitting in his office, when an agent, the most persistent of the lot, came in.

"Ah," said the agent, "I see that you have gotten back safe this time."

"Yes, I always get back safe."

"Ah, and that's what Dan Butterfield always said, and so he did until the other day, and then the train ran off the track and broke one of his legs. He came within one of insuring with me, just before he started. But, remembering that he always did get back all right, he held out against my entreaty and best interests of his family, and now look at him. Lying up and not able to pay his board."

Singleton studied for a moment, and then said: "What advantages do you offer?"

"Well, now, I'll tell you: Take out one of our policies, and in case you have a leg broken, for instance, you get one thousand dollars. Two legs broken, two thousand. See? Wait a moment. If you are killed your family will receive five thousand. Hold on again. If you lose one eye, there you have one thousand dollars, and as much again if you lose both eyes."

"That's fair enough," Singleton answered, almost converted.

"Nothing could be fairer. Suppose I write you up."

"All right, I am with you."

He was "written up," and the conquering agent, happy in his achievement, took his departure. Singleton went out on the road the next day, and shortly afterward the insurance company received information that in a railway accident he had lost an eye. Several days later he returned, and, sure enough, one of his eyes was gone. He shook the agent by the hand, and said: "Old fellow, you did me a great turn. I am now almost incapacitated, and the chances are that I shall lose my job with the company, as the firm is rather inclined to have a prejudice against one-eyed men."

Singleton received his money and went home, and, when he had counted it time and again, he took a glass of water (?) from the bureau and put in his eye.

"Rather an easy way to make money," he mused, as he adjusted the sightless ball, "and I wonder that I did not think of it before. I will now go and have myself insured in another company."—Arkansaw Traveler.

AN UNFINISHED FORAY.

Three Embryo Adventurers Close Their Career Under Sad Circumstances.

Tommy Janders (reading)—"Creeping noiselessly to the door of the wigwam, the boy scout looked in. The four Indians were sleeping soundly. Drawing his six-shooter, the intrepid youth took aim at the nearest savage. (To be continued in our next.)" That settles it, fellers; we'll never know the rest of it, 'cause by the time the next number's out we'll probably be in Montanner somewheres.

Eddy Adkins—Well, we can do those things ourselves, then, 'stead o' reading about 'em.

Willie Wabbles—I wish 'twasn't so far; ain't there any Indians any nearer than Montanner?

Tommy Janders—I'm glad o' one thing—there'll be plenty of snow on the ground when we get there; makes it a good deal easier to track 'em.

Eddy Adkins—I wonder how much those broad-brimmed hats cost; we'll each have to buy one of them, the first thing.

Tommy Janders—Mebby we can borrow three of 'em; we've only got a dollar 'n a quarter between us, you know, and Willie ain't got a cent.

Willie Wabbles—Is it always as c-c-cold as this wh-when you're camping out?

Tommy Janders (ignoring the question)—I'm always going to' aim to hit 'em right under the left ear; that's where Notch-Handle Nick always aimed. They jump right up, give a death-yell, and keel over.

Willie Wabbles—It look's if it was going to be an awful d-d-dark night, don't it?

Tommy Janders—What's the matter with you, anyhow? Here we're giving you a chance to go out on the plains with us, an' be a reg'lar scout an' have adventures, an' you're commencing to back out already!

Eddy Adkins—Lots o' fellers'd be glad to be in his boots; we oughter left him home!

Willie Wabbles—I w-w-wish I w-w-was h-h-ho-o-ome now-w-w—Woo-woo-boo-o o-h-oo-oo!

Wayfarer (down the road, to three Inquiring Strangers—Ya-as, I seen three boys settin' 'long side the fence back there, behind them boards. They looked like they was tryin' ter camp out; guess they must be the ones you're lookin' fer.

Mr. Janders (testing a bamboo cane, carelessly)—Thanks!

Mr. Adkins (taking a leather strap from his pocket)—Much obliged!

Mr. Wabbles (tucking up his right sleeve)—Good evening sir!—Puck.

Family Thrift.

"George," inquired the proprietor of the market, "isn't this the day to send Mrs. Neer her regular chicken?"

"No," answered the boy. "It doesn't go till day after to-morrow."

"The Neers get just one chicken a week," explained the proprietor to a customer. "They cook it for dinner the first day, make soup from it the next four days, and then live for two days on the feathers, and I've got to be particular about sending the chicken at the right time or I'll lose their trade."—Chicago Tribune.

—The ancient Greeks used olive leaves for ballots, and the Australian voting system is a revival of the practice in Rome 2,000 years ago.

A TAILOR'S UGLY RIDE.

He Packs Himself in a Box and Takes a Long Trip by Freight.

An enterprising Austrian tailor named Hermann Zeitung, is the hero of a remarkable trip which ended in his being placed behind the bars in the new Central Police station. His incarceration was directly due to the rather abrupt ending of a ride from Vienna to Paris securely packed in a big box labelled "This side up," "With care," "Fragile," and other reminders to railway porters.

The tailor was born in Vienna and there learned his trade. He at one time prospered, but for some time past business has been so dull that several weeks ago he found himself a bankrupt. He was an able cutter, and had invented a new style of lady's riding dress, and thought that by going to Paris he might be able to make capital out of his invention.

But how to get there. He had no money, and walking was out of the question. He had heard of the gentry known in America as tramps, and how they got from town to town riding free of charge on the trucks of a railway carriage. There is much danger in this mode of travel, and the little tailor, after long thought decided to travel as freight. He accordingly ordered a large box, lined it well with straw, and got into it supplied with beer, bread and sausages. A trustworthy friend, formerly in his employ, wrote the necessary directions on the box, which was then forwarded to the railway station for Paris.

The tailor was thus conveyed by the Orient express across Austria, Bavaria, Wurtemberg and Alsace into France. During nearly sixty hours he suffered purgatorial pains, for he was unable to move, drink or sleep, and could only squeeze a few pieces of bread and meat now and then into his mouth. Sometimes he felt himself thrown violently on hand-cars by porters while being transferred from one carriage to another; at others he was buried beneath a pile of boxes which threatened to crush in his ribs or smash his skull at any moment.

At last, having undergone hours of indescribable torture, he suddenly found himself longer than usual out of a railway van. Then he knew that he had arrived at his destination, but the difficulty was now to extricate himself from his narrow wooden prison. He heard voices and people about him every minute, and consultations were evidently being held over him. Suddenly he began to sneeze and heard somebody mutter an exclamation. Then he coughed and he heard himself tapped overhead. Suddenly the lid of his case was lifted off and out he jumped, to the amazement if not consternation of a group of custom house officials.

The practical douaniers soon recovered from their very natural surprise, and taking in the situation they promptly made a prisoner of the sartorial parcel and marched him before their chief officer, who handed Zeitung over to the police. At the station the tailor coolly remarked in German that he did not care about the consequences of his action, as he was now in Paris. He also promised the station superintendent to repay him as soon as he could, but all this did not save him from going to jail. It is safe to say, however, that a little thing like that didn't bother him, and when he left the jail and embarked in his enterprise, he finally attained the success that he deserved.—Paris Letter.

PLANNING A CAMPAIGN.

Emigrants That Will Not Come Among Us to Farm or to Build.

A foreigner who proposes, if possible, to emigrate to this country is said to have held a conference recently with one of his race who had already been here. If this statement is true, the people of the United States have reason to be deeply concerned, for these emigrants do not come among us to farm, or to build or to vote.

Their business is to kill, and they do their work well. Their power, silent and sure, is more deadly than that of cannon or dynamite; they spare neither the young nor the old; their track across the continent is marked by black lines of graves.

One of the parties to this reported conference was the vigorous young comma bacillus, or cholera microbe. Probably none of our readers have ever seen this creature, or even its picture, but it lives and moves to do a deadlier work than the fabled dragons of old times.

"My ancestors," it is reported to have said, "crossed the sea to the New World again and again, and counted their victims by thousands and tens of thousands. What chance is there for me now? My race has the power to reproduce itself to an illimitable extent. If I can make my way from Persia across Europe and the Atlantic, I can increase by the millions should the conditions prove favorable. I can double the death rate in a summer."

His companion was the microbe of the influenza. Its picture has not been drawn by scientific men. It has just finished a triumphant march over Europe and this continent, leaving disease and wasted vitality and death behind it. Soldiers and infants, empresses and paupers, as we all know, were among its victims.

"The field is ready for you in America," it said. "Young and old there exhaust their vital forces by excessive work or excessive play, by incessant struggles to be rich, or by drink. On the farms and in country villages little attention is paid to drainage; garbage, manure heaps and other abominations are left to fester under the hot sun. In some of the great cities sewer gas pollutes the air; in others the drinking water is foul with corruption; in all of them the people listen with good-humored indifference to the warnings of scientific men."

"It is pure air, cleanliness and temperate living that kill me," said the deadly microbe; "but I foresee great triumphs yonder. I shall have thousands of victims!" and he prepared for his departure.

"A fable!" says the reader. "No such conference was ever held." It may be so, but a fable is a story that has a moral.—Youth's Companion.

PRESIDENTIAL AUTOGRAPHS.

Andrew Johnson's the Rarest, Washington's Next and Taylor's Third.

When an American starts in to make a collection of autograph letters he is very apt to begin with the Presidents of the United States. A set of the Presidents is very desirable and each year it is becoming more difficult to form one. An amateur will know little of the comparative value and variety of the different Presidents and unless he is informed, he will miss golden chances of picking up rare specimens, or pay too dearly for common ones.

Washington naturally leads the list in desirability, though Andrew Johnson is the rarest and most expensive. Full letters of Washington are scarce, and their price varies from $25 upwards according to their size, condition and subject matter. Letters dated during the revolution are the most interesting, as they are apt to contain references to the war.

Letters signed only by Washington are fairly common but always in good demand at prices varying from $12 upwards. Those written by his secretary, Alexander Hamilton, are perhaps the best. Hamilton was a master of the English language, and his sentences flow as smoothly as those of Addison. Washington letters will never become cheaper, as there is a steady demand from outside by people who want only a Washington. The most exaggerated idea of the value prevails in Europe, where $100 is sometimes asked for one.

Andrew Johnson seldom wrote letters. His right arm was injured by a musket ball and it was painful for him to use it. He confined himself to very short notes—generally in pencil—or had his letters written by his son. The latter frequently signed his father's name for him. This signing by proxy has sometimes escaped notice, and at the Cist sale last spring one of the letters sold for $15. Collectors have grown very suspicious of the name and at the Richmond sale last month a signed document sold for the low price of $3. A genuine signature is worth that alone. Another reason why Johnson wrote little was because he made mistakes in grammar and spelling and he disliked to expose himself to criticism.

Washington is second in rareness and Zachary Taylor third. The old soldier was handier with the sword than with the pen. He wrote a villainous hand and was generous of blots. A fine Taylor is worth from $15 to $25, and it is a very poor specimen that is not valued at less than $5. A number of forged signatures of Taylor are in circulation and should be looked out for. They are on a large-sized card, and may be detected by the regularity of the writing.

Abraham Lincoln ranks fourth in point of rareness. He wrote short notes—covering on the average about half a sheet, and his writing is as plain and homespun as his character. He wrote straight to the point and wasted no words. The prices of his letters range from $12 to $30. It is safe to say that these prices will be greatly increased in the near future.

The letters of General Grant are high-priced, not so much because of their rarity as because of the great reputation of the writer. They range in price from $10 to $20, and there is a large and steady demand for them. Grant's book had a tremendous sale, and many people like to insert a letter in the book, as it materially increases the interest.

John Adams and John Quincy Adams bring good prices. Monroe, Madison, Harrison, Jackson, Jefferson, Tyler and Polk run close together at from $3 to $6 each. Buchanan, Hayes, Pierce, Van Buren and Fillmore are lower priced.

Arthur is decidedly scarce. It is often so soon after a man's death. It takes time for letters to find their way into the hands of strangers. Twenty years hence Arthur's letters will be commoner than they are at present.—The Collector.

Life in the Far West.

"Too much credit can not be given," remarks a Montana paper, "to our dignified and efficient police justice, Judge Winthrop, for the warfare he is carrying on against disreputable characters, and more especially for ridding our city of Red Mike, the pugilist and tough who has been disgracing the place for the last year. Thursday evening the judge met Mike by appointment at the Maverick Theater and easily bested him in five rounds, bare knuckles, London prize-ring rules. The judge was the best man from the start, having the fight all his own way, in the fifth round knocking his opponent completely over the ropes, where he fell insensible and failed to come to time. The judge took all the gate money, the $25 stakes, and also won $200 on side bets. Mike left for the East next morning for medical treatment."—Chicago Tribune.

—A burglar having completely disappeared from the surveillance of the police, a detective went to the wife of the criminal and asked her where her husband was. "He's gone," answered the wife. "Gone? Gone where?" "I never tell that; and, besides, I don't know." "But you must tell, or I'll arrest you." At this the wife bridled up and said: "He's dead, but I don't know where he's gone; and if I did I would'nt tell you!"—N. Y. Ledger.

—Eminent Scientist—"The planetary indications give assurance that there will be no rain for the next three days." Man with a bunion (smiling with lofty superiority)—"There will be rain, sir, in less than twelve hours." P. S. There was.

MONSIEUR DU VALL.

An Incident From the Career of a Most Gallant Highwayman.

The following is an extract from the "Memoirs of Monsieur Du Vall," containing the history of his life and death, whereupon are annexed his last speech and epitaph:

"He with his Squadron overtakes a Coach which they had set over Night, having Intelligence of a Booty of four hundred Pounds in it. In the coach was a Knight, his Lady, and only one Serving maid, who, perceiving five Horsemen making up to them presently imagined that they were beset; and they were confirmed in this Apprehension by seeing them whisper to one another and ride backward and forward. The lady, to show that she was not afraid, takes a flageolet out of her pocket and plays. Du Vall takes the Hint, plays also, and excellently well, upon a flageolet of his own, and in this Posture he rides up to the Coach-side. 'Sir,' says he to the Person in the Coach, 'your Lady plays excellently, and I doubt not but that she dances as well. Will you please to walk out of the Coach and let me have the Honor to dance one Currant with her upon the Heath?' 'Sir,' said the Person in the Coach, 'I dare not deny any thing to one of your Quality and good Mind. You seem a Gentleman, and your Request is very reasonable.' Which said, the Lacquey opens the Boot, out comes the knight, Du Vall leaps lightly off his horse, and hands the Lady out of the Coach. They danced, and here it was that Du Vall performed Marvels; the best Masters in London, except those who are French, not being able to show such footing as he did in his great French Riding Boots. The Dancing being over (there being no violins, Du Vall sang the Currant himself), he waits on the Lady to her Coach. As the Knight was going in, says Du Vall to him: 'Sir, you have forgot to pay the Musick.' 'No, I have not,' replies the Knight; and, putting his Hand under the Seat of the Coach, pulls out a hundred Pounds in a Bag and delivers it to him, which Du Vall took with a very good grace and courteously answered: 'Sir, you are liberal, and shall have no cause to repent your doing so; this Liberality of yours shall excuse you the other Three Hundred Pounds,' and giving the Word that if he met with any more of the Crew he might pass undisturbed, he civilly takes his leave of him. He manifested his agility of body by lightly dismounting off his horse, and with Ease and Freedom getting up again when he took his Leave; his excellent Deportment by his incomparable Dancing and his graceful manner of taking the hundred Pounds."

That so gifted and elegant a ruffian as this should, in an age of gayety and fine manners, when morality was never considered, have met his fate by having a cart pulled away from under him, is, to my thinking, a melancholy reflection on the ingratitude of mankind. Why, this was a man after Charles II.'s own heart, and not unlike him, except that he was better looking. To do the King justice, however, I think he would have spared the highwayman if he had had his way. It was the Judge who presided at the trial who hung the accomplished Claude, as it was the Judge who with so flagrant a disregard for right feeling interpreted the solemn post-mortem celebrations, when the defunct hero lay in state in the Tangiers Tavern, St. Giles, in a room covered with black cloth, his hearse blazing with escutcheons, eight wax tapers burning, and as many tall gentlemen with black cloaks in attendance. "Mum was the word, as if for fear of disturbing the sleeping lion; and the night was stormy and rainy, as if the heavens had sympathized with the ladies, echoed over their sighs, wept over again their tears."—London Illustrated Magazine.

—Mme. Tacon, the governess of the King of Spain, has received the title of Countess of Peralta for her devotion to her pupil during his recent illness. She is seventy years old and has been in the royal family of Spain for thirty-five years.

—All the best sites along the hill country of Judea, between Jerusalem westward and the sea, have been bought by Russia, and covered with splendid Greek temples. The great pilgrimages of the day are from Russia to Palestine. Every year about thirty to forty thousand Russian pilgrims visit the Holy Land.

—Flexible metallic tubing is now made in Belgium, and is said to be meeting with considerable favor as a rival of rubber hose. It is formed by wrapping strips of brass or other metal spirally around a mandrel, the strips being bent over at both sides and a thin, narrow rubber band inserted to prevent leakage. The tubes bend readily in any direction, and are perfectly tight, very strong, and easily handled and repaired.

LITTLE'S

CHEMICAL FLUID

NON-POISONOUS

SHEEP DIP.

One gallon, mixed with 60 gallons of cold water will dip thoroughly 180 sheep, at a cost of 1 cent each. Easily applied, a nourisher of Wool; a certain cure for SCAB. Also,

Little's Patent Powder Dip,

(Poisonous.)

Mixes instantly with water. Prevents the fly from striking. In a 2 pound package there is sufficient to dip twenty sheep, and in a 7 pound package there is sufficient to dip one hundred sheep.

CATTON, BELL & CO.

SUCCESSORS TO FALKNER, BELL & CO.

Office, 406 California St. and Wool Agency Warehouse, cor. 6th and Townsend Sts

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

C. Mulholland,
EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.
PUBLISHED EVERY FRIDAY

INDEPENDENCE, CAL

FRIDAY JULY 11 1890

County Official Paper.

Great meetings are held in England to protest against the McKinley bill in Congress. As England never let slip an opportunity to injure American manufactures in every possible way, these meetings offer a strong argument to Americans in favor of the enactment of the bill.

If some measure of relief is not given to the people by legislation in favor of silver coinage there is very serious danger that the Republican party will be beaten in every State west of the Missouri river in the next general election. The Republicans in Congress who oppose this much needed relief appear to prefer the interests of capital to the future success of their party.

Every fruit grower in Owens Valley should give careful attention to a letter published in another column on peach shipping. The feture business of the Valley must be fruit raising. General farming on a large scale could never be done here, as the freight on grain and other products would prevent their shipment. But even if we could ship grain fruit raising is much more profitable and that must be the business of the country. Our fruits are excellent in quality, but the best fruit that ever grew will not find buyers if it is not picked and shipped in the right time and in the right way. Gathering up old drygoods boxes and dumping into them quantities of overripe fruit, or small, worthless trash and sending such stuff to fill orders will drive away customers. The man who is intent upon getting money by hook or crook may do this once, but the cheat cannot be repeated upon the same customer. Those who expect to make a regular business of fruit raising must not send anything but good fruit, picked and shipped in good condition and in regulation fruit boxes. At Independence are several fruit raisers who never ship anything but good, marketable fruit, and these never fail to have more orders than they can fill, at the highest prices; and they find the business very profitable. Like methods will secure like results for all who engage in the business.

MISCELLANEOUS.

DEMOCRATIC COUNTY COMMITTEE
Meeting.

A MEETING OF THE DEMOCRATIC CENtral Committee of Inyo county is hereby called for

WEDNESDAY, JULY 16th.

At Independence, at the hour of 7 o'clock p. m., for the purpose of selecting two delegates to represent Inyo county in the State Convention, which will meet in San Jose on August 19, 1890, and for the transaction of such other and further business as may come before the meeting.

COMMITTEE:

Round Valley—C. H. Parsons
Lincoln—F. K. Hutchison
Bishop—I. P. Yancy
Laws—Barton McGee
Big Pine—R. F. Hessian
Fish Springs—James Lane
Cottonwood—S. P. Roberts
Poleta—George Storm
Independence—D. Stubblefield
Aetnat—T. McDonough
Georges Creek—W. L. Hunter
Lone Pine—John Lacss
Keeler—John Barnes
Cerro Gordo—R. B. Nickerson
Darwin—J. A. McKenzie
Lookout—F. Fitzgerald
Panamint—H. G. Chickering
Olancha—E. I. Walker
At Large—W. J. Lake, J. J. Gunn, E. Robinson, J. W. Murphy, J. White Smith.

E. ROBINSON, Chairman.
REV. H. MULHOLLAND, Secretary.

DESERT LAND, FINAL PROOF.

D. E. No. 414.

LAND OFFICE AT INDEPENDENCE, CAL., June 25, 1890.

Notice is hereby given that Charles Mulholland, of Independence, Inyo County, California, has filed notice of intention to make proof on his desert land claim No. 414, for the N E ¼ of Sec. 32, Tp. 13 S., R. 36 E., M D M, before the Register and Receiver at Independence, California, on Saturday, the 2d day of August, 1890.

He names the following witnesses to prove the complete irrigation and reclamation of said land: Finlay McIver, Gilbert Christie, David Johnson and David Vaughn, all of Citrus, Inyo County, California.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD, Register.

DESERT LAND FINAL PROOF

D. E. No. 415.

LAND OFFICE AT INDEPENDENCE, CAL., June 25, 1890.

Notice is hereby given that John A. Hannah, of Independence, Inyo County, California, has filed notice of his intention to make proof on his desert-land claim, No. 415, for the S E ¼ of Sec. 32, Tp. 13 S., R. 36 E., M. D. M., before the Register and Receiver at Independence, on Saturday, the 2d day of August, 1890.

He names the following witnesses to prove the complete irrigation and reclamation of said land: Finlay McIver, Gilbert Christie, David Johnson and David Vaughn, all of Citrus, Inyo County, Cal.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD, Register.

Notice to Stockmen.

All parties in Inyo County standing horses, jacks, or bulls, for hire, are required to procure a Propagation License. If such license is not procured immediately action will be at once commenced to recover the cost thereof as required by law.

J. R. ELDRED,
Tax-Collector.

FOURTH ANNUAL FAIR.

Agricultural District No. 18.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA.

[Composed Of The Counties Of

Alpine, Mono & Inyo

TO BE HELD AT

Independence.

Commencing Tuesday, September 23d, and Continuing Four Days

A. R. CONKLIN ..... President.
C. MULHOLLAND ..... Secretary.
O. I. MAIRS ..... Treasurer.

DIRECTORS;

A. R. CONKLIN, W. S. ENOS, N. RHINE,
J. S. GORMAN, E. ROBINSON, F. McINER,
A. W. EIBESHUTZ, C. A. WALTER.

FIRST DEPARTMENT.

In this Department the same animal shall not be entered more than once, except in sweepstakes, or as a member of a family exhibited with its sire or dam. Any stallion, mare, gelding or colt competing in a race shall not be excluded from competing for premiums in their respective classes.

Tuesday.

CLASS I—THOROUGHBREDS.

Best stallion, any age	$25 00
Second best	15 00
Best mare, any age	20 00

CLASS II—STANDARD TROTTERS.

Best stallion, aged	$25 00
2 year old	15 00
Best mare	20 00

CLASS III—ROADSTERS.

Best roadster, aged	$20 00
2 year old	15 00
team to buggy	20 00

Wednesday.

CLASS IV—HORSES OF ALL WORK.

Best stallion, aged	$20 00
2 year old	15 00
1 year old	10 00
Best colt	10 00
Best mare, any age	20 00
2 year old	15 00
1 year old	10 00
and family of 3 or more	20 00

CLASS V—DRAFT HORSES.

Best stallion, aged	$20 00
2 year old	15 00
Best mare, aged	15 00
2 year old	10 00
and colt	15 00

CLASS VI—MATCHED TEAMS.

To be shown in harness.

Best matched carriage team	$15 00
buggy team	15 00

CLASS VII—SWEEPSTAKES.

Best stallion, any breed or age	$20 00
Best mare, any breed or age	20 00

Thursday.

CLASS VIII—JACKS.

Best jack, any age	$20 00
Second best	15 00

CLASS IX—MULES.

Best span, aged, owned by one person	$15 00
3 years or under " " " "	10 00

CLASS X—BULLS.

Best 3-year old or over, any breed	$20 00
2-year old, any breed	15 00
1-year old, any breed	10 00

CLASS XI—COWS.

Best 3 year old or over	$20 00
2-year-old	10 00
cow and calf	15 00
cow and 2 calves	20 00

All of the above to be exhibited at Race Track. Entries to be made with the Secretary not later than 6 o'clock p. m. on day preceding their exhibition.

Friday.

CLASS XII—SHEEP AND GOATS.

Best display of angora goats	$20 00
Best display of sheep	20 00

CLASS XIII—SWINE.

Best display of hogs	$15 00
Best sow and litter of 4 pigs	10 00

CLASS XIV—POULTRY.

Best display of fowls, any breed	$8 00
Second best	6 00
Best display of turkeys	5 00

Classes 12, 13 and 14 to be exhibited at the Pavilion. Entries to be made with Secretary not later than 6 p. m. on day preceding their exhibition.

All stock to be exhibited must be on the ground at 10 o'clock a. m. on the day intended for their exhibition. No animal to leave place of exhibit on until 4 o'clock p. m. without permission of the Park Director.

SECOND DEPARTMENT.

All exhibits in the following departments must be produced in the District.

CLASS I—AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS.

	1st.	2d.
100 pounds of flour	$3 00	$2 00
barley	3 00	2 00
wheat	3 00	2 00
oats	3 00	2 00
rye	3 00	2 00
shelled corn	3 00	2 00
50 pounds corn in the ear	2 00
alfalfa seed	3 00	2 00
Display of Egyptian corn	2 00
Bale of timothy hay	4 00
alfalfa hay	4 00
Display of grasses	8 00
agricultural products	20 00	15 00

CLASS II—VEGETABLES, ROOTS ETC.

50 pounds Early Rose potatoes	$2 50	$2 00
100 pounds any variety of potatoes	2 50	2 00
25 pounds of sweet potatoes	2 50
20 pounds of parsnips	2 00	1 00
carrots	2 00	1 00
turnips	2 00	1 00
beets	2 00	1 00
tomatoes	2 00	1 00
50 pounds of onions	2 00	1 00
10 pounds of garden peas	2 00
white beans	2 00
bayou beans	2 00
lima beans	2 00
Sample of peppers	2 00
1 dozen cabbage	2 00	1 00
½ dozen squash	2 00	1 00
pumpkins	2 00	1 00
watermelons	2 00	1 00
cantaloupes	2 00	1 00
1 dozen cucumbers	2 00	1 00

CLASS III—DAIRY AND FARM PRODUCE.

10 pounds butter in 2 pound rolls	$3 00	$2 00
20 pound jar of butter	4 00	3 00
Cheese	3 00
10 pounds lard	2 00
Display of honey	5 00	3 00
Apiary display	10 00	5 00
Variety of fruit in jars	10 00	5 00
jellies	5 00	3 00
preserves	5 00	3 00
pickles	5 00	3 00
50 pounds ham	10 00
bacon	10 00

THIRD DEPARTMENT.

CLASS I—HORTICULTURAL PRODUCTS.

Display of apples	$7 50	$5 00
peaches	7 50	5 00
pears	6 00	4 00
plums	6 00	4 00
prunes	6 00	4 00
quinces	5 00
grapes	7 50	5 00
table grapes	3 00
raisin grapes	3 00
wine grapes	3 00
raisins	5 00
dried fruits	7 50	5 00
fruits of all kinds	20 00	10 00
½ dozen bottles of wine	5 00

FOURTH DEPARTMENT.

CLASS I—ARTISTIC.

Oil painting on canvas	$10 00
Second best	5 00
Crayon drawing	10 00
Satin and Japanese panel	10 00
Pastel drawing	5 00
Collection of paintings on canvas	10 00
Photograph of scenery in district	5 00
Collection of photographs, Dist. scenery	10 00

FIFTH DEPARTMENT.

CLASS I—MINERALS ETC.

Cabinet of minerals from District	$25 00
Collection of curios from District	15 00
Display of marble	20 00
borax etc	10 00
soda	10 00
silver ore	10 00
gold ore	10 00
silver lead ore	10 00

SIXTH DEPARTMENT.

CLASS I—NEEDLE AND OTHER WORK.

Handsomest pillow shams	$5 00
and best patchwork quilt	5
crazy quilt	5
knitted quilt	5
sofa cushion	5
set of sofa tidies, 3 pieces	5
set of bureau tidies, 3 pieces	5
Greatest variety of crochet work	10
Best crochet quilt	5
embroidered ladies dress	5
childs dress	5
ottoman cover	5
table cover, 4 corners	5
scarf, 2 ends	5
pair of lambrequins	5
wall pan l, or banner	5
silk on flannel	5
linen	5
Kensington, or wool	5
toilet set, 3 pieces	5
lace work, hand made	5
darned net, 3 pieces	5
crochet shawl	5
table scarf, hand painted	5
hearth rug	5
made lady's dress	5
display hand-knit work	5
fancy articles	10
wax work	5
Spanish needle work	5
hair work	5
hand-knit stockings	5
calico dress made by girl under 14	5
hand sewing, 4 pieces, girl under 16	5
crochet work, girl under 14	5
patchwork, girl under 14	5
hand made shirt, girl under 14	5

SPEED PROGRAMME.

TUESDAY.

RUNNING—½ mile dash for untried horses. Purse, $75.
TROTTING—⅔ and repeat, for 2-year-olds. Purse, $100.

WEDNESDAY.

TROTTING—2 in 3, mile heats, for stallions owned in district. Purse, $150.
RUNNING—½ mile and repeat for saddle horses. Purse, $75.

THURSDAY.

RUNNING—2 in 3, mile heats. Free for all horses owned in district. Purse, $150.
TROTTING—2 in 3, mile heats, for double teams. Purse, $100.

FRIDAY.

RUNNING—½ mile dash, free for all owned in district. Purse, $100.
TROTTING—2 in 3, mile heats. Free for all owned in district. Purse, $150.
RUNNING—1 mile, for Indian horses. No entrance fee. Purse, $25.

RULES.

In all the above races 3 or more to enter, 2 or more to start. Entrance fee, 10 per cent. of purse.

All entries to be made with the Secretary on or before 12 o'clock m. of the day preceding the race.

California State Agricultural Society Rules to govern running races. National Trotting Association Rules to govern trotting races.

In all exhibits of animals for premiums, other things being equal, blooded stock will be preferred.

All articles included in the above list, except the first department, to be on exhibition at the Pavilion on second day and remain during the Fair.

Special premiums will be allowed for articles exhibited not included in above list

If you have entries to make, attend to it at once, and when your entries are made, see to it that they are on time and at place for examination by the committee.

Accept no rumors in regard to the business of the exhibition. If you do not know what to do, inquire of the officers whose duty it is to tell you. One half of the trouble and disappointment at the Fair is caused by relying on hearsay. Attend to your business yourself. If it is done wrong you know where the blame lies.

Read the rules, and, by example, at least, assist in enforcing them; but don't forget that mistakes will occur where many people are congregated. The Board endeavors to do justice to all.

If the Superintendents and Committeemen are not always ready at the appointed hour, keep your stock and articles where you can command them at any time. Remember that we have but little time to do much business; patience, with a little system, will overcome many obstacles.

The Board will give the same special attention to details that has contributed to success in the past. It remains for the exhibitors to achieve still better results for the Fair of 1890.

ADMISSION.

Life Membership	$50 00
Membership ticket, admitting member, wife and minor children	5 00
Single season ticket	2 00
To Pavilion, each	50
To Race Track, each	50

NATHAN RHINE.

NATHAN RHINE,
(Successor to Harris & Rhine.)
MERCHANT,
INDEPENDENCE
Inyo Co. Cal.
Wholesale & Retail
—DEALER IN—
General Merchandise

MY STOCK
CONSISTING OF
almost every needed article, is well calculated to satisfy the wants of everybody; and, as in the past, it will be our aim in the future to retain the extensive patronage enjoyed heretofore.

NATHAN RHINE.

NATHAN RHINE
BANKER
Independence, Cal.
SELL EXCHANGE
—ON—
SAN FRANCISCO
Draw Direct
—ON—
NEW YORK,
LONDON, England.
BERLIN, FRANKFORT-on the Main, GERMANY.
I AM PREPARED TO TRANSACT ALL KINDS
—OF—
GENERAL
BANKING
&
EXCHANGE
BUSINESS.
Wechsel in beliebigen Summen auf Berlin und Frankfurt am der Main, Deutsche Vollmachten geleistet. Geldsendungen von und nach Deutschland besorgt.
AGENT FOR
WELLS FARGO & CO'S.
EXPRESS
MUTUAL
Life Insurance Co.
OF NEW YORK
CAPITAL — — — $5,000,000
LIVERPOOL
AND LONDON AND GLOBE
INSURANCE - COMPANY
Capital — — — — $21,000,000
NATHAN RHINE.

MISCELLANEOUS.

J. R. ELDRED,
Sheriff and Tax-Collector.
INYO CO., CAL.

P. H. MACK,
COUNTY CLERK,
—AND—
Ex-officio Auditor and Recorder,
INYO CO., CAL.

GEO. M. GILL,
District Attorney,
INYO CO., CAL.

J. J. MOORE,
County Treasurer,
INYO CO., CAL.

S. P. M'KNIGHT, C. E.
COUNTY SURVEYOR
—AND—
U. S. Deputy Mineral Surveyor
For California and Nevada.
—BISHOP CREEK, INYO CO., CAL.—
The obtaining of United States mineral patents a specialty.
All kinds of surveying given the most careful and accurate attention.

JUSTICE OF PEACE,
C. MULHOLLAND.
Office in the "INDEPENDENT" Building, Independence, Inyo County, Cal

A. R. CONKLIN,
Attorney-at-Law
Independence, Cal.
Will practice in all the Courts of the states of California and Nevada.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
Independence, Cal.

P. W. FORBES,
ATTORNEY AT LAW.
NOTARY PUBLIC.
Cases in U. S. Land Office a Specialty.
BISHOP, INYO COUNTY, CALIFORNIA.

IRVING J. WOODIN, M D.,
Physician & Surgeon,
(COUNTY PHYSICIAN)
Louise L. Woodin, M. D.
PHYSICIAN & SURGEON.
NIGHT CALLS ATTENDED.
Office and residence at the Reddy place, Independence.

W. H. GEORGE, M. D.,
Physician and Surgeon,
Bishop Creek, Cal.,
Offers his professional services to the people of Bishop Creek and vicinity. Office and residence opposite Andrew Clark's.

F. E. Bunting, M. D.
Physician & Surgeon
LONE PINE, CAL
OFFICE IN GELCICH BUILDING
All calls attended to immediately.

Lodge 221, F. & A. M.
Regular meetings of Lodge No. 221, F. & A. M., for the year 1889, will be held at the Lodge room at Independence as follows:

Saturday	February 1st
"	March 1st
"	March 29th
"	May 3rd
"	May 31st
"	June 28th
"	July 26th
"	August 30th
"	September 27th
"	October 25th
"	November 22nd
"	December 20th

P. H. MACK, W. M.
C. MULHOLLAND Sec.

P. W. FORBES. P. H. MACK.
MACK & FORBES.
Real Estate Agents,
Address, P. H. MACK, Independence, Cal.
P. W. FORBES, Bishop, Cal.

FRED BURCKHARDT
Watchmaker & Jeweler,
LONE PINE, CAL.
Time pieces of all descriptions repaired and regulated, satisfaction guaranteed. Jewelry made to order. Firearms repaired and loaded.
All orders from any part of the country will be promptly attended to, at the most reasonable charges. At the old stand "Mechanics' Hall," Lone Pine.
FRED BURKHARDT.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CROCKER'S HOTEL.
BIG PINE - CAL.
New House,
New Furniture,
Low Rates
Splendid hunting and fishing near by, in act, it is a veritable paradise for tourists and pleasure seekers.
Special attention given to the wants of every guest.
CROCKER BROS., Props.
sept1-tf

ANTONS SALOON
KEELER, CAL.
BEER, WINES, LIQUORS and CIGARS
All kinds of Fancy Drinks, including pure water. A comfortable and pleasant Hall.
JOHN C. ANTON, Prop.

IRWIN'S SALOON
Cor. Edwards and Market Streets,
Independence . Cal.
THE PUBLIC GENERALLY ARE RESPECTFULLY invited to call and inspect my establishment, which has been entirely rebuilt an furnished in a style second to none on this side of the mountains. A SPLENDID NEW BILLIARD TABLE provided for the amusement of patrons.
THE BAR
Is supplied with the most celebrated brands of pure Wines and Liquors and the Finest Havana Cigars.
JOHN C. IRWIN, Proprietor.
feb12tf

Palace Saloon.
WALTER OBER, Lessee.
—THE BAR—
Is constantly supplied with the best kinds of
WINES, LIQUORS, & CIGARS.
The most careful attention given to the amusement and comfort of patrons.
A FINE BILLIARD TABLE
Is always at the disposal of visitors to the Palace Saloon. Dec. 20 89

Pioneer
Livery & Feed Stables,
INDEPENDENCE, CAL.
Having returned and resumed the management of the above well known feed and livery stables, patrons can be assured of finding there the best of livery teams, Saddle Horses, and
Livery Accommodations
in general. Also, Hay and Grain for sale by the pound or ton.
O. I. MAIRS, Proprietor.

E. H. Edwards,
—DEALER IN—
General Merchandise,
LONE PINE,
INYO COUNTY - - - CALIFORNIA.

BLACKSMITHING,
Horseshoeing, General Iron
—AND—
WAGON WORK.
PIONEER BLACKSMITH SHOP
Cor. Main St. & Depot Ave.,
INDEPENDENCE, CAL.
W. F. MATLACK ..... PROPRIETOR.
Horseshoeing ..... $2 00 for Cash
For particulars, call and see
W. F. MATLACK.

LONE PINE
Blacksmith Shop.
R. C. Spear, Prop'r
—ALL WORK ON—
MINING TOOLS,
FARMING IMPLEMENTS
& FREIGHTING OUTFITS
—PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO—
HORSE SHOEING,
CARRIAGE WORK,
GENERAL REPAIRING
All work attended to with neatness and despatch. Prices to suit the times.

BOOTS AND SHOES
MADE AND REPAIRED.
THE BEST MATERIAL.
FIRST-CLASS WORK.
Repairs done Promptly.
Price Reasonable.
A. J. DAVIS,
nov 30-tf Independence,

TO ADVERTISERS
A list of 1030 newspapers divided into STATE AND SECTIONS will be sent on application—FREE.
To those who want their advertising to pay we can offer no better medium for thorough and effective work, than the various sections of our Select Local List. GEO. P. ROWELL & CO.,
Newspaper Advertising Bureau,
10 Spruce Street, New York.

MISCELLANEOUS.

J. FORBES. W. D. TOBEY.
FORBES & TOBEY,
HAWTHORNE, NEV.,
—DEALERS IN—
LUMBER
OF ALL KINDS.
DOORS,
SHINGLES,
SASH AND BLINDS,
LATH,
RUSTIC
MOULDINGS,
DRESSED LUMBER.
Matched and Dressed
Flooring.
sept 11-tf

EDWARD CHENOT
Independence, Cal.,
INVITES PUBLIC ATTENTION TO HIS Extensive Stock of
GENERAL MERCHANDIS
....Consisting of....
GROCERIES.
PROVISIONS
Tobacco, Cigars,
WINES AND LIQUORS
FLOUR & GRAIN
Together with an Assortment of
DRY GOODS AND CLOTHING
ETC., ETC
Buyers and consumers should call and examine my stock and prices before purchasing elsewhere.
E. CHENOT.
Independence, Cal., March 9, 1884.
n476tf

J. W. Murphy.
BLACKSMITHING
—AND—
General Iron Work.
Wagons and Carriages Repaired.
HORSESHOEING, $2.00 for CASH
Shop on Edwards St., opposite the Court House, Independence.

BUHACH
THE UNRIVALED
Insect Exterminator
Manufactured solely from Pyrethrum flowers, grown in California, in a locality where the soil and climate are peculiarly adapted to the production of flowers rich in the essential oil which makes them so remarkably destructive to insect life.
Avoid the Worthless and Spurious Preparations, sold as Insect Powders, and use Buhach from original packages, and clear your premises of all Annoying and Destructive Insect Pests.
BUHACH J. H. MILLER, CALIFORNIA INSECT EXTERMINATOR
None Genuine Without the Trade Mark.
If your dealer doesn't keep it, order directly from the
Buhach Producing & Manufacturing COMPANY,
SOLE MANUFACTURERS,
STOCKTON, - - CALIFORNIA.

Wm. Muth-Rasmussen.
Bee Keeper.
Manufacturer of Comb Foundation.
Independence, Inyo Co. Cal.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY, JULY 11, ...1890

COURT NOTES.

Superior Court of Inyo County, California Hon. John A. Hannah, Judge.

WEDNESDAY, July 9th.

In the matter of the estate of James Ward, deceased—Filed petition of Thomas Parker for letters of administration.

Mr. J. Reddy was up from Darwin a few days this week.

W. T. Grant is driving on the new stage line from Keeler to Little Lake.

Mr. W. H. Russell came down from Benton last Monday and was in town several days.

P. H. Mack gives notice that he will be a candidate for the nomination for County Clerk.

Rev. T. McGill of Reno will preach at Lone Pine on Sunday at 11 a. m. and at Independence at 7:30 p. m.

Mr. A. C. Harvey of Lone Pine says he will have a big crop of fine peaches; he is now prepared to fill orders.

Mrs. Chalfant came down from Bishop last Monday and has been visiting with friends in town durihg the week.

The Republican delegates from Mono to the State Convention are W. H. Russell, Wilson Butler and H. M. Eldy.

After a visit of several weeks at Independence Miss Alice Raine and her sister, Miss Emily, left last Saturday for San Francisco.

The force of men is being increased at the Soda Works at Keeler. About thirty more will be employed as soon as they can be got.

J. W. Murphy, Walter Ober and Charley Robinson went up into the mountains last Tuesday. They will go to Lake Rhoda and Buob's Creek.

It is rumored that a petition has been gotten up at Keeler for discontinuing the newly established mail route from that place to Mojave.

A small boy and a fire cracker caused a big fire at Virginia City on the Fourth of July. The fire started in Lone Star livery stable and fourteen horses wese burned up.

Mr. J. W. P. Laird left town last Tuesday morning for Sacramento. It is understood that he will go before the Supreme Court for examination on application to be admitted to practice before that Court.

At Darwin the water pipes are in very poor repair and during the past few weeks water has to be hauled nine miles. Other pipes will be ready within two weeks and will then be laid.

John Anton came up from Keeler yesterday and returned to-day. He says there is no truth in the rumor that a petition had been circulated at Keeler asking for a discontinuation of the mail route to Mojave.

On Sunday, July 20th, Rev. J. H. De La Matyr will preach at Lone Pine at 11 o'clock a. m., at Georges Creek at 2:30 p. m. and at Independence at 7:30 p. m., being his last visit before going to Conference.

The Republican County Central Committee met at Independence on Monday evening. The following were chosen delegates to the State Convention: A. R. Conklin, Seth G. Sneden and Thomas C. Boland.

The new Board of Trustees of Independence School District organized last Tuesday. The Board consists of O. I. Mairs, E. Robinson and C. Mulholland. Mr. Mairs is Chairman and C. Mulholland Clerk of the Board.

Several families of Independence have gone up into the mountains during the week. Camping in little grassy valleys surrounded by vast snow banks and towering mountain peaks is a great change from the hot plains below.

A pic-nic will be held at Big Pine on Sunday. The entertainment is gotten up by the ladies for the purpose of raising funds to make improvements on the cemetery. Every body will be welcome and a large crowd is certain to be present.

Mrs. Harris and her two daughters left here yesterday morning for San Francisco. The had been on a visit of several weeks with Mr. and Mrs. L. Wood. Miss Ettie Wood has gone with the party to attend school at San Francisco.

Two mining operators from Montana went to Darwin last Saturday to examine some mines belonging to J. Wilson. At last report it was expected the parties would buy some, if not all, of the claims belonging to Mr. Wilson.

Charles Olds of Round Valley beat Manuel Diaz of Lone Pine in a foot race at Bishop on the Fourth. The distance was 150 yards. It must have been a very close race as the winner is reported crossing the score only two inches in the lead.

The Dunphy-O'Keefe mine at Cerro Gordo is reported to be opening out very well. A large ore body is in sight and shipments are made regularly. A few small veins of ore are reported in the Union mine but no large body yet in sight. The ground looks well as prospecting advances.

The Board of Equalization have been in session since last Monday and have made the following changes and corrections: Assessor ordered to assess property of A. K. Eugley which had escaped assessment. Assessment of Union Co. reduced from $14,715 to $8000.

Some repairs had to be made this week on the river bridge at Citrus. The center piles have sunk a good deal and the bridge floor had to be taken up and the stringers raised and blocked up. The bridge is quite safe and there was very little interruption of travel.

Mr. S. A. Densmore and Mrs Lewis have each of them sold the fruit crop of their orchard at Camp Independence to a party at Bishop. This is the first season that fruit has been sold on the trees at Independence. In all probability the practice will extend and continue in future years.

Rev. T. McGill of Reno has been at Independence some days this week. He is a Congregationalist and his mission here is to secure, if possible, a location for a church and parsonage. If this can be secured work upon the buildings will soon be begun. The Trust Association at San Francisco would furnish the necessary funds.

THE FOURTH.

The fourth of July passed off pleasantly at Independence. No accidents marred the enjoyment and varied amusements entertained the large crowd of people throughout the day. The Pavilion was filled with people soon after ten o'clock a. m. District Attorney Gill called the assemblage to order and made a brief and very appropriate opening address. His remarks were inspired by good judgment and good taste. A. R. Conklin Esq. has made many Fourth of July orations but it is safe to say that his address on this occasion was the best yet made by him. His audience listened with closest attention from beginning to end. The other exercises, singing, reading etc., were heartily applauded. The ball at night was one of the most successful ever given at Independence. The large Pavilion was filled to overflowing and every body appeared to have great enjoyment. Throughout the day or night there was not an unpleasant occurrence or a single angry word heard to mar the enjoyment of anyone. This is very creditable when so large a crowd of people were together engaged in the excitement and hilarity of such an occasion.

THE FOOTRACE.

A great deal of interest was taken in the footrace between B. Rosenthal of Hawthorne and Walter Ober of Independence. A purse of $900 was up, $600 by the contestants and $300 by citizens of Independence. Several friends accompanied Rosenthal from Hawthorne and they were so confident that he would win that they gave odds of two to one in several bets. Both runners went over the track several times before the start. Rosenthal manifested the utmost confidence that he would win and his friends went about offering bets of from twenty dollars up to a thousand, or more if there were takers. In fact the Hawthorne men had a "dead thing" on their man and counted their winnings before the race was run. James R. Moffett gave the signal to start by firing a pistol. Ober appeared to be the more self-possessed and alert on the start and the instant the crack of the pistol was heard he bounded away with a mighty spring. Rosenthal leaped upward instead of forward and made two or three wild jumps before he got himself well together; but when he did settle down he came on like a scared wolf. It was evident that both men were straining to the utmost to win. A cool observer at the lower end of the track looked closely at the faces of both runners as the approached the end and the expression was painful to see. Rosenthal appeared to realize that he was beaten; but with all his consciousness in his eyes and all his physical life in his legs he strove desperately to close the gap between himself and his rival. Ober appeared to be unconscious of everything about him; his face had a set expression like that of a statue and his eyes were fixed upon the goal. Ober crossed the score about three feet in the lead, time, 10 1-5 seconds. Several stop watches were used and compared after the race. Before leaving Independence Rosenthal and his friends said repeatedly that they had been well and fairly treated and had no fault to find with the way the race had been conducted, however much they might have been disappointed in the result. Dr. Reed, one of the backers of Rosenthal, selected Mr. Moffett as starter for the race.

No Comment Necessary.

A party at Mound House sent to a merchant at Independence an order for a box of peaches. The order was given to a man who is now handling fruit here, with instructions to pick and ship the fruit. Here is a copy of a letter received by the merchant:

MOUND HOUSE, July 7, 1890.

MR. ——: Sir:—Enclosed find price of peaches. The party who filled your order gave me a miserable lot of little fruit packed in a cracker box and arriving in vile condition, being mashed to a jelly, owing to bad packing and over-ripeness. This has happened several times to me and others, and if growers in Owens Valley expect to make a trade in their excellent fruit they will have to properly pack and exercise discretion as to fruit shipped in regard to distance to be carried etc. As it now is there is no certainty of getting fruit from your section in condition to be used, except possibly, in some individual cases. This is intended, of course, to be without personal reference to you. I am obliged to you for your trouble on my account, but the fact remains that Owens Valley fruit, which ought to sell upon its reputation, is so miserably handled by pickers and packers as a rule that people are afraid to touch it. Yours Very Truly,

---

Meteorological Summary for June, 1890. Keeler, Cal.

Mean Barometer	29.788
Mean Temperature	73°
Highest Temperature	96°
Lowest Temperature	46°
Greatest daily range of temperature	32°
Prevailing direction of wind, N. W.
Extreme velocity of wind, direction and date, 36 miles N. W. 2nd.
Total precipitation	0.00
Number of cloudless days	29
Number of partly cloudy days	1
Number of cloudy days	0
Dates of frost, none.

D. C. GRUNOW,
Private, Signal Corps.

A Beautiful Stone.

Recently Captain Bronson took out a beautiful block of marble at the Inyo Marble Company's quarry. The stone weighed fifteen tons and was a solid block without a flaw and of a beautiful golden color. For ornamental purposes this is one of the handsomest blocks of marble ever seen. It was shipped to San Francisco but had to be reduced to ten tons before it could be handled and shipped. It cannot fail to attract attention in the City.

This is the first season when crops have been irrigated from the Stevens Canal. Mr. H. J. Robinson has wheat growing which promises to make a very heavy crop. He says part of it now looks as if it would yield one and a half tons to the acre and it is ripening fast. Corn is making very rapid growth and will be a heavy crop. His first cutting of alfalfa produced three tons to the acre. Mr. Robinson says he never saw such alfalfa. Mr. W. Jenkins also has fine crops of alfalfa and wheat growing. All under the Stevens Canal is rich bottom land and will beyond doubt prove to be among the most fertile in Owens Valley. The canal is now in fine condition and carries a large volume of water.

Dr. I. J. Woodin got back to Independence last evening. During the past month he had a party with him in Salt Well Valley prospecting for borax. He reports having prospected about four thousand acres of ground and found the whole of it rich in borax. The location is about twenty-two miles east from Coyote Holes in the southeast part of the Valley. Searles' field is twenty-six miles further east. The new field is easy of access, the road is good and plenty of fuel is at hand.

Last Saturday Henry Malone came into the office of the INYO INDEPENDENT and ordered that a card be published to the effect that he is a candidate for the office of Assessor. On the same day of the month twenty-six years ago Mr. Malone went into battle at Atlanta under the command of the gallant General McPherson who was killed in that fight. Mr. Malone was then aged seventeen years but no bearded soldier on that bloody field did his duty better than the boy. Having lived in Inyo County sixteen years he is sufficiently well qualified to discharge the duties of the office of Assessor.

Mr. John N. Yandell gives notice that he will ask the Republican nomination for County Clerk. Mr. Yandell has been a resident of Owens Valley for ten years, being most of that time engaged in business. He is a good accountant and bookkeeper, qualifications that are necessary in a County Clerk.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE County of Inyo, State of California.

Estate of CHARLES D. BEGOLE, deceased.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN BY THE UNDERSIGNED, Administrator of the estate of Charles D. Begole, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his residence, in the town of Independence in the county of Inyo.

THOMAS PARKER,
Administrator of the estate of Charles D. Begole, deceased.

Dated July 7th, 1890.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE.

STEVENS DITCH COMPANY.

Location of principal place of business, Independence, California. Location of ditch, near Independence, Inyo county.

Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of a Board of Directors, held on the 31st day of May, 1890, an assessment (No. 4) of Ten (10) cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary at the office of the company, Independence, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 26th day of July, 1890 will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Saturday, the 30th day of August, 1890 to pay the delinquent assessment together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

By order of the Board of Directors.

P. H. MACK, Secretary.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE.

INYO MARBLE COMPANY.

Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Inyo county, Cal.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT AT A meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 26th day of June, 1890, an assessment (No. 10) of Ten Cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, No. 132 California street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 5th day of August, 1890, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on TUESDAY, the 26th day of August, 1890, to pay the delinquent assessment together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

G. W. LUCE, Sec.

Office—No. 132 California St., San Francisco, California.

POLITICAL ANNOUNCEMENTS.

All announcements under this head will be charged for at the uniform rate of Ten Dollars

For Superior Judge.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Superior Judge, subject to the action of the Republican County Convention.

GEORGE M. GILL.

For Superior Judge.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Superior Judge. Subject to the action of the Democratic county convention.

JOHN A. HANNAH.

For Superior Judge.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY DECLARE myself as a candidate for the office of Superior Judge, subject to the action of the Republican county convention.

A. R. CONKLIN.

For Sheriff.

ANNOUNCEMENNT IS HEREBY MADE that I respectfully declare myself as a candidate for the office of Sheriff, subject to the action of the Republican County Convention.

JOHN S. GORMAN.

For Treasurer.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Treasurer, subject to the action of the Democratic county convention. J. J. MOORE.

For Sheriff.

I HEREBY REPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Sheriff, subject to the action of the Democratic Convention. BEN. T. WILLIAMS.

For Supervisor.

ANNOUNCEMENT IS HEREBY MADE that I will be a candidate for the office of Supervisor of the Third District subject to the action of the Republican Convention.

CHARLES A. WALTER.

For Assessor.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Assessor, subject to the action of the Democratic Convention. G. W. GARRETSON.

For Sheriff.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT I RESpectfully declare myself as a candidate for the office of Sheriff, subject to the action of the Democratic Convention.

ALNEY I. McGEE.

For Assessor.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY DECLARE that I am a candidate for the office of Assessor of Inyo county, subject to the action of the Republican convention.

HENRY MELONE.

For County Clerk.

ANNOUNCEMENT IS HEREBY RESPECTfully made that I declare myself a candidate for the office of County Clerk, subject to the action of the Republican convention

JOHN N. YANDELL.

For County Clerk.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of County Clerk, subject to the action of the Democratic convention. P. H. MACK.

HALE BROS. & CO.

IN ORDERING BY MAIL OF HALE BROS. & CO.

YOU CAN DEPEND

UPON GETTING

FREE, OUR NEW Fashion Book

1. Your orders filled with pleasing promptness.

2. The same price and attention as though you were at their counters.

3. Lower prices on the whole than elsewhere. They allow no one to undersell them.

4. Courteous and satisfactory treatment. Goods may be exchanged or money refunded if satisfaction is not given.

5. The best styles. They carry no unseasonable goods.

6. The benefits of their dealing direct with manufacturers. It makes small prices.

AND PRICE LIST 100 PAGES.

HALE BROS & CO,

—Dealers In—

DRYGOODS, CLOTHING, SHOES,

Hats, Notions and Household Supplies.

Nos. 825 to 835 K St.,

Sacrameoto, Cal.

JEWELRY, DIAMONDS, WATCHES.

Hyman Fredrick, Reno, Nev.

The attention of the people of Inyo and neighboring counties is respectfully invited to the

LARGEST AND BEST STOCK

of Watches, Diamonds, Ear and Finger Rings, Bracelets and all other kinds of Jewelry this side of San Francisco. Knives, Forks, Spoons, and other Table Ware of the Best quality.

PRICES DEFY OUTSIDE COMPETITION.

All repairs done promptly and in a workmanlike manner.

Address orders and packages to

HYMAN FREDRICK, Jeweler,

m30-tf RENO, NEVADA.

THE BEST VALUE

LEVI STRAUSS & CO'S

Celebrated Copper Riveted

OVERALLS AND SPRING BOTTOM PANTS

ENJOY A NATIONAL REPUTATION.

NONE GENUINE WITHOUT OUR TRADE MARK.

BEST SEWING! BEST FINISH! BEST FIT! BEST MATERIALS!

The only kind made by White Labor.

FOR SALE EVERYWHERE

MISCELLANEOUS.

NORMAN HOUSE,

Independence, - - Cal.

New House.
New Furniture.
Low Rates.

Special attention will be given to secure the comfort of guests.

O. I. MAIRS, Prop.

feb12tf

MISCELLANEOUS.

BELL'S Flouring Mills,

A. N. BELL, Prop.

TRY BELL'S

EXTRA PATENT ROLLER FLOUR.

Having added Patent Rolls and other Improvements to our Mills, I am now turning out Flour that is fully

Equal to the Best.

Corn, Oats and Barley Cracked on Short Notice.

A. N. BELL,

Independence, Cal.

BIG PIONEER ADVERTISEMENTS.

GIVEN & INGALLS,

— DEALERS IN —

FARM PRODUCE.

J. E. DUNLAP.

Harness Maker.

Harness of all kinds, from the lightest to the heaviest. Any kind of new work made promptly and of the best material. Repairing done on the shortest notice. A full line of saddles and harness.

Valley View Hotel.

O. H. Hill, Prop'r.

A New House Newly Furnished Throughout. Guests will receive every courtesy and attention.

NEVADA STABLE BISHOP.

Opposite Valley View Hotel, Main St

In the Livery Department nothing is kept but safe and good traveling carriage and saddle horses. Conveyances of all kinds first-class. Good attendance and the best of hay and grain for all animals boarding at the stable

S. P. SMITH, Prop.

BISHOP CREEK

BREWERY,

MUNZINGER, PHILIPPAY & CO, Proprietors.

All the appliances and conveniences of First Class Brewery, including a beautiful grove for out-door parties.

Customers supplied on all points on the C. & C. Railroad.

Send orders to

MUNZINGER, PHILIPPAY & CO.

Bishop Creek, Cal.

F. E. Bosworth,

Watchmaker & Jeweler.

BISHOP, CAL.

Fine and Complicated Watch Repairing a Specialty.

Guns, Sewing Machines, Organs and Music Boxes Put in Perfect Condition and Warranted.

I Prefer to do all work at your house and will call if you will write to me at Bishop.

A NEW DEAL!

BISHOP CREEK

Livery. Feed & Sale Stable.

ROBERT O'NEIL, Prop'r.

Horses are boarded by the day, week or month. Stock bought and sold.

Bishop Creek, Cal., Nov. 20, 1883.

A. K. EUGLEY,

BIG PINE, INYO CO. CAL.

Dealer in GENERAL MERCHANDISE, GROCERIES MINERS Supplies

PROVISIONS, &c., &c., &c.

Deputy County Clerk.

A. K. EUGLEY,

Big Pine, Cal.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Railroad Time Table.

CARSON & COLORADO R R

TAKING EFFECT,

Sunday, May 10th, 1889

STATIONS.	From Mound House. No. 1	To Mound House. No. 2.
	Leave—	Arrives—
Mound House	12:30 p. m.	5.55 p. m.
Dayton	1:00 p. m.	5:25 p. m.
Wabuska	3.05 p. m.	3 06 p. m.
Hawthorne	6 50 p. m.	11:00 a. m.
Luning	7:30 p. m.	10.05 a. m.
Soda Springs	9:15 p. m.	9.05 a. m.
Belleville	10:25 p. m.	7:45 a. m.
Candelaria	Ar. 11.10 p. m.	Lv. 7.30 a. m.
	No. 3. Leave—	No. 4. Arrives—
Belleville	8 10 a. m.	5:25 p. m.
Benton	11.40 a. m.
Basalt Creek	1:50p. m.	12:00 m.
Alvord	2:25 p. m.	10.00 a. m.
Independence	4 10 p. m.	8:30 a. m.
Lone Pine	5 00p. m.	7:40 a. m.
Keeler	Ar 5:45 p. m.	Lv. 7.00 a. m.

Trains 1 and 2 run daily.
Train 3 runs Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays
Train 4 runs Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays

Passenger trains make close connection at Mound House with express trains of V. & T. R. R., which connect at Reno with east and west bound trains of Central Pacific Railroad.

Stage Connections:

At HAWTHORNE with United States Stage Company's coaches for Aurora (26 miles); Bodie (35 miles); Lundy and Bridgeport.

At LUNING (125 miles from Mound House) with Gilmer, Salsbury & Co's. tri-weekly stages (leaving Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays) for Downeyville, Grantsville and Belmont.

At CANDELARIA with U. S. Stage Co's. stages for Columbus (8 miles), Silver Peak, Montezuma, Alida Valley, Gold Mountain, etc.

H. M. YERINGTON,
General Superintendent.

R. J. LAWS, Assistant Superintendent.

D. A. BENDER,
General Freight and Passenger Agent.

The Newest Styles

OF

Fashionable Clothing

Dry Goods, Ladies' Wear, etc., etc.

AT

L. WOOL

CASH STORE

A small stock of fresh groceries a canned goods constantly renewed.

Fresh Produce, and Grain Flour, etc., constantly on hand.

CANDIES,
PEANUTS,
WALNUTS,
TOYS!

THE CASH STORE

Is Where You Get

WORTH OF YOUR MONEY

THOMAS & HILL,

— DEALERS IN —

GENERAL MERCHANDISE

BIG PINE, INYO COUNTY, CAL,

We keep constantly on hand goods of all kinds needed in a country home. We order only First-Class Goods and ask no more than a reasonable profit. Give us a trial.

THOMAS & HILL

INDEPENDENCE

SHAVING SALOON.

Shaving, Hair-Cutting, etc., done in the best manner.

WM. H. HUFF, Prop'r

COLONEL QUARITCH, V.C.

By H. RIDER HAGGARD.

CHAPTER XXXIX.

BUT NOT TO BED.

Harold glanced at the clock—it was nearly 1 in the morning—time to go to bed if he was going. But he did not feel inclined to go to bed. If he did, with this great discovery on his mind, he should not sleep. There was another thing; it was Christmas eve, or rather Christmas day, the day of Ida's answer. If any succor was to be given at all it must be given at once, before the fortress had capitulated. Once let the engagement be renewed, and even if the money should subsequently be forthcoming, the difficulties would be doubled. But there, he was building his hopes upon sand and he knew it. Even supposing that he held in his hand the key to the burial place of the long lost treasure, who knew whether it would still be there, or whether rumor had not enormously added to its proportions? He was allowing his hopes and his imagination to carry him away.

Still he could not sleep, and he had a mind to see if anything could be made of it. Going to the gun room, he put on a pair of shooting boots, an old coat and an ulster. Next he provided himself with a dark lantern and the key of the summer house at the top of Dead Man's Mount, and silently unlocking the back door, started out into the garden. The night was very rough, for the great gale was now rising fast, and bitterly cold, so cold that he hesitated for a moment before making up his mind to go on. However, he did go on, and in another two minutes was climbing the steepsides of the great tumulus. There was a wan moon in the cold sky—the wind whistled most drearily through the naked boughs of the great oaks, which groaned in answer like things in pain. Harold was not a nervous or impressionable man, but the place had a spectral look about it, and he could not help thinking of the evil reputation it had borne for all these ages. There was scarcely a man in Honham, or in Boisingham either, who could have been persuaded to stay half an hour by himself on Dead Man's Mount after the sun was well down. Harold had at different times asked one or two of them what they saw to be afraid of, and they had answered that it was not what they saw so much as what they felt. He had laughed at the time, but now he admitted to himself that he was anything but comfortable, though if he had had to put his feelings into words he could probably not have described them further than by saying that he had a general sensation of somebody being behind him. However, he was not going to be frightened by this nonsense, so, consigning all superstitions to their father the devil, he marched on boldly and unlocked the summer house door. Now, though this curious edifice had been designed for a summer house, and for that purpose lined throughout with encaustic tiles, nobody as a matter of fact had ever dreamed of using it to sit in. To begin with, it roofed over a great depression some thirty feet or more in diameter, for the top of the mount was hollowed out like one of those wooden cups upon which jugglers catch balls. But, notwithstanding all the encaustic tiles in the world, damp will gather in a hollow like this, and the damp alone was an objection. The real fact was, however, that the spot had an evil reputation, and even those who were sufficiently well educated to know the folly of this sort of thing would not willingly have gone there for purposes of enjoyment. So it had suffered the general fate of disused places, having fallen more or less out of repair and become a receptacle for garden tools, broken cucumber frames and lumber of various sorts.

Harold got the door open and entered.

Harold got the door open and entered, shutting it behind him. It was, if anything, more disagreeable in the empty silence of the wide place, for the space roofed over was considerable, than it had been outside, and the question at once arose in his mind, what was he to do now that he had got there? If the treasure was there at all, probably it was deep down in the bowels of the great mound. Well, as he was on the spot, he thought that he might as well have a dig, though probably nothing would come of it. In the corner were a pickax and some spades and shovels. Harold got them, advanced to the center of the space, and, half laughing at his own folly, set to work. First, having lighted another lantern which was kept there, he removed with the sharp end of the pickax a large patch of the encaustic tiles exactly in the center of the depression. Then, having loosened the sod beneath with the pick, he took off his ulster and fell to digging with a will. The soil proved to be very sandy and easy to work. Indeed, from its appearance, he soon came to the conclusion that it was not virgin earth, but worked soil, which had been thrown there. Presently his spade struck against something hard; he picked it up and held it to the lantern. It proved to be an ancient spear head, and near it were some bones, though whether or no they were human he could not at the time determine. This was very interesting, but it was scarcely what he wanted, so he dug on manfully until he found himself chest deep in a kind of grave. He had been digging for an hour now, and was getting very tired. Cold as it was, the perspiration poured from him. As he paused for breath he heard the church clock strike two, and very solemnly it sounded down the wild ways of the wind torn winter night. He dug on a little more, and then seriously thought of giving up what he was somewhat ashamed of having undertaken. How was he to account for this great hole to his gardener on the following morning? Then all at once there he made up his mind that he would not account for it. The gardener, in common with the rest of the village, believed that the place was haunted. Let him set down the hole to the "spooks" and their spiritual activity.

Still he dug on at his grave for a little longer. It was by now becoming a matter of exceeding labor to throw the shovelfuls of soil clear of the hole. Then he determined to stop, and with this view scrambled, not without difficulty, out of the amateur tomb. Once out, his eyes fell on a stout iron crowbar which was standing among the other tools, such an implement as is used to make holes in the earth wherein to set hurdles and stakes; and it occurred to him that it would not be a bad idea to drive this crowbar into the bottom of the grave which he had dug, in order to ascertain if there was anything within his reach. Accordingly he once more descended into the hole and began to work with the iron crow, driving it down with all his strength. When he had got it almost as deep as it would go, that is about three feet, it struck something—something hard—there was no doubt of it. He worked away in great excitement, widening the hole as much as he could.

Yes, it was masonry, or if it was not masonry, it was something uncommonly like it. He drew the crow out of the hole, and, seizing the shovel, commenced to dig again with renewed vigor. As he could no longer conveniently throw the soil from the hole he took a "skep" or leaf basket, which lay handy, and placing it beside him, put as much of the sandy soil as he could lift into it, and then lifted it and shot it on the edge of the pit. For three-quarters of an hour he labored thus most manfully, till at last he came down to the stone work. He cleared a patch of it and examined it attentively by the light of the dark lantern. It appeared to be rubble work built in the form of an arch. He struck it with the iron crow and it gave back a hollow sound. There was a cavity of some sort underneath.

His excitement and curiosity redoubled. By great efforts he widened the spot of stone work already laid bare. Luckily, the soil, or rather sand, was so friable that there was very little exertion required to loosen it. This done, he took the iron crow, and inserting it beneath a loose flat stone levered it up. This was a beginning, and, having got rid of the large flat stone, he struck down again and again with all his strength, driving the sharp point of the heavy crow into the rubble work beneath. It began to give—he could hear bits of it falling into the cavity below. There it went with a crash, more than a square foot of it.

He leaned over the hole at his feet, devoutly hoping that the ground on which he was standing would not give way also, and tried to look down. The next second he threw his head back, coughing and gasping. The foul air rushing up from the cavity or chamber, or whatever it was, had half poisoned him. Then, not without difficulty, he climbed out of the grave, and sat down on the pile of sand he had thrown up. Clearly he must let the air in the place sweeten a little. Clearly, also, he must have assistance if he must descend into the great hole. He could not undertake that by himself.

He sat there upon the edge of the pit, wondering who there was he could trust. Not his own gardener. To begin with, he would never come near the place at night, and besides, such people talk. The squire? No; he could not rouse him at this hour, and also, for obvious reasons, they had not met lately. Ah! he had it. George was the man! To begin with, he could be trusted to hold his tongue, and the episode of the production of the real Mrs. Quest had taught the colonel that George was a person of no common powers. He could think, and he could act also.

He threw on his coat, extinguished the large stable lantern, and having passed out, locked the door of the summer house, and started down the mount at a trot. The wind had risen steadily during his hours of work, and was now blowing a furious gale. It was about a quarter to 4 in the morning, and the stars shown brightly in the hard, clear blown sky. By their light and that of the waning moon he struggled on in the teeth of the raging tempest. As he passed under one of the oaks he heard a mighty crack overhead, and guessing what it was ran like a hare. He was none too soon. A circular gust of more than usual fierceness had twisted the top right out of the great tree, and down it came upon the turf with a rending, crashing sound that made his blood turn cold. After this escape he avoided the neighborhood of the groaning trees.

George lived in a neat little farm house about a quarter of a mile away. There was a short cut to it across the fields, and this he took, breathlessly fighting his way against the gale which swept, and roared, and howled in its splendid might as it came leaping across the ocean from its birthplace in the distances of air. Even the stiff hawthorne fences bowed before its breath, and the tall poplars on the sky line beat like a rod beneath the fresh rush of a salmon.

Excited as he was, the immensity and grandeur of the sight and sounds struck upon him with strange and awful force. Never before had he felt so far apart from man, and so near to that dread Spirit round whose feet millions of rolling worlds rush on for ever, at whose word they are, endure, and are not.

He struggled on until at last he reached the house. It was quite silent, but in one of the windows a light was burning. No doubt its occupants found it impossible to sleep in that wild gale. The next thing to consider was how to make himself heard. To knock at the door would be useless in that turmoil. There was only one thing to be done—throw stones at the window. He found a good sized pebble, and, standing underneath, threw it with such good will that it went right through the glass, lighting, as he afterward heard, full upon Mrs. George's sleeping nose, and nearly frightening that good woman, whose nerves were already shaken by the gale, into a fit. Next minute a red night cap appeared at the window.

"George," roared the colonel in a lull of the gale.

"Who's there?" came the faint answer.

"Me—Col. Quaritch. Come down. I want to speak to you."

The head was withdrawn, and a couple of minutes afterward Harold saw the front door begin to open slowly. He waited till there was space enough and then slipped in, and together they forced it to.

"Stop a bit, sir," said George; "I'll light the lamp," and he did.

Next minute he stepped back in amazement.

"Why, what on 'arth hev you bin after, sir?" he said, contemplating Harold's filth begrimed face, and hands, and clothes. "Is anything wrong up at the castle, or is the cottage blown down?"

"No, no," said Harold; "listen. You've heard tell of the treasure that old Sir James de la Molle buried in the times of the Roundheads."

"Yes, yes. I have heard tell of that. Hev the gale blown it up?"

"No, but by heaven I believe that I am in a fair way to find it!"

George took another step back, remembering the tales that Mrs. Jobson had told, and not being by any means sure that the colonel was not in a dangerous condition of lunacy.

"Give me a glass of something to drink, water or milk, and I'll tell you. I've been digging all night, and my throat's like a limekiln."

"Digging, why, where?"

"Where? In Dead Man's Mount."

"In Dead Man's Mount?" said George. "Well, blow me, if that ain't a funny place to dig at on a night like this," and, too amazed to say anything more, he went off to get the milk.

Harold drank three glasses without stopping, and then sat down to tell as much of his moving tale as he thought desirable.

CHAPTER XL.

HOW THE NIGHT WENT.

George sat opposite to him, his hands on his knees, the red night cap on his head, and a comical expression of astonishment upon his melancholy countenance.

"Well," he said, when Harold had done, "blow me if that ain't a master one. And yet there's folks who say that there ain't no such thing as Providence—not that there's anything provided yet—p'r'aps there ain't nawthing there, after all."

"I don't know if there is or not, but I'm going back to see, and I want you to come with me now."

"Now?" said George, rather uneasily. "Why, colonel, that bain't a very nice spot to go digging about in on a night like this. I niver heard no good of that there place—not as I holds by sich talk myself," he added, apologetically.

"Well," said the colonel, "you can do as you like, but I'm going back at once, and going down the hole too; the gas must be out of it by now. There are reasons," he added, "why, if this money is to be found at all, it should be found this morning. Today is Christmas day, you know."

"Yes, yes, colonel; I know what you mean. Bless you, I know all about it; the old squire must talk to somebody; if he don't he'd bust; so he talks to me. That Cossey's coming for his answer from Miss Ida this morning. Poor young lady, I saw her yesterday, and she looks like a ghost, she do. Ah, he's a mean one, that Cossey. Laryer Quest warn't in it with him, after all. Well, I cooked his goose for him, and I'd give summut to have a hand in cooking that banker chap's too. You wait a minute, colonel, and I'll come along, gale and ghostesses and all. I only hope it mayn't be after a fool's errand, that's all;" and he retired to put on his boots. Presently he appeared again, his red night cap still on his head—for he was afraid that the wind would blow a hat off—and carrying an unlighted lantern in his hand. "Now, colonel, I'm ready, sir, if you be;" and they started.

The gale was, if anything, fiercer than ever. Indeed, there had been no such tempest in those parts for years, or rather centuries, as the condition of the timber by 10 o'clock that morning amply testified.

"This here wind must be like that as the squire tells us on in the time of King Charles, as blew the top of the church tower off on a Christmas night," shouted George; but Harold made no answer; and they fought their way onward without speaking any more, for their voices were almost inaudible. Once the colonel stopped and pointed to the sky line. Of all the row of tall poplars which he had seen bending like whips before the wind as he came along, but one remained standing now, and as he pointed that vanished also.

Reaching the summer house in safety, they entered, and the colonel shut and locked the door behind them. The frail building was literally rocking in the fury of the storm.

"I hope the roof will hold," shouted George, but Harold took no heed. He was thinking of other things. They lighted the lanterns, of which they now had three, and the colonel slid down into the great grave he had so industriously dug, motioning to George to follow. This that worthy did, not without trepidation. Then they both knelt and stared down through the hole in the masonry, but the light of the lanterns was not strong enough to enable them to make out anything with clearness.

"Well," said George, falling back upon his favorite expression in his amazement, as he drew his night capped head from the hole, "if that ain't a master one, I niver saw a masterer, that's all. What be you a going to do now, colonel? Hev you a ladder here?"

"No," answered Harold; "I never thought of that; but I've a good rope; I'll get it."

Scrambling out of the hole, he presently returned with a long coil of stout rope. It belonged to some men who had been recently employed in cutting boughs off such of the oaks as needed attention.

They undid the rope and let the end down to see how deep the pit was. When they felt that the end lay upon the floor they pulled it up. The depth from the hole to the bottom of the pit appeared to be about sixteen feet, or a trifle more.

Harold took the iron crow bar, and having made the rope fast to it, fixed the bar across the mouth of the aperture. Then he doubled the rope, tied some knots in it, and let it down into the pit preparatory to climbing down it.

But George was too quick for him. Forgetting his doubts as to the wisdom of groping about Dead Man's Mount at night, in the ardor of his burning curiosity, he took the dark lantern and holding it in his teeth, passed his body through the hold in the masonry and cautiously slid down the rope.

"Are you all right?" asked Harold in a voice tremulous with excitement, for was not his life's fortune trembling on the turn?

"Yes," answered George, in a doubtful voice, and Harold, looking down, could see that he was holding the lantern above his head and staring at something very hard.

Next moment a most awful howl of terror echoed up through the pit, the lantern was dropped upon the ground, and the rope commenced to be agitated with the utmost violence.

In another two seconds George's red nightcap appeared through the hole, followed by a face that was literally livid with terror.

"Let me up, for God's sake," he gasped, "or he'll hev me by the leg!"

"He! who?" asked the colonel, not without a thrill of superstitious fear, as he dragged the panting man through the hole.

But George would give no answer until he was through the hole and out of the grave. Indeed, had it not been for the colonel's eager entreaties, backed to some extent by actual force, he would have been out of the summer house and half way down the mount by now.

"What is it?" roared the colonel, in the hole, to George, who, shivering with terror, was standing on the edge thereof.

"It's a blessed ghost, that's what it is, colonel," answered George, keeping his eyes fixed upon the hole, as though he momentarily expected to see the object of his fears emerge.

"Nonsense," said Harold, doubtfully. "What rubbish you talk! What sort of a ghost?"

"A white un," said George; "all bones like."

"All bones?" answered the colonel; "why, it must be a skeleton."

"I don't say that he ain't," was the answer; "but if he be, he's seven foot high, and sitting airing of hisself in a stone bath."

"Oh, rubbish!" said the colonel. "How can a skeleton sit and air himself? He would tumble to bits."

"I don't know; but there he is; and they don't call this place Dead Man's Mount for nawthing."

"Well," said the colonel, argumentatively, "a skeleton is a perfectly harmless thing."

"Yes, if he's dead, may be, sir; but this one's alive; I saw him nod his head at me."

"Look here, George," answered Harold, feeling that if this went on much longer he should lose his nerve altogether, "I'm not going to be scared. Great heavens, what a gust! I'm going down to see for myself."

"Very good, colonel," answered George; "and I'll wait here till you come up again—that is, if you iver do."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

HUMOROUS.

—Belle (suddenly)—"I'm afraid all this talk about students is rather frivolous for Sunday." May (easily)—"Oh, but they're all theological students, you know."—Harper's Bazar.

—Hackman—"Is the doctor at home?" Bridget—"Yes, sir, he's out in the backyard killing a chicken." Hackman—"Call 'im in, I've got bigger game."—Puck.

—Benevolent Old Gentleman—"My good man, how came you to adopt begging as a trade? Or would you call it a profession?" Beggar—"It is neither, sir. It is an art."—Terre Haute Express.

—Merchant—"Mr. Canesucker, can you pay this little bill to-day?" Dudely Canesucker—"Not to-day; some other day." "It occurs to me that you should try and save up, so as to meet your obligations." "That's what I'm doing; haven't used any money to pay debts in more than a year now."—Texas Siftings.

—Epicure—"Waiter, this steak is positively bad. It must be three weeks old." Waiter—"Ah, pardon, monsieur! I have made ze meestake, and have brought you ze venison." Epicure—"Venison? Oh, yes! Then you may leave it. (Tastes it). Ah! to be sure, it is venison; and very nice, too—very nice, indeed!"

ANOTHER DRUGGIST SPEAKS.

Manufacturers of The Great Sierra Kidney and Liver Cure:

March 24th, 1890.

GENTLEMEN:—I notice a great increase in the sales of your remedy and judge that by the repeated calls for it that it gives entire and complete satisfaction to the parties using it. It is the best selling Kidney and Liver Cure that I handle in stock. Respectfully yours,

JOHN WM. SALTER,

2445 Mission Street, Cor. 21st, San Francisco, Cal.

There may be pleasures in being poor, but it takes a very rich man to see them.

A WELL-MERITED TRIBUTE.

SO SAYS THE "NEW YORK WORLD."

Mr. Wm. Shaw Bowen Visits New Orleans and Gives a Graphic Account of What He Saw in the Creole City. Pen Pictures of Generals Beauregard and Early. Their Supervision, Says Mr. Bowen, is an Absolute Guarantee of Good Faith.

The staff correspondent of the New York World, Mr. Wm. Shaw Bowen, in pursuance of his journalistic duties has written a graphic, if somewhat sensational account, of the last monthly drawing of The Louisiana State Lottery Company, from which, with some slight modifications, the following excerpts are taken. Mr. Bowen prefaces his description, which occupies over a page of the World, in its issues of March 29th and 27th, with an interesting reminiscence of Lieutenant-General Jubal A. Early, who with Gen. Beauregard, regularly superintends the drawings.

"I saw him first," says Mr. Bowen, "under the following circumstances."

When the Confederate Army overran a portion of Maryland the sensation at Washington suggested the probable feelings of the Romans when the hordes of Attila poured in tremendous tide into the territory of the decaying empire. The National capital was threatened. An army corps appeared before the north side of the city, and skirmishing went on beneath the fortifications. The grey-clad pickets were stationed within sight of the unfinished dome of the capitol.

Engaged in special work, I endeavored to pass from a point in the vicinity of Fredericksburg, in Maryland, to the Chain Bridge, above Georgetown. The task was perilous. If captured by the Confederates my life would have undoubtedly paid forfeit. For two days I lay concealed in forests and in low underbrush, moving cautiously by night and avoiding camp fires and wagon trains. The sun had just gone down behind the blue Virginia hills when I endeavored to cross the highroad between Point of Rocks and Georgetown. All was still, although the road had been traversed within an hour by the supply wagons and small detachments of the enemy. I paused as I stood among the low shrubbery which flanked the way, intending to proceed along it, trusting to eyes and ears to escape danger. The rattle of military accoutrements was heard. Quickly I fell back into the thicket and lying close to mother earth, I watched the passing cavalcade. Two troopers, arrayed in rusty gray homespun uniforms, with clumsy yellow facings and mounted on very fair horses, led the van. The men carried Uncle Samuel's sabres slung from their waist belts and their slouch hats flapped over their eyes with the motions of their steeds.

Next came a commanding figure on horse-back. A tall, thick set man in plain grey rode beside a subordinate officer with whom he conversed. His bearing was intensely military, notwithstanding his shoulders were slightly rounded. The face was a martial one, fierce and energetic. Keen eyes gleamed beneath bushy, overhanging brows, and the mouth was firm and positive. The insignia on the coat collar, which was seen as plainly as is the paper on which I write, told me that the warrior who passed in it were in review was a Lieutenant-General in the Army of the Confederacy. I recall the thoughts which crowded through my brain as I lay prone on the mossy earth. You could, I fancy, have heard my heart thump against its pericardium and even cause shocks to the ground, with which it was in close contact, as I gazed with stony eyes on the rebel General and his suite. The story which the aide-de-camp was in the act of relating must have been a humorous one, for the sunbrowned, saturnine countenance of the commander relaxed into a smile as his horse bore him out of sight. Some dilapidated-looking Virginia troopers followed—tough, weather-beaten fellows, who carried all manner of traps and plunder at their saddle bows. One of them said something about a street in Lynchburg and a comrade laughed. In a couple of minutes the clatter of sabre died away in the distance.

The officer of high rank was Lieut.-Gen. Jubal A. Early, the brave soldier, not a military strategist, but bold and indefatigable in the execution of orders in the field. It was "Old Jubal," the warrior.

With this striking pen picture of Gen. Early as seen some years ago, Mr. Bowen fairly comes down to the subject in hand:

On Tuesday, March 11, I sat in the balcony of the Academy of Music at New Orleans and beheld a spectable which in one sense was almost as interesting as the dangerous military episode of the far-back war days. The superfluous scenery was cleared away so as to expose the entire stage area. An immense drum of mahogany, with glass in place of the conventional sheepskin, was poised on an axle passing through its centre on a wooden standard. The axle protruded from the glass heads on either side, and ended in a crank of iron with a wooden handle. The diameter of the drum was about five feet, and from head to head the distance was apparently one-half the diameter. A trap door ten inches square was formed in the circumference.

On the opposite side of the stage and resting on a standard above the green cloth was a smaller wheel. It was a highly polished brazen affair, with plate-glass heads. Through the latter an axle ran, but unlike the large drum, both ends of this were provided with cranks. A small trap, about six inches square, appeared in the periphery. Several chairs stood in the centre of the stage in the rear of the mechanisms above described.

By the side of the first drum stood a white-headed old man. He was of large stature, but the progress of years weighed heavily upon him, and his shoulders were bent so as to throw his florid face, with its full white hirsute covering, forward towards the floor. Grey-blue eyes, fierce and penetrating, gleamed beneath bushy, overhanging brows. A suit of Confederate gray clothing, well cut and neat, covered the aged man. He paused a moment, with one hand resting on the great mahogany drum. Throwing his head back, he swept his eyes cursorily over the eager assemblage before him. I had seen that marked countenance before. It was the ex-Confederate warrior, Lieut.-Gen. Early.

At 10.45 o'clock another historical personage appeared on the scene. He was clad in black, and a handsome face crowned by snow white, closely cropped hair was poised proudly above an elegant, dignified form. His shaven cheeks were cold, his eyes were cold, his countenance, of the Gallic cast, was impassive. You might easily mistake him for a commander of a French Corps d'Armee in mufti.

Then follows some facetious remarks on the part of Mr. Bowen, comparing Gen'ls Beauregard and Early to "Croupiers," which, though vivacious, out of respect to these gentlemen, as well as for lack of space, we necessarily omit from our digest.

Two small boys in knickerbockers took their places, one by the large drum and one by the small brass wheel. With the utmost solemnity Gen. Early proceeded to blindfold the boy beside him. Located near the brazen drum Gen. Beauregard, with corresponding gravity, tied a white handkerchief over the eyes of his juvenile assistant. Several white canvas sacks were placed near the great wheel. The contents of each sack assumed the bulk of a bushel of grain. The gathered neck of each sack was tightly tied with a cord over which a strip of white paper was drawn and sealed with red wax. Gen. Early carefully broke the seal of one sack and poured the contents through the trap-door opening into the great wheel. There was a rattling sound and a heap of small white and black cylinders appeared through the glass side of the bottom of the drum. One sack after the other was emptied until the little cylinders filled the drum exactly half full. In other words a drum, five feet in diameter and two feet six inches along the axis, contained the contents of the canvas sacks, in bulk two feet six inches deep at the thickest part. After closing the door, Gen. Early motioned to two negroes who stood in the wings. They approached, one on each side of the drum, and by the axle cranks they slowly revolved it three times. Then they reversed the action and turned the drum three times in the opposite direction. The little black and white cylinders rattled merrily as they whirled about. Then the negroes returned to their places in the wings.

On the other extremity a scene almost identical was enacted. There was, however, only a single canvas sack—a small one—and there were no sable assistants to turn the brazen drum. Gen. Beauregard poured the contents—in little black and white cylinders—through the trap-door, closed it, and whirled the drum three times in one direction and three times oppositely.

The balcony was nearly filled with women. The larger proportion were evidently residents of the city of New Orleans. Many of them held half concealed a printed slip of paper. They had purchased tickets in the drawing and could not curb their impatience and await at home the tidings of the lucky numbers. Some of the women were strangers—Northern visitors to the semi-tropical city. There were all sorts and kinds of men on the parquet floor. There were the regular attendants who were always on deck, as it were, to be in readiness if their monthly investment should prove fortunate. The clock struck 11.

The two ex-generals then glanced at one another. Then they arose from their seats and each opened the door of the wheel beside which he stood. At a signal the two blindfolded boys each reached a hand inside the wheel beside which he was placed. Simulaneously each boy drew forth a single little cylinder. The boy beside the great drum handed his cylinder to General Early, who had resumed his chair. The boy placed by the small brass wheel extended his cylinder to General Beauregard.

"Old Jubal" drew the white paper from the encircling black rubber tube in which it was thrust. In measured tones he read the number "48,186." The voice of General Beauregard was likewise measured and somewhat harder in its timbre when he called the figures on the white slip of paper which he drew from the little black tube: "200" he said. Thus it was that ticket No. 48,186 drew a prize of $200. The rubber cylinders were handed the boy by the box. There were 840 cylinders contained in the small brass drum over which General Beauregard presided and one by one the boy, his assistant, drew forth from each the roll of paper which decided the fate of many a man's or woman's aspirations and hopes. When ten cylinders had been withdrawn from each of the wheels the clerk, seated at the table, called "Time!" Thereupon "Old Jubal" and his coadjutor, Beauregard, solemnly arose, closed the trap doors and caused the wheels to revolve three times in one direction and three times the other. Then the doors were again opened and the thoroughly shaken up contents were abstracted one by one by the blindfolded boys.

For the benefit of those who are unfamiliar with the little cylinders, I will mention that they are of rubber, about one inch long and one-seventh of an inch in diameter, open at each end. There are 100,000 of these cylinders, corresponding to the number of tickets in the drawing, and in each cylinder is thrust a rolled white paper ticket or slip, on which is printed one of the numbers of the tickets in the drawing, ranging from 1 to 100,000. The small wheel contains similar cylinders, each one containing a slip of paper on which is printed the figures representing one of the 840 prizes in the drawing. The cylinder which contains the slip marked $300,000—the capital prize—is the ultima thule of the hopes of all of those who invest in tickets in the drawing.

One hour passed away. Only three large prizes of $5,000 each had been taken from the brass drum. Plenty of smaller prizes, $200, $300 and $500 had come forth however.

At exactly 12:20 o'clock General Early unrolled a slip of paper and called "8,192." From the Beauregard side of the green cloth came the answer "$300,000." The audience remained still as death for a moment; then a sound of a murmur expressive of disgust went up and half of those present hastened out of the theatre. Every ticket holder could not by any manner of arithmetical computation draw the great prize, but the holder appeared to thought that his piece of paper ought to have borne the lucky number; hence his wrath. The subsequent proceedings were no longer interesting. One by one the numbers were called and one by one the numbers in the small drum were read off. Finally the last of the cylinders were removed from the latter and the monthly drawing was at an end.

Upon the vital question, whether or not the drawings of the Louisiana State Lottery Company are fair and honest, and in accordance with the advertisements of the Company to the public, Mr. Bowen is very explicit. His testimony coming as it does from an adverse source will be conclusive to any fair-minded per on.

The most important problem connected with the lottery which I endeavored to solve was the question of the fairness of its drawings. It was with the hope that fraud could be discovered that I spent much time and labor in trying to trace trickery. There are two ways by which the Company could swindle its customers. The first is by placing a greater quantity of numbers in the large wheel than the scheme calls for. The number of tickets in a monthly drawing is 100,000. There are 100,000 tickets placed in the large wheel, each which can draw a sealed ticket bearing on each the amount of a prize. If the number of tickets placed in the large wheel were increased 5,000, 8,000, 10,000, or even 20,000 the chances of ticket purchasers to draw a prize would be correspondingly diminished.

The tickets contained in the little rubber cylinders which are brought in sealed bags and publicly deposited in the large wheel might be increased in number prior to their removal from the lottery office. If so, the fraud would be complete. But there are two reasons why this is not done. The two Generals have allowed themselves to become the confidentes of a gambling scheme, but I could not find an enemy of the lottery who would admit that either old Jubal Early or Gen. Beauregard would countenance fraud or permit cheating to be carried on. The contents of the sacks are sealed by them and no one but themselves have access to the tickets. Fraud could not in all probability be accomplished without their sanction.

It would be difficult to increase the number of tickets in the wheel to any considerable amount without attracting the attention of the regular frequenters of the drawings. The wheel with its glass sides stands in plain and easy sight. The little cylinders, each containing a ticket, occupy a given space in the interior. The addition of 10,000 tickets would raise the contents above the familiar line they attain at every drawing.

The second way by which fraud might be practiced would be for Gens. Early and Beauregard to practice that which the fancy recognize as "palming." They could dispose of the several great prizes in the interest of the Company, as follows: At a given signal old Jubal could adroitly substitute a cylinder which he carried about his person for the cylinder handed to him by the blind-folded boy and taken by the latter from the large wheel. Simultaneously Gen. Beauregard could, by the same manoeuvre, substitute a cylinder for the one drawn from the brass or prize wheel. The $300,000 could thus be disposed of and the number of the ticket so fraudulently drawn would correspond with a ticket retained by the lottery.

That anything of the kind occurs I do not for a moment believe. I watched the hands of old Jubal and of his confrere when the capital prize was drawn, and there was not the slightest shadow of doubt in the proceedings. The boys drew out the cylinders and Beauregard and Early took them with the tips of their fingers. They unrolled the tickets in plain sight and called out the numbers.

The washerwoman has better luck than the farmer nowadays in getting a living out of the soil.

A HAUNTED HOUSE.

This body of ours has been likened to a tenement. It often has a haunted apartment—the stomach. Scared by the eldrich sprite, dyspepsia, digestion flies and refuses to return. What can break the spell, what can raise the ban laid upon the unhappy organs? We answer unhesitatingly, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, and we are warranted in the response by the record of testimony of myriads, covering a period of over a third of a century. A course of this Bitters, begun in any stage of the affliction, and persistently followed, will terminate in cure positive, not partial. The Bitters restores tone to the epigastric nerve, renews and purifies the juices extending from the cellular tissue that act upon the food digestively, expels bile from the stomach and the blood, and promotes a regular habit of body. Malaria, kidney complaint, nervousness, rheumatism and neuralgia give way to this medicine.

Never allude to a dressmaker as Miss Sew-and-sew.

For Throat Diseases, Coughs, Colds, Etc., effective relief is found in the use of "Brown's Bronchial Troches." Sold only in boxes. 25c.

A crowbar a hundred years old is just as pry as it ever was.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Is prepared from Sarsaparilla Dandelion, Mandrake, Dock, Juniper Berries, and other well known vegetable remedies, in such a peculiar manner as to derive the full medicinal value of each. It will cure, when in the power of medicine, Scrofula, Salt Rheum, Sores, Boils, Pimples, all Humors, Dyspepsia, Biliousness, Sick Headache, Indigestion, General Debility, Catarrh, Rheumatism, Kidney and Liver Complaints. It overcomes That Tired Feeling caused by change of climate, season, or life, and imparts life and strength to the whole system.

100 Doses One Dollar

To cure Biliousness, Sick Headache, Constipation, Malaria, Liver Complaints, take the safe and certain remedy, SMITH'S

BILE BEANS

Use the SMALL SIZE (40 little beans to the bottle). They are the most convenient; suit all ages. Price of either size, 25 cents per bottle.

KISSING at 7, 17, 70; Photo-gravure, panel size of this picture for 4 cents (coppers or stamps).

J. F. SMITH & CO.,
Makers of "Bile Beans," St. Louis, Mo.

For a Disordered Liver Try BEECHAM'S PILLS. 25cts. a Box. OF ALL DRUGGISTS.

The word "pants" is so strictly tabooed in the New York Sun office that the poet of that paper now rhymes "trousers" with "ants."

STIMULATE THE BLOOD.

BRANDRETH'S PILLS are the great blood purifier. They are a purgative and blood tonic, they act equally on the bowels, the kidneys, and the skin, thus cleansing the system by the natural outlet of the body—they may be called the purgative sudorific and diuretic medicine. They stimulate the blood so as to enable nature to throw off all morbid humors, and cure disease no matter by what name it may be called. One or two of them taken every night will prove an infallible remedy. BRANDRETH'S PILLS are purely vegetable, absolutely harmless and safe to take at any time. Sold in every drug and medicine store, either plain or sugar coated.

Louisiana is playing Marguerite to the lottery's Faust.

SELECT PULLMAN TOURIST EXCURSIONS.

Select Pullman Tourist Excursions. Commencing Wednesday, June 4th, the Northern Pacific Railroad will inaugurate a series of select tourist excursions to all Eastern cities, to leave San Francisco semi-monthly. Our route—S. P. Co., "Shasta Line" to Portland. Northern Pacific Railroad via Columbia River and Tacoma to St. Paul. Choice of routes east of that point. Our Cars—Pullman's tourist cars furnished completely with every necessary comfort, in charge of Pullman porter, and under the supervision of one of our traveling passenger agents. Our rates same as via other lines. Send for descriptive tourist folder, together with maps, illustrated pamplets, etc. T. K. Statler, Passenger Agent, 613 Market street, San Francisco, California.

"Will you be a sister to me?" "No, I won't." "Good. Name the day."

CONSUMPTION SURELY CURED.

TO THE EDITOR—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the above named disease. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been permanently cured. I shall be glad to send two bottles of my remedy free to any of your readers who have consumption if they will send me their express and post-office address. Respectfully,

T. A. SLOCUM, M. C., 181 Pearl St., New York.

Arthur—Don't marry Ella. She is as silent as a post. Fred—Then she is just the girl to hitch to.

AN ELEGANT PACKAGE OF FINE CARDS.

Including 15 rare novelties, shapes and artistic imported oleographic and chromatic cards. This large and beautiful collection sent by mail to anyone who will do this:—Buy a box of the genuine Dr. C. McLane's Celebrated Liver Pills from any druggist, price 25 cents, and mail us the outside wrapper with your address, plainly written and 4 cents in stamps. The genuine McLane's Pills are prepared only by Fleming Bros., Pittsburg, Pa., and have been in constant use for over sixty years. They are superior to all others in purity and effectiveness. A certain cure for indigestion and sick headache. Address, Fleming Bros., Pittsburg, Pa.

"All gone," murmured Ponsonby, sadly, as he surveyed his bald head in the mirror. Not even a part remains.

Six Novels Free, will be sent by Cragin & Co., Philada., Pa., to any one in the U. S. or Canada, postage paid, upon receipt of 25 Dobbins' Electric Soap wrappers. See list of novels on circulars around each bar. Soap for sale by all grocers.

"John," said the dying man, "will you be one of my pall-bearers?" "I shall be only too glad to, old fellow," replied John, sympathetically.

SURE CURE FOR PILES.

Sure cure for blind, bleeding and itching Piles. One box has cured the worst cases of ten years' standing. No one need suffer ten minutes after using Kirk's German Pile Ointment. It absorbs tumors, allays the itching, acts as a poultice, gives relief. Dr. Kirk's German Pile Ointment is prepared only for Piles and itching of the private parts, and nothing else. Every box is warranted.

Sold by druggists and sent by mail on receipt of price, $1.00 per box. J. J. Mack & Co., Wholesale Agents, San Francisco.

If any workmen can hit the nail fairly on the head by striking, the carpenters should.

Rich! fragrant! fine! are the expressions of those who smoke "THE BILL'S Punch," 5c. Cigar.

An Iowa man would rather have his liquor in an "original package" than in another state.

When in San Francisco stop at Straub's Restaurant and Saloon, 327 and 329 Bush Street. Best to eat and drink. No fancy prices.

Beware of imitations of the genuine Seal of North Carolina Plug Cut Tobacco.

Try Germea for Breakfast.

ST. JACOBS OIL

TRADE MARK

THE GREAT REMEDY FOR PAIN

For Stablemen and Stockmen.

CURES

Cuts, Swellings, Bruises, Sprains, Galls, Strains, Lameness, Stiffness, Cracked Heels, Scratches, Contractions, Flesh Wounds, Stringhalt, Sore-Throat, Distemper, Colic, Whitlow, Poll Evil, Fistula, Tumors, Splints, Ringbones and Spavin in their early Stages. Directions with each bottle.

AT DRUGGISTS AND DEALERS.

THE CHARLES A. VOGELER CO., Baltimore, Md.

Ask Him! Who? JONES OF BINGHAMTON,

BINGHAMTON, N. Y.

What? Why on Scales

"He Pays the Freight."

INYO INDEPENDENT.

COUNTY OFFICIAL PAPER.

C. MULHOLLAND, - - - Proprietor.

Independence, Cal.,

FRIDAY, - - - JULY 18, 1890.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

VOL. XXII. NO.6. INDEPENDENCE, INYO CO., CAL., JULY 18, 1890. WHOLE NO. 1029.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

COUNTY OFFICIAL PAPER.

C. MULHOLLAND, - - - Proprietor.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One Year (post paid)	$4.00
Six Months	2.25
Three Months	1.50
One Month	50
Single Copies	20

THOUGHT HE WAS SMART.

But Circumstances Altered His Good Opinion of Himself.

During the present overflow of the Mississippi river a well dressed man, while picking his way through the woods, trying to avoid the water that was rapidly rising, came to a small knoll almost surrounded by the flood; and on the knoll he found a tall, lank fellow sitting on a log. The stranger, delighted at seeing a human being, ran up to the lank fellow and exclaimed:

"I never was gladder to see a man in my life. I have been in these woods nearly a day and a half. My horse and I went down with a caving bank; I managed to save myself, but couldn't save him. Now the question is, how are we going to get out of this infernal place?"

"Don't know," the lank fellow answered, "wallowing" his tobacco about in his mouth.

"Why, don't you know the woods?"

"Wall, did know 'em putty well, but the high water has wiped all the roads out."

"Look here, the water is rising, and this is no time for foolishness. See, we are entirely surrounded."

"Yes, that's so (squirting a stream of tobacco juice through his teeth). Reckon we'll hatter wade."

"Do you know a place where the water is not very deep?"

"I did know yistidy, but the water has riz powerful since then."

"How long have you been sitting here?"

"Set down here this mornin'. Come out to look for the cow an' got tired, an' my plan is allus to rest when I git tired. I have hearn it read outen the papers that a good many men die frum overwork, an' sence then I am mighty partickler."

"But how do you expect to get out of this place?"

"Don't know exactly."

"But you've got to know pretty soon, for don't you see how rapidly the water is rising?"

"Yes, 'tis comin' up right peart. You air a stranger down here, I reckon."

"Yes, haven't been here but a week, and if the Lord will only let me get out this time, I'll never come back. I wonder if I can wade out through there?"

"I reckon you can."

"I have a half notion to try it."

"But make it a whole one."

"I'll do it. I don't care to stand here till the water comes up round my neck. Well, good-by. If you want to stay here and be drowned it is no fault of mine."

"So long," the lank fellow replied, spitting through his teeth.

The stranger had waded about thirty feet when he lunged off over his head. He sputtered and floundered and finally got back on the knoll.

"Whew! that was awful!" he exclaimed. "You scoundrel, why didn't you tell me?"

"How did I know what sort of a wader you are? Some folks kin wade surprisin' an' then other kain't wade so well. I tuck you fur one of the boss waders, but now I see you ain't."

"I ought to jump on you and beat you I declare, I don't know what to do."

"Thought you was goin' to jump on me."

"No, I don't want to hurt you. Look here; in less than a half hour from now this knoll will be under water."

"Ef I was goin' to bet, w'y I'd bet thatter way."

"And are you going to stay here and be drowned?"

"I kain't tell yit."

"You are a fool—that's what's the matter with you."

"Yes, I ain't a s'preme jedge, but I've got mo' sense than to go out in a woods that I don't know anything about an' git drowned."

"But you haven't got enough sense to get out of a woods that you do know something about."

"Oh, I think so." The lank fellow got up, went behind a tree, took up a canoe, and as he was preparing to shove it off remarked:

"I never fool with high water, cap'n, an' ef you buy land down here an' live on it awhile you'll l'arn a little sense yo'se'f So long."

"What, are you going to leave me this way?"

"Yes, I've got rested now an' must go home an' tell the folks that I kain't find that fool cow."

He shoved off the canoe and got in. "For heaven's sake take me with you," the stranger implored.

"Oh, I reckon it's best not to—might sp'ile you to ride with a fool."

"Come back, my friend, I was hasty."

"Yes, I sorter think you was."

"I didn't mean to call you a fool—I'm the fool.'

"An' am I a smart man?"

"Indeed you are."

"The smartest man in this country?" the fellow asked, slowly paddling the canoe toward the knoll.

"Yes, the very smartest."

"Wall, but am I the smartest man you ever seed?"

"Yes, I think you are."

"But you mustn't think—you must know it."

"Well, then, I know it."

"An' don't you think, or rather don't you know, that I would make a good governor?"

"Yes, I know you would."

"Ur a president either?"

"Yes, you would make a good anything."

"All right, my boy, now you may git in. Oh, I tell you it do a man a power of good to travel round in this part of the country. He l'arns faster than ef he was in college."—Opie P. Read in Arkansaw Traveler.

A Philistine's Suggestion.

"That's a fine black mass you have there. Why don't you"—

"Well, what?"

"Why don't you paint the whole canvas black as the ace of spades and call it 'Night in Central Africa?'"—New York Sun.

A Proper Apology.

"That isn't a very good picture of the baby, is it, Lottie?"

"No, sir; but he isn't a very good baby."—Harper's Young People.

Held Up.

Rube (the terror of the plains)—'F yer holler yer go t' th' happy huntin' groun's! Gimme that buffler robe! I've trailed yer fer miles.—Judge.

BACILLI IN MILK.

Experiments That Are of Great Interest to the Public.

It is now known that tuberculosis is very common in the cattle whose flesh forms such a large part of our food. Were it not for the protection given by cooking, the history of this disease would perhaps be a much sadder one than it is. But there is one sort of animal food derived from the cow which is taken uncooked. Is it not possible that cow's milk is the great source of the infection of our race? It is stated that the appearance of tuberculosis among certain tribes of men dates from the time when cattle from dairy farms were introduced. It is further stated that fifty per cent. of dairy cattle suffer at some time from tuberculosis. The important point to investigate is whether tuberculous infectious matter is found in the milk of tubercular cows. We may readily believe that it is, when the milk-secreting or milk-containing surfaces are diseased. The only question left, therefore, is whether the milk of tuberculous cows is likely to contain tuberculous infectious matter when there is no apparent tubercular disease of the udder or teats. This can be determined only by direct and careful experiment.

An article by Dr. Ernst, in the American Journal of the Medical Sciences, by which the foregoing remarks were suggested, contains the results of such experiments. If its statements are confirmed by further observations, no one need wonder longer at the prevalence of this dread scourge of our race, or remain ignorant of the proper methods of preventing its ravages. If cows' milk is the greatest carrier of tuberculosis, then it must be cooked, like any other animal food. Dr. Ernst's experiments were made in the most careful way. The buildings in which the cows were kept were cleaned, scrubbed, washed with bichloride of mercury solution, and then whitewashed. Before the cows were milked the udders and teats were thoroughly cleansed. The milk was drawn into sterilized flasks and examined for the Bacillus tuberculosis. Milk was thus taken from thirty-six cows, all presenting distinct symptoms of tuberculosis, but none having discoverable disease of the udder or teats. In the milk of ten of these cows the Bacillus tuberculosis was found—that is, in 27.7 per cent. The cream, after rising, was found to contain bacilli nearly as often as the milk upon which it floated. Numerous inoculation experiments were made with the milk upon the rabbits and guinea-pigs, producing tuberculosis in many cases. Feeding experiments on calves and young pigs gave similar results. These experiments were made under the auspices of the Massachusetts Society for the Promotion of Agriculture, the microscopic work being done at the society's laboratory and in that of the Harvard Medical School.—N. Y. Medical Journal.

GREATEST OF THEIR KIND.

An Interesting Compilation of Facts Worth Knowing.

The largest steam derrick in the world is used by a shipping company at Hamburg, Germany. It is kept at the docks and used in lifting immense weights on and off shipboard. It can pick up a 10-wheeled locomotive with perfect ease.

The largest and heaviest building stone ever quarried in England was taken from the Plankington quarry near Norwich, in February, 1889. It was in one piece, without crack or flaw, and weighed over 35 tons. It was 15 feet long, 6 feet high and 5 feet wide.

The largest tree in the world, according to statistics lately published by the Italian government, is a monster chestnut standing at the foot of Mount Ætna. The circumference of the main trunk at 50 feet from the ground is 212 feet.

The largest saw mill in the world is located at Clinton, Ia. It cost $200,000, and is capable of sawing 450,000 feet of lumber in eight hours. It has seven band and three gang saws and two batteries of ten boilers each.

The largest check ever passed in this country was for $2,500,000, by Vanderbilt. It was the purchase price of the Nickel Plate railroad. The smallest are those of 1 cent each, with which the Treasury officials square accounts.

The largest sheep ranch in the world is in the counties of Webb and Dimmit in Texas. It contains upwards of 400,000 acres and yearly pastures 800,000 sheep.

A pair of bantam chickens were sold at the London Crystal Palace for $500, which was almost exactly twice their weight in gold. This is believed to be the highest price ever paid for a single pair of fowls since the days of extravagant and luxurious Rome.

The costliest horse-barn in the world belongs to D. E. Crouse and is located at Syracuse, N. Y. It has now cost the owner, a millionaire horseman, something like $700,000. Incidental expenses will make the stable cost little short of a round million.

The largest sheet of plate glass in the United States, and perhaps in the world, is in a saloon front at Detroit, Mich. It is of the usual height used in glass fronts and is thirteen feet across and four inches in thickness.

The steam ferryboat Robert Garrett, plying between Brooklyn and New York City, carries 5,000 passengers at a trip, and is said to be the largest steam ferryboat in existence.

Marshall Pass, on the Denver & Rio Grande railroad, 10,851 feet above the sea level, is the highest point crossed by a railroad inside the limits of the United States.—St. Louis Republic.

—"These here sewin' machines an' patent churns an' all sich contraptions jest make the wimmens lazy," said old man Simpson to a sympathizing companion. "'Fore sich things wuz got up my wimmen folks uster git up an' git somethin' done in a day, but now they lay abed until half past four of a mornin' and don't put in more'n sixteen hours a day. I tell ye the Nation's goin' to deestruction through the shiftlessness of the wimmen of this day an' ginération."—Drake's Magazine.

—A Buffalo girl showed so much taste in fitting up a shop window in that city that she has been offered a position with a large salary by a firm in London.

THE MAN IN THE MOON.

How This Traditional Individual Is Accounted For.

The idea of "the man in the moon" seems to have arisen from the fact that the depressions on the moon's face—the great valleys that are there—appear to our sight like the form of a man. The figure seems, according to the way in which our fancy regards it, to be either carrying a bundle or drawing a bow like an archer and to be attended by a dog. This is a very old notion, and it is common to nearly every country. Barbarous tribes have something to say about it as well as civilized races. It used to be said that the man in the moon was the offender mentioned in Numbers, who was brought before Moses for gathering sticks on the Sabbath day, but an ancient tradition on the subject speaks also of the figure as being Cain carrying a thorn bush with a dog at his heels, the bush representing the burden of sin and the dog the evil spirit that took possession of Cain. One of our earliest poets (Chaucer) speaks of the man as having stolen the bush, and Shakspeare in one of his plays, "Midsummer Night's Dream," says: "This man, with lantern, dog and bush of thorns presenteth Moonshine." It is said in Holland that the figure is that of a man who was found stealing cabbage on a Christmas eve, and who so annoyed his neighbors by pilfering in their gardens, while they were enjoying themselves, that they wished him far enough, and as their far enough was the moon, thither, as the story runs, the culprit was taken, as quickly as might be, on the back of the north wind before he could say a word in his own defense. It is said in some places that he was more than a cabbage stealer, that the cabbages were meant as a tempting bait with which to entice sheep away and that a great many sheep were lost before the thief was discovered and sent where he could find neither animal nor vegetable life. We all know that the attractive power of the moon affects the watery masses on the earth and causes the rise and fall of the tides; and this scientific fact comes out in a peculiar way in one of these moon traditions. Thus in Norway and Sweden there is a story that the man in the moon is a giant who is in the habit of slowly bending down and as slowly rising again. The ocean is said to swell up to full tide when he stoops and to ebb when he stands erect. The Russians say that there was once a man who went about looking for a land where there was no death, that in the course of his wanderings he came to the moon, where he lived a hundred years before death found him out, and that then he and Death had a great struggle, in which the man in the moon was the conqueror. The Greenlanders speak of the sun and moon as a brother and sister, who once lived on this earth. One day, we are told, the sister took a trip into the sky to escape from her brother, who was teasing her. She flew so far that she became fixed in space and remained there as the sun. Her brother sought to follow her, but could only go part of the distance, and took his place in the sky as the moon. And we are told, also, of the moon brother that when he gets into his last quarter he is tired and hungry and that he then leaves his house on a sledge harnessed to four dogs and hunts for several days, and that on his return he feasts so greedily on what he has captured that he soon grows into his full size and strength. So far as the moon is concerned there is a grain of science in this story also, for some of our astronomers believe that the moon was at one time, untold ages ago, thrown off from this earth, and that since then it has gradually been going further from us and nearer to the sun.—Leeds Mercury.

A STRANGE COLONY.

Indian-Moorish-Irish Settlers in Sussex County, Del.

Peter Robinson's "Indians" are recalled to public attention by an item in Every Evening's Lewes letter, reporting the repairing and renovation of their church, and, through an act which Peter Robinson got through the Legislature in 1881, their own school-houses—two of the latter. These people are found chiefly in Indian River Hundred, Sussex County, but there is a smaller colony in the neighborhood of Leipsic, Kent County. In Sussex they call themselves Indians; in Kent, Moors. In both counties they maintain, so far as they conveniently can, a separate social life, intermarrying among themselves, and associating but little with negroes and mulattoes. Their genealogy became a subject of judicial investigation in 1856 in the trial at Georgetown of a case against Levi Soakum for selling, contrary to the law of that day, powder and shot to one Isaiah Harman, alleged to be a free mulatto. The case turned upon whether Harman was of negro or Indian blood, and the testimony satisfied the court that these so-called Indians were legally mulattoes. The evidence in the case showed that nearly two hundred years ago a cargo of African slaves was landed at Lewes. Among these slaves was a tall, fine-looking young man called Requa, whose complexion and features proclaimed him more Caucasian than negro. Requa was purchased by a young Irish widow, who subsequently became his wife. At that time the Nanticoke Indians still lingered in the neighborhood. The offspring of Requa and his Irish wife were not recognized in white society, and would not associate and intermarry with negroes, but they did associate and intermarry with the Indians, and their descendants have preserved their Indian-Moorish-Irish blood with little foreign admixture to this day.—Wilmington Every Evening.

An Interesting Wedding.

At McCalla, Ala., last week, Rueben Burnett, aged 16, was married to Miss Mollie Pear, aged 15. The groom weighs 90 pounds and the bride 80. They were married with the full consent of their parents.

During the ceremony a thief stole the bridegroom's horse and buggy. All the guests joined in the chase. The thief was captured and the stolen property recovered.—Birmingham Telegram.

IT WAS BY CHANCE.

How a Favorite Soubrette Came to Go On the Stage—From Flower Girl Onward.

"Isn't it interesting to think of the slight incident in one's life on which hinges one's career?" said bright Nellie McHenry the other day. "Now, my being an actress is purely the result of an unforeseen incident. One day I was on my way home from school and met Bill Wiggins, at that time the comedian in Ben De Bar's theatre, St. Louis, and who occupied the same house with my parents. Said Wiggins to me:

"'Where are you going, little Nellie?'

"'This is a half holiday, and I'm going to play with some girls,' said I.

"'Were you ever in a theatre?' inquired he.

"'No; but I would like to.'

"'Well, come along,' he replied, and off we started to the theatre.

"It appeared that Mr. Wiggins was on his way to a rehearsal, and when we reached the theatre everything was at sixes and sevens. Feuillet's play of a 'Romance of a Poor Young Man' was in rehearsal, and Mr. Lawrence Barrett was cast for the head. The child who was to have played the flower girl had been detained at home because of the illness of her mother—both of us were St. Louis girls, it appears. Well, Mr. Barrett espied me standing at the entrance. Turning to Mr. De Bar, who was at that time on the stage, he said: 'Whose child is that?'

"'You've got me. I don't know. It struck me as she might possibly do the flower girl. The other child is absent, and I suspect she doesn't know her part, anyway.'

"I heard every word of the conversation, and observed Mr. Barrett nod his head, stroke his chin and walk toward me.

"'My child, can you read?' he commenced, eying me kindly and taking me by the hand.

"'Y—yes, sir.'

"'Well, come here and read this part for me, and don't forget that you are to read as though you were talking to a little friend. Never think for a moment of your surroundings, but put yourself in the place of the little flower girl. Now, my little girl, commence, and be as natural as possible. Remember, you are no one else than the flower girl.'

"So off I started on the manuscript, reading as naturally as possible, and using my best efforts to prevent my legs from trembling beneath me. Finally I mustered up courage enough to go ahead in an assuring way, and finished as proudly as if it were my debut, and I had finished to the fifth curtain call.

"Every one applauded, and Mr. Barrett patted me on the cheek, accompanied by a word or two of encouragement.

"'Can't you study those lines and come here to-night and speak them as you have read them?' he asked.

"'Certainly, sir.'

"'Well, you may go now. Study your part well, and come back to-night and you can act.'

"I can never forget how I posed over my part. Taking a position before the glass, with my part in one hand, the arm outstretched and the other as free as possible, I gestured and read and expressed. When the time came to leave home for the theatre I laid my manuscript aside for a few moments to snatch a bite of food. In those few moments the lines I had worked so hard on had taken wings and my memory was a blank. With the tears streaming down my cheeks I seized the little book, pored through it and soon had the part pat.

"I arrived at the theatre long before the time for the performance, and slowly went through the lines over and over. As the time drew near for the curtain and during the overture my heart, which had long before began thumping my ribs, continued to pit-a-pat faster than ever. Observing me standing and twitching nervously in the wings, Mr. Barrett walked slowly up and in his quiet and reserved manner said:

"'You need not be afraid to speak too naturally, my child. Put yourself in the place of the part you play, and if you ever adopt the stage, never forget this'—and I never did.

"As I was entirely ignorant of the time to go on, some one whispered in my ear in the middle of the scene: 'Now's your time, Nellie. When you've finished your part, turn about and walk off.' So on I went, and never faltered in a line. All the people in the company praised me warmly, and their encouraging words knocked all school out of me. Every time I saw Mr. De Bar—and I made it a point to see him often—my inquiry for a position in his company would be the first thing. His reply would always be: 'Oh, go home and grow, Nellie; you're too small.' At last the opportunity arrived, and you know the rest."—Boston Globe

The Navy Yard's New Dock.

The mammoth new dry dock at the Brooklyn navy yard is to be tested this month in the presence of Secretary Tracy. It is said to be one of the largest dry docks in the world. It cost something like $600,000, and is over 500 feet long, 134 feet 4 inches wide at the top, 50 feet wide at the bottom and 32 feet 8 inches deep. Underneath the entire dock, length and breadth, there is a solid foundation of concrete, six feet in thickness, and beneath this a supporting floor of piling. The keel track is built on oaken timbers 3 1-2 feet long and 22 inches wide, at a distance of four feet apart. Between each two timber there is a pit two feet in depth, which will allow a workman to work on the under part of the keel. This dock will take up any vessel that our navy is ever likely to build.

Coincidental.

There is a similarity between the accident on the Lake Shore near Hamburg and that on the Central near Yost's. In both disasters a minister of the gospel met death on his journey, a colored porter was killed in the crash at the end of a sleeper, and, while in the Yost's disaster a bridegroom met his death and the bride escaped, in the Hamburg disaster the case was reversed.—Albany Journal.

NATURE'S CURE FOR MAN.

What the Climate of Mexico Did For a Tired American.

Once I went with a weary, typical American man of business to a pleasant town in the Tierra Templada. He was all "nerves," was living a cerebral life with nerves on edge, with eyes turned inward on himself. He was "poorly" in many ways, although he had great wealth. He was planning new enterprises; he would build a new elevator for his grain in the spring, put some more steamers on the great lakes and establish a bank in a booming town in his State. His head was full of plans. His food was disturbing to him, for the fiend dyspepsia racked him, and his rest was troubled. He would gladly have been as cross as he could be, but his natural sense of justice kept him from bursting into a passion, or in any way making himself annoying to his fellow men. He was a noble fellow, had gained riches by unremitting effort and had cared for father and mother and sisters. He was accounted a "leading citizen" in a city where brains and energy are not rare. In fact, he was a leader among men. But he was "all business." What a wretched world that can come to be! Well, we came to this tropical town without a "first-class" hotel, but possessing a quiet little inn, with a fairly good cook, and we passed long hours each day in the sunny, flower-planted alameda. The sky sent down healing influences, and this weary, American man of affairs, gradually magnetized by the sun and air, became as a child in his enjoyment of it all. He could sit and look at peons leading a patient donkey for half an hour; he enjoyed the singing of the birds, he dozed like a tired laborer on hard stone benches in the shade; he listened contentedly to the evening concerts by the military band; he watched with interest the pretty Mexican girls promenading in the little park of a February evening under the wide and tranquil skies, and he slept the sleep of the just.

I watched with interest the cure that Dame Nature was making. No more my friend worried about investments, no longer did he reproach the little town because it had no daily paper, or a telegraph office, where the fluctuations of the stocks were bulletined. He had grown sane. The sun was browning his face and the wrinkles had grown perceptibly less pronounced. One day he said, almost sadly: "I suppose this must stop soon, and I must go back into that whirlpool of business. After all, my boy, the game isn't worth the candle. But I know now where to come for a mind cure and a body cure. I shall never forget that the best sanitarium and the wisest doctor, the sun, are to be found here. I feel like a boy again; I eat well; I sleep like a top, and I am like a strong lad."—Mexico Cor. Boston Herald.

OUR GOLDEN GIRLS.

Good American Dollars That Have Been Captured By Foreign Noblemen.

The immense sum of $44,175,000 has gone to Europe during the last few years with several American girls as an incumbrance to trade for titles. In the main this dowry of beauty and fortune purchased poor specimens of men. If they were in Chicago they couldn't earn a living shoveling smoke out of the city. Yet they have what all the world of snobs love—a title. Most of them have vices, and debts, and other things equally undesirable. But a title covers a multitude of sins.

The American girl is a beauty. She is a conversationalist. She has plenty of dash and spirit, and gives those blase noblemen more pleasure in an hour than they ever had in their lives before. And she is rich—that is, all who marry noblemen are. So he marries her, goes to heaven, and gets the earth.

Here is a list of them:

Lady Vernon Harcourt	$ 200,000
Countess Von Linden	1,000,000
Marquise de Mores	5,000,000
Lady Hesketh	2,000,000
Mrs. Henry Howard	500,000
Duchess of Marlborough	7,000,000
Lady Wolsey	2,000,000
Baroness Eydlitz	1,500,000
Mrs. Arthur Paget	400,000
Mrs. Maule Ramsey	1,000,000
Princess de Scey-Monthelliard	2,000,000
Mrs. Smith Barry	300,000
Mrs. Hughes Hallett	2,000,000
Duchess de la Rovera	3,000,000
Lady Vernon	1,000,000
Duchess de Glucksbjerg	2,000,000
Princess Colonna	5,000,000
Duchess de Dino	3,000,000
Mrs. Ernest Beckett	400,000
Countess de Chabot	200,000
Countess de Agreda	1,000,000
Mrs. William Carrington	200,000
Countess Savorgnan	300,000
Princess de Brancaccio	250,000
Countess di Cedrey	100,000
Mrs. Cavendish Bentinck	1,500,000
Lady Arthur Butler	1,000,000
Mrs. Thomas Charles Baring	500,000
The Baroness de Bremont	75,000
Mrs. Beresford Hope	150,000
Countess Amadel	100,000
Countess d'Araunon	100,000
Lady Aylmar	200,000
Mrs. John Adair	100,000
Marchioness of Anglesey	100,000
Marchioness Salvaterra	100,000
Total	$44,175,000

The immensity of this sum that has gone, or is going, from our shores is so huge that it staggers people who have never considered the subject, and large though it is, this vast sum does not represent the half of the dowries of fair American women who have married foreigners.—Chicago Tribune.

The Beginnings of Evil.

The story is an old one, but good, for all that. Said the camel: "It is cold out here; may I put my head within your door?" The merchant could not find it in his heart to refuse. Before long the camel's neck, as well as his head, was within the little room; then his shoulders; then his whole body. So the merchant was crowded out entirely, for the room was not big enough for both of them. We sometimes think it no great harm if we permit the beginning of a bad habit to enter our bosom. If it would stop there, it might not do much evil. But no one knows where a bad habit will stop. It is quite as likely as not to crowd out every good thing. So look out for its beginning!—N. Y. Ledger.

—Governor Waterman, of California, is said to be a good farmer and a shrewd hand at a bargain, but he is a very poor politician.

MEDICAL WISDOM.

A Cure for Chapped Lips and a Study of the Cause of Wrinkles.

"As soon as the cold wind begins to blow," remarked a physician, "I am overrun with patients suffering from chapped lips. The trouble generally manifests itself in one wide cut in the middle of the lip. I used to treat such things as a laughing matter and prescribe some simple emollient, such as glycerine, for instance. But I soon found that such treatment was only a temporary remedy, for after partially healing the cut would reopen at the slightest exertion of the lips. The mere act of biting any thing hard, laughing or yawning would make the unfortunate howl with pain. If the patient was addicted to the use of tobacco the chances were that he would have a bad lip all through the winter. In my researches for a permanent cure I ran across an old tramp printer who had rubbed against the rough side of the world all his life, and for whom every season had been a cold day. He told me that if I investigated the matter I would find that the people addicted to chapped lips were in the habit of touching them with their tongues. A sure cure, said he, is to keep your tongue in your mouth. I have since followed his suggestion in my practice, and never knew it to fail. The rough skin of the tongue scratches the lips, and when they have once become chapped the least contact is enough to keep the cut open.

"I have recently been making a study of wrinkles," continued the doctor. "It is customary to say that wrinkles come from worrying, but the truth is that most of them come from laughing. This is rather paradoxical, I must admit, but I have been only convinced after the most careful investigation. To know how to laugh is just as important as to know when to do it. If you laugh with the sides of your face the skin will work loose in time, and wrinkles will form in exact accordance with what kind of a laugh you have. The man who always wears a smirk will have a series of semi-circular wrinkles covering his cheeks. When a gambler, who has been accustomed to suppressing his feelings, laughs, a deep line forms on each side of his nose and runs to the upper corner of his mouth. In time, this line extends to the chin and assumes the shape of a half-moon. A cadaverous person, with a wax-like skin, is very apt to have two broadly-marked wrinkles, one running up from the jaw and the other under the eye. These meet at right angles at the cheek-bone, and look as though they formed a knot at the apex. The scholar's wrinkles form on his brow, while the scheming politician's come around his eyes, where they look for ll the world like the spokes of a wheel. Some of the fat women who bet on horses have the most astonishing crop of wrinkles I ever saw outside of an elephant. One in particular was so strongly marked that whenever she smiled over a big win the wrinkles in each cheek would form themselves into the shape of a perfect pretzel."—N. Y. Evening Sun.

DRUMMERS' EARNINGS.

How Much Hard-Working and Successful Men Can Realize.

The earnings of traveling salesmen, local and otherwise, are a matter of more or less interest to every one, and a discussion of a subject of this character can hardly be considered out of place in the columns of a trade journal. Commercial drumming, like every other occupation, is very much overdone. The field is full of smart men, to say nothing of the great number of men of mediocre ability. It is much harder work to sell goods on the road nowadays than a few years ago; because the number of drummers has vastly increased during the past few years and there is a sharper competition among houses employing them for the same reasons. Good salesmen—the men who command good salaries—it is hardly necessary to say, are scarce. We venture to say that there are not ten such men out of a hundred. Some houses pay good salaries to such men in addition to commissions on sales, but no house will employ a man on salary to sell goods on the road unless he is a traveler of extensive experience and known capacity in his line. Then again there are houses which employ men only on commission. Now it may interest some of our readers to know what a first-class drummer, who has worked up a good trade, is able to average in earnings per week. There are many good men, we are told, who depend only on commissions as their recompense. It is said that it is not unusual for a capable traveler to run up his aggregate commissions to seventy-five dollars per week. Fifty dollars is the average, and if a first-class traveler can not make this, or very near to it, he generally feels that his compensation is not adequate to the work he performs. We are speaking now, it must be remembered, of hard-working men of experience and intelligence—bright, wide-awake travelers who have thoroughly mastered the ins and outs of commercial traveling. A great many of the bright, industrious young fellows who are habitually seen with the sack, are able to earn twenty-five dollars per week on an average from their commissions, but they are smart fellows who know their trade and when and how to sell it. There are any number of eight and ten dollars-a-week men, but they are usually men of inexperience, of men who lack persistency and other natural qualifications of successful traveling men.—Boots and Shoes.

ABSURD CHINESE NOTIONS.

Remarkable Ignorance of Medicine in the Celestial Empire.

"Medical Science in China" was the title of a paper read before the Academy of Anthropology by Dr. Henry S. Drayton. The paper had been prepared by Prof. E. P. Thwing, of the Canton Hospital, and was sent by him to Dr. Drayton to be read before the academy. Dr. Thwing declared that science did not exist in China. The usages of centuries had crystalized, and there was an abundance of theories, speculations, traditions and superstitions, but very little knowledge.

One cause of this was the Chinese language, the most meager and tedious of all tongues. The Chinese scholar was different to other tongues because he was unable to study them in his own. But still greater obstacles than this were the ignorance and prejudice of the people. The method of study and the means of information afforded a Chinese doctor were difficult to overcome. A single Chinese work on materia medica and therapeutics, was in forty volumes with quotations from 756 authors. A work on plants was in sixty volumes with 1,715 engravings. As the dissection of the body is forbidden in China, the Chinese have the most absurd notions of anatomy and physiology. They believe that the food passes from the spleen into the stomach, that the larynx leads into the heart, that the soul is in the liver, and that the pit of the stomach is the seat of breath and the source of joy. They regard the skull as one bone, likewise the arm. They regard the right kidney as the gate of life, and hold that each organ is related to earth, air, fire, metals and water. Fire rules the heart, metals the lungs, water the kidneys, and so on.

There is not a square inch of human body that is nameless to the Chinese. An application is made on the dual principle of action and reaction, and herbs, incantations, idols and numerous other pagan means are used in treatment. The medical students study anatomy from the copper model of a man, which is pierced with holes and marked with the names of pulses. These pulses are divided into six wrist pulses, and each wrist pulse is subdivided into twenty-four others. Therefore the Chinese medical student has to study 144 pulses in order to become familiar with the Chinese system of medicine. The idol is also brought into use, and it is believed that the part in which the patient suffers may be cured by rubbing a corresponding part of the idol. Any body may become a doctor, and consequently quacks and imposters are abundant. Still the law holds that to prolong a disease is equivalent to stealing the money obtained from the patient, while having a case terminate in death may result in the doctor losing his head. In spite of all these difficulties the Chinese race constantly increases.

Surgery is utterly unknown to the Chinese, as they believe that any disfigurement in life will be transmitted to the next world—that a one-legged man will become a one-legged angel. And yet the Chinese are capable of becoming excelent surgeons, for they have all the coolness and deftness necessary to the calling. Dr. Thwing declared that the changes within the last fifty years in the practice of medicine in China had been marvelous. The invasion of European and American doctors had wrought a great change, and the Chinese were at last gradually awakening to the necessity of a scientific study and practice of medicine. The people had learned where to find relief, and were denouncing their priests and quacks. China was an unlimited field for women physicians, as a Chinese woman would suffer almost any thing before she would submit to treatment by a male. Vaccination had been recently introduced, and was regarded as a blessing. There were also sixty mission hospitals in China, with eighty doctors in attendance, and an effort was being made to establish an asylum for the insane, something hitherto unknown in China. The conservatism of the Chinese was a great barrier to advancement in the knowledge and practice of medicine, but it was being overcome slowly but surely.—N. Y. Times.

A Pretty Western Preacher.

The Rev. Carrie Bartlett, who is becoming widely known as a successful preacher in the Unitarian ministry at Kalamazoo, has been speaking for a Sunday or two in Brooklyn, and has been a guest at several club receptions. She is young and more than commonly attractive, with an oval face, regular features and large soft eyes. Her hair is brown and curls about her face. It is gathered in a soft knot at the nape of the neck behind. Her voice is pleasantly modulated, but the great charm of her presence lies in the expressive face, which is at once sensitive and reposeful. She does not affect either the masculine or clerical in her dress, wearing a simple black gown with white collar and a wide, rather picturesque black hat with drooping ostrich plumes.—Pittsburg Leader's New York Letter.

LITTLE'S

CHEMICAL FLUID

NON-POISONOUS

SHEEP DIP.

One gallon, mixed with 60 gallons of cold water will dip thoroughly 180 sheep, at a cost of 1 cent each. Easily applied; a nourisher of Wool; a certain cure for SCAB. Also,

Little's Patent Powder Dip,

(Poisonous.)

Mixes instantly with water. Prevents the fly from striking. In a 2-pound package there is sufficient to dip twenty sheep, and in a 7-pound package there is sufficient to dip one hundred sheep.

CATTON, BELL & CO.

SUCCESSORS TO FALKNER, BELL & CO.

Office, 406 California St. and Wool Agency Warehouse, cor. 6th and Townsend Sts

SAN FRANCISCO, CAL.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

C. Mulholland,
EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.
PUBLISHED EVERY FRIDAY

INDEPENDENCE, CAL

FRIDAY JULY 18 1890

County Official Paper.

The conference silver bill having become a law the increased value of silver is tolerably good evidence that it is far more favorable to the poor man's money than the opponents of the bill were willing to admit.

Over the veto of the Governor the Legislature of Louisiana has passed a bill making it lawful for the swindlers who run the lottery to rob the weak minded and ignorant of every other State and Territory in the Nation. Every member of the rotten Legislature that fastened such a burning disgrace upon the State of Louisiana, by his vote branded himself as the pal of swindlers and the meanest kind of pickpockets. The whole State will yet suffer sorely for the iniquity that enriches a few scoundrels by wholesale robbery and the lottery is nothing short of this

From beginning to end of the long debate on the silver bill in Congress the friends of silver beat their opponents overwhelmingly in argument. Truth, reason and justice were all on the side of the friends of silver. The monometalists had not a single argument to offer except that the demonetization of silver is in the interest of the rich capitalists. This shameful admission was freely made and the interests of the many boldly sacrificed by the servants of the capitalists in Congress. That the bill now becomes a law is a step toward righting the wrong done in 1873 and so patiently born through all the weary years since then. No rest should be taken till full justice is secured by the restoration of silver to its condition as a coin metal before the fraud of 1873 was committed.

OFFICIAL.

DEMOCRATIC COUNTY CONVENTION —AND— PRIMARIES.

A MEETING OF THE DEMOCRATIC Central Committee of Inyo county was held at Independence on July 16th and arranged for the holding of a County Nominating Convention to assemble at Independence on THURSDAY, SEPT. 18th.

At the hour of 10 o'clock a. m., for the purpose of nominating candidates for county officers and the transaction of such other business as may properly come before such convention. Primaries for the selection of delegates to said convention were ordered to be held in the several precincts of the county on SATURDAY, AUGUST 30th.

In accordance with the following apportionment, based on the votes cast for Presidential Electors in 1888, a delegate for each precinct voting at said election, one delegate for each ten votes so cast and one for each fraction over one-half that number, as follows:

Round Valley	2	Georges Creek	1
Lincoln	3	Lone Pine	3
Station	2	Cerro Gordo	1
Cottonwood	1	Keeler	1
Bishop	6	Olancha	1
Poleta	1	Darwin	2
Big Pine	4	Lookout	1
Fish Spring	1	Panamint	1
Independence	7

Polls are to be open from 2 o'clock until 6 o'clock p. m. at the following places and under charge of the following officers:

ROUND VALLEY—Inspector, David Olds; Judges, C. H. Parsons, J. S. McGee. Olds' House.

LINCOLN—Inspector, John Blair; Judges, George Clarke, T. K. Hutchison. School House.

LAWS—Inspector, R. C. Schively; Judges J. McNally, Frank Mock. Depot.

COTTONWOOD—Inspector, Nathan Gilbert; Judges, S. P. Roberts, — Berry. Gilbert's

BISHOP—Inspector, Wm. W. Yandell; Judges, E. Schober, A. Dell. School house

POLETA—Inspector, Geo. Storey; Judges, — Collins, M. Hooley. Switch.

BIG PINE—Inspector, Henry McMurry; Judges, R. P. Hessian, L. Engley. School house.

FISH SPRINGS—Inspector, James Jones; Judges, J. Lane, P. Love. School house.

INDEPENDENCE—Inspector, G. W. Brady; Judges, W. J. Lake, John Lewis. School house.

GEORGES CREEK—Inspector, John Shepherd; Judges, John Parish, C. Hamilton, School house.

LONE PINE—Inspector, Manuel Diaz; Judges, F. P. Meysan, John Lucas. School house.

KEELER—Inspector, John Barnes; Judges John Morton, D. C. Grunow. Hotel.

CERRO GORDO—Inspector, R. B. Nickerson; Judges, J. Hertel, T. O'Keefe. Store

DARWIN—Inspector, Jas. A. McKenzie; Judges, J. C. Eddy, J. Wilson. School house.

LOOKOUT—Inspector, Crit. Hampton; Judges, J. E. Reynolds, A. Smith. Store

PANAMINT—Inspector, H. G. Chickering; Judges, James Wall, John Curran. Store

OLANCHA—Inspector, William. Walker. Judges, E. Walker, W. T. Grant. Walker's

It is provided that any precincts which may be established by the Board of Supervisors prior to the date of holding the Primaries shall be entitled to one delegate each.

VOTING TEST—"Will you support the nominees of the Democratic State Convention?"

E. ROBINSON,
IRV. H. MULHOLLAND, Chairman.
Secretary.

FOURTH ANNUAL FAIR.

Agricultural District No. 18.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA.

(Composed Of The Counties Of

Alpine, Mono & Inyo

TO BE HELD AT

Independence.

Commencing Tuesday, September 23d, and Continuing Four Days

A. R. CONKLIN ..... President.
C. MULHOLLAND ..... Secretary.
O. I. MAIRS ..... Treasurer.

DIRECTORS;

A. R. CONKLIN, W. S. ENOS, N. RHINE,
J. S. GORMAN, E. ROBINSON, F. McINER,
A. W. EIBESHUTZ, C. A. WALTER.

FIRST DEPARTMENT.

In this Department the same animal shall not be entered more than once, except in sweepstakes, or as a member of a family exhibited with its sire or dam. Any stallion, mare, gelding or colt competing in a race shall not be excluded from competing for premiums in their respective classes.

Tuesday.

CLASS I—THOROUGHBREDS.

Best stallion, any age	$25 00
Second best	15 00
Best mare, any age	20 00

CLASS II—STANDARD TROTTERS.

Best stallion, aged	$25 00
2-year old	15 00
Best mare	20 00

CLASS III—ROADSTERS.

Best roadster, aged	$20 00
2-year-old	15 00
team to buggy	20 00

Wednesday.

CLASS IV—HORSES OF ALL WORK.

Best stallion, aged	$20 00
2 year-old	15 00
1-year-old	10 00
Best colt	10 00
Best mare, any age	20 00
2-year-old	15 00
1-year old	10 00
and family of 3 or more	20 00

CLASS V—DRAFT HORSES.

Best stallion, aged	$20 00
2 year-old	15 00
Best mare, aged	15 00
2-year old	10 00
and colt	15 00

CLASS VI—MATCHED TEAMS.

To be shown in harness.

Best matched carriage team	$15 00
buggy team	15 00

CLASS VII—SWEEPSTAKES.

Best stallion, any breed or age	$50 00
Best mare, any breed or age	20 00

Thursday.

CLASS VIII—JACKS.

Best jack, any age	$20 00
Second best	15 00

CLASS IX—MULES.

Best span, aged, owned by one person	$15 00
3 years or under " " " "	10 00

CLASS X—BULLS.

Best 3-year old or over, any breed	$20 00
2 year old, any breed	15 00
1 year old, any breed	10 00

CLASS XI—COWS.

Best 3-year old or over	$20 00
2-year-old	10 00
cow and calf	15 00
cow and 2 calves	20 00

All of the above to be exhibited at Race Track. Entries to be made with the Secretary not later than 6 o'clock p. m. on day preceding their exhibition.

Friday.

CLASS XII—SHEEP AND GOATS.

Best display of angora goats	$20 00
Best display of sheep	20 00

CLASS XIII—SWINE.

Best display of hogs	$15 00
Best sow and litter of 4 pigs	10 00

CLASS XIV—POULTRY.

Best display of fowls, any breed	$8 00
Second best	6 00
Best display of turkeys	5 00

Classes 12, 13 and 14 to be exhibited at the Pavilion. Entries to be made with Secretary not later than 6 p. m. on day preceding their exhibition.

All stock to be exhibited must be on the ground at 10 o'clock a. m. on the day intended for their exhibition. No animal to leave place of exhibit on until 4 o'clock p. m. without permission of the Park Director.

SECOND DEPARTMENT.

All exhibits in the following departments must be produced in the District.

CLASS I—AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS.

	1st.	2d.
100 pounds of flour	$3 00	$2 00
barley	3 00	2 00
wheat	3 00	2 00
oats	3 00	2 00
rye	3 00	2 00
shelled corn	3 00	2 00
50 pounds corn in the ear	2 00
alfalfa seed	3 00	2 00
Display of Egyptian corn	2 00
Bale of timothy hay	4 00
alfalfa hay	4 00
Display of grasses	8 00
agricultural products	20 00	15 00

CLASS II—VEGETABLES, ROOTS ETC.

50 pounds Early Rose potatoes	$2 50	$2 00
100 pounds any variety of potatoes	2 50	2 00
25 pounds of sweet potatoes	2 50
20 pounds of parsnips	2 00	1 00
carrots	2 00	1 00
turnips	2 00	1 00
beets	2 00	1 00
tomatoes	2 00	1 00
50 pounds of onions	2 00	1 00
10 pounds of garden peas	2 00
white beans	2 00
bayou beans	2 00
lima beans	2 00
Sample of peppers	2 00
1 dozen cabbage	2 00	1 00
½ dozen squash	2 00	1 00
pumpkins	2 00	1 00
watermelons	2 00	1 00
cantaloupes	2 00	1 00
1 dozen cucumbers	2 00	1 00

CLASS III—DAIRY AND FARM PRODUCE.

10 pounds butter in 2 pound rolls	$3 00	$2 00
20 pound jar of butter	4 00	3 00
Cheese	3 00
10 pounds lard	2 00
Display of honey	5 00	3 00
Apiary display	10 00	5 00
Variety of fruit in jars	10 00	5 00
jellies	5 00	3 00
preserves	5 00	3 00
pickles	5 00	3 00
50 pounds ham	10 00
bacon	10 00

THIRD DEPARTMENT.

CLASS I—HORTICULTURAL PRODUCTS.

Display of apples	$7 50	$5 00
peaches	7 50	5 00
pears	6 00	4 00
plums	6 00	4 00
prunes	6 00	4 00
quinces	5 00
grapes	7 50	5 00
table grapes	3 00
raisin grapes	3 00
wine grapes	3 00
raisins	5 00
dried fruits	7 50	5 00
fruits of all kinds	20 00	10 00
½ dozen bottles of wine	5 00

FOURTH DEPARTMENT.

CLASS I—ARTISTIC.

Oil painting on canvas	$10 00
Second best	5 00
Crayon drawing	10 00
Satin and Japanese panel	10 00
Pastel drawing	5 00
Collection of paintings on canvas	10 00
Photograph of scenery in district	5 00
Collection of photographs, Dist. scenery	10 00

FIFTH DEPARTMENT.

CLASS I—MINERALS ETC.

Cabinet of minerals from District	$25 00
Collection of curios from District	15 00
Display of marble	20 00
borax etc	10 00
soda	10 00
silver ore	10 00
gold ore	10 00
silver lead ore	10 00

SIXTH DEPARTMENT.

CLASS I—NEEDLE AND OTHER WORK.

Handsomest pillow shams	$5 00
and best patchwork quilt	5
crazy quilt	5
knitted quilt	5
sofa cushions	5
set of sofa tidies, 3 pieces	5
set of bureau tidies, 3 pieces	5
Greatest variety of crochet work	10
Best crochet quilt	5
embroidered ladies dress	5
childs dress	5
ottoman cover	5
table cover, 4 corners	5
scarf, 2 ends	5
pair of lambrequins	5
wall panel, or banner	5
silk on flannel	5
linen	5
Kensington, or wool	5
toilet set, 3 pieces	5
lace work, hand made	5
darned net, 3 pieces	5
crochet shawl	5
table scarf, hand painted	5
hearth rug	5
made lady's dress	5
display hand-knit work	5
fancy articles	10
wax work	5
Spanish needle work	5
hair work	5
hand-knit stockings	5
calico dress made by girl under 14	5
hand sewing, 4 pieces, girl under 16	5
crochet work, girl under 14	5
patchwork, girl under 14	5
hand made shirt, girl under 14	5

SPEED PROGRAMME.

TUESDAY.

RUNNING—½ mile dash for untried horses. Purse, $75.
TROTTING—½ and repeat, for 2-year-olds. Purse, $100.

WEDNESDAY.

TROTTING—2 in 3, mile heats, for stallions owned in district. Purse, $150.
RUNNING—½ mile and repeat for saddle horses Purse, $75.

THURSDAY.

RUNNING—2 in 3, mile heats. Free for all horses owned in district. Purse, $150.
TROTTING—2 in 3, mile heats, for double team. Purse, $100.

FRIDAY.

RUNNING—½ mile dash, free for all owned in district. Purse, $100.
TROTTING—2 in 3, mile heats. Free for all owned in district. Purse, $150.
RUNNING—1 mile, for Indian horses. No entrance fee. Purse, $25.

RULES.

In all the above races 3 or more to enter, 2 or more to start. Entrance fee, 10 per cent. of purse.

All entries to be made with the Secretary on or before 12 o'clock m. of the day preceding the race.

California State Agricultural Society Rules to govern running races. National Trotting Association Rules to govern trotting races.

In all exhibits of animals for premiums, other things being equal, blooded stock will be preferred.

All articles included in the above list, except the first department, to be on exhibition at the Pavilion on second day and remain during the Fair.

Special premiums will be allowed for articles exhibited not included in above list

If you have entries to make, attend to it at once, and when your entries are made, see to it that they are on time and at place for examination by the committee.

Accept no rumors in regard to the business of the exhibition. If you do not know what to do, inquire of the officers whose duty it is to tell you. One half of the trouble and disappointment at the Fair is caused by relying on hearsay. Attend to your business yourself. If it is done wrong you know where the blame lies.

Read the rules, and, by example, at least, assist in enforcing them; but don't forget that mistakes will occur where many people are congregated. The Board endeavors to do justice to all.

If the Superintendents and Committeemen are not always ready at the appointed hour, keep your clock and articles where you can command them at any time. Remember that we have but little time to do much business; patience, with a little system, will overcome many obstacles.

The Board will give the same special attention to details that has contributed to success in the past. It remains for the exhibitors to achieve still better results for the Fair of 1890.

ADMISSION

Life Membership	$30 00
Membership ticket, admitting member, wife and minor children	5 00
Single season ticket	2 50
To Pavilion, each	50
To Race Track, each	50

NATHAN RHINE.

NATHAN RHINE,
(Successor to Harris & Rhine.)
MERCHANT,
INDEPENDENCE
Inyo Co. Cal.
Wholesale & Retail
—DEALER IN—
General Merchandise

MY STOCK
CONSISTING OF
Almost every needed article is well calculated to satisfy the wants of everybody; and, as in the past, it will be our aim in the future to retain the extensive patronage enjoyed heretofore.

NATHAN RHINE.

NATHAN RHINE
BANKER
Independence, Cal.
SELL EXCHANGE
—ON—
SAN FRANCISCO
Draw Direct
—ON—
NEW YORK,
LONDON, England.
BERLIN, FRANKFORT-on-the-Main, GERMANY.

I AM PREPARED TO TRANSACT ALL KINDS,
—OF—
GENERAL
BANKING
&
EXCHANGE
BUSINESS.

Wechsel in beliebigen Summen auf Berlin und Frankfurt am de Main, Deutsche Vollmachten geefligt. Geldsendungen von und nach Deutschland besorgt.

AGENT FOR WELLS FARGO
& CO'S.
EXPRESS

MUTUAL
Life Insurance Co.
OF NEW YORK
CAPITAL - - - - $5,000,000

LIVERPOOL
AND LONDON AND GLOBE
INSURANCE - COMPANY
Capital - - - - - $21,000,000

NATHAN RHINE.

MISCELLANEOUS.

J. R. ELDRED,
Sheriff and
Tax-Collector.
INYO CO., CAL.

P. H. MACK,
COUNTY CLERK,
—AND—
Ex-officio Auditor and Recorder,
INYO CO., CAL.

GEO. M. GILL,
District Attorney,
INYO CO., CAL.

J. J. MOORE,
County Treasurer,
INYO CO., CAL.

S. P. M'KNIGHT,
COUNTY SURVEYOR
—AND—
U. S. Deputy Mineral Surveyor
For California and Nevada.
—BISHOP CREEK, INYO CO., CAL.—
The obtaining of United States mineral patents a specialty.
All kinds of surveying given the most careful and accurate attention.

JUSTICE OF PEACE,
C. MULHOLLAND.
Office in the "INDEPENDENT" Building, Independence, Inyo County, Cal.

A. R. CONKLIN,
Attorney-at-Law.
Independence, Cal.
Will practice in all the Courts of the State of California and Nevada.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
Independence, Cal.

P. W. FORBES,
ATTORNEY AT LAW.
NOTARY PUBLIC.
Cases in U. S. Land Office a Specialty.
BISHOP, INYO COUNTY, CALIFORNIA.

IRVING J. WOODIN, M D.,
Physician & Surgeon,
(COUNTY PHYSICIAN)
Louise L. Woodin, M. D.
PHYSICIAN & SURGEON.
NIGHT CALLS ATTENDED.
Office and residence at the Reddy place, Independence.

W. H. GEORGE, M. D.,
Physician and Surgeon,
Bishop Creek, Cal.,
Offers his professional services to the people of Bishop Creek and vicinity. Office and residence opposite Andrew Clark's.

F. E. Bunting, M. D.
Physician & Surgeon
LONE PINE, CAL
OFFICE IN GELCICH BUILDING
All calls attended to immediately.

Lodge 221, F. & A. M.
Regular meetings of Lodge No. 221, F. & A. M., for the year 1889, will be held at the Lodge room at Independence as follows:
Saturday ..... February 1st
" ..... March 1st
" ..... March 29th
" ..... May 3rd
" ..... May 31st
" ..... June 28th
" ..... July 26th
" ..... August 30th
" ..... September 27th
" ..... October 25th
" ..... November 22nd
" ..... December 20th
P. H. MACK, W. M.
C. MULHOLLAND Sec.

P. W. FORBES. P. H. MACK.
MACK & FORBES.
Real Estate Agents,
Address, P. H. MACK, Independence, Cal.
P. W. FORBES, Bishop, Cal.

FRED BURCKHARDT
Watchmaker & Jeweler,
LONE PINE, CAL.
Time pieces of all descriptions repaired and regulated, satisfaction guaranteed. Jewelry made to order. Firearms repaired and loaded.
All orders from any part of the country will be promptly attended to, at the most reasonable charges. At the old stand "Mechanics' Hall," Lone Pine.
FRED BURKHARDT.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CROCKER'S HOTEL.
BIG PINE - CAL.
New House,
New Furniture,
Low Rates
Splendid hunting and fishing near by, in fact, it is a veritable paradise for tourists and pleasure seekers.
Special attention given to the wants of every guest.
CROCKER BROS., Props.
sep1-tf

ANTONS SALOON
KEELER, CAL.
BEER, WINES,
LIQUORS and CIGARS
All kinds of Fancy Drinks, including pure water. A comfortable and pleasant Hall.
JOHN C. ANTON, Prop.

IRWIN'S SALOON
Cor. Russian and Main Streets,
Independence, Cal.
THE PUBLIC GENERALLY ARE RESPECTFULLY invited to call and inspect my establishment, which has been entirely rebuilt, and furnished in a style second to none on this side of the mountains. A SPLENDID NEW BILLIARD TABLE provided for the amusement of patrons.
THE BAR
Is supplied with the most celebrated brands of pure Wines and Liquors and the Finest Havana Cigars.
JOHN C. IRWIN, Proprietor.
feb12tf

Palace Saloon.
WALTER OBER, Lessee.
—THE BAR—
Is constantly supplied with the best kinds of
WINES, LIQUORS, & CIGARS.
The most careful attention given to the amusement and comfort of patrons.
A FINE BILLIARD TABLE
Is always at the disposal of visitors to the Palace Saloon Dec. 20 89

Pioneer
Livery & Feed Stables.
INDEPENDENCE, CAL.
Having returned and resumed the management of the above well known feed and livery stables, patrons can be assured of finding there the best of Buggy Teams, Saddle Horses, and
Livery Accommodations
in general. Also, Hay and Grain for sale by the pound or ton.
O. I. MAIRS, Proprietor.

E. H. Edwards,
—DEALER IN—
General Merchandise,
LONE PINE,
INYO COUNTY - - - CALIFORNIA.

BLACKSMITHING,
Horseshoeing, General Iron
—AND—
WAGON WORK.
PIONEER BLACKSMITH SHOP
Cor. Main St. & Depot Ave.,
INDEPENDENCE, CAL.
W. F. MATLACK ..... PROPRIETOR.
Horseshoeing ..... $2 00 for Cash
For particulars, call and see
W. F. MATLACK.

LONE PINE
Blacksmith Shop.
R. C. Spear, Prop'r
—ALL WORK ON—
MINING TOOLS,
FARMING IMPLEMENTS
& FREIGHTING OUTFITS
—PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO—
HORSE SHOEING,
CARRIAGE WORK,
GENERAL REPAIRING
All work attended to with neatness and despatch. Prices to suit the times.

BOOTS AND SHOES
MADE AND REPAIRED.
THE BEST MATERIAL.
FIRST-CLASS WORK.
Repairs done Promptly.
Prices Reasonable.
nov 30-tf A. J. DAVIS, Independence,

TO ADVERTISERS
A list of 1000 newspapers divided into STATES AND SECTIONS will be sent on application—FREE.
To those who want their advertising to pay, we can offer no better medium for thorough and effective work than the various sections of our Select Local List. GEO. P. ROWELL & CO., Newspaper Advertising Bureau, 10 Spruce Street, New York.

MISCELLANEOUS.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE.
STEVENS DITCH COMPANY.
Location of principal place of business, Independence, California. Location of ditch, near Independence, Inyo county.
Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of a Board of Directors, held on the 31st day of May, 1890, an assessment (No. 4) of Ten (10) cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary at the office of the company, Independence, California.
Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 26th day of July, 1890 will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Saturday, the 30th day of August, 1890 to pay the delinquent assessment together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale.
By order of the Board of Directors.
P. H. MACK, Secretary.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.
IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE County of Inyo, State of California.
Estate of CHARLES D. BEGOLE, deceased.
NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN BY THE UNdersigned, Administrator of the estate of Charles D. Begole, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his residence, in the town of Independence in the county of Inyo.
THOMAS PARKER.
Administrator of the estate of Charles D. Begole, deceased.
Dated July 7th, 1890.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE.
INYO MARBLE COMPANY.
Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Inyo county, Cal.
NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT AT A meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 26th day of June, 1890, an assessment (No. 10) of Ten Cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, No. 132 California street, San Francisco, California.
Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 5th day of August, 1890, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction, and unless payment is made before, will be sold on TUESDAY, the 26th day of August, 1890, to pay the delinquent assessment together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.
G. W. LUCE, Sec.
Office—No. 132 California St., San Francisco, California.

EDWARD CHENOT
Independence, Cal.,
INVITES PUBLIC ATTENTION TO HIS Extensive Stock of
GENERAL MERCHANDISE
....Consisting of....
GROCERIES.
PROVISIONS
Tobacco, Cigars,
WINES AND LIQUORS
FLOUR & GRAIN
Together with an Assortment of
DRY GOODS AND CLOTHING
ETC., ETC
Buyers and consumers should call and examine my stock and prices before purchasing elsewhere.
E. CHENOT.
Independence, Cal., March 9, 1884.
n476tf

J. W. Murphy.
BLACKSMITHING
—AND—
General Iron Work.
Wagons and Carriages Repaired.
HORSESHOEING, $2.00 for CASH
Shop on Edwards St., opposite the Court House, Independence.

BUHACH
THE UNRIVALED
Insect Exterminator
Manufactured solely from Pyrethrum flowers, grown in California, in a locality where the soil and climate are peculiarly adapted to the production of flowers rich in the essential oil which makes them so remarkably destructive to insect life.
Avoid the Worthless and Spurious Preparations, sold as Insect Powders, and use Buhach from original packages, and clear your premises of all Annoying and Destructive Insect Pests.
BUHACH C. H. MILLER'S CALIFORNIA INSECT EXTERMINATOR
None Genuine Without the Trade Mark.
If your dealer doesn't keep it, order directly from the
Buhach Producing & Manufacturing COMPANY,
SOLE MANUFACTURERS,
STOCKTON, - - CALIFORNIA.

Wm. Muth-Rasmussen.
Bee Keeper.
Manufacturer of Comb Foundation.
Independence, Inyo Co. Cal.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY, JULY 18 1890

COURT NOTES.

Superior Court of Inyo County, California Hon. John A. Hannah, Judge.

TUESDAY, July 15th.

Filed application of P. H. Mack to be admitted to practice as an Attorney and Counselor-at-Law.

WEDNESDAY, July 16th.

John McKay and Alexander Porteous admitted to citizenship.

Filed petition of Trustees of the Baptist Church of Bishop to sell real estate

Mr. J. H. Marshall came up from Keeler yesterday.

Mrs. T. F. Hutchison has been visiting at Independence.

Mr. J. J. Gann got back from San Francisco last Monday.

P. W. Forbes Esq. was down from Bishop some days this week.

Mr. John Fietman of Keeler was at Independence a few days this week.

H. Mack Esq. was examined and admitted to practice law in the Superior Court on Tuesday.

Mr. and Mrs. J. G. Birchim came down from Round Valley yesterday. They will make but a short stay in town.

Mr. C. A. Walter at Camp Independence has threshed his barley crop and can now fill orders for that grain.

Mr. H. Levy intends leaving town tomorrow morning for San Francisco. She expects to be gone two months.

S. A. Middleton has been cited to appear in Court next Tuesday to answer to the charge of an assault with intent to commit murder.

Those desiring to spend a pleasant evening call at the lower story of Masonic hall bringing small change with them, to-morrow evening.

Mr. and Mrs. F. Fitzgerald intend leaving Lone Pine on Monday to visit Los Angeles. They expect to be gone about two months.

Very heavy hay crops are the rule at Lone Pine. Mr. R. Van Dyke, Mr. W. K. Miller, Mrs. McCall and others have already cut immense crops of alfalfa and native grasses.

For many weeks past Crocker's Hotel at Big Pine has been so crowded that every night cot-beds are made up in the parlor and hallway.

Martin Mee went to Lone Pine last Monday from whence he will go up into the mountains for several weeks. His health is much improved.

James Hutchings of Bishop passed a very creditable examination and was admitted as an Attorney to practice in the Superior Court on Wednesday.

Landlord Stewart of the Lone Pine Hotel went down to Cottonwood creek some days ago, camped over night and next day caught three hundred and fifteen trout. Worms was the bait used.

Crops of all kinds are very heavy in Round Valley this season. Mr. J. G. Birchim says that the grain crop on his place will be three hundred tons mostly wheat and oats.

J. R. Eldred D. D. G. M. installed the officers of Inyo Lodge No. 301 I. O. O. F. Thursday night as follows: Wells Barnes N. G.; J. E. Shepherd, V. G.; J. D. Blair Secretary; P. H. Mack, Treasurer.

Last reports from Cerro Gordo are to the effect that the Dunphy-O,Keefe mine continues to show up a good ledge of ore. Shipments continue regularly. There is nothing new reported from the Union mine.

Mr. Frank Fitzgerald lost a pocket book at Keeler last Sunday. The book contained money and valuable papers. Mr. John Barnes found the book in the room Mr. Fitzgerald had occupied at the hotel and it was returned to the owner with all its contents safe.

Farmers about Big Pine finished cutting their first crop of alfalfa at the beginning of the week. They report that the yield is about three tons per acre. The corn in that neighborhood is making very rapid growth and will be a fine crop.

A meeting of the Democratic County Central Committee was held in the Court room on Wednesday evening. Frank Fitzgerald and J. J. Gann were elected delegates to the State Convention. The time of holding primaries was fixed for Saturday, August 30th, and the convention will be held on Tuesday, September 18th.

Mrs. Chapman, wife of the dentist at Bishop, was severely hurt last Monday. She was in a buggy with her husband and was leading a horse. The animal grew fractious and pulled back, the rope with which Mrs. Chapman was leading him got wound tightly around her hand and before she could get it loose it tore the flesh down to the bones.

In the garden at Stewart's hotel, Lone Pine, almond trees are heavily loaded with fruit. There are two varieties, the soft-shell and paper-shell and both appear to do equally well. If grown in sufficient quantity the nuts would be an exceedingly profitable crop and these trees show that the soil and climate are well suited to their production.

There is likely to be a large increase of men employed at the marble quarry. Orders aggregating a large amount are reported to have been received for marble and much more help than is now employed will be necessary. It is said that not less than two hundred thousand dollars worth of marble will have to be got out as soon as possible.

When P. Key and A. J. Davis were taking out galena ore recently at the White Hills they encountered a vein of ore of unusual character. It is not crystalized like galena nor is it so heavy. It is brittle, fine grained, has dark lustre and very dark color. It was thought to be worthless and several tons of it were thrown down the mountain. As a matter of curiosity a sample of the ore was sent to Mr. J. A. McKenzie at Darwin for assay. Mr. McKenzie replied that he found the ore contained 772.30 ounces silver per ton. He thinks that it also contains gold and reported that he would assay for that metal. Key and Davis are not throwing any more of the ore down the mountain. It is not yet known how extensive the ledge may be.

SUPERVISORS' PROCEEDINGS.

MONDAY, July 7th.

On the above named day the Board of Supervisors of Inyo county met as a Board of Equalization at 7 o'clock p. m. Present, Supervisors Sneden, Robinson and Stewart; absent, Harger and Eddy.

The Board adjourned until 9 o'clock a. m. of Tuesday.

TUESDAY, July 8th.

The Board met at 9 o'clock a. m. pursuant to adjournment. Same members present.

The Board proceeded with the examination of the assessment roll of 1890. At noon a recess was taken and when the Board met again at 1:30 p. m. the examination was resumed.

WEDNESDAY, July 9th.

Board met at 9 o'clock a. m., same members present. Minutes of preceding day read and approved.

Examination of the roll was continued until evening, with the usual recess at noon and the Board adjourned until next day.

THURSDAY, July 10th.

Board met at 9 o'clock a. m., same members present. Minutes of the preceding day read and approved.

Examination of the roll continued.

The Board directed the Assessor to assess the property of A. K. Eugley, which had escaped assessment.

A. Farrington, Superintendent of the Union Mining Company of Cerro Gordo made application in person and by verified statement for reduction of the assessment of the property of said Company. After examining Mr. Farrington the Board ordered the assessment changed and a reduction of $4,815 made from the gross amount.

The Board adjourned until Friday.

FRIDAY, July 11th.

The Board met at 9 o'clock a. m., pursuant to adjournment, same members present. Minutes of preceding day read and approved.

An order was made dispensing with a duplicate assessment roll.

Assessment of Juan Divas for 300 head of cattle reduced to 200 head.

Assessor ordered to assess cattle belonging to J. L. Bourland, said cattle having escaped assessment.

Military roll examined, corrected and approved.

The following claims of members of the Board were allowed on the Salary Fund:

S. G. Sneden	$43 80
E. Robinson	30 30
J. J. Stewart	34 80

Board Adjourned.

Big Pine Picnic.

Last Sunday a big crowd of people gathered at Big Pine to attend the festival given for the purpose of raising funds for the improvement of the cemetery. An abundance of ice-cream, cake and fruit was supplied to all. Tables were set in the grove at Crockers' Hotel and there were occupied from noon till sunset. An organ was placed in the grove and many hymns and songs were sung. Miss Frieduine was often called upon to sing and with great good nature she complied with the request. She is a very pleasing singer. The old Indian Chief, Sam Bowers, brother to the noted Chief, Joe Bowers, dressed in full feathers and paint danced the war dance. Mr. Sam Spratt knows the chant that accompanies the war dance and sang while the old Chief danced. The Indian is quite an aged man but when he got warmed up he went through the evolutions of the dance with great spirit and vigor. It was an odd combination, white men, women and children assembled together to raise funds for the improvement of the town cemetery, and an Indian with feathered head dress and painted body leaping in the wild war dance of his race as part of the entertainment. C. Masholland was introduced to the assembly and made an address appropriate to the occasion. Money enough was raised to make the needed improvements at the cemetery.

Good Hay Press.

The neighbors of Mr. John Lucas of Lone Pine would not waste time if they would call and see him bale hay. With two boys to help him Mr. Lucas could quite readily turn out ten bales each hour for a whole day. The bales weigh on an average about 105 lbs. each and are as compact as blocks of wood. The labor is very light being nothing more than feeding the machine and making fast the wire ties on the bales. Two horses give the power and these walk around slowly and continuously in one direction. There are no sudden jerks or strains, the pressure is applied gradually, and the hay is not broken up or mangled. When the bales are opened each spear of hay is found straight and whole. The cost of baling will not exceed one and a half dollars per ton and this is a liberal estimate. The machine used is called the "Lightning Press". It is very strongly made and will last for generations. Mr. Lucas has a very heavy hay crop most of which will be delivered under contract to the Cerro Gordo mining Company and to the Borax works in Saline Valley. The press was purchased from S. W. Luitweiler, 100 Los Angeles St. Los Angeles.

Fall of The Bastile.

Last Monday evening a large party assembled at Lone Pine in response to the invitations sent out by Mr. and Mrs. C. Meysan. The party was given to celebrate the fall of the Bastile, captured by the people of Paris on July 14th, 1789. At sunset a large party met in front of the residence of Mr. Meysan where the Marseillaise and other French national airs were sung and then the French flag which had been flying all day was hauled down by Mr. Meysan. The ball room was handsomely decorated with United States and French flags, flowers and green foliage. Near midnight an elegant repast was served in rooms adjacent to the ball room. After supper the company were entertained with vocal and instrumental music after which dancing was resumed and continued till day light. It was a very pleasant party and all the guests expressed warm gratitude to Mr. and Mrs. Meysan for the pleasure afforded them.

Water is flowing far beyond each end of the Lone Pine bridge and is very nearly swimming deep for horses at each approach. Not less than fifteen tons of rock have been piled upon the bridge to keep it from being swept away. The stage-drivers are thoroughly familiar with the crossing and plunge their teams in without hesitation but strangers are apt to feel a little nervous when the horses go almost under the rushing water and it comes up about them where they sit. There is not the least danger, however, in making the crossing and careful watch is kept of the river and the bridge.

OFFICIAL.

REPUBLICAN County Convention.

A REPUBLICAN CONVENTION IS HEREby called to assemble at Bishop, Inyo county, California, on

TUESDAY, SEPT. 16, 1890,

At 2 p. m., for the nomination of County candidates and the transaction of such other business as may properly come before it. The Republicans of the several precincts are requested to hold Primaries, at the places named on SATURDAY, SEPT. 6, 1890.

From 2 to 5 o'clock p. m., for the selection of delegates in accordance with this apportionment:

Round Valley	School house	2 Delegates
Lincoln	School-house	4 "
Laws	School-house	2 "
Cottonwood	Roberts	1 "
Bishop	Court-room	7 "
Poleta	A. O. Collins'	1 "
Big Pine	School-house	3 "
Fish Springs	Curtis Place	2 "
Independence	School-house	6 "
Georges Creek	School-house	2 "
Lone Pine	School-house	4 "
Cerro Gordo	Boland Store	2 "
Keeler	Boland Store	3 "
Olancha	Wm. Walkers	1 "
Darwin	School house	2 "
Lookout	Company Store	1 "
Panamint	———	1 "

It is provided that any new precincts which may be established by the Board of Supervisors prior to date of primaries shall be entitled to one delegate each, and any of the above precincts which may be abolished shall have no representation.

PRIMARY TEST: "Did you support Harrison and Morton at the last election, or would you have done so had you been a voter?"

Ordered, That candidates coming before the Convention for nomination for the following offices each be assessed in the amounts named: Superior Judge, $25; Sheriff, $15; Clerk, $15; Assessor, $15; District Attorney, $10; Treasurer $10; School Superintendent, $10.

By order of the Republican County Committee.

C. W. GARRATT, Chairman.
J. D. BLAIR, Secretary.

Independence, Cal., July 7, 1890.

DESERT LAND FINAL PROOF

D. E. No. 415.

LAND OFFICE AT INDEPENDENCE, CAL. June 25, 1890.

Notice is hereby given that John A. Hannah, of Independence, Inyo County, California, has filed notice of his intention to make proof on his desert-land claim, No. 415, for the S ½ of Sec. 32, Tp. 13 S., R. 36 E., M. D. M., before the Register and Receiver at Independence, on Saturday, the 2d day of August, 1890.

He names the following witnesses to prove the complete irrigation and reclamation of said land: Finlay McIver, Gilbert Christie, David Johnson and David Vaughn, all of Citrus, Inyo County, Cal.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD, Register.

DESERT LAND FINAL PROOF.

D E No. 414.

LAND OFFICE AT INDEPENDENCE, CAL. June 25, 1890.

Notice is hereby given that Charles Masholland, of Independence, Inyo County, California, has filed notice of intention to make proof on his desert land claim No. 414, for the N E ¼ of Sec. 32, Tp. 13 S., R. 36 E., M D M, before the Register and Receiver at Independence, California, on Saturday, the 2d day of August, 1890.

He names the following witnesses to prove the complete irrigation and reclamation of said land: Finlay McIver, Gilbert Christie, David Johnson and David Vaughn, all of Citrus, Inyo County, California.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD, Register.

POLITICAL ANNOUNCEMENTS.

All announcements under this head will be charged for at the uniform rate of Ten Dollars

For Superior Judge.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Superior Judge, subject to the action of the Republican County Convention.

GEORGE M. GILL.

For Superior Judge.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Superior Judge, Subject to the action of the Democratic county convention.

JOHN A. HANNAH.

For Superior Judge.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY DECLARE myself as a candidate for the office of Superior Judge, subject to the action of the Republican county convention.

A. R. CONKLIN.

For Sheriff.

ANNOUNCEMENNT IS HEREBY MADE that I respectfully declare myself as a candidate for the office of Sheriff, subject to the action of the Republican County Convention.

JOHN S. GORMAN.

For Treasurer.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Treasurer, subject to the action of the Democratic county convention. J. J. MOORE.

For Sheriff.

I HEREBY REPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Sheriff, subject to the action of the Democratic Convention. BEN. T. WILLIAMS.

For Supervisor.

ANNOUNCEMENT IS HEREBY MADE that I will be a candidate for the office of Supervisor of the Third District subject to the action of the Republican Convention.

CHARLES A. WALTER.

For Assessor.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Assessor, subject to the action of the Democratic Convention. C. W. GARRETSON.

For Sheriff.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT I RESpectfully declare myself as a candidate for the office of Sheriff, subject to the action of the Democratic Convention.

ALNEY I. McGEE.

For Assessor.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY DECLARE that I am a candidate for the office of Assessor of Inyo county, subject to the action of the Republican convention.

HENRY MELONE.

For County Clerk.

ANNOUNCEMENT IS HEREBY RESPECTfully made that I declare myself a candidate for the office of County Clerk, subject to the action of the Republican convention

JOHN N. YANDELL.

For County Clerk.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of County Clerk, subject to the action of the Democratic convention. P. H. MACK.

HALE BROS. & CO.

Shopping By Mail.

Shopping by mail affords advantages to out-of-town people which are of special importance. They get advanced styles, large assortment and lower prices. HALE BROS & CO. make a specialty of this business. Their patronage extends from Arizona to Alkska, and their trade is constantly on the increase. Do you want to know why?

A Shopping Guide.

It requires no experience to order from us. Our Illustrated Catalogue, issued twice a year, gives illustrations and describes faithfully everything in our immense establishment. It is a book of 100 pages and shows you every thing that fashion demands. Though large and expensive we send it Free to all. It gives you prices that you little dream of.

Largest Importing House On The Coast.

HALE BROS. & CO.

Nos. 825 to 835 K St.,

Sacrameoto, Cal.

How They Treat You

They aim to give satisfaction in every instance. You can send to them for goods with the certainty that you will be treated with the same courtesy and fairness as though you were at their counters. They fill orders carefully, promptly, and take no unfair advantage of patrons. If you have not been satisfied with the way other firms have treated you, note the difference in sending to

HALE BROS. & CO.

What They Keep.

No matter what you need, you can get it at HALE BROS. & CO. An immense assortment of dry-goods is carried. Household Supplies, Notions Shoes and all kinds of weoring apparel for both sexes. Samples of all goods by the yard sent on application. It pays to deal with them because they buy more goods in the East and abroad than any retail house on the Coast. The evidence of it is seen in their prices.

JEWELRY, DIAMONDS, WATCHES.

Hyman Fredrick, Reno, Nev.

The attention of the people of Inyo and neighboring counties is respectfully invited to the

LARGEST AND BEST STOCK

of Watches, Diamonds, Ear and Finger Rings, Bracelets and all other kinds of Jewelry this side of San Francisco. Knives, Forks, Spoons, and other Table Ware of the Best quality.

PRICES DEFY OUTSIDE COMPETITION.

All repairs done promptly and in a workmanlike manner.

Address orders and packages to

HYMAN FREDRICK, Jeweler,

m30-tf RENO, NEVADA.

THE BEST VALUE

LEVI STRAUSS & CO'S

Celebrated Copper Riveted

OVERALLS AND SPRING BOTTOM PANTS

ENJOY A NATIONAL REPUTATION.

NONE GENUINE WITHOUT OUR TRADE MARK.

BEST SEWING! BEST FINISH! BEST FIT! BEST MATERIALS!

The only kind made by White Labor.

FOR SALE EVERYWHERE

MISCELLANEOUS.

NORMAN HOUSE,

Independence, - - Cal.

New House.
New Furniture.
Low Rates.

Special attention will be given to secure the comfort of guests.

O. I. MAIRS. Prop.

feb12tf

MISCELLANEOUS.

BELL'S Flouring Mills,

A. N. BELL, Prop.

TRY BELL'S

EXTRA PATENT ROLLER FLOUR.

Having added Patent Rolls and other improvements to our Mills, I am now turning out Flour that is fully

Equal to the Best.

Corn, Oats and Barley Cracked on Short Notice.

A. N. BELL,

Independence, Cal.

BIG TOP ADVERTISEMENTS.

GIVEN & INGALLS,

- DEALERS IN -

FARM PRODUCE.

J. E. DUNLAP.

Harness Maker.

Harness of all kinds, from the lightest to the heaviest. Any kind of new work made promptly and of the best material. Repairing done on the shortest notice. A full line of saddles and harness.

Valley View Hotel.

O. H. Hill, Prop'r.

A New House Newly Furnished Throughout. Guests will receive every courtesy and attention.

NEVADA STABLE BISHOP.

Opposite Valley View Hotel, Main St

In the Livery Department nothing is kept but safe and good traveling carriage and saddle horses. Conveyances of all kinds first-class. Good attendance and the best of hay and grain for all animals boarding at the stable

S. P. SMITH, Prop.

BISHOP CREEK

BREWERY,

MUNZINGER, PHILIPPAY & CO., Proprietors.

All the appliances and conveniences of First Class Brewery, including a beautiful grove for out-door parties.

Customers supplied on all points Of the C. & C. Railroad.

Send orders to

MUNZINGER, PHILIPPAY & CO.

Bishop Creek, Cal.

F. E. Bosworth,

Watchmaker & Jeweler.

BISHOP, CAL.

Fine and Complicated Watch Repairing a Specialty.

Guns, Sewing Machines, Organs and Music Boxes Put in Perfect Condition and Warranted.

I Prefer to do all work at your house and will call if you will write to me at Bishop.

A NEW DEAL!

BISHOP CREEK

Livery, Feed & Sale Stable.

ROBERT O'NEIL, Prop'r.

Horses are boarded by the day, week or month. Stock bought and sold.

Bishop Creek, Cal., Nov. 20, 1883.

A. K. EUGLEY,

BIG PINE INYO CO. CAL.

PROVISIONS,

&c., &c., &c.

Deputy County Clerk.

A. K. EUGLEY,

Big Pine, Cal.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Railroad Time Table.

CARSON & COLORADO R R

TAKING EFFECT

Sunday, May 10th, 1889.

STATIONS.	From Mound House. No. 1	To Mound House. No. 2
	Leave—	Arrives—
Mound House	12:30 p. m	5.55 p. m
Dayton	1:00 p. m.	5:15 p. m.
Wabuska	3:05 p. m	3:00 p. m.
Hawthorne	6:50 p. m.	11:30 a. m.
Luning	7:30 p. m.	10:00 a. m.
Sodа Springs	9:15 p. m.	9.05 a. m
Belleville	10:25 p. m.	7:45 a. m.
Candelaria	Ar. 11:40 p. m	Lv. 7:15 a. m
	No. 3. Leave—	No. 4. Arrives—
Belleville	8:10 a. m	5:25 p. m
Benton	11:40 a. m	-
Bishop Creek	1:50 p. m.	11:00 a. m
Alvord	2:35 p. m.	10:00 a. m
Independence	4:10 p. m.	8:30 a. m.
Lone Pine	5:00 p. m.	7:00 a. m
Keeler	Ar 5:45 p. m.	Lv. 7:00 a. m.

Trains 1 and 2 run daily.
Train 3 runs Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays
Train 4 runs Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays

Passenger trains make close connection at Mound House with express trains of V. & T. R. R., which connect at Reno with east and west bound trains of Central Pacific Railroad.

Stage Connections:

At HAWTHORNE with United States Stage Company's coaches for Aurora (36 miles); Bodie (37 miles); Lundy and Bridgeport.

At LUNING (125 miles from Mound House) with Gilmer, Salsbury & Co's. tri-weekly stages (leaves Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays) for Downieville, Grantsville and Belmont.

At CANDELARIA with U. S. Stage Co's. stages for Columbus (8 miles), Silver Peak, Montezuma, Alida Valley, Good Mountain, etc.

H. M. YERINGTON, General Superintendent.

R. J. LAWS, Assistant Superintendent.

D. A. BENDER, General Freight and Passenger Agent.

The Newest Styles

OF

Fashionable Clothing

Dry Goods, Ladies' Wear, etc., etc.

AT

L. WOOL

CASH STORE

A small stock of fresh groceries & canned goods constantly renewed.

Fresh Produce, and Grain Flour, etc., constantly on hand.

CANDIES,
PEANUTS,
WALNUTS,
TOYS!

THE CASH STORE

Is Where You Get

WORTH OF YOUR MONEY

THOMAS & HILL,

DEALERS IN

GENERAL MERCHANDISE

BIG PINE, INYO COUNTY, CAL,

We keep constantly on hand goods of all kinds needed in a country home. We order only First Class Goods and ask no more than a reasonable profit. Give us a trial.

THOMAS & HILL.

INDEPENDENCE

SHAVING SALOON.

Shaving, Hair Cutting, etc., done in the best manner.

WM. H. HUFF, Prop'r

COLONEL QUARITCH, V.C

By H. RIDER HAGGARD.

Thrice did Harold look at the hole, and thrice, like false Sextus, did he shrink back.

"Come," he shouted, angrily, "don't be an infernal fool; get down here and hand me the lantern."

George obeyed with evident trepidation. Then Harold got through the hole, and with many an inward tremor—for there is scarcely a man on the earth who is really free from supernatural fears—descended hand over hand. But in so doing he managed to let the lantern fall, and it went out. Now, as the reader will probably admit, this was exceedingly trying. It is not pleasant to be left alone in the dark underground in the company of an unknown "spook." He had some matches, but what between fear and cold, it was some time before he could get a light. Down in this deep place the rush of the great gale reached his ears like a faint and melancholy sighing, and he heard other tapping noises too, or he thought he did—noises of a creepy and unpleasant nature. Would the matches never light? The chill and death like damp of the place struck to his marrow, and the cold sweat poured from his brow. Ah! at last! He kept his eyes steadily fixed upon the lantern till he had lighted it and it was burning up brightly. Then by an effort he lifted his eyes and looked round him.

And this is what he saw:

There, three or four paces from him, in the center of the chamber of death, sat, or rather lay, a figure of death. It reclined in a stone chest or coffin, like a man in a hip bath which is too small for him. The bony arms hung down on either side, the bony limbs jected toward him, the great white skull hung forward over the massive breast bone. It moved, too, of itself, and as it moved, the jaw bone tapped against the breast and the teeth clicked gently together.

Terror seized him while he looked, and, as George had done, he turned to fly. How could that thing move its head? The head ought to fall off.

Seizing the rope, he jerked it violently in the first effort of mounting.

"Hev he got yew, colonel?" sang out George, above; and the sound of a human voice brought him back to his senses.

"No," he answered, as boldly as he could; and then, setting his teeth, turned and tottered straight at the Horror in the chest.

And holding the lantern straight against the thing.

He was there now, and holding the lantern straight against the thing, examined it. It was a skeleton of enormous size, and the skull was fixed to the vertebra with rusty wire.

At this evidence of the handiwork of man his fears almost vanished. Even in that company he could not help remembering that it is scarcely to be supposed that spiritual skeletons carry about wire with which to tie on their skulls.

With a sigh of relief he held up the lantern and looked around. He was standing in a good sized vault or chamber built of rubble stone. Some of this rubble had fallen into his left; but otherwise, though the workmanship showed that it must be of extreme antiquity, the stone lining was still strong and good. He looked upon the floor, and then for the first time perceived that the nodding skeleton before him was not the only one. All round lay remnants of the mighty dead. There they were, stretched out in the form of a circle, of which the stone kist was the center. One place in the circle was vacant; evidently it had once been occupied by the giant frame which now sat within the kist. Next he looked at the kist itself. It had all the appearance of one of those rude stone chests in which the very ancient inhabitants of this island buried the ashes of their cremated dead. But if this was so, whence came the uncremated skeletons?

Perhaps a subsequent race or tribe had found the chamber ready prepared, and used it to bury some among them who had fallen in battle. It was impossible to say more especially as, with one exception, there was nothing buried with the skeletons which would assist to identify their race or age. That exception was a dog. A dog had been placed by one of the bodies. Evidently from the position of the bones of its master's arms, he had been left to his last sleep with his hand resting on his hound's head.

Bending down, Harold examined the seated skeleton more closely. It was, he discovered, accurately joined together with strong wire. Clearly this was the work of hands which were born into the world long after the flesh on those mighty bones had crumbled into dust.

But where was the treasure? He saw none. His heart sunk as the idea struck him that he had made an interesting archæological discovery, and that was all. Before undertaking a closer search, he returned to the hole and hallooed to George to come down, as there was nothing but some bones to frighten him.

This the worthy George was at length, with much difficulty, persuaded to do.

When at last he stood beside him in the vault, Harold explained to him what the place was and how ridiculous were his fears, without, however, succeeding in allaying them to any considerable extent.

And really when one considers the position, shut up as they were in the bowels of a place which had for centuries owned the reputation of being haunted, faced by a nodding skeleton of almost superhuman size, and surrounded by various other skeletons, all "very fine and large," with the most violent tempest that had visited the country for years sighing away outside, it is not wonderful that George was scared.

"Well," he said, his teeth chattering, "if this ain't the masterest one that iver I did see!" But here he stopped; language was not equal to the expression of his feelings.

Meanwhile Harold, with a heart full of anxiety, was turning the lantern this way and that, in the hope of discovering some traces of Sir James treasure, but naught could he see. There to the left the masonry was fallen in. He went to it, and pulled aside some of the stones. There was a cavity behind, apparently a passage, leading, no doubt, to the secret entrance to the vault, but he could see nothing in it. Once more he searched round. There was nothing. Unless the treasure was buried somewhere, or hidden away in the passage, it was non-existent, that was all.

And yet what was the meaning of that jointed skeleton sitting in the stone bath? It must have been put there for some purpose, probably to frighten would be plunderers away. Could he be sitting on the money? He rushed to the chest, and looked through the bony legs. No; his pelvis rested on the stone bottom of the kist.

"Well, George, it seems we're done," said Harold, with a ghastly attempt at a laugh. "There's no treasure here."

"May be it's underneath that there stone corn bin," suggested George, whose teeth were still chattering. "It should be here or hereabouts, surely."

This was an idea. Helping himself to the shoulder blade of some deceased hero, Harold, using it as a trowel, began to scoop away the soft sand upon which the stone chest stood. He scooped and scooped manfully, but he could not come to the bottom of the kist.

He stepped back and looked at it. It must be one of two things—either the hollow at the top was but a shallow cutting in a great block of stone, or the kist had a false bottom.

He literally sprung at it, and seizing the giant skeleton by the spine, jerked it out of the kist and dropped it in a bristling, bony heap on one side. Just as he did so there came a gust of wind so furious that, buried as they were in the earth, they literally felt the mound rock beneath it. Instantly it was followed by a frightful crash overhead.

George collapsed in terror, and for a moment Harold could not for the life of him think what had happened. He ran to the hole and looked up. Straight above him he could see the sky, in which the first cold lights of dawn were quivering. Mrs. Massey's summer house had been blown bodily away, and the "ancient British dwelling place" was once more, as it had been for centuries, open to the sky.

"The summer house has gone, George," he said. "Thank God that we were not in it, or we should have gone too!"

"Oh, Lord, sir!" groaned the unhappy George, "this is an awful business. It's like a judgment."

"It might have been if we had been up above instead of safe down here," he answered. "Come, bring that other lantern."

George roused himself, and together they bent over the now empty kist, and examined it closely.

The stone bottom was not of quite the same color as the walls of the kist, and there was a crack across it. Harold felt in his pocket and drew out his knife, which had at the back of it one of those strong iron hooks that are used to extract stones from the hoofs of horses. This hook he worked into the crack, and managed, before it broke, to pull up a fragment of stone. Then, looking round, he found among the rubbish, where the wall had fallen in, a long sharp flint. This he inserted in the hole, and they both levered away at it.

Half of the cracked stone came up a few inches, far enough to allow them to get their fingers underneath it. So it was a false bottom.

"Catch hold," gasped the colonel, "and pull for your life."

George did as he was bid; and setting their knees against the hollowed stone, they tugged till their muscles cracked.

"It's a-moving," said George. "Now, then, colonel!"

Next second they both found themselves on the flat of their backs. The stone had given with a run.

Up sprung the colonel like a kitten. The broken stone was standing edgeways in the kist. There was something soft beneath it.

"The light, George!" he said hoarsely.

Beneath the stone were some layers of rotten linen.

Was it a shroud, or what?

They pulled the linen out by handfuls. One! two! three!

Oh, great heaven!

There, under the linen, was row on row of shining gold coins set edgeways.

For a moment everything swam before Harold's eyes, and his heart stopped beating. As for George, he muttered something inaudible about its being a "master one," and collapsed.

With trembling fingers, Harold managed to pick out two pieces of gold which had been disturbed by the upheaval of the stone, and held them to the light. He was a skilled numismatologist, and had no difficulty in recognizing them. One was a beautiful three pound piece of Charles I, and the other a spur royal of James I.

That proved it. There was no doubt that this was the treasure hidden by Sir James de la Molle, and he it must have been also who had conceived the idea of putting a false bottom to the kist, and setting up the skeleton to frighten marauders from the treasure, if by any chance one should enter.

For a minute or two the men stood staring at each other over the great treasure which they had unearthed in that dread place, shaking with the reaction of their first excitement and scarcely able to speak.

"How deep do it go?" said George.

Harold got his knife and loosed some of the top coins, which were very tightly packed, till he could move his hand in them freely. Then he pulled out handful after handful of every sort of gold coin. There was a rose noble of Edward IV; double sovereigns of Henry VIII; triple sovereigns and gold crowns of Edward VI; double rials, rials and angels of Mary; rose royals, spur royals, angels, large sovereigns and laurels of James I; double rials and rials of Elizabeth; three pound pieces, broads and half broads of Charles I, some in greater quantity and some in less, but all were represented. Handful after handful did he pull out, and yet the bottom was not reached. At last he came to it. The layer of gold pieces was about thirty inches thick by three feet six long.

"We must get this into the house, George, before any one is about," gasped the colonel.

"Yes, sir, yes; but how be we a-going to carry it?"

Harold thought for a minute, and then acted thus: Bidding George stay in the vault with the treasure, which he was with difficulty persuaded to do, he climbed the improvised rope ladder, and got in safety through the hole. In his excitement he had forgotten about the summer house having being carried away by the gale, which was still blowing, though with not so much fury as before, and the wind swept desolation that met his view as he emerged into the dawning light broke upon him with a shock. The summer house was clean gone; nothing but a few uprights remained of it; and fifty yards away he thought he could make out the crumpled up shape of the roof. Nor was that all. Quite a quarter of the great oaks which were the glory of the place were down, or splintered and ruined. But what did he care for the summer house or the oaks now? Forgetting his exhaustion, he ran down the slope and reached the house, which he entered as softly as he could by the side door. Nobody was about yet, or would be for another hour. It was Christmas day and not a pleasant morning to get up on, so the servants would be sure to lie abed. On his way to his bedroom he peeped into the dining room, where he had fallen asleep on the previous evening. When he had woke up, it may be remembered, he lighted a candle. This candle was now flaring itself to death, for he had forgotten to extinguish it, and by its side lay the paper from which he had made the great discovery. There was nothing in it, of course, but somehow the sight impressed him very much. It seemed months since he awoke to find the lamp gone out. How much may happen between the lighting of a candle and its burning away! Smiling at this trite reflection, he blew that light out and taking another went to his room. Here he found a stout hand bag, with which he made haste to return to the mount.

"Are you all right, George?" he shouted down the hole.

"Well, colonel, yes; but not sorry to see you back. It's lonesome down here with these deaders."

"Very well. Look out! There's a bag. Put as much gold in it as you can lift comfortably, and then make it fast to the rope."

Some three minutes passed, and then George announced that the bagful of gold was ready. Harold hauled away, and with a considerable effort brought it to the surface. Then, getting the bag on to his shoulder, he staggered off with it to the house. In his room stood a massive seagoing chest, the companion of his many wanderings. It was about half full of uniforms and old clothes, which he bundled unceremoniously on to the floor. This done, he shot the bagful of shining gold, as bright and uncorrupted now as when it was packed away two and a half centuries ago, into the chest, and returned for another load.

Twenty times did he make this journey. At the tenth something happened.

"Here's a writing, sir, with this lot," shouted George. "It was packed a way in the money."

He took the "writing," or rather parchment, out of the mouth of the bag and put it in his pocket unread.

At last the store, enormous as it was, was exhausted.

"That's the lot, sir," shouted George, as he sent up the twentieth bagful. "If you'll kindly let down that there rope, I'll come up, too."

"All right," said the colonel; "put the skeleton back first."

"Well, sir," answered George, "he looks wonderful comfortable where he lay, he do, so if you're agreeable I think I'll let him be."

Harold chuckled, and presently George arrived, covered with filth and perspiration.

"Well, sir," he said, "I never did think that I should get dead tired of handling gold coins; but it's a rum world, and that's a fact. Well, I niver, and the summer house gone, and jist look at thim there oaks! Well, if that bean't a master one!"

"You never saw a masterer, that's what you were going to say, wasn't it? Well, and take one thing with another, nor did I, George, if that's any comfort to you. Now look here, just cover over this hole with some boards and earth, and then come in and get some breakfast. It's 8 o'clock and past, and the gale is blowing itself out. A merry Christmas to you, George!" and he held out his hand, covered with cuts and grime and blood.

George shook it. "Same to you, colonel, I'm sure. And a merry Christmas it is. God bless you, sir, for what you've done to-night! You've saved the old place from that banker chap, that's what you've done; and you'll have Miss Ida, and I'm durned glad on it, that I am. Lord! won't this make the squire open his eyes!" and the honest fellow brushed away a tear and fairly capered with joy, his red night cap waving on the breeze.

It was a strange and beautiful sight to see the solemn George capering thus in the midst of that windy desolation.

Harold was too moved to answer, so he shouldered his last load of treasure and limped off with it to the house. Mrs. Johnson and her talkative niece were up now, but they did not happen to see him, and he reached his room in safety. He poured the last bagful of gold into the chest, and smoothed it down. It filled it to the brim. He shut the chest and locked it, and then, as he was, covered with filth and grime, bruised and bleeding, and his hair flying wildly about his face, he sat down upon it, and from his heart thanked heaven for the wonderful thing that had happened to him.

So exhausted was he that he nearly fell asleep as he sat; but remembering himself, he rose, and taking the parchment from his pocket, he cut the faded silk with which it was tied, and opened it.

On it was a short inscription in the same crabbed writing which he had seen in the old Bible that Ida had found.

It ran as follows:

"Seeing that the times be so troublous that no man can be sure of his own, I, Sir James de la Molle, have brought together all my substance in money from wheresoever it lay at interest, and have hid the same in this sepulcher, to which I found the entry by a chance, till such time as peace come back to this unhappy England. This have I done on Christmas day, in the year of our Lord 1643, having completed the hiding of the gold while the great gale was blowing.

"JAMES DE LA MOLLE."

Thus on a long gone Christmas day, in the hour of a great wind, was the gold hid, and now, on this Christmas day, when another great wind raged overhead, was it found once more, just in time to save a daughter of the house of De la Molle from a fate as bad as death.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

THE MAYFLOWER.

Interesting Facts Concerning the Vessel That Landed the Pilgrims.

A new training brig has recently been launched at the Pembroke dockyard in England. This latest comer in the English navy has been christened Mayflower, the last of a long line of vessels of that name. This has brought out the interesting and little known fact that the Pilgrims' Mayflower of 1620 was at one time an English war ship. The name is one of the oldest ship names in the English navy, going back to 1415, when a vessel with that name carried some of the knights who fought at Agincourt across the channel. Her successor—the Mayflower of 1447—was the flagship of Richard, Duke of Gloucester. But the Mayflower of 1620 was an old Armada veteran long before she came across the Atlantic, and took a prominent part in that historic sea fight in 1588, fighting alongside of Drake's Revenge and Hawkin's Victory. In the fight off Gravelines, when the Armada made a last desperate attempt to save itself from utter rout, the Mayflower's part was a prominent one. According to a recent writer in the London Graphic, the ship was one of the chief ones contributed to Queen Elizabeth's fleet by the merchants of the city of London, but Goodwin's Pilgrim Republic states that the officials of Lynn offered the Mayflower (150 tons) to join the fleet against the dreaded Spanish Armada. The Graphic erroneously implies that the Mayflower ended her days ingloriously in the slave trade between Guinea and America. Goodwin, in reference to this rumor, says that the slaver Mayflower was a ship of 350 tons, while the Pilgrim vessel was only 150. The latter came to Salem in 1629, and the last known of her was when she was one of a fleet that landed John Winthrop and his colonists at Charlestown in 1630.

Victoria as Godmother.

The queen does not shrink from incurring spiritual responsibility. She is, at her own wish, to be godmother to the infant daughter of the Duke and Duchess of Portland. It would be interesting to have a list of the children on whose behalf the sovereign has stood sponsor, and who, in consequence, are fitly named Victoria. It is said that in this case the desire was signified because of the report which was current at the time of the duke's marriage that he was not in favor at court.—London Figaro.

Husband (alarmed)—Emily, there seems to be smoke coming up through the floor. Run and tell the lady on the flat below. Something's afire in her suite. Quick! Quick!

Wife (cold and stately)—Cyrus, I'll never do it in the world. We've lived three months in this flat and she has never called on me.—From the French in Chatter.

A Man of Power.

"So your daughter Jennie is married?"

"Yes."

"Married well?"

"She married a man of power and influence."

"Indeed! Statesman, banker, politician, general or government official?"

"Neither; she married the janitor of a flat."—Boston Courier.

A Sufferer Relieved After Doctoring for Ten Years—Facts Convince the Public.

March 8, 1890.

Manufacturers of the Great Sierra Kidney and Liver Cure:

GENTLEMEN.—The gratitude I feel towards you I cannot express in these few words. I have been troubled in the past ten years with kidney disorders. I did not know in that time what it was to enjoy a full night's rest. I started in to try your great Sierra Kidney and Liver Cure. I have given it a fair trial, my rest has returned, I am much improved in every way. Your remedy is just as you represent it, a delightful and effective one.

Very truly yours,
C. H. MORTON,
Carpenter & Builder, 616 California St., San Francisco, Cal.

"What a courteous gentleman Colonel Bowler is. Where did he learn such affable manners?" "He once ran for an office."

SELECT PULLMAN TOURIST EXCURSION—N. E. A. EXCURSION.

This grand excursion to St. Paul leaves San Francisco July 1st, via Shasta route and Northern Pacific Railroad, in Pullman tourist cars, completely furnished. Tourist rates, San Francisco to St. Paul, $42.00. Round trip six months' first-class tickets, with choice of routes, on return, $65. This excursion will be under the personal supervision of Mr. Charles H. Murphy, County Superintendent of Schools, Visalia.

For descriptive circular and illustrated literature of the route apply to T. K. Stateler, 618 Market street.

It Was George—Wife (from window, 3 A. M.)—Is that you, George? Husband (on front stoop)—Yes; who did you expect?

AN ELEGANT PACKAGE OF FINE CARDS.

Including 15 rare novelties, shapes and artistic imported oleographic and chromatic cards. This large and beautiful collection sent by mail to anyone who will do this:—Buy a box of the genuine Dr. C. McLane's Celebrated Liver Pills from any druggist, price 25 cents, and mail us the outside wrapper with your address, plainly written and 4 cents in stamps. The genuine McLane's Pills are prepared only by Fleming Bros., Pittsburg, Pa., and have been in constant use for over sixty years. They are superior to all others in purity and effectiveness. A certain cure for indigestion and sick headache. Address, Fleming Bros., Pittsburg, Pa.

"That's a great picture of yours, Pigment. It's way up." "Yes, they've hung it a little too far up, I think."

HIS LUCK CAME WITH HIM.

A Man to whom Sacramento was a Mascot.

The luckiest man that has struck this part of the country in many a day is W. H. Prinz, Superintendent and Architect for the Saladin Pneumatic Malting Company of Chicago, who came to Sacramento to superintend the construction of the large malt house for the $500,000 brewery just completed here by the Buffalo Brewing Company. His home is at Peoria, Illinois, and before leaving there he bought a coupon ticket in the Louisiana State Lottery for the drawing to take place on April 17th. After his arrival here, he was so busily engaged that he almost forgot that he possessed the ticket and the fact might have escaped his mind entirely had he not observed the official list of the drawing one evening while perusing The Bee.

"I glanced down the column of figures," said Mr. Prinz to a Bee reporter yesterday, "and I saw that ticket 27,931 had won the second capital prize of $10,000. Somehow the figures looked familiar, and then I thought about the one dollar coupon I had bought away back in Peoria. I dug it up from my pocket book and found that I had won $5,000—one twentieth of the second capital prize. I sent my ticket to New Orleans by Wells Fargo's Express, the money arrived in a few days and I have it in a bank. I have sent for my wife and two children, they will arrive here next week, and will visit California at the Lottery Company's expense. From here I go to Tacoma, and after I get through there I think I will take a trip to Europe.

Mr. Prinz is a good-natured and good-looking German, and has the appearance of a man accustomed to favoring smiles from Dame Fortune. On the day before the May Drawing, a workman at the Brewery displayed a Louisiana State Lottery coupon. "I will give you $2 for it," said Prinz. The workman jumped at the chance to double his money, and the coupon won $25.

Mr. Prinz gets a salary of $40 per day, whether he is working or traveling—and all things considered, he seems to be doing fairly well in this country.—Sacramento (Cal.) Bee, May 15.

"Now, then," inquires a Canadian paper, "what is a crank?" Why, the other fellow, of course.

SELF PRAISE.

Self praise is no recommendation, but there are times when one must permit a person to tell the truth about himself. When what he says is supported by the testimony of others, no reasonable man will doubt his word. Now, to say that ALLCOCK'S POROUS PLASTERS are the only genuine and reliable porous plasters made is not self-praise in the slightest degree. They have stood the test for over thirty years, and in proof of their merits it is only necessary to call attention to the cures they have effected and to the voluntary testimonials of those who have used them. Beware of imitations and do not be deceived by misrepresentation. Ask for ALLCOCK'S, and let no solicitation or explanation induce you to accept a substitute. ALLCOCK'S CORN AND BUNION SHIELDS effect quick and certain relief.

Never allude to a dressmaker as Miss Sew and-sew.

Beware of imitations of the genuine Seal of North Carolina Plug Cut Tobacco.

Creates An Appetite

There is nothing for which we recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla with greater confidence than for loss of appetite, indigestion, sick headache and other troubles of dyspeptic nature. In the most natural way this medicine gently tones the stomach, assists digestion, and makes one feel "real hungry." Ladies in delicate health, or very dainty and particular at meals, after taking Hood's Sarsaparilla a few days, find themselves longing for and eating the plainest food with unexpected relish and satisfaction. Try it.

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar.

Very Acetic—Squeers—How sourly Miss Pert look'd on me when she said good-bye just now! Nickleby—Yes; it was the very cream of ta-ta.

Six Novels Free, will be sent by Cragin & Co., Philada., Pa., to any one in the U. S. or Canada, postage paid, upon receipt of 25 Dobbins' Electric Soap wrappers. See list of novels on circulars around each bar. Soap for sale by all grocers.

When dentists go into partnership they ought to pull together.

SOUND BUSINESS PRINCIPLES.

The PACIFIC BANK, of San Francisco, has always adhered to solid business principles, and strictly avoid all speculation. The PACIFIC BANK is a striking example, and is foremost among the banks of this coast in stability, resources and popularity, and has often been called the model Bank of the coast.

It remains to be seen whether Mr. Randall's success is to be Vaux populi or Vaux et praeterea nihil.

A HAUNTED HOUSE.

This body of ours has been likened to a tenement. It often has a haunted apartment—the stomach. Scared by the eldrich sprite, dyspepsia, digestion flies and refuses to return. What can break the spell, what can raise the ban laid upon the unhappy organs? We answer unhesitatingly, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, and we are warranted in the response by the recorded testimony of myriads, covering a period of over a third of a century. A course of the Bitters, begun in any stage of the affliction, and persistently followed, will terminate in cure positive, not partial. The Bitters restores tone to the epigastric nerve, renews and purifies the juices exuding from the cellular tissue that act upon the food digestively, expels bile from the stomach and the blood, and promotes a regular habit of body. Malaria, kidney complaint, nervousness, rheumatism and neuralgia give way to this medicine.

Charles—What did you think of the sermon? Sanders (who often sleeps in church)—It sounded like a dream.

CURE FOR COUGH OR COLD.—As soon as there is the slightest uneasiness of the chest, with difficulty of breathing, or indication of Cough, take during the day a few "Brown's Bronchial Troches." 25 cts. a box.

Man of the House (to the peddler)—Get out of here or I'll whistle for the dog. Peddler—Vell, now, but vouldn't you like to buy a nice vistle?

Physicians recommend "Tansill's Punch."

"She is very plain, isn't she?" "Yes," said the Boston woman; "she's the most obvious person in the room."

SURE CURE FOR PILES.

Sure cure for blind, bleeding and itching Piles. One box has cured the worst cases of ten years' standing. No one need suffer ten minutes after using Kirk's German Pile Ointment. It absorbs tumors, allays the itching, acts as a poultice, gives relief. Dr. Kirk's German Pile Ointment is prepared only for Piles and itching of the private parts, and nothing else. Every box is warranted.

Sold by druggists and sent by mail on receipt of price, $1.00 per box. J. J. Mack & Co., Wholesale Agents, San Francisco.

When in San Francisco stop at Straub's Restaurant and Saloon, 327 and 329 Bush Street. Best to eat and drink. No fancy prices.

Try Germea for Breakfast.

ST. JACOBS OIL

CURES PERMANENTLY

SPRAINS and STRAINS.

Athletes Praise it Highly.

656 Minna St., San Francisco, Cal., May 3, 1887.

Some time ago, while a member of the Olympic Athletic Club, I sprained my knee severely and suffered agony, but was speedily and completely cured by St. Jacobs Oil.

JOHN GARBUTT.

Jumped from Engine.

609 S. 17th St., Omaha, Neb., Sept. 22, 1888.

I jumped from an engine in collision, and strained my ankle very badly. I used canes for weeks. St. Jacobs Oil completely cured me.

G. ROEDER.

AT DRUGGISTS AND DEALERS.

THE CHARLES A. VOGELER CO., Baltimore, Md.

To cure Biliousness, Sick Headache, Constipation, Malaria, Liver Complaints, take the safe and certain remedy, SMITH'S

BILE BEANS

Use the SMALL SIZE (40 little beans to the bottle). They are the most convenient; suit all ages. Price of either size, 25 cents per bottle.

KISSING at 7, 17, 70: Photo-gravure, panel size of this picture for 4 cents (coppers or stamps).

J. F. SMITH & CO.,
Makers of "Bile Beans," St. Louis, Mo.

MONEY

Can be made easy by raising Chickens. A large 32 page Illustrated Catalogue describing Incubators, Brooders, Brooding Houses, How and What to Feed, How long to keep them in the Brooder, Drinking Fountains, Diseases and their Cure, in fact more information than is given in many 25-cent books. Sent to any address on receipt of 25c. stamp. Wire Netting, Bone Mills, Bone Meal and all kinds of Poultry Supplies.

Address,

Petaluma Incubator Co., Petaluma, Cal.

PATENTS obtained. Fees moderate. Information and advice FREE. J. R. LITTELL, Opp. Patent Office, Washington, D.C. (Mention this paper.)

$75.00 to $250.00 A MONTH can be made working for us. Persons preferred who can furnish a horse and give their whole time to the business. Spare moments may be profitably employed also. A few vacancies in towns and cities. B. F. JOHNSON & CO., 1009 Main St., Richmond, Va.

10,000 AGENTS WANTED AT ONCE

To sell the complete history of the murder of Dr. CRONIN. Giving a full and complete account of the conspiracy, murder, discovery of the body, arrests, coroner's inquest, the trial and verdict. The book contains over 100 illustrations. One large 12 mo. volume of about 500 pages, price only $1.50. OUTFITS NOW READY. Send, at once, 75 cents for an outfit; first come, first served. This is the chance of your life-time; big commissions. Address, LAIRD & LEE, Publishers, 203-205 Jackson Street, Chicago, Ill.

BEZELTON BROS., HEMME & LONG PIANOS

Sold on Easy Installments. Also dealer in Sheet Music and Musical Merchandise. CHAS. S. EATON, General Agent, 735 Market St., S. F., Cal. Send for Catalogues of Pianos and Sheet Music.

CHICHESTER'S ENGLISH

PENNYROYAL PILLS

RED CROSS DIAMOND BRAND.

Ladies, ask Druggist for Diamond Brand, in red, metallic boxes, sealed with blue ribbon. Take no other. All pills in pasteboard boxes, pink wrappers, are dangerous counterfeits. Send 4c. in stamps for particulars, testimonials and "Relief for Ladies," in letter by return mail. Name Paper. Chichester Chem'l Co., Madison Sq., Phila., Pa.

BEECHAM'S PILLS

PAINLESS. EFFECTUAL. WORTH A GUINEA A BOX.

For BILIOUS & NERVOUS DISORDERS

Such as Wind and Pain in the Stomach, Fullness and Swelling after Meals, Dizziness, and Drowsiness, Cold Chills, Flushings of Heat, Loss of Appetite, Shortness of Breath, Costiveness, Scurvy, Blotches on the Skin, Disturbed Sleep, Frightful Dreams, and all Nervous and Trembling Sensations, &c.

THE FIRST DOSE WILL GIVE RELIEF IN TWENTY MINUTES.

BEECHAM'S PILLS TAKEN AS DIRECTED RESTORE FEMALES TO COMPLETE HEALTH.

For Sick Headache, Weak Stomach, Impaired Digestion, Constipation, Disordered Liver, etc.,

they ACT LIKE MAGIC, Strengthening the muscular System, restoring long-lost Complexion, bringing back the keen edge of appetite, and arousing with the ROSEBUD OF HEALTH the whole physical energy of the human frame. One of the best guarantees to the Nervous and Debilitated is that BEECHAM'S PILLS HAVE THE LARGEST SALE OF ANY PROPRIETARY MEDICINE IN THE WORLD.

Prepared only by THOS. BEECHAM, St. Helens, Lancashire, England. Sold by Druggists generally. B. F. ALLEN CO., 365 and 367 Canal St., New York, Sole Agents for the United States, who (if your druggist does not keep them) WILL MAIL BEECHAM'S PILLS on RECEIPT of PRICE, 25cts. A BOX. (MENTION THIS PAPER.)

HUMORS of the BLOOD & SKIN Cured by Cuticura

HUMORS OF THE BLOOD, SKIN, AND Scalp, whether itching, burning, bleeding, scaly, crusted, pimply, blotchy, or copper-colored, with loss of hair, either simple, scrofulous, hereditary, or contagious, are speedily, permanently economically, and infallibly cured by the CUTICURA REMEDIES, consisting of CUTICURA, the great Skin Cure, CUTICURA SOAP, an exquisite Skin Purifier and Beautifier, and CUTICURA RESOLVENT, the new Blood Purifier and greatest of Humor Remedies, when the best physicians and all other remedies fail. This is strong language, but true. CUTICURA REMEDIES are the only infallible blood purifiers. Sold everywhere. Price, CUTICURA, 50c.; SOAP, 25c.; RESOLVENT, $1. Prepared by Potter Drug and Chemical Corporation, Boston. Send for "How to Cure Skin Diseases."

Pimples, blackheads, chapped and oily skin prevented by CUTICURA SOAP.

Backache, kidney pains, weakness, and rheumatism relieved in one minute by the CUTICURA ANTI-PAIN PLASTER. 25c.

TO LIVE LONG.

How to Prolong Life After Middle Age. Views of an Eminent London Physician, Whose Specialty is Diseases of the Aged.

John Gardner, M. D., is a London Physician who makes a specialty of the treatment of diseases of elderly persons. In a recent book upon this subject, Dr. Gardner says:

"A healthy and vigorous state of every part and every organ is essential to the health and well being of the whole system 'To grow old gracefully,' is not the common lot of all. With advancing years come increased infirmities they are by no means inevitable, and their presence is due to the failure to keep up to their work the various organs of the body. The study of the body by scientists furnishes unquestionable evidence that the duration of human life may be prolonged to a hundred years."

Why, then, do so few live to that age; and why after middle life—and often before—is there so much suffering from nervousness, rheumatism, feebleness, lack of appetite, sleeplessness, and debility? Because long life or overwork has weakened the nervous system. Rev. T. Williston, the famous author of "Christ's Millenial Reign," when eighty four years old, suffered with indigestion and rheumatic affections. His attention was called fortunately to Paine's Celery Compound. A free use of that great medicine for the nerves cured him, and made a great improvement in his general health.

This grand discovery is an unequaled medicine for the aged. It produces life and energy and is a marvelous preserver of the fire and vigor of youth. There is nothing like it for strengthening the nerves, and curing the diseases to which old folks are specially subject. It is truly called invaluable by those who have made a special study of diseases of elderly people.

It is more highly refined than any Salt. All harmful ingredients found in most Salt are removed; therefore it is the safest to use.

It is free from lime and pan scales, requires no sifting. It is the strongest and altogether the most economical.

It dissolves very easily, therefore does not spoil butter by the gritty particles as often happens with other Salt.

Common Salt is too risky for anybody to use in making Butter. The poorest families use so little Salt on their table that they can afford to get that which is the most healthy and the best.

HOLMES' EXTRA SIFTED SALT is used by the best dairymen in California, and has never failed to please better than any other brand whenever tried.

Packed in 280, 100 and 50 pound Pure Linen Bags; also in 5 pound Cotton Bags and Cartons.

Insist on having this brand from your grocer.

C. E. WHITNEY & CO.,
Pacific Coast Agents, 101 and 103 California St., San Francisco.

OF CORSETS TRUE

That we have secured the biggest consignment of Corsets ever offered by any store on the Coast—from one of the largest factories in the world, and one of the most popular. To further introduce their merits everywhere they make no special terms. We offer, by mail, postage paid a regular $.5 Corset for $1.06; a $12 Corset for 82 cents; a good serviceable Corset 55 cents; a regular $1 25 Ladies' Vest, 78 cents; above are sizes 18 to 30, colors drab, grey or ecru. Misses' 75 cent Waists, 18 to 26, for 55 cents. The reason for this is the makers believe you will always use this Corset if you try one. In Working, Driving or Sunday Gloves for men we lead all others. Have closed out an entire factory at 60 cents on the dollar, and offer them from 33 cents up. Every kind and price; tell what work you do, give size and price, and we guarantee to suit. Mailed free. Address Smith's Cash Store, 418 Front St., San Francisco, Cal.

I CURE FITS!

When I say cure I do not mean merely to stop them for a time and then have them return again. I mean a radical cure. I have made the disease of FITS, EPILEPSY or FALLING SICKNESS a life-long study. I warrant my remedy to cure the worst cases. Because others have failed is no reason for not now receiving a cure. Send at once for a treatise and a Free Bottle of my infallible remedy. Give Express and Post Office. H. G. ROOT, M. C., 183 Pearl St. New York.

BIG G. Cures in 1 TO 5 DAYS. Guaranteed not to cause Stricture. Prepared only by the Evans Chemical Co. Cincinnati, Ohio. Trade Mark. I prescribe and fully endorse Big G as the only specific for the certain cure of this disease. G. H. INGRAHAM, M. D., Amsterdam, N. Y. We have sold Big G for many years, and it has given the best of satisfaction. D. R. DYCHE & CO., Chicago, Ill. $1.00. Sold by Druggists.

The Oldest Medicine in the World is probably

DR. ISAAC THOMPSON'S CELEBRATED EYE-WATER.

This article is a carefully prepared physician's prescription, and has been in constant use for nearly a century. There are few diseases to which mankind are subject more distressing than sore eyes, and none, perhaps, for which more remedies have been tried without success. For all external inflammation of the eyes it is an infallible remedy. If the directions are followed it will never fail. We particularly invite the attention of physicians to its merits. For sale by all druggists. JOHN L. THOMPSON, SONS & CO., TROY, N. Y. Established 1797.

YOU ARE,

PERHAPS, SUFFERING from NERVOUS WASTE or a weakness caused by bad practices when a boy or young man; or some Private Disease, Kidney or Bladder Trouble. If so consult us at once. Be warned in time. The above diseases, WHEN NEGLECTED, or treated by an unskillful person, often cause more terrible diseases still, which frequently destroy life itself. Free advice; no publicity. Call or address DRS. B. & B., Ex-Army Surgeons and Specialists, 523 KEARNY ST., S. F. Patients Cured at Home.

PALMER & REY,

—DEALERS IN—

Printing Material, Printing Presses, Bookbinders' Supplies, Patent Outsides, &c.

405-407 SANSOME ST., SAN FRANCISCO.

DOBBINS' ELECTRIC SOAP

The Best Family Soap in the World.

Dobbins' Electric Soap is cheaper for you to use, if you follow directions, than any other soaps would be if given to you, for by its use clothes are saved. Clothes cost more than soap.

Don't you want to save money, clothes, time, labor, fuel, and health? All these can be saved if you will try Dobbins' Electric Soap. We say "try," knowing if you try it once, you will always use it." Have

INYO INDEPENDENT.

COUNTY OFFICIAL PAPER.

C. MULHOLLAND, - - - Proprietor.

Independence, Cal.,

FRIDAY, - - - JULY 25, 1890.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

VOL. XXII. NO. 7. INDEPENDENCE, INYO CO., CAL., JULY 25, 1890. WHOLE NO. 1030.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

COUNTY OFFICIAL PAPER.

C. MULHOLLAND, - - - Proprietor.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One Year (post paid) $2 00
Six Months 1 25
Three Months 1 00
One Month 50
Single Copies 10

SONNET.

I saw her once, once only, long ago;
Yet now she often comes to me by night
Known by the hair, so silken soft and bright,
That veils warm cheeks where crimson roses throw
A tender flush o'er pallid lily snow.
She speaks not; only her golden head is light
Above my heart, that throbs with wild delight—
Dreaming she takes the love she cannot know.

Dear distant love, doth some sweet spirit voice
Breathe in thine ear, when slumber is most deep,
All I were fain to tell if we should meet?
And dost thou come, because the world is sweet,
By shadowy paths we tread not save in sleep,
To bid me trust the future and rejoice?

—Chambers' Journal.

ROBBERS' ROAD.

Way back, some thirty years agone, when our Golden state was in a condition of lawlessness that has made it the scene of many a romance; in fact, in that epoch of California's history which corresponds closely with the Middle Age period in the history of the world, there was a stage route of some extent crossing an inland county, which had gained for itself the title of the "Robbers' Road." Like many another good old name and landmark, its appalling title has passed through a degenerative process, and now its origin lives only in the memory of a few white haired old pioneers, the remnants of the brave and doughty settlers, who cleave with the tenacity of despair to the tales of yore.

Important business complications necessitated my undertaking a journey through this portion of the state, where the depredations of highwaymen resembled the sudden swoop of feudal barons on itinerant hucksters and pilgrims, and where a heavy purse changed hands with the celerity with which the handkerchief of a puzzled spectator passes from his own pocket into that of the performing prestidigitator.

Though far from a coward, and inured to danger, as was any one who had made the perilous trip over mountain, plain and desert from east to west, I confess that it was with anything but pleasurable anticipations that I took my seat in the vehicle that carried the occasional mail.

I will digress here to say that my general habits are abstemious, while as to tobacco in particular—with the sole exception of the circumstance soon to be related—it has never in any form passed my lips; but I have found it by no means subversive of success with men to have always on hand a small supply of the article which constitutes the nectar and ambrosia of so many, and on this occasion, as on many others before and since, I had with me a pocket case of cigars and a large piece of what is called by the initiated, I believe, "navy plug," an article used for masticatory purposes, and recommended by its strength to the strongest palates. The position of the latter in my right hand lower waistcoat pocket is sufficiently important to the sequence of the narrative to warrant my particularity in asserting its exact location.

My only fellow traveler was a lady, to whom I had the felicity of an introduction previous to our departure, though the close proximity occasioned by the roughness of the road would have made that an entirely unnecessary formality. Truth compels me to state that she was neither young, pretty nor otherwise interesting (alas for the lovers of romance) and as I know that the good lady is now where no encomiums or their reverse could possibly affect her, I say this the more unrestrainedly.

To beguile the tedium of our journey, and for want of a better subject of conversation, I devoted my energies to blood curdling tales of bandits and highway outrages, partly true, but largely evolved from a fertile imagination, and told of "Three Fingered Jack" and "Bottle Nosed Billy," of their cruelty and cunning, and skillfully interlarded my stories with dark innuendoes and insinuations of our own peril.

I told how revolvers had been used as effective coercive agents in a variety of instances, and always as sufficiently "good considerations" in the transfer of property; how their horses outstripped the wind, and permitted them to take part in the stoppage of mail coaches miles apart; how their suspicion and greed prompted useless outrages; in a word, I succeeded in filling the wretched woman with the direst of forebodings, that worked her up to a pitch of terror that knew no bounds, and from thence on every shadow concealed for her some frightful shape, whose sole aim and object, she was firmly convinced, was her destruction, and these fears, try as I would, I was now unable to allay. Meanwhile our coach sped onward as rapidly as the nature of the road would allow, and we were soon plunged in entire darkness.

The only really valuable thing on my covoyager's person was a ring of brilliants of remarkable luster and purity, which would in itself have proved no mean prize to so particular a connoisseur in precious stones as Red Mike (for this was the euphonious appellation assumed by the chief unlicensed tax collector of those parts) was known to be—more particularly as it was darkly hinted that a well known San Francisco jeweler depended largely on this source for his supply of cut but unset jewels.

This ring Mrs. R—— wore beneath her woolen gloves, but, affected by my tales of murder and robbery, the thing assumed in her eyes the shape of something that would goad men on to the commission of atrocities more dreadful even than those I had pictured.

Where to conceal the treasure she knew not; first she tried her boot, but she called to mind my story of the party who had been hung up by the heels, and so considered that too insecure a hiding place; her pocket was equally unsatisfactory, though I believe that to the average man the mystery of the exact location of a woman's pocket is one no ages will reveal. At last, impelled thereto by the failure of all other means of concealment, she begged that I would find some method of preserving it, not so much on account of its intrinsic value and the fear of losing it, as lest tempted thereby our momentarily expected visitants might prosecute a too diligent search for further plunder, and finding nothing, revenge themselves on us for their disappointment. I verily believe that the idea of tossing it out of the stage window passed through her mind.

She had but just passed the ring to my hand, and I had involuntarily put my fingers with it into my right lower waistcoat pocket, when the ominous "Halt!" and that unmistakable steely "click click" of weapons sounded in our ears.

I suppose it must have been the fact of my fingers coming in contact with the tobacco in my pocket that begat within me the inspiration to convey to my mouth the ring and plug together, and bite from the latter a piece large enough to satisfy the most quid-loving of sailors. This I instantly began to masticate after the approved fashion of a backwoods justice, my cheek standing out as if affected with an acute attack of the mumps.

Both doors of our conveyance were opened simultaneously, and the lady shrieked amain as revolvers covered us on each side, and we were required to descend. But very few words passed.

Our assailants were four in number, not bad looking fellows on the whole, and while one kept his "gun" in too close proximity to my head for comfort, another ransacked my pockets and relieved me of the few valuables I carried. The same process would have been gone through with in the case of their other victim had her pockets been findable. As it was, she yielded up her pocketbook, ear rings and personal baggage with the docility of a tamed Katherine obeying the orders of her Petruchio. All the while I was expectorating with the vehemence of an engine vomiting forth smoke, but such a habit was too common in those parts to attract attention, and my cigars and tobacco had with the rest of my belongings already found their way into the possession of our warrantless searchers.

Perceiving that such documents as I carried were wholly valueless to them, and satisfying themselves that I carried no negotiable paper, they handed me back a cigar with an earnest admonition to forsake the tobacco habit (O, irony of fate!), and with the most courteous of apologies to the lady for the inconvenience they had been obliged to inflict, mounted and galloped off, leaving us not much poorer then they found us.

On regaining the stage, the feelings that had begun to creep over me during the search finally prevailed and overpowered me, and carefully conveying from my mouth to my pocket the filthy mass that concealed a jewel more precious than that supposed to be incased in the head of the fabled toad, I leaned my head far out of the window of the vehicle, now again on its journey, and regardless of everything, gave free vent to my pent up misery. Ye gods, how sick I was! My head seemed to be the crater of a volcano, and my stomach was the horrid interior which seethed and raged with a fury indescribable.

The rest of our way was pursued in quiet, but to this day I suffer at intervals and in fancy only, but with a wonderfully natural vividness and poignancy, the agony and wretchedness of those few moments.

That constituted the only heroic deed of my life, and I am proud of it; yet I have since vowed that no tortures a highwayman could inflict could ever equal those occasioned by my first and only chew.—N. H. Castle in Overland Monthly.

Those Were Great Days.

An old time showman stood at the corner of Clark and Madison streets yesterday afternoon and gazed pensively at the big building across the way. To a friend who stopped and asked what he was looking at he said: "I used to run shows over where that building stands. It was a quarter of a century ago, too, and I can hardly realize the great change in such a comparatively short time. Old Trinity church, with its old fashioned porch and big pillars, used to stand ther Our first show was 'Solomon's Temple a model of that structure and its surroundings. During the war the old church was used as a barracks for the soldiers arriving and departing, and then we gave a wax works show of 'The Last Supper' and of John Brown and the conspirators. My partner and I were a little shabby at the time, having been in hard luck, and every morning we used to dress up in the clothes worn by Brown and the conspirators. At night we would dress up in the dummies for the show. John Brown used to get a different coat and vest every night, as we never remembered whose clothes we were wearing. Ah, those were great days!"—Chicago Herald.

Where Cow Bells are Made.

Collinsville, Ills., is a great place for cattle bells. That cow bells are made and do not grow on trees or elsewhere seems to surprise some people, but there are four establishments in the United States which are exclusively devoted to manufacture of that article, and two of these are in Collinsville. One hundred and fifty dozen are turned out daily and thousands of them dangle from the necks of unfortunate cows all over the prairies of North and South America. The manufacture of cow bells is entirely distinct from that of other bells. Instead of being molded the metal is rolled into sheets, cut into symmetrical polygons, which when folded are pressed into their well known form. Having been riveted they are next packed in clay and brought to a white heat. When suddenly cooled these steel bells are found to be not only tempered but also beautifully brazed.—St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

Studying Nature.

"Ouida's" first work was sold for $250, and Mr. Tinsley says she was glad to get as much. He adds that how she obtained her close acquaintance with the manners and customs of those languid heroes, whose manners belong to the mess room, was by inviting young officers to her mother's house to dine and smoke. She would entreat them to "carry on" just as if no ladies were present, and while they took full advantage of her permission she noted their peculiarities for literary use in the future.—San Francisco Argonaut.

"R, THERE!"

Reuben Radway's Refined Romance Respecting Rhoda Remington.

Reuben Radway reared roses, red radishes, rutabagas, raspberries, rue, rosemary, rhododendrons, raised rustic racks round rural retreats.

Rhoda Remington raveled rugs, ripped roundabouts, rolled rags, read romances runic rhymes; rambled round rugged ruins.

Rhoda's respectable relatives rented Reuben's rear rooms, rare, retired, restful, refined retreat! Radiant red roses, ravishing radishes ran riot, royal ranunculas rustled ragged robbins reared rebelliously, reeds rattans, running rareripes reveled.

Recent rains rendered Reuben restless, rutabagas rotted, red radishes rusted, Reuben's ruler reduced Reuben's rates. Reuben rebelled, resisted roughly, resented rudely, resigned.

Remembering Rhoda's ragged rugs, Reuben reckoned raveling rugs repaid.

Relentless rains roared, railroads rumbled, ruin rioted ravenously, reductions resulted.

Rhoda, rarely raveling rugs, rashly ransacked rank roofless ruins; read rural romances; reclined rested.

Reuben rapidly reaping ripe rye, reaches Rhoda's retreat.

Rare, radiant, rosy Rhoda retires, rambles round, rallies, returns.

Rascally Reuben, ranking rank rye, regards Rhoda; raves, recapitulates, recounts.

Reluctant Rhoda refuses, reflects, regards Reuben reproachfully, remorsefully. Reuben remonstrates, Rhoda retorts resentfully, Reuben retracts, repleads.

Rhoda reconsiders, replies retaining Reuben's ring, ribbons, roses, raven ringlets, renders Reuben reparation.

Reuben's ruler relents, ruin retires, relatives, Rhoda, Reuben rejoice.

Rash readers run—reunion results.

Respectfully, RATTLEBRAINED RUTH.

—The Colonel.

A Learned Wife.

She knows every modern ism and, as from a human prison, each theosophy and philosophy is reflected from her mind;
Knows the standing, scope and status of the Because, Kants and Platos, in philology and psychology she wades in and goes it blind.

She will talk you to paralysis with her "chemical analysis," with "trichotomy" and "philebotomy" on her victim she will bounce;
She will kill you if your killable, with her sounding, thirteen syllable, ancient, aline, sesquipedalian words no fellow can pronounce.

But her husband, helpless sinner, eats his bread and water dinner; luckless fellow in the cellar, thro' his lone dyspeptic days;
For his lovely wife bewitching piles the tables in the kitchen with the lexicons of old Mexicans and with cy-clo-pe-di-as.

And without a curse or stammer thro' large piles of Sanscrit grammar with agility and ability picks his way 'round like a cat.
And the big hole in his "trowsis" no sweet wifely aid arouses, with complacency and patience he conceals it with his hat.

—The Yankee Blade.

A Tremendous Achievement.

—Tid Bits.

Her Ambition Realized.

A city missionary relates this interesting and not wholly uninstructive tale in connection with his labors among the destitute. The incident occurred last winter, but the moral is of a continued application that keeps it fresh.

He found in the course of his examination of a certain district a woman who was not only wretchedly destitute but seriously ill besides. She seemed a very decent and not undeserving person, an impression which accorded with the reputation given her by her neighbors, and the missionary interested himself in her behalf, calling to his aid a couple of ladies who were members of the Associated Charities. Everything needful for the comfort of the woman was done. Her room was kept in order, she was provided with a nurse, the young ladies brought her delicacies, and when at last the patient was thoroughly convalescent, they presented her with $5 as a help toward starting once more on the way of earning her own living.

A day or two later the missionary called, and was pleasantly received by the poor woman, who evinced due gratitude for all the kindness she had received. Then with overflowing satisfaction and an absolutely childlike delight, the pauper produced from a closet a new and remarkably gay bonnet.

"There," she said, beaming with satisfaction, "don't you think that is pretty? All my life I've wanted a bonnet with a feather in it, and when I got that $5 all at once I said to myself that now was my chance to have one. The man asked $7 for it, but I told him $5 was all I had and he'd have to let me have it for that; and true as you're alive he did."

The missionary looked at the bonnet, regarded the woman, opened his lips, and wisely recognizing the futility of remonstrance, closed them again. The story is literally true, and very likely could be matched by any city visitor of long experience.—Providence Journal.

The Plot Looked It.

Lillian (who has been writing a seven act tragedy)—The plot of my play came to me in a dream.

Uncharitable Brother-in-law (glancing at manuscript)—Are you sure it wasn't a nightmare?—New York Star.

Hotel Swells

See the city hotel swells,
Howling swells,
What asinine assurance each attitude now tells!
How they ogle, ogle, ogle
All the girls who pass the door,
And each reckless, rakish rogue'll
Keep it up till he's fourscore:
Dashing swells,
"Mashing" belles
From early morn till late at night in front of the hotels!
Donkey swells,
Monkey swells!
Oh, why don't the proprietor come out and mash these swells?

—Hotel Mail.

THE SMOKEKILN CLUB.

Gen. Gardner's Noble Address on Women's Extravagance.

It was two minutes after the triangle sounded before the smoke in Paradise hall would permit the members to see each other. When it had at last thinned out Brother Gardner said:

"Nicodemus Pembroke Scott, a local member of dis lodge, has crossed into Canady an' will not reappear among us. Fur de las' three months I have bin expectin' some sich climax, an' dis mawnin', when a messenger informed me dat he had disappeared arter failin' in an attempt to shoot hisself wid an ole hoss pistol, I war not a bit surprised. He leaves a wife an' two chill'en an' about fifty creditors.

"What sent him off? De same reasons dat am daily workin' to bring about another panic—de same reasons dat explain de hundreds ob bizness failures—de same reasons dat am cripplin' de efforts of thousands of hard workin' men to secure homes of deir own—family extravagance. No, you can't call it extravagance; foolery am a better name for it. Up to a y'ar ago Brudder Scott was jobbin' aroun' and makin' $1 a day. Den he got a situashun by which he airned $14 per week. He was poo' off in de house an' had debts hangin' ober him, but heah was a chance to get eben. How was it improved? In less dan one month his wife was rigged out wid a $20 dress, twelve shillin' kids, a $5 hat and an opera fan. He had no peace ob min' ouless he obeyed her. In six weeks she became too high toned to wash an' iron fur oder folkses. In two months she wanted a better house, wid a red parlor carpet an' cane seat cha'rs all aroun' de room. In three months she had to have a black silk dress, gold bracelets, a tony bunnet, kid shoes an' gold fillin' in her teef.

"Dat foolery has reaped its harvest. De husband found dat he was runnin' behind, his home was bein' neglected, his wife was talk gossiped about, an' in despair he has picked up his feet an' slid out. It was de natural result. I tell you, my frens, de tomfoolery of de women of dis kentry am strainin' on de chalk line till the cord can't stan' much mo', an' it am high time dat somebody sots his foot down. De man who airns $25 per week has somehow got de ideah into his head dat de world expects him to dress his wife as if he airned a banker's profits. Wives of men who can't keep up wid deir house rent am canterin' up an' down wid sealskin sacques an' $6 shoes. Wives of men who have to dodge de butcher an' grocer an' tailor am now selectin' fall carpets an' orderin' $30 lambrequins. Wives of men who couldn't raise $50 at de bank to save der necks am rushin' to bails an' parties an' havin' deir expensive dresses described fur de benefit of de public.

"De so called society of de aige am composed of false hair, false pretenses, debt dodging an' base deepshun. Our rich people am distinguished by deir plain dress an' quiet manners. De snides an' dudes an' dodos do all de swaggerin', rush on all de colors an' monopolize de biggest sheer of de street. You wait! De man who lives fur anoder ten y'ars will h'ar sunthin' drap, an' arter de drap takes place de thousands of idiots who now feel ashamed to admit dat dey doan keep but two servant gals in de house will go back to deir cook stoves an' wash tubs an' take deir proper places in de purest slum."—Detroit Free Press.

Australian "Helps."

(Alleged ads in Victoria paper.)

Wanted—An amiable and high toned family consisting of a delicate and shrinking elderly widow who is a small eater any way and has her meals sent in from a restaurant, can secure a comfortable home with a superior cook. No notice taken of families who give dinners or who fail to take nicked china in a truly Christian spirit. Address "Earnest Worker," forwarding credentials authenticated by a clergyman.

Wanted—An industrious and hard working family who do their own cooking, washing, ironing, ashes sifting, dressmaking, mending, dusting, sweeping, nursing, whitewashing, housecleaning, carpet beating, fancy work, chamberwork, preserving, knitting, painting in oils, scrubbing, wax fruit and care of the cow, and who have an agile hired man to make fires, fill lamps, snuff candles, exercise the pugs, clean the silver, run for the doctor, wind the clocks, tend door and shoo nocturnal cats off the back fence, can hear of a good opening with a lady whose specialty is general housework. Address "Overtasked."

Wanted—A winning and modest appearing male baby, 3 months old, of unexceptionable moral character, would like to avail himself of the advantages of a nurse. Baby's name is mostly "Tootsey-Wootsey-Mamma's Pet," but it can be changed to "Bub," if that seems to come handier. Can refer to seventeen nurses now in the lunatic asylum with whom he has lived during the past four weeks. Address "Little Angel."

Wanted—A graceful and accomplished family that moves in the best circles and has no poor relations that come to the house will be permitted to allay itself with a select waitress; must furnish satisfactory pedigree. Apply in applicant's own handwriting. No notice taken of letters not stamped with a "crest." Families that did not come over with William the Conqueror will be repulsed with scorn. Address "Deportment."

Wanted—A chambermaid who is about to form matrimonial relations would like to procure a situation for a really deserving and well behaved family, which has lived with her for the last twelve years. This is a rare chance for a chambermaid in search of a family that keeps its place and never gives impudence. Salient sketch of family and imperial group picture furnished on application. Address "Orange Blossoms."—Cor. New York Tribune.

Not So Easy—Sometimes.

He was rather sentimental, and so was she as they strolled along. She knew she had him, but he did not know how far he had progressed with her.

"Do you like sentiment?" he said.

"Not too much of it," said she.

"How happy a fellow must feel when he has the girl he loves in his arms, and holds her close to his breast, and presses his lips to hers, and"——

"And—an i—it's so easily done," said she.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Regardless of Cost.

"Young man," he asked, "what is your ambition in life?"

"To get rich, sir," replied the young man, lighting a fresh cigar.

"Not a very high aim. But while you are trying to get rich aren't you spending a good deal of money?"

"Oh, I don't mind the expense, sir. I'm willing to get rich regardless of cost."—New York Sun.

That Is, if He Was Just Learning.

"What was Nero's greatest act of cruelty?" asked the teacher of the class in history.

"Playin' the fiddle," was the prompt response; and the teacher let it go at that.—Washington Critic.

One of the Rising Ones.

"My son," inquired the minister, "can you repeat the Ten Commandments?"

"No, sir, but I can light a cigarette in the wind the first trial."—Detroit Free Press.

Medical Superstitions.

There is a popular supposition of wide range, based upon I know not what, that it is very healthful for children to play with dogs. A weak child, it is thought, may gain strength by being with a dog, or if diseased the child may be cured by having the animal "take the disease"—for example, inflamed eyes or any disorder of the skin. Within a year a college graduate told me, in perfect good faith, of acquaintances, a Boston doctor and his wife, whose little girl had been greatly afflicted with some form of eczema which they all hoped would disappear, as the parents had purchased a fine dog to play with the child.

When a dog is teething the upper incisors, according to a New England superstition, must be removed as soon as they become loose, or he may "swallow them and have fits." Perhaps even more generally received is the fancied danger of allowing a child's milk tooth after extraction to fall into the possession of a dog or cat, lest the animal swallow it, and the child have a dog's or cat's tooth grow in place of the lost one. The Mexicans and Indians in Texas say that every animal has brains enough to tan its own skin; and so the latter, in the case of the wolf, panther, wild cat and some other animals, is mainly prepared by rubbing into the flesh side of it the brains of its former wearer.

A somewhat common fancy among children, perhaps, too, among adults as well, is that "every part strengthens a part"—that is, that the liver, heart, brains and so on of animals when eaten go directly toward nourishing the corresponding organs in the eater. A similar doctrine was worked out in great detail by the American Indians, and is, I believe, held by many other savage tribes. It seems altogether probable that such beliefs, wherever found among civilized people, old or young, are survivals from remote antiquity, and that they are closely akin in their nature and origin to the well known doctrine of signatures which has played so great a part in the systems of medicine of primitive peoples.—Mrs. Fanny D. Bergen in the Popular Science Monthly.

Something About Friendship.

The talk of making friends is largely a misuse of language. Friends are found, not made. They are a discovery, not a creation. For any friendship that is worth the name is a predestined and foreordained affair. It is not at all a matter of rational choice nor of well considered reason, but rather of magnetism and temperament. We make good will as a mental atmosphere surrounding us, and whether we have this or not depends very largely on ourselves. We make pleasant acquaintances and well wishers by exercising certain qualities of self control, generosity and courtesy; but a friend is found, not made. No observance of polite form, or even the deeper influence of noble qualities of mind and heart, can determine this, nor hardly can the lack of these change that friendship which is simply recognition. It is unchanging and eternal in its very essence. It can bear everything of friction, trial, annoyance or pain, and yet spring up again with even new vitality. Such friendship is a gift of the gods, and it is not commonly found.—London Saturday Review.

Wonders of the Kaleidoscope.

The following curious calculation has been made by the number of changes which that wonderful instrument, the kaleidoscope, will admit:

Supposing the instrument to contain twenty small pieces of glass, and that you make ten changes in each minute, it, at that rate of speed, would take the inconceivable space of 462,880,899,576 years and 360 days to go through the immense variety of changes that such an instrument is capable of producing! The human mind shrinks before such immensity and has no more idea of what such a length of time really means than it has of the meaning of the word "eternity." According to an eminent mathematician, if you put only twelve pieces of glass in the "scope" it will take 33,264 days, or something over ninety-one years, making ten changes each minute, to exhaust its variations.—St. Louis Republic.

Retribution.

Not so long ago there was a new rood made for the loft of a certain country church, and the old rood was stored away in the loft of the parsonage. The parson, feeling a desire toward a goose, had a fine one fattened, killed, stuffed and spitted, and finally put down to roast. He was a frugal man and to save firewood lugged out the old crucifix and put it on the fire as it was, his conscience forbidding him to break it up. This done, he went off to church, leaving his little nephew to roast the goose—to turn the spit. In course of time the cross beam of the rood was burned through and the figure fell down, face foremost, on the goose. The little boy fled away in terror and ran into the church, calling out: "Uncle, uncle, that man you put on the fire is eating your goose!"—Bervalde de Verville.

All on the Outside.

Mrs. Upjohn (meeting acquaintance at store)—How do you do, Mrs. Keeway? How did you like the lecture last evening?

Mrs. Keeway—I though it was tiresome. How did it strike you?

"It was the most superficial thing I ever heard. Nothing deep about it. Deliver me from these surface people." (To clerk.) "A package of lily white, please."—Chicago Tribune.

TRIALS OF A YOUNG MANAGER.

Disastrous Failure of a Boy's Attempt to Produce a Play.

Frederick Leslie, the actor, told an amusing story to a reporter. "When I was quite a youngster," he said, "some boys and myself constructed a play, and we called it 'Walker's Ruin.' My mother at that time owned several small houses at Woolwich, England, and in one of these we rigged up a temporary stage. We exhausted all of our capital in buying wall paper for scenery, so we had to fix up the stage as best we could. In many places, therefore, it was quite weak. These dangerous spots were indicated by chalk marks, so that, if we happened to get too near them in the midst of an exciting scene, we could skip over them. It was undignified, perhaps, but it couldn't be helped. Once, unfortunately, the stage did give way. I was delivering an impassioned love speech, and forgot all about the chalk marks until I stepped over and disappeared from view with a great crash and clatter. But I am anticipating. As I said, we had exhausted all our funds on scenery, so we wrote out a bill and posted it on the front gate, stating that the charge for admission would be a farthing a head.

"Of course it was only natural that the boys living in these houses should patronize the landlady's son, and we soon had a good sized audience. With the first farthing taken in we sent out and bought a rush light. With the second we did the same, and as the audience grew larger so did the number of lights increase. At last a start was made with the play, and then the villain became refractory. He objected to being killed in the first act, as we had planned, and in spite of our assurance that it was absolutely necessary for the success of the piece that he should die then he remained obstinate, and repeatedly informed the audience he was not yet dead. However, we finally got him to die on the understanding that he should have the best part in the next play. Well, we had no more than settled this difficulty and got to working smoothly again when my uncle appeared on the scene and demanded to know if it was true that we had charged each boy a farthing for admission. Upon being told that it was true he ordered me to return the money to them at once. I protested that it was impossible, as we had spent it for candles. 'Then give them the candles,' said my uncle, and we did. The boy who came in first got the smallest piece of candle, and the one who came in last got the largest."—Press and Knickbocker.

False Sympathy.

Letters of condolence and congratulation, if written from the heart, are as drops of balm and apples of gold. But written for form's sake, they are no better than so many little pellets of painted wood, without life or meaning. They, too, are things which must be done because of rule and law, but things which have no power in them either to soothe or to rejoice. And funeral wreaths and wedding presents sent out of politeness, not from real feeling—what a mass of folly! That funeral, not so very long ago, where the flowers sent weighed two tons—could any one who had the smallest love of flowers bear to hear of the waste, the sacrifice? Bloodless certainly, but a sacrifice as senseless as that of the barbarous chief who has his horse and his dog, his wife and his slave shot by the side of his grave, that their souls might bear him company in the cloudy land to which he has gone. And wedding presents! Fifty years ago they were for the most part of papier mache—abominations of every kind, with flaring colored flowers eked out by bits of mother-of-pearl. But fashion has gone further afield and into richer regions since then, and gold and pearls, silver and diamonds are the ordinary gifts of the moderately endowed to the wealthy. These two things—funeral flowers and wedding presents—have become utterly conventionalized and are no longer the expression of friendship and sympathy. Let them go—save when the tender prayer, the loving thought, the heartfelt smile, the tear that is as a drop of one's own life's blood accompanies them.—London Queen.

Something About Flowers.

Cyclamens are in full bloom, the seeds of which were sown in November, 1887, fourteen months from the time the seeds were put in the ground. As soon as large enough to handle, the seedlings were transplanted about an inch apart in shallow pans, where they remained until they had produced several leaves, after which they were put singly into two inch pots, and shifted into larger sizes as their need required, until August, when they were given their final shift into five and six inch pots, according to size. The soil used was two parts fibrous loam and one part thoroughly decomposed cow manure; to this was added sufficient sand to insure the free passage of the water. Good drainage was given and during summer they were kept in a well shaded green house. They had an unchecked but slow growth from the time of vegetation until their flowers were produced.

Some people always prefer plants in pots, even if they are not troubled for want of room, and now hardy perennials are gaining so in popularity they prefer them in this way. Many kinds can be grown with little or no heat, and some stand forcing to perfection. The cultivation of roses, hardy lilies and other bulbs is almost universal, and in addition the Day lily, the various campanulas, perennial phloxes which want plenty of stimulants.—The American Garden.

Ancient Industries.

Yes, daughter, yes; you do right to model in clay, to paint the lights and shadows of dyspepsia on china and fire your work. That's what I'd do with it if I got the chance. Pottery is the oldest industry in the world. Adam was made of clay, and Cain got up the first kiln. Accent heavy on the "n."—Bob Burdette.

A YANKEE VIEW OF A BRITISH POET.

I've been a-readin' Brownin'; our schoolmarm said he writ
The tallest kin' er potery the worl's diskivered yet;
Now I like potery better'n pie, or any kin' er sass,
An' hanker for't like winter cows a-hankerin' for grass.

I took the book down to the brook; sez I, "I'll hev it rich,
I'll soak myself in potery an' septiment an' sich;
The brook'll kinder keep in tune, the bobolink an' birds
Will sing their song, an' so keep time with this great poet's words."

An' so I started in to read; 'twas jest like ridin' roun'
In a big, bumpin', dingle cart, right over new plowed groun';
An' now an' then the ex'ud break, an' down you'd go kerflop,
Then two or three more wheels 'ud bust, and then the hoss 'ud stop.

An' then he'd start off on a rush, an' go a-whirlin' roun';
Sometimes the cart wuz sideways, an' sometimes upside down;
An' then there'd come an awful jolt, a kinder crazy crash,
An' fust ye'd know, the dingle cart 'ud bust an' go to smash.

I s'pose that's w'en the poem stopped; I didn't read no more;
My bones wuz mixed permiscus like, an' all my jints wuz sore;
The bobolink flew up a tree, an' never raised a yip,
An' I went home, 'an thirteen weeks wuz laid up 'ith the grip.

—S. W. Foss in Yankee Blade.

Dispositions of the Royal Family.

The name by which the Prince of Wales is known in the royal family is Bertie. That was the pet name (for short) given to him when he was the pride of Albert and Victoria's joint stock nursery, and it has stuck to him ever since. They say that when the queen hears that one whom she wishes to be friendly with has become disgruntled she says: "We must send Bertie to set matters aright." The Prince of Wales is a capital peace maker. He hates a row, and he has a happy faculty of smoothing over difficulties and patching up truces. His younger brother, the Duke of Edinburgh, is not so happily constituted. He is more like his mother, and he seems to take a delight in saying and doing things which are popularly called "unpleasant."

He married the only daughter of the czar, and that spirited woman has cultivated rather than softened the young man's asperity. Her name is Marie, but she is by no means as saintly as her name would suggest. She hates the English, and she is candid enough to declare that she hates to live in England. So, in one way and another, she makes life lively for her young husband, who, when he is not saying rude things, is invariably playing on the fiddle—he is a famous amateur violinist, you know. It is estimated that the Prince of Wales spends about half his time patching up unpleasantnesses which have been precipitated by his ill tempered brother.—Eugene Field in Chicago News.

Stanley in a Museum.

"I've got a grand fake for you," said a seedy looking tramp to a Bowery museum proprietor.

"Well, who are you, and how much do you want?" asked the great impressario.

"S'pose, for instance, I was Henry M. Stanley, the great African explorer, hey? How's that?"

The manager looked skyward, but the only inspiration he caught was a cinder in his eye from an elevated railroad locomotive. He wiped it out painfully, and, addressing the famous explorer, said: "Stanley, old boy, I'm glad to see you. On the dead, now, did you say anything about this to any of the other blokes?" (meaning his competitors).

"Nary a say."

Then the two disappeared around the corner. In about an hour the tramp took his place on the stage. A tag attached to him announced that he was "Henry M. Stanley, the great explorer." He wore a hat similar to that which pictures accredit to the relievers of Lucknow; his face was powdered and his form was incased in a costume bearing a faint resemblance to that in which the rescuer of Emin Pasha appears in the popular prints.

This is how Henry M. Stanley came to be in a Bowery museum.—New York Mail and Express.

An Incident of the War.

The regiment had been ordered to charge the enemy. They went at them with fixed bayonets. A shot struck my brother's musket between the hammer and barrel, severing it completely. Of course he was stunned and fell. The regiment passed over his body and continued the charge. The Confederates stood like a wall of adamant, and the regiment which charged was literally shot to pieces. Hardly a man survived. One of the survivors, of course, was my brother. The shot which cut his musket in two and stunned him saved his life. And that was his first experience in battle.—Cor. Chicago Tribune.

Possibilities of Youth.

Beware of youth! it is to be dreaded, not despised. The callow fledgling whom we laugh at may burst into song one day. Worse than that, he may impale us for our shortcomings with a shaft of satire, as the poet of the ages did poor Justice Shallow. We, through him, may live eternally inglorious, while he reads his history in all nations' eyes.—Scribner's.

Bogus Grief.

Little Fanny—Aunt Jennie is a regular hypocrite!

Mother—What makes you say that?

Little Fanny—Because she sits at the piano and howls and bellows as if her heart would break, and never sheds a tear. I've been watching her.—Texas Siftings.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

C. Mulholland,
EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.
PUBLISHED EVERY FRIDAY

INDEPENDENCE, CAL

FRIDAY, JULY 25 1890

County Official Paper.

REPUBLICAN County Convention.

A REPUBLICAN CONVENTION IS HEREby called to assemble at Bishop, Inyo county, California, on

TUESDAY, SEPT. 16, 1890,

At 2 p. m., for the nomination of County candidates and the transaction of such other business as may properly come before it. The Republicans of the several precincts are requested to hold Primaries, at the places named on

SATURDAY, SEPT. 6, 1890,

From 2 to 5 o'clock p. m., for the selection of delegates in accordance with this apportionment:

Round Valley	School-house	2 Delegates
Lincoln	School-house	4 "
Laws	School-house	2 "
Cottonwood	Gilberts	1 "
Bishop	Court-room	7 "
Poleta	A. O. Collins'	1 "
Big Pine	School-house	3 "
Fish Springs	Curtis Place	2 "
Independence	School-house	6 "
Georges Creek	School-house	2 "
Lone Pine	School-house	4 "
Cerro Gordo	Boland Store	2 "
Keeler	Boland Store	3 "
Olancha	Wm. Walkers	1 "
Darwin	School-house	2 "
Lookout	Company Store	1 "
Panamint	———	1 "

It is provided that any new precincts which may be established by the Board of Supervisors prior to date of primaries shall be entitled to one delegate each, and any of the above precincts which may be abolished shall have no representation.

PRIMARY TEST: "Did you support Harrison and Morton at the last election, or would you have done so had you been a voter?"

Ordered, That candidates coming before the Convention for nomination for the following offices each be assessed in the amounts named: Superior Judge, $25; Sheriff, $15; Clerk, $15; Assessor, $15; District Attorney, $10; Treasurer $10; School Superintendent, $10.

By order of the Republican County Committee.

C. W. CRAIG, Chairman.
J. D. BLAIR, Secretary.

Independence, Cal., July 7, 1890.

DEMOCRATIC COUNTY CONVENTION —AND— PRIMARIES.

A MEETING OF THE DEMOCRATIC CENtral Committee of Inyo county was held at Independence on July 16th and arranged for the holding of a County Nominating Convention to assemble at Independence on THURSDAY, SEPT. 18th.

At the hour of 10 o'clock a. m., for the purpose of nominating candidates for county officers and the transaction of such other business as may properly come before such convention. Primaries for the selection of delegates to said convention were ordered to be held in the several precincts of the county on

SATURDAY, AUGUST 30th,

In accordance with the following apportionment, based on the votes cast for Presidential Electors in 1888, a delegate for each precinct voting at said election, one delegate for each ten votes so cast and one for each fraction over one-half that number, as follows:

Round Valley	2	Georges Creek	1
Lincoln	3	Lone Pine	3
Station	2	Cerro Gordo	1
Cottonwood	1	Keeler	1
Bishop	6	Olancha	1
Poleta	1	Darwin	2
Big Pine	4	Lookout	1
Fish Spring	1	Panamint	1
Independence	7

Polls are to be open from 2 o'clock until 6 o'clock p. m. at the following places and under charge of the following officers:

ROUND VALLEY—Inspector, David Olds; Judges, C. H. Parsons, J. S. McGee. Olds' House.

LINCOLN—Inspector, John Blair; Judges, George Clarke, T. K. Hutchison. School House.

LAWS—Inspector, R. C. Schively; Judges J. McNally, Frank Mock. Depot.

COTTONWOOD—Inspector, Nathan Gilbert; Judges, S. P. Roberts, — Berry. Gilbert's

BISHOP—Inspector, Wils. W. Yandell; Judges, E. Schober, A. Doll. School house

POLETA—Inspector, Geo. Storey; Judges, — Collins, M. Hooley. Switch.

BIG PINE—Inspector, Henry McMurry; Judges, R. P. Hession, L. Eagley. School house.

FISH SPRINGS—Inspector, James Jones; Judges, J. Lane, P. Love. School house.

INDEPENDENCE—Inspector, G. W. Brady; Judges, W. J. Lake, John Lewis. School house.

GEORGES CREEK—Inspector, John Shepherd; Judges, John Parish, C. Hamilton. School house.

LONE PINE—Inspector, Manuel Diaz; Judges, F. P. Meysan, John Lucas. School house.

KEELER—Inspector, John Barnes; Judges John Morton, D. C. Grunow. Hotel.

CERRO GORDO—Inspector, R. B. Nickerson; Judges, J. Herter, T. O'Keefe. Store

DARWIN—Inspector, Jas. A. McKenzie; Judges, J. C. Eddy, J. Wilson. School house.

LOOKOUT—Inspector, Crit. Hampton; Judges, J. E. Reynolds, A. Smith. Store

PANAMINT—Inspector, H. G. Chickering; Judges, James Wail, John Curran. Store

OLANCHA—Inspector, William Walker. Judges, E. Walker, W. T. Grant. Walker's

It is provided that any precincts which may be established by the Board of Supervisors prior to the date of holding the Primaries shall be entitled to one delegate each.

VOTING TEST—"Will you support the nominees of the Democratic State Convention?"

E. ROBINSON,
IRV. H. MULHOLLAND, Chairman.
Secretary.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS

Estate of JAMES WARD, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of James Ward deceased, to the Creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator at his residence in the town of Independence, in the County of Inyo, State of California.

THOMAS PARKER,
Administrator of the estate of James Ward deceased.

Dated at Independence, Cal., July 22, 1890.
jy-25-5t

FOURTH ANNUAL FAIR.

Agricultural District No. 18.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA.

Composed Of The Counties Of

Alpine, Mono & Inyo

TO BE HELD AT

Independence.

Commencing Tuesday, September 23d, and Continuing Four Days

A. R. CONKLIN ..... President.
C. MULHOLLAND ..... Secretary.
O. I. MAIRS ..... Treasurer.

DIRECTORS;

A. R. CONKLIN, W. S. ENOS, N. RHINE,
J. S. GORMAN, E. ROBINSON, F. McINER,
A. W. EIBESHUTZ, C. A. WALTER.

FIRST DEPARTMENT.

In this Department the same animal shall not be entered more than once, except in sweepstakes, or as a member of a family exhibited with its sire or dam. Any stallion, mare, gelding or colt competing in a race shall not be excluded from competing for premiums in their respective classes.

Tuesday.

CLASS I—THOROUGHBREDS.

Best stallion, any age	$25 00
Second best	15 00
Best mare, any age	20 00

CLASS II—STANDARD TROTTERS.

Best stallion, aged	$25 00
2 year old	15 00
Best mare	20 00

CLASS III—ROADSTERS.

Best roadster, aged	$20 00
2-year-old	15 00
team to buggy	20 00

Wednesday.

CLASS IV—HORSES OF ALL WORK.

Best stallion, aged	$20 00
2 year old	15 00
1 year old	10 00
Best colt	10 00
Best mare, any age	20 00
2-year-old	15 00
1 year old	10 00
and family of 3 or more	20 00

CLASS V—DRAFT HORSES.

Best stallion, aged	$20 00
2 year old	15 00
Best mare, aged	15 00
2 year old	10 00
and colt	15 00

CLASS VI—MATCHED TEAMS.

To be shown in harness.

Best matched carriage team	$15 00
buggy team	15 00

CLASS VII—SWEEPSTAKES.

Best stallion, any breed or age	$20 00
Best mare, any breed or age	20 00

Thursday.

CLASS VIII—JACKS.

Best jack, any age	$20 00
Second best	15 00

CLASS IX—MULES.

Best span, aged, owned by one person	$15 00
3 years or under " " " "	10 00

CLASS X—BULLS.

Best 3-year old or over, any breed	$20 00
2 year old, any breed	15 00
1-year-old, any breed	10 00

CLASS XI—COWS.

Best 3 year old or over	$20 00
2 year-old	10 00
cow and calf	15 00
cow and 2 calves	20 00

All of the above to be exhibited at Race Track. Entries to be made with the Secretary not later than 6 o'clock p. m. on day preceding their exhibition.

Friday.

CLASS XII—SHEEP AND GOATS.

Best display of angora goats	$20 00
Best display of sheep	20 00

CLASS XIII—SWINE.

Best display of hogs	$15 00
Best sow and litter of 4 pigs	10 00

CLASS XIV—POULTRY.

Best display of fowls, any breed	$8 00
Second best	6 00
Best display of turkeys	5 00

Classes, 12, 13 and 14 to be exhibited at the Pavilion. Entries to be made with Secretary not later than 6 p. m. on day preceding their exhibition.

All stock to be exhibited must be on the ground at 10 o'clock a. m. on the day intended for their exhibition. No animal to leave place of exhibit on until 4 o'clock p. m. without permission of the Park Director.

SECOND DEPARTMENT.

All exhibits in the following departments must be produced in the District.

CLASS I—AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS.

	1st.	2d.
100 pounds of flour	$3 00	$2 00
barley	3 00	2 00
wheat	3 00	2 00
oats	3 00	2 00
rye	3 00	2 00
shelled corn	3 00	2 00
50 pounds corn in the ear	2 00
alfalfa seed	3 00	2 00
Display of Egyptian corn	2 00
Bale of timothy hay	4 00
alfalfa hay	4 00
Display of grasses	8 00
agricultural products	20 00	15 00

CLASS II—VEGETABLES, ROOTS ETC.

50 pounds Early Rose potatoes	$2 50	$2 00
100 pounds any variety of potatoes	2 50	2 00
25 pounds of sweet potatoes	2 50
20 pounds of parsnips	2 00	1 00
carrots	2 00	1 00
turnips	2 00	1 00
beets	2 00	1 00
tomatoes	2 00	1 00
50 pounds of onions	2 00	1 00
10 pounds of garden peas	2 00
white beans	2 00
bayou beans	2 00
lima beans	2 00
Sample of peppers	2 00
1 dozen cabbage	2 00	1 00
½ dozen squash	2 00	1 00
pumpkins	2 00	1 00
watermelons	2 00	1 00
cantaloupes	2 00	1 00
1 dozen cucumbers	2 00	1 00

CLASS III—DAIRY AND FARM PRODUCE.

10 pounds butter in 2 pound rolls	$3 00	$2 00
20 pound jar of butter	4 00	3 00
Cheese	3 00
10 pounds lard	2 00
Display of honey	5 00	3 00
Apiary display	10 00	5 00
Variety of fruit in jars	10 00	5 00
jellies	5 00	3 00
preserves	5 00	3 00
pickles	5 00	3 00
50 pounds ham	10 00
bacon	10 00

THIRD DEPARTMENT.

CLASS I—HORTICULTURAL PRODUCTS.

Display of apples	$7 50	$5 00
peaches	7 50	5 00
pears	6 00	4 00
plums	6 00	4 00
prunes	6 00	4 00
quinces	5 00
grapes	7 50	5 00
table grapes	3 00
raisin grapes	3 00
wine grapes	3 00
raisins	5 00
dried fruits	7 50	5 00
fruits of all kinds	20 00	10 00
figs	5 00
walnuts	5 00
peanuts	5 00
almonds	5 00
½ dozen bottles of wine	5 00

FOURTH DEPARTMENT.

CLASS I—ARTISTIC.

Oil painting on canvas	$10 00
Second best	5 00
Crayon drawing	10 00
Satin and Japanese panel	10 00
Pastel drawing	5 00
Collection of paintings on canvas	10 00
Photograph of scenery in district	5 00
Collection of photographs, Dist. scenery	10 00

FIFTH DEPARTMENT.

CLASS I—MINERALS ETC.

Cabinet of minerals from District	$25 00
Collection of curios from District	15 00
Display of marble	20 00
borax etc	10 00
soda	10 00
silver ore	10 00
gold ore	10 00
silver lead ore	10 00

SIXTH DEPARTMENT.

CLASS I—NEEDLE AND OTHER WORK.

Handsomest pillow shams	$5 00
and best patchwork quilt	5
crazy quilt	5
knitted quilt	5
sofa cushion	5
set of sofa tidies, 3 pieces	5
set of bureau tidies, 3 pieces	5
Greatest variety of crochet work	10
Best crochet quilt	5
embroidered ladies dress	5
childs dress	5
ottoman cover	5
table cover, 4 corners	5
scarf, 2 ends	5
pair of lambrequins	5
wall panel, or banner	5
silk on flannel	5
linen	5
Kensington, or wool	5
toilet set, 3 pieces	5
lace work, hand made	5
darned net, 3 pieces	5
crochet shawl	5
table scarf, hand painted	5
hearth rug	5
made lady's dress	5
display hand knit work	5
fancy articles	10
wax work	5
Spanish needle work	5
hair work	5
hand-knit stockings	5
calico dress made by girl under 14	5
hand sewing, 4 pieces, girl under 16	5
crochet work, girl under 14	5
patchwork, girl under 14	5
hand made skirt, girl under 14	5

SPEED PROGRAMME.

TUESDAY.

RUNNING—½ mile dash for untried horses. Purse, $75.

TROTTING—½ and repeat, for 2 year-olds. Purse, $100.

WEDNESDAY.

TROTTING—2 in 3, mile heats, for stallions owned in district. Purse, $150.

RUNNING—½ mile and repeat for saddle horses Purse, $75.

THURSDAY.

RUNNING 2 in 3, mile heats. Free for all horses owned in district. Purse, $150.

TROTTING 2 in 3, mile heats, for double team. Purse, $160.

FRIDAY.

RUNNING—½ mile dash, free for all owned in district. Purse, $100.

TROTTING—2 in 3, mile heats. Free for all owned in district. Purse, $150.

RUNNING—1 mile, for Indian horses. No entrance fee. Purse, $25.

RULES.

In all the above races 3 or more to enter, 2 or more to start. Entrance fee, 10 per cent. of purse.

All entries to be made with the Secretary on or before 12 o'clock m. of the day preceding the race.

California State Agricultural Society Rules to govern running races. National Trotting Association Rules to govern trotting races.

In all exhibits of animals for premiums, other things being equal, blooded stock will be preferred.

All articles included in the above list, except the first department, to be on exhibition at the Pavilion on second day and remain during the Fair.

Special premiums will be allowed for articles exhibited not included in above list

If you have entries to make, attend to it at once, and when your entries are made, see to it that they are on time and at place for examination by the committee.

Accept no rumors in regard to the business of the exhibition. If you do not know what to do, inquire of the officers whose duty it is to tell you. One half of the trouble and disappointment at the Fair is caused by relying on hearsay. Attend to your business yourself. If it is done wrong you know where the blame lies.

Read the rules, and, by example, at least, assist in enforcing them; but don't forget that mistakes will occur where many people are congregated. The Board endeavors to do justice to all.

If the superintendents and Committeemen are not always ready at the appointed hour, keep your stock and articles where you can command them at any time. Remember that we have but little time to do much business; patience, with a little system, will overcome many obstacles.

The Board will give the same special attention to details that has contributed to success in the past. It remains for the exhibitors to achieve still better results for the Fair of 1890.

ADMISSION

Life Membership	$30 00
Membership ticket, admitting member, wife and minor children	5 00
Single season ticket	2 50
To Pavilion, each	50
To Race Track, each	50

NATHAN RHINE.

NATHAN RHINE,
(Successor to Harris & Rhine.)
MERCHANT,
INDEPENDENCE
Inyo Co. Cal.
Wholesale & Retail
—DEALER IN—
General Merchandise

MY STOCK
CONSISTING OF
almost every needed article is well calculated to satisfy the wants of everybody; and, as in the past, it will be our aim in the future to retain the extensive patronage enjoyed heretofore.

NATHAN RHINE.

NATHAN RHINE
BANKER
Independence, Cal.

SELL EXCHANGE
—ON—
SAN FRANCISCO

Draw Direct
—ON—
NEW YORK,
LONDON, England
BERLIN, FRANKFORT-on-the-Main, GERMANY

I AM PREPARED TO TRANSACT ALL KINDS,
—OF—
GENERAL
BANKING
&
EXCHANGE
BUSINESS.

Wechsel in beliebigen Summen auf Berlin und Frankfurt am der Main, Deutsche Vollmachten gelten Sicht. Geldsendungen rox und nach Deutschland besorgt.

AGENT FOR
WELLS FARGO & CO'S.
EXPRESS

MUTUAL
Life Insurance Co
OF NEW YORK
CAPITAL - - - - $5,000,000

LIVERPOOL
AND LONDON AND GLOBE
INSURANCE COMPANY
Capital - - - - - $21,000,000

NATHAN RHINE.

MISCELLANEOUS.

J. R. ELDRED,
Sheriff and Tax-Collector.
INYO CO., CAL.

P. H. MACK,
COUNTY CLERK,
—AND—
Ex-officio Auditor and Recorder,
INYO CO., CAL.

GEO. M. GILL,
District Attorney,
INYO CO., CAL.

J. J. MOORE,
County Treasurer,
INYO CO., CAL.

S. P. M'KNIGHT, C. E.
COUNTY SURVEYOR
—AND—
U. S. Deputy Mineral Surveyor
For California and Nevada.
—BISHOP CREEK, INYO CO., CAL.—
The obtaining of United States mineral patents a specialty.
All kinds of surveying given the most careful and accurate attention.

JUSTICE OF PEACE,
C. MULHOLLAND.
Office in the "INDEPENDENT" building, Independence, Inyo County, Cal.

A. R. CONKLIN,
Attorney-at-Law.
Independence, Cal.
Will practice in all the Courts of the States of California and Nevada.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
Independence, Cal.

P. W. FORBES,
ATTORNEY AT LAW.
NOTARY PUBLIC.
Cases in U. S. Land Office a Specialty.
BISHOP, INYO COUNTY, CALIFORNIA.

IRVING J. WOODIN, M D.,
Physician & Surgeon,
(COUNTY PHYSICIAN)
Louise L. Woodin, M. D.
PHYSICIAN & SURGEON.
NIGHT CALLS ATTENDED.
Office and residence at the Reddy place, Independence.

W. H. GEORGE, M. D.,
Physician and Surgeon,
Bishop Creek, Cal.,
Offers his professional services to the people of Bishop Creek and vicinity. Office and residence opposite Andrew Clark's.

F. E. Bunting, M. D.
Physician & Surgeon
LONE PINE, CAL
OFFICE IN GELCICH BUILDING
All calls attended to immediately.

Lodge 221, F. & A. M.
Regular meetings of Lodge No. 221, F. & A. M., for the year 1889, will be held at the Lodge room at Independence as follows:

Saturday	February 1st
"	March 1st
"	March 29th
"	May 3rd
"	May 31st
"	June 28th
"	July 26th
"	August 30th
"	September 27th
"	October 25th
"	November 22nd
"	December 20th

P. H. MACK, W. M.
C. MULHOLLAND Sec.

P. W. FORBES. P. H. MACK.
MACK & FORBES.
Real Estate Agents,
Address, P. H. MACK, Independence, Cal.
P. W. FORBES, Bishop, Cal.

FRED BURCKHARDT
Watchmaker & Jeweler,
LONE PINE, CAL.
Time pieces of all descriptions repaired and regulated, satisfaction guaranteed. Jewelry made to order. Firearms repaired and loaned.
All orders from any part of the country will be promptly attended to, at the most reasonable charges. At the old stand "Mechanics' Hall," Lone Pine.
FRED BURKHARDT.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CROCKER'S HOTEL.
BIG PINE · CAL.
New House.
New Furniture.
Low Rates
Splendid hunting and fishing near by, in act, it is a veritable paradise for tourists and pleasure seekers.
Special attention given to the wants of every guest.
CROCKER BROS., Props.
sep1-tf

ANTONS SALOON
KEELER, CAL.
BEER, WINES, LIQUORS and CIGARS
All kinds of Fancy Drinks, including pure water. A comfortable and pleasant Hall.
JOHN C. ANTON, Prop.

IRWIN'S SALOON
Cor. Edwards and Market Streets,
Independence . Cal.
THE PUBLIC GENERALLY ARE RESPECTFULLY invited to call and inspect my establishment, which has been entirely rebuilt and furnished in a style second to none on this side of the mountains. A SPLENDID NEW BILLIARD TABLE provided for the amusement of patrons.
THE BAR
Is supplied with the most celebrated brands of pure Wines and Liquors and the Finest Havana Cigars.
JOHN C. IRWIN, Proprietor.
feb12tf

S. H. BGLAND,
—DEALER IN—
Owens Valley Lands
39 SUTTER STREET.
SAN FRANCISCO.
1-26

Pioneer
Livery & Feed Stables.
INDEPENDENCE, CAL.
Having returned and resumed the management of the above well known feed and livery stables, patrons can be assured of finding there the best of Horses, Teams, Saddle Horses, and
Livery Accommodations
in general. Also, Hay and Grain for sale by the pound or ton.
O. I. MAIRS, Proprietor.

E. H. Edwards,
—DEALER IN—
General Merchandise,
LONE PINE,
INYO COUNTY - - - CALIFORNIA.

BLACKSMITHING,
Horseshoeing, General Iron
—AND—
WAGON WORK.
PIONEER BLACKSMITH SHOP
Cor. Main St. & Depot Ave.,
INDEPENDENCE, CAL.
W. F. MATLACK ..... PROPRIETOR.
Horseshoeing ..... $2 00 for Cash
For particulars, call and see
W. F. MATLACK.

LONE PINE
Blacksmith Shop.
R. C. Spear, Prop'r
—ALL WORK ON—
MINING TOOLS,
FARMING IMPLEMENTS
& FREIGHTING OUTFITS
—PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO—
HORSE SHOEING,
CARRIAGE WORK,
GENERAL REPAIRING
All work attended to with neatness and despatch. Prices to suit the times.

BOOTS AND SHOES
MADE AND REPAIRED.
THE BEST MATERIAL.
FIRST-CLASS WORK.
Repairs done Promptly.
Prices Reasonable.
A. J. DAVIS,
nov 30-tf Independence,

TO ADVERTISERS
A list of 1000 newspapers divided into STATES AND SECTIONS will be sent on application—FREE.
To those who want their advertising to pay, we can offer no better medium for thorough and effective work than the various sections of our Select Local List. GEO. P. ROWELL & CO.,
Newspaper Advertising Bureau,
10 Spruce Street, New York

MISCELLANEOUS.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE.
STEVENS DITCH COMPANY.
Location of principal place of business, Independence, California. Location of ditch, near Independence, Inyo county.
Notice is hereby given that at a meeting of a Board of Directors, held on the 31st day of May, 1890, an assessment (No. 4) of Ten (10) cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary at the office of the company, Independence, California.
Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 26th day of July, 1890 will be delinquent, and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on Saturday, the 30th day of August, 1890 to pay the delinquent assessment together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale.
By order of the Board of Directors.
P. H. MACK, Secretary.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.
IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE County of Inyo, State of California.
Estate of CHARLES D. BEGOLE, deceased.
NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN BY THE UNdersigned, Administrator of the estate of Charles D. Begole, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his residence, in the town of Independence in the county of Inyo.
THOMAS PARKER.
Administrator of the estate of Charles D. Begole, deceased.
Dated July 7th, 1890.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE.
INYO MARBLE COMPANY.
Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Inyo county, Cal.
NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT AT A meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 26th day of June, 1890, an assessment (No. 10) of Ten Cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, No. 132 California street, San Francisco, California.
Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 5th day of August, 1890, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on TUESDAY, the 26th day of August, 1890, to pay the delinquent assessment together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.
G. W. LUCE, Sec.
Office—No. 132 California St., San Francisco, California.

EDWARD CHENOT
Independence, Cal.,
INVITES PUBLIC ATTENTION TO HIS Extensive Stock of
GENERAL MERCHANDIS
....Consisting of....
GROCERIES.
PROVISIONS
Tobacco, Cigars,
WINES AND LIQUORS
FLOUR & GRAI
Together with an Assortment of
DRY GOODS AND CLOTHING
ETC., ETC
Buyers and consumer should call and examine my stock and prices before purchasing elsewhere.
E. CHENOT.
Independence, Cal., March 9, 1889.
n47tf

J. W. Murphy.
BLACKSMITHING
—AND—
General Iron Work.
Wagons and Carriages Repaired.
HORSESHOEING, $2 00 for CASH
Shop on Edwards St., opposite the Court House, Independence.

BUHACH
THE UNRIVALED
Insect Exterminator
Manufactured solely from Pyrethrum flowers, grown in California, in a locality where the soil and climate are peculiarly adapted to the production of flowers rich in the essential oil which makes them so remarkably destructive to insect life.
Avoid the Worthless and Spurious Preparations, sold as Insect Powders, and use Buhach from original packages, and clear your premises of all Annoying and Destructive Insect Pests.
BUHACH GENUINE CALIFORNIA INSECT EXTERMINATOR
None Genuine Without the Trade Mark.
If your dealer doesn't keep it, order directly from the
Buhach Producing & Manufacturing COMPANY,
SOLE MANUFACTURERS,
STOCKTON, - - CALIFORNIA.

Wm. Muth-Rasmussen.
Bee Keeper.
Manufacturer of Comb Foundation.
Independence, Inyo Co. Cal.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY, JULY 25 1890

COURT NOTES.

Superior Court of Inyo County, California Hon. John A. Hannah, Judge.

FRIDAY, July 18.

Emma Ferrall vs. George Ferrall—Divorce granted to Plaintiff, who is allowed $100 counsel fees, $20 a month alimony and custody of three minor children.

MONDAY, July 21.

People vs. S. A. Middleton—Information on file charging assault to commit murder. Arraignment continued to Monday, July 28, at 2 p. m.

TUESDAY, July 22.

Estate of James Ward, deceased—Letters of Administration issued to Thomas Parker. A. J. Davis, Chas. Houle and J. C. Irwin appointed Appraisers.

WEDNESDAY, July 23.

Angelina Ogdon vs. Chester Ogdon—Action for divorce. Complaint filed, summons issued.

John Anton, of Keeler, has gone on a visit to Spokane Falls.

Mrs. Emma Ferrel has been granted a divorce from George Ferrel.

J. W. P. Laird, Esq., got back to Independence last Monday from a trip to Salt Lake.

Mr. W. Phillippay came down from Bishop last Monday and stayed in town a few days.

Mr. George H. Hardy, a former resident of Independence, now of Salt Lake City, is on a visit here.

Mr. J. McDonald has left Cerro Gordo and gone back to take charge of the Defiance mine at Darwin.

A stated meeting of Lodge No. 221 F. & A. M. will be held at Masonic Hall at Independence to-morrow evening.

Mr. W. Matlack has bought the corner lot on the opposite side of the street south from his blacksmith shop, and intends moving his shop there.

Mr. William Crowhurst, a well known temperance lecturer, has visited the towns in Owens Valley during the week and lectured at the various places.

Rev. J. H. De La Matyr will preach on Sunday as follows: At Lone Pine 11 o'clock a. m.; at Georges Creek, 2:30 p. m.; at Independence at 7:30 evening.

Teams are now at work getting the pipe to Darwin for relaying the water works. The old pipe has been so far repaired that it will supply water till the new can be got ready.

The date of the Fair at Bishop has been changed to begin September 9th. At that time there will be a celebration of Admission Day, meeting of Pioneers and other jollification.

Mr. Henry Levy has bought a lot adjoining his yard back of the hotel, and will add this to the yard. This will largely increase the accommodation for teams staying at Mr. Levy's hotel.

Mr. A. L. McGee got back to Independence last Tuesday from a trip to the lower end of the county. He reports being well received everywhere and has strong hopes of success in his canvass.

A band of horses belonging to Miller & Lux, of Kern county, passed down the valley at the end of last week. The animals were being taken from Oregon to Bakersfield. There were 750 horses in the band.

Mr. Israel Luce arrived at the marble quarry last Monday. He brought several men with him who are marble workers and the force will be still further increased as soon as necessary arrangements can be made at the works.

All the men that can be got are being put to work at the Soda Works, at Keeler, taking up the new crop of soda. The quantity in the ponds is reported above the average and the work of gathering will continue several months.

A promising strike of ore is reported in the Union mine at Cerro Gordo. The ore body has not yet been developed enough to show how extensive it may be. The quality of the ore is of the usual average found in the Union mine.

Men have been put to work getting the lower mill at Belleville in repair and ready for a start. It is reported that the Holmes Company of Candelaria have plenty of ore in sight to keep the mill at that place and the one at Belleville both running.

So many cattle have been sold in Owens Valley this season that farmers are not cutting the usual quantity of alfalfa. Some of them have turned stock upon the fields after the first crop was taken off. At Bishop two thousand head of stock are reported sold recently.

Pomona is famous for its fruit and the Times-Courier proudly records the fact that the crop of an orchard of eight acres sold for $1500. The fruit was apricots. Last season J. W. Symmes of Independence realized $1500 from six acres of orchard, mostly peaches. This beats Pomona by a big percentage.

Reports of the death of cattle continue to come from Long Valley. The loss is said to be heavy. Horses are also reported to be dying. A fine carriage horse belonging to Mr. T. Webb is dead. The well known race horse "Sagebrush," belonging to Henry Giles, is also reported dead.

Mr. Frank P. Blaisdell is making a canvass of the lower end of the county to ascertain how he stands as a candidate for County Clerk. Mr. Blaisdell has good ability for business, is a man of pleasing address and good character, and would be a candidate worthy of the support of his party. His card will be found among the list of candidates.

When prospecting for borax recently in Salt Well Valley Doctor Woodin found some petrified bones of an extinct animal. The ball part of the hip joint is nearly as large as the crown of a derby hat. The corresponding bone of an ox is about the size of a hen's egg. The size of the extinct animal may be inferred from this comparison. Other parts of the skeleton of the same animal were found. The bones are all petrified, but the appearance of their structure is not changed.

Was He Insane?

Last Sunday night Patrick Crowley murdered William Nichols, shift boss at the Savage mine, Virginia City. Nichols reprimanded all the men who were on shift at the time, Crowley being one of the number, complaining that they had not done work enough. When the men stepped off the cage at the 1200 foot level, Crowley with an ax dealt Nichols a fearful blow, crushing in the left side of his head. The other men were terribly frightened and managed to get upon the cage and signaled to be hoisted to the surface. When they got there they reported the tragedy that had taken place in the mine. A party went down to arrest Crowley and bring up the body of Nichols. Crowley had dropped the body of his victim one hundred feet down the shaft, where it was found. There was great excitement in Virginia when the deed was reported and fears were entertained that an attempt would be made to take Crowley from the jail and lynch him. To avert this the officers managed to get Crowley away from the jail and took him to Carson. Nichols left a wife and five children; Crowley is aged 29 years, is 6 feet 3 inches in height and weighs 220 pounds; he is said to be a very quiet, unobtrusive man and no explanation is given why he should have committed the terrible deed.

Inyo Marble.

The Call says: "D. O. Mills, who is soon to commence the erection of a ten-story building on the northeast corner of Montgomery and Bush streets, has just closed a contract with the Inyo Marble Company for about $75,000 or $100,000 worth of marble to be used in the new building. The contract calls for about 20,000 square feet of marble tiles, 20,000 square feet of moss agate and colored marble for wainscoting, about 7000 cubic feet for thirty feet high of the exterior from the line of the street up, besides pillars, blocks for steps and plumbers' slabs. This is the first large contract that has ever been signed for California marble. Mr. Mills, before signing the contract, thoroughly investigated the matter, and concluded that for the use to which it is to be put the marble is superior to any imported. The marble will be dressed at the quarry and then taken by rail to the polishing mills at Essex, on the Truckee River, and there polished.

Fire at Lone Pine.

About 2 o'clock last Wednesday morning a bad fire broke out at Lone Pine. All the buildings on one block fronting on Main street were destroyed. The Diaz butcher shop, Losky's store and warehouse, Lorenz Gehrig's saloon, Castro's saloon and some dwelling houses were all destroyed. The fire is said to have started in one of the dwelling houses. A few minutes after the alarm was given fire hose was attached to a water plug in the street and a stream was turned on. The hose burst immediately and before another could be attached the fire had got such headway as to be beyond all control. The buildings and contents were all totally lost. No report has yet been made of the value of property destroyed. There was very little insurance. Last spring there was a bad fire just across the street from where this one occurred, and only hard work saved the property now burned up.

Notice.

Notice is hereby given that Mr. James E. Reynolds is my authorized agent at Modock during my absence from Inyo County, and will pay all bills for labor, supplies, etc. All business communications to be addressed to him at Modock, Inyo County, Cal.

2-1 FRANK FITZGERALD.

For Sale or Rent

The Palace Saloon, Independence, California. Good stand, on Main Street, opposite Court House. Best fitted up saloon in Inyo County. For terms apply to

J. J. GUNN,
Independence, Cal.

A new switch has been put in at the marble quarry. It is seventeen hundred feet long and connects the moss-agate and yellow quarries with the rest of the works. A contract has been closed to furnish marble for the new building D. O. Mills has ordered erected on Montgomery street, San Francisco. This building will be an immense structure ten stories high. At least forty thousand feet of fancy colored marble will be supplied from the quarry for decorating the interior of the building. It is now clear that the new mill at Verdi must be increased in capacity in order to keep up with the large orders for marble that the company are receiving. The force at the quarry must also be largely increased. The great beauty and unequaled excellence of the marble produced at our quarry will quickly make it one of the great interests of the Pacific Coast.

Travelers passing on the C. & C. railroad should take a look at the corn growing at Lone Pine Station. It will not be thought that it is sweet corn, but it is, though the growth is as great as the largest varieties of common corn. On one large stalk near the fence and close to the railroad, six well developed ears can be seen. At Independence station the vines planted last Spring are also worth looking at. The east side of the river is a remarkable "desert" when water is applied to the land.

On Wednesday of last week the boiler of a small prospecting mill at Bodie exploded. Dr. D. V. Goodson, the owner of the mill, wrs instantly killed. A. S. Montrose was mortally hurt and died on Friday evening. Dr. Goodson was thrown nearly one hundred feet. Montrose was dashed against an embankment a few feet away and a driving wheel fell upon him, pinning him to the ground. The Chronicle-Union, from which this report is taken, says that both men were pioneer residents of Bodie and among the most enterprising and honored citizens of the place.

The Chronicle-Union says that by the census enumeration Mono County is liable to be ranked in the 48th class of counties. Should that prove to be so salaries of county officers will be as follows: Sheriff and Tax-Collector $800 per annum; County Clerk and ex-officio Auditor and Recorder $1000; Treasurer $300; Assessor $300; District Attorney $300; School Superintendent $100. If Mono finds officers at these salaries they must be men who love the honor more than the profit of office.

Mr. C. Anthony, of Darwin, got badly bitten by a dog recently. He was in the yard behind his store when the dog attacked him and bit him on the leg. A few days after being bitten Mr. Anthony swelled up about the head in an alarming manner. Doctor Woodin went from Independence and stayed with him two days. The Doctor left him much better at the beginning of the week. The dog belonged to an Indian and was killed.

The death of a large number of cattle about Olancha is reported. The character of the disease is not stated, but it is the young and fat animals that are attacked and they die very suddenly.

The law requires that naturalized citizens shall have their final papers not less than ninety days prior to an election, if they want to vote. All who have not yet got their final papers must do so on or before August 24, failing to do this they will not be allowed to vote.

On Sunday Rev. J. H. De La Matyr will hold his last services for the present conference year. It is his intention to leave Independence for Reno on Monday morning. He does not intend returning to Independence as Pastor. He would be highly gratified to have a large attendance at these closing services.

A party of four students from the State University reached Independence last Monday. They came over the mountains from Visalia on foot. They have pack animals to carry their outfit. The names of the students are H. P. Dyer, C. B. Lakenan, I. N. LeConte and F. S. Pheby. The trip is a hard one to make but the boys seemed to enjoy it.

Shipments of ore from mines at the south end of the county have fallen off considerably the past few weeks. During the hot weather, usual at this season, miners leave the camps and go to the fishing grounds in the heart of the Sierra Mountains or to other resorts for a few weeks vacation and rest. With the return of cool weather the usual output of ore will be resumed.

MISCELLANEOUS.

DESERT LAND FINAL PROOF

D. E. No. 415.

LAND OFFICE AT INDEPENDENCE, CAL., June 25, 1890.

Notice is hereby given that John A. Hannah, of Independence, Inyo County, California, has filed notice of his intention to make proof on his desert land claim, No. 415, for the S E ¼ of Sec. 32, Tp. 13 S., R. 36 E., M. D. M., before the Register and Receiver at Independence, on Saturday, the 2d day of August, 1890.

He names the following witnesses to prove the complete irrigation and reclamation of said land: Finlay McIver, Gilbert Christie, David Johnson and David Vaughn, all of Citrus, Inyo County, Cal.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD, Register.

DESERT LAND FINAL PROOF.

D E No. 414.

LAND OFFICE AT INDEPENDENCE, CAL., June 25, 1890.

Notice is hereby given that Charles Mulholland, of Independence, Inyo County, California, has filed notice of intent on to make proof on his desert land claim No. 414, for the N E ¼ of Sec. 32, Tp. 13 S., R 36 E., M D M, before the Register and Receiver at Independence, California, on Saturday, the 2d day of August 1890.

He names the following witnesses to prove the complete irrigation and reclamation of said land: Finlay McIver, Gilbert Christie, David Johnson and David Vaughn, all of Citrus, Inyo County, California.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD, Register.

POLITICAL ANNOUNCEMENTS.

All announcements under this head will be charged for at the uniform rate of Ten Dollars

For Superior Judge.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Superior Judge, subject to the action of the Republican County Convention.

GEORGE M. GILL.

For Superior Judge.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Superior Judge, Subject to the action of the Democratic county convention.

JOHN A. HANNAH.

For Superior Judge.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY DECLARE myself as a candidate for the office of Superior Judge, subject to the action of the Republican county convention.

A. R. CONKLIN.

For Sheriff.

ANNOUNCEMENNT IS HEREBY MADE that I respectfully declare myself as a candidate for the office of Sheriff, subject to the action of the Republican County Convention.

JOHN S. GORMAN.

For Treasurer.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Treasurer, subject to the action of the Democratic county convention. J. J. MOORE.

For Sheriff.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Sheriff, subject to the action of the Democratic Convention. BEN. T. WILLIAMS.

For Supervisor.

ANNOUNCEMENT IS HEREBY MADE that I will be a candidate for the office of Supervisor of the Third District subject to the action of the Republican Convention.

CHARLES A. WALTER.

For Assessor.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Assessor, subject to the action of the Democratic Convention. C. W. GARRETSON.

For Sheriff.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT I RESPECTFULLY declare myself as a candidate for the office of Sheriff, subject to the action of the Democratic Convention.

ALNEY I. McGEE.

For Assessor.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY DECLARE that I am a candidate for the office of Assessor of Inyo county, subject to the action of the Republican convention.

HENRY MELONE.

For County Clerk.

ANNOUNCEMENT IS HEREBY RESPECTFULLY made that I declare myself a candidate for the office of County Clerk, subject to the action of the Republican convention

JOHN N. YANDELL.

For County Clerk.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of County Clerk, subject to the action of the Democratic convention. P. H. MACK.

For County Clerk.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE that I am a candidate for County Clerk, subject to the action of the Republican County Convention. FRANK P. BLAISDELL.

HALE BROS. & CO.

Shopping By Mail.

Shopping by mail affords advantages to out-of-town people which are of special importance. They get advanced styles, large assortment and lower prices. HALE BROS & CO. make a specialty of this business. Their patronage extends from Arizona to Alkska, and their trade is constantly on the increase. Do you want to know why?

A Shopping Guide.

It requires no experience to order from us. Our Illustrated Catalogue, issued twice a year, gives illustrations and describes faithfully everything in our immense establishment. It is a book of 100 pages and shows you every thing that fashion demands. Though large and expensive we send it Free to all. It gives you prices that you little dream of.

Largest Importing House On The Coast.

HALE BROS. & CO.

Nos. 825 to 835 K St.,

Sacrameoto, Cal.

How They Treat You

They aim to give satisfaction in every instance. You can send to them for goods with the certainty that you will be treated with the same courtesy and fairness as though you were at their counters. They fill orders carefully, promptly, and take no unfair advantage of patrons. If you have not been satisfied with the way other firms have treated you, note the difference in sending to

HALE BROS. & CO.

What They Keep.

No matter what you need, you can get it at HALE BROS. & CO. An immense assortment of dry-goods is carried. Household Supplies, Notions Shoes and all kinds of weoring apparel for both sexes. Samples of all goods by the yard sent on application. It pays to deal with them because they buy more goods in the East and abroad than any retail house on the Coast. The evidence of it is seen in their prices.

JEWELRY, DIAMONDS, WATCHES.

Hyman Fredrick, Reno, Nev.

The attention of the people of Inyo and neighboring counties is respectfully invited to the

LARGEST AND BEST STOCK

of Watches, Diamonds, Ear and Finger Rings, Bracelets and all other kinds of Jewelry this side of San Francisco. Knives, Forks, Spoons, and other Table Ware of the Best quality.

PRICES DEFY OUTSIDE COMPETITION.

All repairs done promptly and in a workmanlike manner.

Address orders and packages to

HYMAN FREDRICK, Jeweler,

m30-tf RENO, NEVADA.

THE BEST VALUE

LEVI STRAUSS & CO'S

Celebrated Copper Riveted

OVERALLS AND SPRING BOTTOM PANTS

ENJOY A NATIONAL REPUTATION.

NONE GENUINE WITHOUT OUR TRADE MARK.

BEST SEWING! BEST FINISH! BEST FIT!

BEST MATERIALS!

The only kind made by White Labor.

FOR SALE EVERYWHERE

MISCELLANEOUS.

NORMAN HOUSE,

Independence, - - Cal.

New House.
New Furniture.
Low Rates.

Special attention will be given to secure the comfort of guests.

O. L. MAIRS, Prop.
feb12tf

MISCELLANEOUS.

BELL'S Flouring Mills,

A. N. BELL, Prop.

TRY BELL'S

EXTRA PATENT ROLLER FLOUR.

Having added Patent Rolls and other improvements to our Mills, I am now turning out Flour that is fully

Equal to the Best.

Corn, Oats and Barley Cracked on Short Notice.

A. N. BELL,

Independence, Cal.

BIG TIMBER ADVERTISEMENTS.

GIVEN & INGALLS,

- DEALERS IN -

FARM PRODUCE.

J. E. DUNLAP.

Harness Maker.

Harness of all kinds, from the lightest to the heaviest. Any kind of new work made promptly and of the best material. Repairing done on the shortest notice. A full line of saddles and harness.

Valley View Hotel.

O. H. Hill, Prop'r.

A New House Newly Furnished Throughout. Guests will receive every courtesy and attention.

NEVADA STABLE BISHOP.

Opposite Valley View Hotel, Main St

In the Livery Department nothing is kept but safe and good traveling carriage and saddle horses. Conveyances of all kinds first-class. Good attendance and the best of hay and grain for all animals boarding at the stable

S. P. SMITH, Prop.

BISHOP CREEK

BREWERY,

MUNZINGER, PHILLIPPAY & CO., Proprietors.

All the appliances and conveniences of First Class Brewery, including a beautiful grove for out-door parties.

Customers supplied on all points Of the C. & C. Railroad.

Send orders to

MUNZINGER, PHILLIPPAY & CO.

Bishop Creek, Cal.

F. E. Bosworth,

Watchmaker & Jeweler.

BISHOP, CAL.

Fine and Complicated Watch Repairing a Specialty.

Guns, Sewing Machines, Organs and Music Boxes Put in Perfect Condition and Warranted.

I Prefer to do all work at your house and will call if you will write to me at Bishop.

A NEW DEAL!

BISHOP CREEK

Livery. Feed & Sale Stable.

ROBERT O'NEIL, Prop'r.

Horses are boarded by the day, week or month. Stock bought and sold.

Bishop Creek, Cal., Nov. 20, 1883.

A. K. EUGLEY,

BIG PINE, INYO CO. CAL.

Dealer in GENERAL MERCHANDISE, GROCERIES MINERS Supplies

PROVISIONS, &c., &c., &c.

Deputy County Clerk.

A. K. EUGLEY,
Big Pine, Cal.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Railroad Time Table.

CARSON & COLORADO R R

TAKING EFFECT

Sunday, May 10th, 1890

STATIONS.	From Mound House. No. 1	To Mound House. No. 2.
	Leave—	Arrive—
Mound House	12:30 p. m	5.50 p. m
Dayton	1:00 p. m.	5:15 p. m.
Wabuska	3 55 p. m.	3 00 p. m
Hawthorne	6 50 p. m.	11:20 a. m.
Luning	7:30 p. m.	10:45 a. m.
Soda Springs	9:15 p. m.	9.05 a. m
Belleville	10:25 p. m.	7:45 a. m.
Candelaria	Ar. 11.10 p. m	Lv. 7.10 a. m
	No. 3.	No. 4.
	Leave—	Arrive—
Belleville	8 10 a. m	5:25 p. m
Benton	11.40 a m
Basalt Creek	1.50p. m.	11:00 a. m
Alvord	2.25 p. m	10 00 a. m
Independence	4 10 p. m.	8:30 a. m.
Lone Pine	5 00 p. m.	7.40 a. m
Keeler	Ar 5:45 p. m.	Lv. 7.00 a. m

Trains 1 and 2 run daily.
Train 3 runs Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays
Train 4 runs Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays

Passenger trains make close connection at Mound House with express trains of V. & T. R., which connect at Reno with east and west bound trains of Central Pacific Railroad.

Stage Connections:

AT HAWTHORNE with United States Stage Company's coaches for Aurora (26 miles); Bodie (35 miles); Lundy and Bridgeport.

AT LUNING (125 miles from Mound House) with Gilmer, Salsbury & Co's. tri weekly stages (leaving Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays) for Dunderberg, Grantsville and Belmont.

AT CANDELARIA with U. S. Stage Co's. coaches for Columbus (8 miles), Silver Peak, Montezuma, Alida Valley, Lead Mountain, etc.

H. M. YERINGTON,
General Superintendent.

R. J. LAWS, Assistant Superintendent.

D. A. BENDER,
General Freight and Passenger Agent.

The Newest Styles

OF

Fashionable Clothing Dry Goods, Ladies' Wears etc., etc.

AT

L. WOOL

CASH STORE

A small stock of fresh groceries & canned goods constantly renewed.

Fresh Produce, and Grain Flour, etc., constantly on hand.

CANDIES,
PEANUTS,
WALNUTS,
TOYS!

THE CASH STORE

Is Where You Get

WORTH OF YOUR MONEY

THOMAS & HILL,
DEALERS IN

GENERAL MERCHANDISE

BIG PINE, INYO COUNTY, CAL,

We keep constantly on hand goods of all kinds needed in a country home. We order only First-Class Goods and ask no more than a reasonable profit. Give us a trial.

THOMAS & HILL

INDEPENDENCE

SHAVING SALOON.

Shaving, Hair Cutting, etc., done in the best manner.

WM. H. HUFF, Prop'r

COLONEL QUARITCH, V.C.

By H. RIDER HAGGARD.

CHAPTER XLI.

IDA GOES TO MEET HER FATE.

Most people of a certain age and a certain degree of sensitiveness of disposition, in looking back down the vista of their lives, whereon memory's melancholy light plays in fitful flashes like the alternate glow of a censer swung in the twilight of a tomb, can recall some one night of peculiar mental agony. One way or another it has been with most of us, that long night of utter woe, and all will own that it is a ghastly thing to face.

And so Ida de la Molle had found it. The shriek of the great gale rushing on that Christmas eve round the stout Norman towers was not more strong than the breath of the despair that shook her life. She could not sleep—who could sleep on such a night, the herald of such a morrow? The wail and roar of the wind, the crash of falling trees, and the rattle of flying stones seemed to form a fit accompaniment to the turmoil of her mind.

She rose, and putting on her dressing gown, went to the window, and in the dim light watched the trees gigantically tossing in a great struggle for their life. An oak and a birch were within her view. The oak stood the gale out—for awhile. Presently there came an awful gust and beat upon it. It would not bend, and the tough roots would not give, so beneath the weight of the breath of its destiny the big tree broke in two like a straw, and its spreading top was whirled into the moat. But the birch gave and bent; it bent till its delicate filaments lay upon the wind like a woman's streaming hair, and the fierceness of the gust wore itself away and spared it.

"See what happens to those who stand up and defy their fate," said Ida to herself, with a bitter laugh. "The birch has the best of it."

Ida rose and closed the shutters; the sight of the storm affected her already strained nerves almost beyond bearing. She began to walk up and down the big room, flitting like a ghost from end to end and back again, and again back. What could she do? What should she do? Her fate was upon her; she could no longer resist the inevitable—she must marry him. And yet her whole soul revolted from the act with an overwhelming fierceness which astonished even herself. She had known two girls who had married people whom they did not like, being at the time, or pretending to be, attached to somebody else, and she had observed that they accommodated themselves to their fate with considerable ease. But it was not so with her; she was fashioned of another clay, and it made her faint to think of what was before her. And yet the prospect was one on which she could expect little sympathy. Her own father, although personally he disliked the man whom she must marry, was clearly filled with amazement that she should prefer Col. Quaritch, middle aged, poor and plain, to Edward Cossey—handsome, young, and rich as Croesus. He could not comprehend or measure the extraordinary gulf which her passion dug between the two. If, therefore, this was so with her own father, how would it be with the rest of the world?

She paced her bedroom till she was tired, and then, in an access of despair which was sufficiently distressing in a person of her reserved and stately manner, flung herself, weeping and sobbing, upon her knees, and resting her aching head upon the bed, prayed as she had never prayed before that this cup might pass from her.

She did not know—how should she?—that at that very moment her prayer was being answered, and that her lover was then, even as she prayed, lifting the broken stone and revealing the hoard of ruddy gold. But so it was, she prayed in despair and agony of mind, and the prayer, carried on the wild wings of the night, brought a fulfillment with it. Not in vain were her tears and supplications, for even now the deliverer delved among

The dust and awful treasures of the dead, and even now the light of her coming happiness was breaking on her tortured night as the first cold gleams of the Christmas morning were breaking over the stormy fury of the void without.

And then, chilled and numb in body and mind, she crept into her bed again, and at last lost herself in sleep.

By half past 9 o'clock, when Ida came down to breakfast, the gale had utterly vanished, though its footprints were visible enough in shattered trees, unthatched stacks, and ivy torn in knotty sheets from the old walls it clothed. It would have been difficult to recognize in the cold and stately lady who stood at the dining room window, noting the havoc and waiting for her father to come in, the lovely, passionate, disheveled woman who some few hours before had thrown herself upon her knees praying to God for the succor she could not win from man. Women, like nature, have many moods, and many countenances to express them. The hot fit had passed, and the cold fit was on her now. Her face, except for the dark hollows round the eyes, was white as winter's snow, and her heart was cold as winter's ice.

Presently her father came in.

"What a gale!" he said, "what a gale! Upon my word, I began to think that the old place was coming down about our ears, and the wreck among the trees is dreadful. I don't think there can have been such a wind since the time of King Charles I, when the top of the tower was blown clean off the church—you remember I was showing you the entry about it in the registers the other day, the one signed by the parson and old Sir James de la Molle. The boy who has just come up tells me that he hears that poor old Mrs. Massey's summer house on the top of Dead Man's Mount has been blown away, which is a good riddance for Col. Quaritch. Why, what's the matter with you? How pale you look!"

"The gale kept me awake; I got very little sleep," answered Ida.

"And no wonder. Well, my dear, you haven't wished me a merry Christmas yet. Goodness knows we want one badly enough! There has not been much merriment at Honham of late years."

"A merry Christmas to you, father," she said.

"Thank you, my love; the same to you. You have got most of your Christmases before you, which is more than I have. God bless me, it only seems like yesterday since the big bunch of holly tied to the hook in the ceiling there fell down on the breakfast table and smashed all the cups, and yet it is more than sixty years ago. Dear me, how angry my poor dear mother was! She never could bear the crockery to be broken—it was a little failing of your grandmother's," and he laughed more heartily than Ida had heard him do for some weeks.

She made no answer, but busied herself about the tea. Presently glancing up, she saw her father's face change. The worn expression came back upon it, and he lost his buoyant bearing. Evidently a new thought had struck him, and she was in no great doubt as to what it was.

"We had better get on with breakfast," he said. "You know that Cossey is coming up at 10 o'clock."

"Ten o'clock?" she said, faintly.

"Yes. I told him 10, so that we could go to church afterward if we wished to. Of course, Ida, I am still in the dark as to what you have made up your mind to do, but whatever it is, I thought that he had better once and for all hear your final decision from your own lips. If, however, you feel yourself at liberty to tell it to me as your father, I shall be glad to hear it."

She lifted her head and looked him full in the face and then paused. He had a cup of tea in his hand, and it was held in the air half way to his mouth, while his whole face showed the overmastering anxiety with which he was awaiting her reply.

"Make your mind easy, father," she said. "I am going to marry Mr. Cossey."

He put down the cup in such a fashion that he spilled have of the tea, most of it over his own clothes, without even noticing it, and then turned away his face.

"Well," he said, "of course it is not my affair, or at least only indirectly so, but I must say, my love, I congratulate you on the decision which you have come to. I quite understand that you have been in some little difficulty about the matter; young women often have been before you and will be again; but to be frank, Ida, that Quaritch business was not at all suitable, either in age or fortune, or in anything else. Yes, although Cossey is not everything that one might wish, on the whole I congratulate you heartily."

"Oh, pray don't," broke in Ida, almost in a cry. "Whatever you do, pray don't congratulate me!"

Her father turned round again and looked at her. But Ida's face had already recovered its calm, and he could make nothing of it.

"I don't quite understand you," he said, "these things are generally considered matters for congratulations."

But for all he might say and all that he might urge in his mind to the contrary, he did, more or less, understand what her outburst meant. He could not but know that the exclamation was the last outcry of a broken spirit. In his heart he realized then, if he had never clearly realized it before, that this proposed marriage was a thing hateful to his daughter, and his conscience pricked him sorely. And yet—and yet—it was but a woman's fancy—a passing fancy! She would become reconciled to the inevitable as women do, and when her children came she would grow accustomed to her sorrow, and her trouble would be forgotten in their laughter. And if not—well, it was but one woman's life which would be affected, and the very existence of his race, and the very cradle that had nursed them from century to century, were now at stake. Was all this to be at the mercy of a girl's fancy? No! Let the individual suffer.

So he argued. And so at his age and in his circumstances most of us would argue also; and, perhaps considering all things, we should be right. For in this world personal desires must continually give way to the welfare of others. Did they not do so, our system of society could not endure.

No more was said upon the subject. Ida made pretense of eating a piece of toast; the squire mopped up the tea upon his clothes, and then drank some more.

Meanwhile the remorseless seconds crept on. It wanted but five minutes to the hour, and the hour would, she well knew, bring the man with it.

The five minutes passed slowly and in silence. Both her father and herself realized the nature of the impending situation, but neither of them spoke of it. Ah, there was one sound of wheels upon the gravel! So it had come.

Ida felt like death itself. Her pulse sank and fluttered; her vital forces seemed to cease their work.

Another two minutes passed, and then the door opened and the parlor maid came in.

"Mr Cossey, if you please, sir."

"Oh," said the squire. "Where is he?"

"In the vestibule, sir."

"Very good. Tell him I will be there in a minute."

The maid went.

"Now, Ida," said her father, "I suppose we had better get this business over."

"Yes," she answered, rising; "I am ready."

And gathering up her energies, she passed out to meet her fate.

CHAPTER XLII.

GEORGE IS SEEN TO LAUGH.

Ida and her father reached the vestibule to find Edward Cossey standing with his face to the mantelpiece and nervously toying with some curiosities upon it. He was, as usual, dressed with great care, and his face, though pale and worn from the effects of agitation of mind, looked, if anything, handsomer than ever. As soon as he heard them coming, which, owing to his partial deafness he did not do till they were quite close to him, he turned round with a start, and a sudden flush of color came upon his face.

The squire shook hands with him in a solemn sort of way, like people do when they meet at a funeral, and Ida barely touched his outstretched fingers with her own.

A few random remarks followed about the weather, which really for once in a way was equal to the conversational strain put upon it, but at length these died away, and there came an awful pause. It was broken at length by the squire, who, standing with his back to the fire, his eyes fixed upon the wall opposite, after much humming and hawing, delivered himself thus:

"I understand, Mr. Cossey, that you have come to hear my daughter's final decision on the matter of the proposal of marriage which you have made and renewed to her. Now, of course, this is a very important question, very important indeed, and it is one with which I cannot presume even to seem to interfere. Therefore I shall, without comment, leave my daughter to speak for herself."

"One moment before she does so," Cossey interrupted, drawing indeed but a poor augury of success from Ida's icy looks. "I have come to renew my offer and to take my final answer, and I beg Miss de la Molle to consider how deep and sincere must be that affection which has endured through so many rebuffs. I know, or at the least I fear, that I do not occupy the place in her feelings that I should wish to, but I look to time to change this, at any rate, I am willing to take my chance. As regards money, I repeat the offer that I have already made"——

"There, I should not say too much about that," broke in the squire, impatiently.

"Oh, why not?" said Ida, in bitter sarcasm. "Mr. Cossey knows it is one of the best arguments with our sex. I presume that, as a preliminary to the renewal of the engagement, the persecution of my father which is being carried on by your lawyer will cease."

"Absolutely."

"And if the engagement is not renewed, the money will, of course, be called in?"

"My lawyers advise that it should be," he answered, sullenly; "but, see here, Ida, you may make your own terms about money. Marriage, after all, is practically a matter of bargaining, and I am not going to stand out about the price."

"You are really most generous," went on Ida, in the same bitter tone, the irony of which made her father wince, for he understood her mood better than did her lover. "I only regret that I cannot appreciate the generosity more than I do. But it is at least in my power to give you the return which you deserve. So I can no longer hesitate, but once and for all"——

And she stopped dead, and stared at the glass door as though she saw a ghost. Both her father and Edward Cossey followed the motion of her eyes, and this was what they saw: Up the steps came Col. Quaritch and George. Both were pale and weary looking, but the former was at least clean. As for George, this could not be said. His head was still adorned with the red night cap, his hands were cut and dirty, and on his clothes was an unlimited supply of incrusted filth.

"What the dickens"—began the squire, and at that moment George, who was leading, knocked at the door.

"You can't come in now," roared the squire. "Don't you see that we are engaged?"

"But we must come in, squire, begging your pardon," answered George, with determination, as he opened the door. "We've got that to say as won't keep."

"I tell you that it must keep, sir," said the old gentleman, working himself into a rage. "Am I not to be allowed a moment's privacy in my own house? I wonder at your conduct, Col. Quaritch, in forcing your presence upon me when I tell you that it is not wanted."

"I am sure that I apologize, Mr de la Molle," began the colonel, utterly taken aback, "but what I have to say is"——

"The best way that you can apologize is by withdrawing," answered the squire, with majesty. "I shall be most happy to hear what you have to say on another occasion."

"Oh, squire, squire, don't be such a fule, begging your pardon for the word," said George, in exasperation. "Don't go a-knocking of your head agin a brick wall."

"Will you be off, sir?" roared his master in a voice that made the walls shake.

By this time Ida had recovered herself. She seemed to feel that her lover had something to say that concerned her deeply—probably she read it in his eyes.

"Father," she said, raising her voice, "I won't have Col. Quaritch turned away from the door like that. If you will not admit him, I will go outside and hear what it is that he has to say."

In his heart the squire held Ida in some awe. He looked at her, and saw that her eyes were flashing and her breast heaving, and he gave way.

"Oh, very well, since my daughter insists on it, pray come in," and he bowed. "If such an intrusion falls in with your ideas of decency, it is not for me to complain."

"I accept your invitation," answered Harold, looking very angry, "because I have something to say which you must hear, and hear at once. No, thank you, I will stand. Now, Mr. de la Molle, it is this, wonderful as it may seem. It has been my fortune to discover the treasure hidden by Sir James de la Molle in the year 1643."

There was a universal gasp of astonishment.

"What?" said the squire. "Why, I thought that the whole thing was a myth."

"No, that it ain't, sir," said George, with a melancholy smile, "'cos I've seen it."

Ida had sunk into a chair.

"What is the amount?" she asked, in a low eager voice.

"I have been unable to calculate exactly but, speaking roughly, it cannot be much under fifty thousand pounds, estimated on the value of the gold alone. Here is a specimen of it," and Harold pulled out a handful of rials and other coins, and poured them on to the table.

Ida hid her face in her hand, and Edward Cossey, realizing what this unexpected development of events might mean for him, began to tremble.

"I should not allow myself to be too much elated, Mr. de la Molle," he said, with a sneer; "for even if this tale be true, it is treasure trove and belongs to the crown."

"Ah," said the squire, "I never thought of that."

"But I have," said the colonel, quietly. "If I remember right, the last of the original De la Molles left a will in which he specially devised this treasure hidden by his father to your ancestor. That this is the identical treasure I am fortunately in a position to prove by this parchment;" and he laid the writing that he had found with the gold upon the table.

"Quite right—quite right," said the squire, "that will take it out of the custom."

"Perhaps the solicitor to the treasury may hold a different opinion," said Cossey, with another sneer.

Just then Ida took her hand from her face. There was a dewy look about her eyes, and the last ripples of a happy smile lingered round the corners of her mouth.

"Now, that we have heard what Col. Quaritch had to say," she said, in her softest voice, and addressing her father, "there is no reason why we should not finish our business with Mr. Cossey."

Here Harold and George turned to go, but she waved them back imperiously, and began speaking before any one could interfere, taking up her speech where she had broken it off when she caught sight of the colonel and George coming up the steps.

"I can no longer hesitate," she said, "but once and for all I decline to marry you, Mr. Cossey, and I hope that I shall never see your face again."

At this announcement the bewildered squire put his hand to his head. Edward Cossey staggered visibly and rested himself against the table, while George murmured, audibly, "That's a good job."

"Listen," said Ida, rising from her chair, her eyes flashing as the thought of all the shame and agony she had undergone rose in her mind—"listen, Mr. Cossey"—and she pointed her finger at him—"this is the history of our connection. Some months ago I was so foolish, taking you for a gentleman, as to ask your help in the matter of the mortgages which your bank was calling in. You then practically made terms that if it should at any time be your wish I should become engaged to you; and I, having no option, accepted. Then, in the interval, while it was inconvenient to you to enforce your rights, I gave my affection elsewhere. But when you, having deserted the lady who stood in your way—no, do not interrupt me. I know it, I know it all, I know it from her own lips—came forward and claimed my promise, I was forced to assent. Then a loop hole of escape presented itself, and I availed myself of it. What followed? You again became possessed of power over my father and this place, you insulted the man I loved, you resorted to every expedient that the law would allow to torture my father and myself. You set your lawyers upon us like dogs upon a hare, you held ruin over us, and again and again you offered me money, as much money as I wished, if only I would sell myself to you. And then you bided your time, leaving despair to do its work. I saw the toils closing round us. I knew that if I did not yield my father would be driven from his home in his old age, and that the place he loved better than his life would pass to strangers—would pass to you—— No, father, do not stop me, I will speak my mind. And at last I determined that, cost what it might, I would yield. Whether I could have carried out my determination God only knows. I almost think that I should have killed myself upon my marriage day. I made up my mind. Not five minutes ago the very words were upon my lips that would have sealed my fate, when deliverance came. And now go. I have done with you. Your money shall be paid to you, capital and interest, down to the last farthing. I tender back my price, and knowing you for what you are, I—I despise you. That is all I have to say."

"Well, if that beant a master one," ejaculated George, aloud.

Ida, who had never looked more beautiful than she did in this moment of passion, turned to seat herself, but the tension of her feelings and the torrent of her wrath and eloquence had been too much for her, and she would have fallen had not Harold, who had been listening, amazed, to this overpowering outburst of nature, run up and caught her in his arms.

As for Edward Cossey, he had shrunk back involuntarily beneath the volume of her scorn till he stood with his back against the paneled wall. His face was white as a sheet; despair and fury shone in his large dark eyes. Never had he desired this woman more fiercely than he did now in the moment when he knew that she had escaped him forever. In a sense he was to be pitied, for passion tore his heart in twain. For a moment he stood thus, and then, with a spring rather than a step, he advanced across the room till he was face to face with Harold, who, with Ida half fainting still in his arms and her head upon his shoulder, was standing on the further side of the great open grate.

"—— you!" he said, "I owe this to you, you half pay adventurer," and he lifted his arm as though to strike him.

"Come, none of that!" said the squire, speaking for the first time. "I will have no brawling here."

"No," put in George, edging his long form between the two, "and begging your pardon, sir, don't you go a-calling of better men than yourself adventurers. At any rate, if the colonel is an adventurer, he has adventured to some purpose, as is easy to see;" and he pointed to Ida lying in his arms.

(To be Continued.)

Ortezias, who defrauded the Spanish Government out of $600,000, and was extradited from the United States, having been captured at New York, attempted suicide while on the way to Havana.

A MERCHANT'S DECISION AFTER TRIAL.

Sierra Chemical Co.

Gentlemen:—When I started in to give your Great Sierra Kidney and Liver Cure a trial, I supposed it was like all other advertised preparations, put up to make money and of no use. Now since I have taken it my decision is that it is the best remedy in the world for kidney and liver disorders. It has done me so much good that I will forever praise it and gladly recommend it to all suffering with general disorders of the body.

Very truly yours,

P. J. Adams,

Firm of Reynold & Adams, San Francisco, California.

That Would Be Proof—Census Enumerator (proceeding with questions)—Are you weak-minded? Citizen—I would be if I told you all my private affairs

WON A FORTUNE.

Bought Lottery Tickets for Thirteen Months and at last Struck it Rich.

Another lucky young Philadelphian has succeeded in winning a fortune for one dollar in the Louisiana State Lottery. The fortunate young man is William H. Scheubel, who boards with his sister, Mrs. August Vollmer, the widow of the late well-known brewer, at 520 Jefferson street.

He was the fortunate possessor of one-twentieth part of ticket No. 45,356, which drew the capital prize of $300,000 in this month's drawing. Mr. Scheubel is a young man, but twenty-two years of age, and is a recent graduate of Girard College.

He is employed as a shipping clerk in the bottling department of John F. Betz & Son's brewery, whose mammoth establishment occupies almost the entire block bounded by Callowhill, Crown, Willow and Fifth streets. An Item reporter called on him this morning at his place of business and found him busily engaged in his work.

"I see you have not allowed your good fortune to turn your head," said the reporter.

"No, indeed," said Mr. Scheubel. "I will not allow it to do that. I intend to keep on with my work just as if I had not received the money."

Upon being asked how he came to invest in the lottery Mr. Scheubel said: "I had read of a great many poor people who had been fortunate enough to strike it rich, through the lottery, and about a year ago I thought I would invest myself. I sent a dollar every month, without striking anything for twelve months. This month was the thirteenth time I sent, and you know the result.

"By the way, I often heard it said that thirteen was an unlucky number. My luck will certainly turn the feeling the other way. I shall always believe in it hereafter."

"Have you decided as to how you will invest the money," asked the reporter.

"No, not as yet, but you can rest assured, I shall make good use of it," was the reply.

Mr. Scheubel is a very pleasant young man, highly spoken of by his employers, and no one begrudges him the good fortune that has fallen to him.—Philadelphia (Pa.) Item, May 23.

Pajamas Again—Lady (to deaf old gentleman) Do you like bananas? D. O. G.—Well, I must say I like the old-fashioned night-clothes better.

WHAT THEY ARE GOOD FOR.

Brandreth's Pills are the best medicine known.

First—They are purely vegetable, in fact a medicated food.

Second—The same dose always produces the same effect—other purgatives require increased doses and finally cease acting.

Third—They purify the blood.

Fourth—They invigorate the digestion and cleanse the stomach and bowels.

Fifth—They stimulate the liver and carry off vitiated bile and other depraved secretions.

The first two or three doses tell the story. The skin becomes clear, the eye bright, the mind active, digestion is restored, costiveness cured, the animal vigor is recruited and all decay arrested. Brandreth's Pills are sold in every drug and medicine store, either plain or sugar-coated.

No language can express the feelings of a deaf mute who steps on a tack in a dark room.

SELECT PULLMAN TOURIST EXCURSION—N. E. A. EXCURSION.

This grand excursion to St. Paul leaves San Francisco July 1st, via the Shasta route and Northern Pacific Railroad, in Pullman tourist cars, completely furnished. Tourists rates, San Francisco to St. Paul, $42.00. Round trip six months' first-class tickets, with choice of routes, on return, $65. This excursion will be under the personal supervision of Mr. Charles H. Murphy, County Superintendent of Schools, Visalia.

For descriptive circular and illustrated literature of the route apply to T. K. Stateler, 618 Market street.

The commencement of falling in love is often traced to the sweet girl graduate's commencement season.

AN ELEGANT PACKAGE OF FINE CARDS.

Including 15 rare novelties, shapes and artistic imported oleographic and chromatic cards. This large and beautiful collection sent by mail to any one who will do this:—Buy a box of the genuine Dr. C. McLane's Celebrated Liver Pills from any druggist, price 25 cents, and mail us the outside wrapper with your address, plainly written, and 4 cents in stamps. The genuine McLane's Pills are prepared only by Fleming Bros., Pittsburg, Pa., and have been in constant use for over sixty years. They are superior to all others in purity and effectiveness. A certain cure for indigestion and sick headache. Address, Fleming Bros., Pittsburg, Pa.

The Misunderstood Tramp—"Why don't you go to work?" "I am workin' mum. I'm workin' this town for all its worth."

A HAUNTED HOUSE.

This body of ours has been likened to a tenement. It often has a haunted apartment—the stomach, scared by the eldrich sprite, dyspepsia, digestion flies and refuses to return. What can break the spell, what can raise the ban laid upon the unhappy organs? We answer unhesitatingly, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, and we are warranted in the response by the recorded testimony of myriads, covering a period of over a third of a century. A course of the Bitters, begun in any stage of the affliction, and persistently followed, will terminate in cure positive, not partial. The Bitters restores tone to the epigastric nerve, renews and purifies the juices exuding from the cellular tissue that act upon the food digestively, expels bile from the stomach and the blood, and promotes a regular habit of body. Malaria, kidney complaint, nervousness, rheumatism and neuralgia give way to this medicine.

Seven little missionaries—
Horrible their fate—
Cannibals picked clean their bones,
Then they were ate.

Peculiar

That Hood's Sarsaparilla does possess curative power Peculiar to Itself is conclusively shown by the wonderful cures it has effected, unsurpassed in the history of medicine. This absolute merit it possesses by reason of the fact that it is prepared by a Combination, Proportion and Process Peculiar to Hood's Sarsaparilla, known to no other medicine, and by which the full medicinal power of all the ingredients used is retained. Hood's Sarsaparilla is a highly concentrated extract of Sarsaparilla, Dandelion, Mandrake, Dock, Juniper Berries, and other well known vegetable remedies. It has won its way to the leading place among medicines by its own intrinsic, undisputed merit, and has now a larger sale than any other similar preparation in the country. If you have never taken Hood's Sarsaparilla, a fair trial will convince you of its merits.

To Itself

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Sold by all druggists. $1; six for $5. Prepared only by C. I. HOOD & CO., Lowell, Mass.

100 Doses One Dollar

An Appropriate Costume—Elderly and Dignified Personage—What kind of a dress should a superannuated minister assume? Clerk—Might I suggest retire robes?

SURE CURE FOR PILES.

Sure cure for blind, bleeding and itching Piles. One box has cured the worst cases of ten years' standing. No one need suffer ten minutes after using Kirk's German Pile Ointment. It absorbs tumors, allays the itching, acts as a poultice, gives relief. Dr. Kirk's German Pile Ointment is prepared only for Piles and itching of the private parts, and nothing else. Every box is warranted. Sold by Druggists and sent by mail on receipt of price, $1.00 per box. J. J. Mack & Co., Wholesale Agents, San Francisco.

Strategy—"Time will prove my client innocent!" cried Squilljig. "Your argument carries some wait with it," observed the Court. And Squilljig laughed so heartily that he won his case.

CONSUMPTION SURELY CURED.

To the Editor—Please inform your readers that I have a positive remedy for the above named disease. By its timely use thousands of hopeless cases have been permanently cured. I shall be glad to send two bottles of my remedy free to any of your readers who have consumption if they will send me their express and post-office address. Respectfully,

T. A. Slocum, M. C., 181 Pearl St., New York.

Surface Indications—"Look out, man! That stranger's a rough man to deal with." "How do you know?" "He talks smooth."

Six Novels Free, will be sent by Cragin & Co., Philada., Pa., to any one in the U. S. or Canada, postage paid, upon receipt of 25 Dobbins' Electric Soap wrappers. See list of novels on circulars around each bar. Soap for sale by all grocers.

When a man succeeds in saving $10,000 he regards himself as a rich man, but after that he gets poorer all the time.

For allaying Hoarseness and Irritation of the Throat, it is daily proved that "Brown's Bronchial Troches" are a mild remedy yet very efficacious.

Very few girls marry "the best man." They generally take "the bridegroom for better or worse."

A pocket pin-cushion free to smokers of "Tansill's Punch" 5c. Cigars.

Honesty may not always pay phenomenal dividends, but it never creates deficiencies or overbooms the foreign passenger traffic.

Beware of imitations of the celebrated Seal of North Carolina Plug Cut Tobacco.

When in San Francisco stop at Straub's Restaurant and Saloon, 3, 7 and 329 Bush Street. Best to eat and drink. No fancy prices.

Try Germea for Breakfast.

INFANTILE SKIN AND SCALP DISEASES CURED BY Cuticura

Every humor of the skin and scalp of infancy and childhood, whether torturing, disfiguring, itching, burning, scaly, crusted, pimply, or blotchy, with loss of hair, and every impurity of the blood, whether simple, scrofulous, or hereditary, is speedily, permanently, and economically cured by the Cuticura Remedies, consisting of Cuticura, the great Skin Cure, Cuticura Soap, an exquisite Skin Purifier and Beautifier, and Cuticura Resolvent, the new Blood Purifier and greatest of Humor Remedies, when the best physicians and all other remedies fail. Parents, save your children years of mental and physical suffering.

Sold everywhere. Price, Cuticura, 50c.; Soap, 25c.; Resolvent, $1. Prepared by Potter Drug and Chemical Corporation, Boston.

Send for "How to Cure Skin Diseases."

Baby's skin and scalp purified and beautified by Cuticura Soap.

Kidney pains, backache, and muscular rheumatism relieved in one minute by the Cuticura Anti-Pain Plaster, 25c.

To cure Biliousness, Sick Headache, Constipation, Malaria, Liver Complaints, take the safe and certain remedy. SMITH'S

BILE BEANS

Use the SMALL SIZE (40 little beans to the bottle). They are the most convenient; suit all ages. Price of either size, 25 cents per bottle.

KISSING at 7, 17, 70; photo-gravure, panel size of this picture for 4 cents (coppers or stamps).

J. P. SMITH & CO.,
Makers of "Bile Beans." St. Louis, Mo.

DOBBINS' ELECTRIC SOAP

The Best Family Soap in the World.

Dobbins' Electric Soap is cheaper for you to use, if you follow directions, than any other soaps would be if given to you, for by its use clothes are saved. Clothes cost more than soap.

Don't you want to save money, clothes, time, labor, fuel, and health? All these can be saved if you will try Dobbins' Electric Soap. We say "try," knowing if you try it once, you will always use it." Have your grocer order it.

H. M. BISSELL & CO.

219 Front St., San Francisco, Cal.

GENERAL AGENTS.

BEECHAM'S PILLS
(THE GREAT ENGLISH REMEDY.)
Cure BILIOUS and Nervous ILLS.
25cts. a Box.
OF ALL DRUGGISTS.

THE SMOKER
Will have no other Tobacco
Who once tries
"SEAL OF NORTH CAROLINA"
Plug Cut.
This is the secret of its Immense sale.

YOU ARE, PERHAPS, SUFFERING from NERVE WASTE or a weakness caused by bad practices when a boy or young man; or some Private Disease, Kidney or Bladder Trouble. If so consult us at once. Be warned in time. The above diseases, WHEN NEGLECTED, or treated by an unskilled person, often cause more terrible diseases still, which frequently destroy life itself. Free advice; no publicity. Call or address Drs. B. & B., Ex-Army Surgeons and Specialists, 523 Kearny St., S. F. Patients Cured at Home.

ST. JACOBS OIL

Cures Backache. Backache. Backache.

Martinez, Cal., October 2, 1888.

I could hardly walk or lie down from lameback; suffered several weeks. St. Jacobs Oil permanently cured me, other remedies having failed to do so. FRED. HITTMAN.

Cloverdale, Ind., Feb. 8, 1887.

From a bad cold pains settled in my back and I suffered greatly; confined to bed and could hardly move or turn. I tried St. Jacobs Oil, which cured me. I do not fear recurrence. MRS. P. M. REINHEIMER.

Plump and rosy are the babies living upon

LACTATED FOOD

Physicians prescribe it.
Invalids use and relish it.

A picture of five charming babies, also valuable pamphlet, sent on application.

Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt.

ANY ONE CAN DYE DIAMOND DYES

It's easy to dye with Diamond Dyes Because so simple.

It's safe to dye with Diamond Dyes Because always reliable.

It's economy to dye with Diamond Dyes Because the strongest.

You ought to dye with Diamond Dyes Because they are best.

Our new book, "Successful Home Dyeing," giving full directions for all uses of Diamond Dyes, sent free on application. Diamond Dyes are sold everywhere, or any color mailed on receipt of price, 10 cents. Wells, Richardson & Co., Burlington, Vt.

CHICHESTER'S ENGLISH
PENNYROYAL PILLS
RED CROSS DIAMOND BRAND.

Safe and always reliable. Ladies, ask Druggists for Diamond Brand, in red, metallic boxes, sealed with blue ribbon. Take no other. All pills in pasteboard boxes, pink wrappers, are dangerous counterfeits. Send 4c. (stamps) for particulars, testimonials and "Relief for Ladies," in letter, by return mail. Name Paper. Chichester Chem'l Co., Madison Sq., Phila., Pa.

Cures in 1 TO 5 DAYS. Guaranteed not to cause Stricture. Made only by the Big G Chemical Co. Cincinnati, Ohio.

I prescribe and fully endorse Big G as the only specific for the certain cure of this disease. G. H. INGRAHAM, M. D., Amsterdam, N. Y.

We have sold Big G for many years, and it has given the best of satisfaction. T. R. DYCHE & CO., Chicago, Ill.

Sold by Druggists $1.00.

5 TON SCALES $66 Beam Box Tare Beam ALL SIZES Send for Terms

JONES OF BINGHAMTON N. Y. HE PAYS THE FREIGHT

FOR MEN ONLY!

VIGOR AND STRENGTH For Lost or FAILING MANHOOD; General and NERVOUS DEBILITY; Weakness of Body and Mind, Effects of Errors or Excesses in Older Young. Robust, Noble MANHOOD fully Restored. How to enlarge and Strengthen Weak, UNDEVELOPED ORGANS & PARTS OF BODY. Positively unfailing. HOME TREATMENT—Benefits in a day. Men testify from 50 States and Foreign Countries. Write them. Descriptive Book, explanation and proofs mailed (sealed) free. Address ERIE MEDICAL CO., BUFFALO, N. Y.

STEINWAY. KNABE, STEINWAY & BACH, Gabler, Roenisch Pianos; Burdett Organs, Band Instruments. Largest stock of Sheet Music and Books. Bands supplied at Eastern Prices. MATTHIAS GRAY CO., 206 Post Street, San Francisco.

S. F. N. U. No. 418. New Series No. 25

Statement, Jan. 1st, 1890.

R. H. McDonald PRES't. F. V. McDonald, CASHIER.

ESTABLISHED 1863. Oldest Chartered Bank on the Pacific Coast.

PACIFIC BANK

Capital Stock $1,000,000.00.
Surplus $ 750,000.00.
Av. Resources $4,500,000.00

We have just added another $50,000 to our surplus fund and thanking our friends and the public for past favors we respectfully ask a continuance of the same.

San Francisco, Cal. R. H. McDonald, Prest.

Deposits Received from $1 upwards.

Money Saved is Money Earned. Deposit in a Good Savings Bank.

PEOPLE'S HOME SAVINGS BANK

808 Market St., cor. 4th St. IN FLOOD BUILDING San Francisco, California.

Guarantee Capital, $1,000,000

Interest apportioned from date of deposit. Deposits from any part of the Pacific Coast States may be sent by registered letter, post office money order, bank draft or express.

Copy of By-laws and list of shareholders in Guarantee Capital sent free on application.

The People's Home Savings Bank has exceptional facilities for safe, profitable and satisfactory investment of funds at good rates of interest.

Thankful for past favors and asking for continuance of the same. Respectfully,

Columbus Waterhouse, Prest.

OF CORSETS TRUE

That we have secured the biggest consignment of Corsets ever offered by any store on the Coast—from one of the largest factories in the world, and one of the most popular. To further introduce their merits everywhere they make us special terms. We offer, by mail, postage paid, a regular $15 Corset for $1.06; a $12 Corset for 82 cents; a good serviceable Corset 55 cents; a regular $1.25 Ladies' Vest, 78 cents; above are sizes 18 to 30, colors drab, grey or ecru. Misses' 75 cent Waists, 18 to 26, for 53 cents. The reason for this is the makers believe you will always use this Corset if you try one. In Working, Driving or Sunday Gloves for men we lead all others. Have closed out an entire factory at 60 cents on the dollar, and offer them from 33 cents up. Every kind and price; tell what work you do, give size and price, and we guarantee to suit. Mailed free. Address Smith's Cash Store, 118 Front Street, San Francisco, Cal.

USE NEW WELLINGTON COAL.

MR. JOHN W. FURBUSH

An Army Veteran,

OF WAKEFIELD,

who has probably suffered more than any man or woman in America to-day. Taken sick while in the Army, he has endured untold agonies since. Describing his first symptoms he said: "My head ached and my appetite was poor. I felt a faintness at the pit of the stomach, and a bad taste in my mouth, while my skin was sometimes hot and sometimes cold. I next felt pains in my back and around the lower portion of my body, and noticed a peculiar odor and color in the water I passed, which was scanty at one time and free at others. Sometimes it pained me to void it, and again it was almost impossible to do so at all. Finally I began to pass clear blood accompanied with the greatest strain and agony."

No less than 20 eminent physicians attended Mr. Furbush at various times, but not one of them could help him. He was near death's door. And yet he says: "I am alive and well today, wholly through the wonderful power of Hunt's Remedy which took me from the verge of the grave."

This Great Remedy absolutely cures all Kidney, Liver and Urinary Diseases.

For Sale by all Dealers.

C. N. CRITTENTON, General Agent.

115 Fulton St., N. Y.

Send for pamphlet to the Hunt's Remedy Co., Providence, R. I.

BEHOLD

I am the Spirit of Health,

And my message is to the Sick. I crown with a indeless wreath, those who obey my laws and avail themselves of my counsels. The flowers that I give do not wither, and the fragrance of my roses is perpetual. I bring BLOOM to the cheek—STRENGTH to the BODY—JOY to the HEART. The TALISMAN with which I work never fails. Vast numbers have felt its power, and testified to its virtues. It is

DUJARDIN'S

LIFE ESSENCE!

This wonder of modern chemistry is pronounced to be unequaled for its power of replenishing the vitality of the body, by supplying all the essential constituents of the Blood, Brain and Nerve Substance. After taking the Life Essence the nervous symptoms disappear, as well as the functional derangement.

Sleep becomes calm and refreshing. At the same time the patent gains flesh, the features presenting a striking improvement; the face becomes fuller, the lips red, the eyes brighter, and the skin clear and healthy. The hair of the head and beard grows and acquires strength, and also the nails, showing the importance of the action of the medicine on the organs of nutrition. It gives back to the human structure in a suitable form, the lively, animating element of life which has been wasted, and exerts an important influence directly on the brain, spinal marrow and nervous system of a nutritive, tonic and invigorating character, thereby checking all wasting of the vital fluid and the more exhausting processes of life, maintaining that buoyant energy of the brain and muscular system which renders the mind happy, cheerful, brilliant and energetic; entirely overcoming that dull, inactive and slu

INYO INDEPENDENT.

COUNTY OFFICIAL PAPER.

G. MULHOLLAND, - - - Proprietor.

Independence, Cal.,

FRIDAY, - - AUGUST 1, 1890.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

VOL. XXII. NO.8. INDEPENDENCE, INYO CO., CAL., AUGUST 1, 1890. WHOLE NO. 1031.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

COUNTY OFFICIAL PAPER.

G. MULHOLLAND, - - - Proprietor.

RATES OF SUBSCRIPTION.

One Year (post paid)	$4.00
Six Months	2.25
Three Months	1.50
One Month	50
Single Copies	20

MAN AND HIS SHOES.

How much a man is like his shoes!
For instance, both a soul may lose;
Both have been tanned; both are made tight
By cobblers; both get left and right;
Both need a mate to be complete,
And both are made to go on feet.
They both need heeling, oft are sold,
And both in time will turn to mold.
With shoes the last is first; with men
The first shall be the last, and when
The shoes wear out they're mended new.
When men wear out they're men dead, too!
They both are tread upon, and both
Will tread on others, nothing loath;
Both have their ties, and both incline,
When polished, in the world to shine;
And both peg out. Now would you choose
To be a man or be his shoes?

—Columbus Dispatch.

ANOTHER CASHIER GONE.

"Where's the cashier?" asked Mr. Armstock, a director of the Second Bullion bank in Chicago, as he noticed that that useful officer was missing.

"I believe, sir," replied the clerk addressed, "that he left last night on a little vacation."

"Midwinter is rather a curious time to take a vacation in," growled old Armstock. "Where has he gone to?"

"I don't know, sir. I think he went to Milwaukee. His folks live there.

The director said no more. He and the cashier had never been the best of friends, and it was rumored that on a certain occasion when Armstock was a trifle short the cashier had refused to accommodate him temporarily unless sufficient collateral were put up or orders brought to him from the president. Armstock thought it rather hard to be refused by one of his own understrappers in his own bank, or at least in a bank that was partly his, and he claimed that a cashier that was so obtrusively honest was sure to come to a bad end. So when Mr. Armstock found that the cashier had taken a vacation at such an untimely season he made a little investigation on his own account and the next day sought an interview with Mr. Vindex, the bank president.

"Mr. Brown has taken a few days off, I understand?"

"Yes. He was somewhat run down and he asked for a couple of weeks and got it. Business is very slack just now, Mr. Armstock."

"It didn't strike you as a little unusual that he should ask for leave of absence in the depth of winter, did it?"

"I can't say that it did."

"Do you know where he has gone?"

"I did not ask him where he was going. I believe he went to Milwaukee. Not sure, though. Did you want him?"

"I hope we shall not all want him. Would you be surprised to know that he bought a ticket for Montreal and that he is undoubtedly a member of the great American colony there at this moment."

"Montreal!" exclaimed the president, looking a trifle taken aback, for he had every confidence in Mr. Brown.

"Yes, Montreal. Doesn't the name strike you as a trifle ominous? There are quite a number of financial operators in that city!"

The president sat a few moments in silence. Then he said:

"Did you wish to make any proposition, Mr. Armstock?"

"Yes. I wish to know how the books stand. I think a meeting of the directors should be called at once."

"Very well. Supposing we act on your first proposition. I think you will then find we need not act on the second. I might say that it is advisable not to say a word about this to anybody until we are certain that there is something to say."

"It seems to me that the directors ought to know without delay what has happened."

"Well, what has happened? What have you to lay before them? Young Brown is in Montreal, that's all. I have every confidence in Brown, but still I quite see that perhaps it is better to have a look at the books. But until something more definite is known I must insist that nothing that might jeopardize his reputation be said."

The expert speedily made his report. Everything was straight if they knew where a bundle of government bonds were. This bundle amounted to $260,000.

"Do you know anything of these bonds?" asked Mr. Armstock.

"They are in the cashier's private drawer in the safe," replied the president.

"Have you a key?"

"No, I have not."

"Then I propose that the drawer be burst open. If the bonds are there I will pay for setting the drawer right again."

The drawer was burst open.

It was empty.

There was a rather serious meeting of the directors that afternoon, and it was agreed that if possible all publicity should be avoided and that the president and Mr. Armstock should proceed at once to Montreal and see if it was possible to get back any or all of the bonds.

* * * * * *

The rotunda of the Windsor hotel in Montreal presented a strange sight to the two gentlemen from Chicago on the night of their arrival there. Such a sight could probably be seen in no other place in the world. Everybody seemed to be in snow shoe costume, and some even had on their broad snow shoes and went clamping awkwardly over the tiled pavement in this foot gear, which, however useful on the snow fields, seemed somewhat uncouth in a big hotel. A dozen clubs were represented with a dozen different costumes, some like the rainbow in color, others almost pure white with a dash of red in the stockings and a touch of blue in the toque.

"Is there a Mr. Brown stopping here?" asked Armstock of the busy clerk.

"There are seventeen Mr. Browns here."

"From the United States."

"Eight are from the United States."

"This is Mr. Brown, of Chicago.

"There are five Browns of Chicago."

"It is Mr. James Brown we want to see."

"There are two James Browns from Chicago."

It seems useless to try to see any particular man in this hurrying crowd. So the two men thought they would wait until the different clubs had started out on their tramps. This hotel is the headquarters of most of the snowshoe clubs and the tramps usually begin and often end there. As the two men watched the stirring scene they were suddenly accosted by a man in snowshoe uniform.

"Well, I declare! When did you get in? Why didn't you let me know you were coming? But now that I recollect you did not know that I was here. I'm mighty glad to see you. This is the spot where life is worth living."

"Mr. Brown," said Vindex solemnly, "I never expected this of you."

"Why not? They all do it."

"I regret to say that very many of them do, but I thought better of you."

"I don't see why I shouldn't have a good time as well as anybody else. Seems to me I have worked hard enough in Chicago for the last five years to have earned it.

"Oh, that is the way you look upon it, is it?" broke in Mr. Armstock.

"There is little use of talking to you, I can see that. Now, of course, you cannot bring back to Chicago all the money you took with you?"

"Of course, I can't. You don't think I can live here for nothing, do you?"

"Haven't you any sense of shame at all, Mr. Brown?"

"Shame?" said Brown, looking down at his blanket. "Look here, I have every respect for the opinion of you two estimable gentlemen, but don't you think you are a little ridiculous? Not to put too fine a point on it, might I ask what business it is of yours, anyhow? A person would not appear in a Chicago hotel in this costume, but here it is a different matter. It is the custom of the town."

"We are here to know," said Armstock, "what terms we can make with you. How many of the bonds will you give us back if nothing more is said of the matter?"

"Bonds? What bonds?"

"Bonds to the amount of $260,000 that were in your private drawer."

Mr. Brown gave a long whistle.

"Oh, ho!" he said. "I see how it is. I am a defaulter, am I? Say, Armstock, has anything of this got into the papers?"

"No, luckily for you, it has not."

"Luckily for you, rather. You did not suppose that I would leave bonds to that amount in a drawer in a safe that would be open every day while I was away. Any person of a prying turn of mind and a chisel could break into that drawer. The bonds are in the vaults of the Safe Deposit company of Chicago. I'm here merely to enjoy the carnival, and not to join the American colony of defaulters."

Mr. Brown is now back at his place in the Second Bullion bank of Chicago, and speaks in glowing terms of the good time he had in Montreal.—Luke Sharp in Detroit Free Press.

A Heavy Expense.

One of the items of expense of running a hotel, from which there is no direct return, but which is as much of a necessity as the maintenance of furniture itself, is that of paper, envelopes, pens and ink used by guests. This amounts to not less than $1,500 per annum in the Laclede hotel. Another item is that of soap and toilet paper, which would foot up to $500. A very inconsiderable portion of the paper used in the writing room falls into the hands of loungers and dead beats. Their only chance is to grab the odd sheets of stationery left by guests on the table, who have secured what they asked for at the desk. As to the frequent complaint made by hotel men of t[illegible] maintaining the public t[illegible] is offset by the receipts f[illegible]acking privilege. —St. Louis Democrat.

A Cold Cut.

When the Blaines were living at Washington, some lady heard that their cook was an unusually good one. The lady had an ambition to possess one herself that she might give good dinners, and she promptly went round, rang the bell at the front door, and asked to see Mrs. Blaine's cook, and offered her higher wages than she was then receiving. Afterward this lady and Mrs. Blaine met at dinner. The lady was introduced, was sugary in her manner, mentioned her own name to make sure Mrs. Blaine should remember it, and was making pleasant speeches of all sorts, when Mrs. Blaine looked at her and said: "Oh, yes, I remember you—you called on my cook," and refrained from adding any word of explanation. It was rather embarrassing for the other lady.—San Francisco Argonaut.

Water Cures.

How water is the best thing that can be used to heal a sprain or bruise. The wounded part should be placed in water as hot as can be borne for fifteen or twenty minutes, and in all ordinary cases the pain will gradually disappear. Hot water applied by means of cloths is a sovereign remedy for neuralgia and pleurisy pains. For burns or scalds apply cloths well saturated with cool alum water, keeping the injured parts covered from the air.—Good Housekeeping.

When the late Professor Proctor was an English school examiner, he one day asked a little girl to tell him the difference between a man and a brute. She said:

"A brute is an imperfect beast. Man is a perfect beast."—Youth's Companion.

A Curious Study of Human Habit.

Why do theatre goers prefer seats on the right of the house? When you are on the street on which side of the walk do you keep? On the right, don't you? Of course you do; and you look to the left, eh? If you don't you are different from every one else. Well, you walk to the right and you look to the left. Twenty-five or thirty years of this sort of thing naturally gets one accustomed to it. Now, when you sit for two hours and a half or three hours in one position, if you have to keep your eyes to the right, you will find that it tires the muscles of the eyes quite perceptibly.—Albany Argus.

A PHOTOGRAPHER'S TRIALS.

Extravagant Demands on His Skill, Patience and Good Nature.

A photographer meets with many strange characters and is a witness of many curious incidents. In a recent informal talk before the Society of Amateur Photographers, Abraham Bogardus, the veteran photographer, told a number of amusing stories of incidents that happened to him in the course of his forty-one years' experience in the studio and dark room. He prefaced his talk with a few sarcastic remarks regarding young men who write long screeds in photographic papers on how to take photographs, whom the experiences of a single day "under the skylight" would cause them to wish they had never been born. He then went on to speak of the unreasonable demands which many sitters make.

"At one time," he said, "a lady brought three children, two boys and a girl, to me, to have their pictures taken. They came all prepared, with a doll for the girl and a gun and a hobby horse for the boys. Well, there was a row at the start. Both boys wanted to mount the horse. We got that settled after a time, but only to strike a new trouble. Of course you all know that the nearer together you group the objects to be photographed the better picture you will get. Well, this woman was a genius in her way; she did not want her children grouped close together as other people's were, but she wanted the little girl taken in the middle of the room and the boys off in opposite corners. Of course I told her it could not be done, whereupon she said: 'Well, Mr. Bogardus, I have always been told that you were very accommodating. I have been to three or four photographers and they all told me the same thing. I don't see as you are any more accommodating than the rest of them.' At another time a man, an Irishman, of course, wanted a carte-de-visite, and he wanted it 'life size.' Some people, by the way, never seem to understand the difference between 'full length' and 'life size.' I told him that the plate wouldn't hold it. 'Then take it with the legs hanging down,' were his instructions. Gen. Logan, who used to sit for me, did not often joke, but he did occasionally. He came in one day and saw hanging on the wall a picture of a man whom he greatly disliked. He turned to me and said: 'I see you take pictures of everybody.' 'Yes,' was my answer; 'that is what I am here for.' 'I suppose you would take a picture of the devil if you could get him to sit for you.' 'Of course. I suppose I could run off a good many of them in Washington!' 'Yes,' he replied; 'that's the best place in the world to sell them.'

"An old lady once came to me who wanted a picture, 'full face, but a little three cornered.' I once asked Dr. Tyng if he would not prefer a side view, and he replied: 'No, sir. I am an upright man. I don't turn to the right or left for any man.' But amid all the fun we also see some very sad things. I remember once a woman came in with a bundle in her arms which when unrolled proved to be the dead body of her little baby, which she wanted photographed. I remember once one of our venerable judges came in with his wife. I took both their pictures. He was perfectly satisfied with his, but she did not seem exactly pleased with hers, said it was too old. The judge turned to her and remarked: 'Well, mother, if you wanted a handsome picture you should have begun thirty years ago.' That settled it; she had nothing more to say. A lady came to me once to make an appointment for a friend who, she said, was very difficult to suit. She had tried dozens of photographers and had never been suited. Of course I promised to do the best I could for her. At the appointed time the lady came. She was old, and weighed at least 200 pounds. Her skin looked like a boiled lobster, and she was clad in low neck and short sleeves. I did not wonder she was never suited. Well, I did my best, but when the picture was made she agreed with me perfectly that it did look horrid. She did not order any of them."—New York Tribune.

Looking for Her Pocket.

"I see you have been poking fun at women's pockets," said a lady friend to the Stroller. "I am glad of it. Why, it has got so now that a woman has to get out a search warrant to find the pocket in a dress when it comes home from the dressmaker. We had a funny case in point in our women's missionary meeting at the church. The leader of the meeting had just finished reading a most affecting appeal from our lady missionary in Caffraria, and there was a solemn pause of expectant attention till some sister should feel moved to speak. Presently a white haired old lady—a mother in Israel—rose slowly and feebly to her feet. All eyes were turned upon her, and we waited to see whether she wished to make a few remarks or lead in prayer. One hand, incased in its wrinkled black kid glove, went fumbling and groping among the folds of her skirt. After a long pause she drew out a clean handkerchief still in its folds, and then with an air of relief, slowly sat down again. She had only risen to find her pocket."—Chicago Journal.

Willing to Oblige the Jury.

An amusing line was spoken in Judge Garrison's court, in Camden, the other day.

A gawky Jerseyman was on the witness stand, and, instead of speaking so that the jury could hear him, he persisted in mumbling his answers to his counsel. Finally the judge said:

"Will you kindly speak so that these gentlemen can hear you?" pointing to the jury.

The up countryman turned around and found the twelve men all in an attitude of strained attention. His face thereupon lighted up with a half grateful and half flattered expression, and he replied: "Why, certainly. Are they interested in my case?"

And from this point on he made a better witness, feeling, as he did, that he had an audience that wanted to listen to him.—Philadelphia Press.

A Duel with Potatoes.

In County Carlow, Ireland, an aggrieved member of a certain congregation, declining to accept his parson's assurance that he was not one of a set of miserable sinners rather pointedly referred to in the Sunday sermon, challenged his vicar to personal combat, and offered him his choice of weapons. The challenge was accepted, the clergyman declining, however, to use such secular arms as swords or pistols, but expressing his willingness to try a novel kind of ammunition—i. e., raw potatoes—to be used as missiles, the bigger the better.

The morning on which the novel duel commenced was as raw as the potatoes, which lay in a heap by the side of each combatant. The potatoes were to be thrown alternately. The challenger commenced, and missed. The clergyman, aiming calmly and scientifically, raised with his first shot a bump upon his opponent's forehead almost as large as the missile which caused it. The layman promptly lost his temper, and aimed wildly and recklessly, hitting the seconds and missing the vicar with great regularity. The vicar, feeling that he could afford to be magnanimous, put down his potato, advanced to his aggrieved parishioner, held out his hand, and said: "Come, Mr. O'R., I think we're a couple of idiots. Let us shake hands and be friends, and utilize these vegetables for a more peaceful purpose at dinner tonight."—Leeds Mercury.

The Use of Slang.

"A man born and bred in the United States fails to appreciate how much slang he daily uses in conversation," said an intelligent American who had just returned from a continental tour. "He fully appreciates these blemishes, however, when he returns to America after having had daily intercourse with some of the well bred persons in Europe. He picks up these blots on perfect speech so gradually and they multiply so rapidly that before he is aware of the extent of these acquisitions at least one-tenth part of his vocabulary consists of slang expressions.

"This fact is so true of America that even the ignorant peasants of Ireland recognize it when their countrymen return to their native land. As heard in America slang seems to add force and expression to conversation, but this is only seeming, for when contrasted with really simple and consequently elegant diction the difference in strength can readily be seen. There are some slang words, however, in the American vocabulary which, if used at the right time and place, find their bull's eye like a minie ball. But, as a rule, the use of slang words is only a blemish on conversation, and its use cannot be too heartily condemned."—Chicago Herald.

Bible Written in Shorthand.

There are many curious copies of the Bible in the various collections of Europe and America, but it is doubtful if there is a duplicate for the one belonging to Dr. R. T. Williams, of London, in all the collections in the world. This odd copy of Holy Writ is written in shorthand and is complete throughout. It was written by an apprentice, who was suspicious of James II's intentions regarding Protestantism. If deprived of his printed copy he hoped to have the little shorthand volume left.—St. Louis Republic.

Metals in the Sun.

Of the metals discovered in the sun the most important are sodium, magnesium, barium, acalsium, zinc, copper, aluminum, nickel, chromium and iron. Many of the rarer and less known metals would also appear to be there in some abundance, judging by the facility with which their presence may be detected. Although heavier metals, such as platinum and gold, have not been seen, it by no means follows that they are absent. Their weight would prevent them being easily found by the spectroscope.—New York Telegram.

A Healthy Perfume.

If you want a lovely odor in your rooms break off branches of the Norway spruce and arrange them in a large jug well filled with water. In a few days tender, pale green branches feather out, soft and cool to the touch, and giving the delightful, health giving odor we all so dearly love. My library smells of the forest.—Cor. Chatter.

Economy.

Friend (leaving the office with the broker)—I say, old man, you didn't lock your safe.

Broker—No; I never do. It cost $300, and I don't want burglars to spoil it for the little I've got in it.—Chatter.

His Flag of Truce.

A young man of Hawkinsville, Ga., and his "best girl" quarreled some days ago, and remained "at outs" with each other until the young man relented and began to devise some plan to "make up." He finally decided to try the effects of a flag of truce, and cutting a delicate piece of white ribbon into the shape of a miniature flag, he sealed it in a sweetly perfumed envelope and forwarded it to his fair enemy. It had the desired effect, and she at once gave him permission to cross the line and be happy again.

Soldiers on Skates.

Perhaps the most curious battalion in the army is the Norwegian corps of skaters. These corps are composed of picked armed men with rifles, which they use with great precision. The skates used are admirably adapted for traveling over rough and broken ice and frozen snow, being six inches broad and between nine and ten inches long. The soldiers can be maneuvered upon the ice or over the snow fields of the mountains with a rapidity equal to that of the best trained cavalry. As an instance of the speed they attained, it is stated that a messenger attached to the corps has accomplished 120 miles in eighteen and a half hours over a mountainous country.—Boston Budget.

One of the Rising Ones.

"My son," inquired the minister, "can you repeat the Ten Commandments?"

"No, sir, but I can light a cigarette in the wind the first trial."—Detroit Free Press.

THE INFLUENCE OF THINGS.

A Woman's Whole Life Was Changed by a Red Hat with a Dull Red Plume.

There was once a lady, sober in mind and sedate in manner, whose plain dress exactly represented her desire to be inconspicuous, to do good, to improve every day of her life in actions that should benefit her kind. She was a serious person, inclined to improving conversation, to the reading of bound books that cost at least a dollar and a half (fifteen cents of which she gladly contributed to the author), and she had a distaste for the gay society which was mainly a flutter of ribbons and talk and pretty faces; and when she meditated, as she did in her spare moments, her heart was sore over the frivolity of life and the emptiness of fashion. She longed to make the world better, and without any priggishness she set it an example of simplicity and sobriety, of cheerful acquiescence in plainness and inconspicuousness.

One day, it was in the autumn, this lady had occasion to buy a new hat. From a great number offered to her she selected a red one with a dull red plume. It did not agree with the rest of her apparel; it did not fit her apparent character. What impulse led to this selection she could not explain. She was not tired of being good, but something in the jauntiness of the hat and the color pleased her. If it were a temptation she did not intend to yield to it, but she thought she would take the hat home and try it. Perhaps her nature felt the need of a little warmth. The hat pleased her still more when she got it home and put it on and surveyed herself in the mirror. Indeed, there was a new expression in her face that corresponded to the hat. She put it off and looked at it. There was something almost humanly winning and temptatious in it. In short, she kept it, and when she wore it abroad she was not conscious of its incongruity to herself or to her dress, but of the incongruity of the rest of her apparel to the hat, which seemed to have a sort of intelligence of its own, at least a power of changing and conforming things to itself. By degrees one article after another in the lady's wardrobe was laid aside and another substituted for it answered to the demanding spirit of the hat.

In a little while this plain lady was not plain any more, but most gorgeously dressed and possessed with the desire to be in the height of the fashion. It came to this that she had a tea gown made out of a window curtain with a flamboyant pattern. Solomon in all his glory would have been ashamed of himself in her presence.

But this was not all. Her disposition, her ideas, her whole life were changed. She did not any more think of going about doing good, but of amusing herself. She read nothing but stories in paper covers. In place of being sedate and sober minded she was frivolous to excess; she spent most of her time with women who liked to "frivol." She kept Lent in the most expensive way, so as to make the impression upon everybody that she was better than the extremest kind of Lent. From liking the sedatest company she passed to liking the gayest society and the most fashionable method of getting rid of her time. Nothing whatever had happened to her, and she is now an ornament to society.—Charles Dudley Warner in Harper's.

Living in Paris.

Of living in Paris outside of a hotel I know but little, except that a gentleman who has spent a great deal of time here and seen a good deal of society said to me that in no city can one live so absolutely as he pleases as in Paris and still be respectable and fashionable. It was some time before New Yorkers took kindly to modern flats, with their possible improvement and convenience. High life of that kind was not to their taste. But here you find the best people living upon some narrow street, and you climb up flight and flight of winding stairs until the fourth and fifth and sometimes the sixth stage is reached, where you stop to breathe and wonder how any American could have pitched his tent so high.

But once inside the tent your wonder ceases, or rather takes another channel, as you find yourself in the large, airy and handsomely furnished rooms where so many of our people live quite as comfortable and with far less care than they can at home. "I would not go back to America again, with all the worries of housekeeping, for the world," I heard a lady say, while her companion, fresh from the worries of American housekeeping, was ready to take them again, and would not stay here for all the world. And so opinions differ. But of the two I think the Parisian housekeeper has the best of it, with better servants, smaller wages and so many troublesome things done outside—no washing or ironing, for this is done by the lanchisseuse, and no bread-making, for the bakers furnish all that, and of an excellent kind, too.—Cor. Springfield Republican.

An Hour's Snooze.

During cold weather some of the paupers resort to some very odd tricks to get into some house where they can warm their chilled bodies by the generous heat from a fire or steam register. The other Sunday, when it was quite cold, a middle aged man of scraggy beard, unkempt hair, wearing worn out boots and seedy coat and ragged pantaloons, and presenting a most repulsive and dirty appearance, entered the door of St. John's Methodist church quietly, and took a seat near the rear part of the room. When the congregation struck up a hymn the miserable tramp joined in the singing with apparently as good time as any of the choristers. It was at first supposed that he had drifted in to hear the Gospel expounded—and may be he did—but after reclining his head on the seat during prayer, he fell asleep and slept soundly during the entire sermon. He didn't hear any Gospel expounded, at least, and some people were cynical enough to say that he had entered the church for no other reason than to get a snug, warm corner, where he could sleep for an hour.—St. Louis Globe-Democrat.

TABLE ETIQUETTE.

Some Useful Hints on the Uses of Knives, Forks, Spoons and Fingers.

Those who are very particular hold the large end of a spear of asparagus with a fork while with the tip end of a knife they daintily separate the tender green tops from the white end, which is then put aside. Others take the white end between the fingers and carry it to the mouth. Both are correct, but the former is much more dainty and easily done.

The etiquette of eating a soft boiled egg has been the subject of more than one clever essay. The English custom is to eat it directly from the shell, when of course a small egg cup and egg spoon are necessary. The American way is to break the egg into a cup or glass by striking the egg in the center and turning the contents into the glass. In this case it is usually eaten with a teaspoon, as an egg spoon, unless extra large, would be too small, and we have seen the egg held by a corner of the napkin, but this is not only tiresome but difficult to do nicely without soiling the napkin.

Celery is always taken from the dish and carried to the mouth by the fingers. If individual salts are not provided, it is etiquette to use one half of the butter plate for salt. If salt shakers are used, hold the celery in the left hand just over the rim of your plate and gently sprinkle it with salt, and the old custom of putting a spoonful of salt on the cloth is still in practice. When corn is served on the cob it must be taken in the fingers, only managed very daintily. We have seen pretty little doylies for the purpose of holding it, but it is a question if that is not carrying table linen too far. Many housekeepers, and especially in the south, serve corn as a separate course, when finger bowls are placed by each plate and removed with the course.

Lettuce when served without dressing is always pulled to pieces with the fingers. This is usually the lady's duty and there is no prettier picture than that of a young lady preparing a plate of fresh, crisp lettuce leaves in this way, for the tender green shows off to perfection her dainty white hands and she may be as exquisitely neat about it as she likes, and it is one of the most fascinating and becoming of table duties that a hostess can possibly provide for her lady guests, to assist in helping the gentlemen at a social or informal meal.

Water cress is also taken in the fingers and the prettiest way of serving it is to obtain a long low sided basket or dish, in the bottom of which lay a folded napkin, then heap the cress so as to fill the basket and you have not only an enjoyable, but a very ornamental dish for the breakfast table.

When a slice of lemon is served with fish or meat it is much more correct to take the slice in the fingers, double the ends together and gently squeeze the juice over the article than to use a knife for that purpose, as is sometimes done.

It is always proper to help one's self to bread, cheese and lump sugar, if tongs are not provided, with the fingers. Never use your own knife, fork or spoon to take from the dish. It is also correct if a plate of hot, unbroken biscuits is passed, to not only break off for yourself with your fingers, but for your neighbor also. When things are passed, help yourself as quickly as possible, for you must not keep others waiting and never insist on some one else being served before you, if the host or hostess has honored you first. —Mary Barr Munroe in Good Housekeeping.

The Elizabethan Age.

The circumstances of the Elizabethan age favored unity of style. The language, to begin with, had recently been remade under the influence of new ideals and new educational systems. Far more than lapse of years and wastes of desolating warfare separated Sixteenth century English from the speech of Chaucer. The spirit itself which shapes language to the use of mind had changed through the action of quickening conceptions and powerfully excited energies. And to this change in the spirit the race was eagerly responsive. In a certain way all writers felt the Bible—Greece, Rome, Italy, France, Germany; all strove to be in tune with the new learning. At the same time criticism was hardly in its cradle; you find a trace of it in Jonson, Bacon, Selden, Camden; but it does not touch the general. The people were anything but analytical, and poetry issued from the very people's heart, as melody from the strings of the violoncello. The spontaneity which we have already noted as a main mark of the Elizabethan utterance led thus to unity of style. The way in which classical masterpieces were then studied conduced to the same result. Those perennial sources of style were enjoyed in their entirety, absorbed, assimilated, reproduced with freedom. They were not closely scrutinized, examined with the microscope, studied with the view of emphasizing this or that peculiarity a single critic found in them. And the same holds good about contemporary foreign literatures. Everything which these literatures contained was grist for the English mill; not models to be copied, but stuff to be used.—J. A. Symonds in Fortnightly Review.

The Cause of Their Estrangement.

It transpires that the estrangement between Crown Prince Rudolph and the present emperor of Germany grew out of a remark made by the latter some years before his accession to the throne. He and Rudolph had been on very friendly terms and one day in conversation William stated that if he ever became emperor his policy would be conducted on the same lines as that of Frederick the Great. To this Prince Rudolph retorted that Frederick's schemes always included the destruction of the Austrian empire. Prince William did not disclaim his intention to imitate the great emperor, and hence a coolness arose between the two heirs to crowns which was never dispelled.—San Francisco Chronicle.

REMEMBRANCE.

TO * * *

My thought hath wandered far away this night,
In sooth, I know not either why or how.
But to its distant beckoning I bow
And follow where its echoing tones invite.
Oh, the lost bowers and the lost home light,
The gladsome, peaceful days that come not now!
Bring them again, dear memory; allow
My streaming eyes to brighten in their sight,
And teach my heart and lips to say amen.
Might this one joy be left me, out of all
In the past, perfect years of gladness, when
A gracious, welcoming glance did me befall;
For still renewed it greeteth me again
And all my happiest days it can recall.

—Margery Dale.

Stored and Forgotten.

There is nothing suggestive of romance about the interior of an old fashioned storage warehouse, but if all the household things in the musty, slatted, cell like rooms could tell their histories to a story writer, he would have material enough to last him several lifetimes. Perhaps that sofa packed on top of two barrels of crockery couldn't tell you how its rotund bosom palpitated with jealousy when Bella's young man got so familiar that he ventured, after much gentle protestation on Bella's part, to let his arm steal around her belt, and maybe that hat rack in the corner doesn't remember the scenes in the hall when Bella gave the happy fellow good night. Perhaps in the adjoining compartment, you may find Bella's and her husband's own wordly goods, that she was compelled to put away after he abandoned her, or after they found out that housekeeping was a failure and decided to go to boarding.

A Sun reporter went through one of these old style warehouses the other day and looked at some of the things that sixty or more people had left there and failed to pay the storage on. The proprietor said some of the things had been there for fifteen years. He has advertised the sale by auction of all goods on which no charges had been paid for a year.

All sorts of people are in the list of those whose goods will be sold if they don't come around and pay up. Gen. A. L. Lee, a wealthy gentleman who is now in Paris, has had a case of ornamental things in the warehouse since 1887. He has probably forgotten all about them, or doesn't want them. Adah Richmond, the actress, is on the list. She left the articles at the warehouse when she broke up housekeeping here some years ago. Some of the abandoned furniture belonged to husbands and wives who fell out and couldn't find a way to make up again. Some belonged to widows who were compelled to give up housekeeping because unable to pay to continue it, and some to folks who were suddenly called away to fields of labor in other parts of the world.—New York Sun.

Drawing Room Innovations.

It has always been the practice absolutely to forbid the attendance at drawing rooms of ladies who had been divorced, although from no fault of their own. This was a Draconian regulation to which there could be no exception. The queen, however, several years ago very sensibly came to the conclusion that a lady whose conduct had been blameless ought not to be excluded from court because she had divorced her husband on account of his misdeeds. The matter was brought before the cabinet, but some high church statesmen (notably Mr. Gladstone and Lord Selborne) were horrified at the suggested innovation, and the thing dropped. The question has since, however, been revived, and the result is that a lady who has divorced her husband may go to court after she has received a special permission. Every application goes before the queen herself, and her majesty decides each case on its merits.—London Truth.

Nicotine Whims of Statesmen.

Senator Hampton has a queer habit. He does not chew or smoke to any extent, but he is fond of pinching off sections of a fine cigar, powdering it in his hand and snuffing it. He will sit in the cloak room where he can see the president's desk and snuff cigars for an hour at a time.

Senator Daniel, of Virginia, also has a nicotine fad. It is to indulge in a "dry smoke." That is, he keeps an unsmoked or half smoked cigar in his mouth all the time.

Gen. Samuel Thomas, of the Brice-Thomas Seney syndicate got into this habit as a compromise between smoking and not smoking, and the result was a surgical operation to remove a tumor like growth that appeared on his lips just at the place where he always held his unlighted cigar. The doctors told him to either smoke or let the whole thing alone, but not to carry an unlighted cigar in his mouth.—Washington Post.

How the Husband Gave It Away.

Here is another good smuggling story from the Belgian frontier: A newly married couple were returning to Germany after a tour to Brussels. As the train approached the frontier the bride grew uneasy and presently confessed that she had a quantity of the finest of Brussels lace in her bag, on which a high duty would have to be paid. "Put it inside your hat," she pleaded. This was done. The custom house officials looked all through the boxes of the elegant young lady, knowing by experience that such are the most daring of smugglers, but found nothing. The chief officer, charmed by the amiable manners of the husband, accompanied the couple to the train, when the wretched husband, forgetting his secret in the joy of having escaped, raised his hat to the officer and was instantly enveloped in a soft white veil. Tableau!—Pall Mall Gazette.

Vaccination.

Vaccination, which is compulsory in England, is optional is France. Post hoc (whether is be propter hoc or not), the smallpox death average is 0.31 per 1,000 in the large cities of France, as against 0.04 in this country during the same period. Of course this looks conclusive, to the ordinary man, in favor of our own practice. No doubt, however, the anti vaccinationists will give quite another reason for the difference.—London Globe.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

C. Mulholland,
EDITOR & PROPRIETOR.
PUBLISHED EVERY FRIDAY

INDEPENDENCE, CAL

FRIDAY, AUGUST 1 1890

County Official Paper.

It is not the methods but the results by which political parties will be judged. If the new rule in Congress by which members present are counted whether they vote or not, shall be found to expedite business, that rule will be continued no matter what party may be in power. If it shall be plain to the country that the Republicans when in power abuse the rule for the purpose of making bad laws, that party will be driven from office. If it shall be equally plain that the Democrats are clamoring against the rule because the enforcement of it deprives them of the power to prevent Republicans from enacting good laws, they will be understood and their action will be unquestionably condemned. Men are sent to Congress, not for mere partizan purposes, but to enact such laws as are needed for the general good, and when this is sacrificed and the work of Congressmen becomes merely a fierce fight for office and spoils, the party that indulges most in such selfish policy will be kept from power. The good of the whole people was sacrificed for party ends. No matter which party was in power their opponents would obstruct legislation and prevent the enactment of laws the most necessary. This selfish and unpatriotic practice had grown to be such an evil that it could no longer be tolerated. This is the reason for the adoption of the rule about which so much clamor has been raised. An election is approaching and if the action of the Republicans in Congress is not sanctioned by a majority of the people, Democrats will be elected to succeed them. In that event Republicans could not have any ground for complaint when the rule invented by themselves should be enforced against them. Had not this rule been adopted the present session of Congress would all have been frittered away in disputes over motions made to prevent necessary legislation, thus bringing odium upon the Republicans in Congress and suffering to the Nation at large. If the ablest and best men in both parties were sent to Congress there would be no need for any such rule. But while men are sent to Congress whose chief aim is the accomplishment of some personal end, and who are not only willing but eager to become tools to gain that end, it will be necessary to have rules to restrain them from sacrificing the general good for their private gain.

REPUBLICAN County Convention.

A REPUBLICAN CONVENTION IS HEREby called to assemble at Bishop, Inyo county, California, on

TUESDAY, SEPT. 16, 1890,

At 2 p. m., for the nomination of County candidates and the transaction of such other business as may properly come before it. The Republicans of the several precincts are requested to hold Primaries, at the places named on SATURDAY, SEPT. 6, 1890.

From 2 to 5 o'clock p. m., for the selection of delegates in accordance with this apportionment:

Round Valley	School house	2 Delegates
Lincoln	School house	4 "
Laws	School house	2 "
Cottonwood	Gilberts	1 "
Bishop	Court-room	7 "
Poleta	A. O. Collins'	1 "
Big Pine	School-house	3 "
Fish Springs	Curtis Place	2 "
Independence	School-house	6 "
Georges Creek	School-house	2 "
Lone Pine	School house	4 "
Cerro Gordo	Boland Store	2 "
Keeler	Boland Store	3 "
Olancha	Wm. Walkers	1 "
Darwin	School house	2 "
Lookout	Company Store	1 "
Panamint	———	1 "

It is provided that any new precincts which may be established by the Board of Supervisors prior to date of primaries shall be entitled to one delegate each, and any of the above precincts which may be abolished shall have no representation.

PRIMARY TEST: "Did you support Harrison and Morton at the last election, or would you have done so had you been a voter?"

Ordered, That candidates coming before the Convention for nomination for the following offices each be assessed in the amounts named: Superior Judge, $25; Sheriff, $15; Clerk, $15; Assessor, $15; District Attorney, $10; Treasurer $10; School Superintendent, $10.

By order of the Republican County Committee.

C. W. CRAIG, Chairman.
J. D. BLAIR, Secretary.

Independence, Cal., July 7, 1890.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.

Estate of JAMES WARD, deceased.

Notice is hereby given by the undersigned, Administrator of the estate of James Ward deceased, to the Creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator at his residence in the town of Independence, in the County of Inyo, State of California.

THOMAS PARKER,
Administrator of the estate of James Ward deceased.

Dated at Independence, Cal., July 22, 1890.
jy-25-5t

S. H. BGLAND,
—DEALER IN—
Owens Valley Lands
39 SUTTER STREET.
SAN FRANCISCO.
1-26

FOURTH ANNUAL FAIR.

Agricultural District No. 18.

STATE OF CALIFORNIA.

[Composed Of The Counties Of

Alpine, Mono & Inyo

TO BE HELD AT

Independence.

Commencing Tuesday, September 23d, and Continuing Four Days

A. R. CONKLIN.....President.
C. MULHOLLAND.....Secretary.
O. I. MAIRS.....Treasurer.

DIRECTORS;

A. R. CONKLIN, W. S. ENOS, N. RHINE,
J. S. GORMAN, E. ROBINSON, F. McINER,
A. W. EIBESHUTZ, C. A. WALTER.

FIRST DEPARTMENT.

In this Department the same animal shall not be entered more than once, except in sweepstakes, or as a member of a family exhibited with its sire or dam. Any stallion, mare, gelding or colt competing in a race shall not be excluded from competing for premiums in their respective classes.

Tuesday.

CLASS I—THOROUGHBREDS.

Best stallion, any age	$25 00
Second best	15 00
Best mare, any age	20 00

CLASS II—STANDARD TROTTERS.

Best stallion, aged	$25 00
2 year old	15 00
Best mare	20 00

CLASS III—ROADSTERS.

Best roadster, aged	$20 00
2 year-old	15 00
team to buggy	20 00

Wednesday.

CLASS IV—HORSES OF ALL WORK.

Best stallion, aged	$20 00
2 year-old	15 00
1 year-old	10 00
Best colt	10 00
Best mare, any age	20 00
2 year-old	15 00
1 year old	10 00
and family of 3 or more	20 00

CLASS V—DRAFT HORSES.

Best stallion, aged	$20 00
2 year old	15 00
Best mare, aged	15 00
2 year old	10 00
and colt	15 00

CLASS VI—MATCHED TEAMS.

To be shown in harness.

Best matched carriage team	$15 00
buggy team	15 00

CLASS VII—SWEEPSTAKES.

Best stallion, any breed or age	$20 00
Best mare, any breed or age	20 00

Thursday.

CLASS VIII—JACKS.

Best jack, any age	$20 00
Second best	15 00

CLASS IX—MULES.

Best span, aged, owned by one person	$15 00
3 years or under " " " "	10 00

CLASS X—BULLS.

Best 3-year old or over, any breed	$20 00
2 year-old, any breed	15 00
1 year-old, any breed	10 00

CLASS XI—COWS.

Best 3 year-old or over	$20 00
2 year-old	10 00
cow and calf	15 00
cow and 2 calves	20 00

All of the above to be exhibited at Race Track. Entries to be made with the Secretary not later than 6 o'clock p. m. on day preceding their exhibition.

Friday.

CLASS XII—SHEEP AND GOATS.

Best display of angora goats	$20 00
Best display of sheep	20 00

CLASS XIII—SWINE.

Best display of hogs	$15 00
Best sow and litter of 4 pigs	10 00

CLASS XIV—POULTRY.

Best display of fowls, any breed	$8 00
Second best	6 00
Best display of turkeys	5 00

Classes, 12, 13 and 14 to be exhibited at the Pavilion. Entries to be made with Secretary not later than 6 p. m. on day preceding their exhibition.

All stock to be exhibited must be on the ground at 10 o'clock a. m. on the day intended for their exhibition. No animal to leave place of exhibit on until 4 o'clock p. m. without permission of the Park Director.

SECOND DEPARTMENT.

All exhibits in the following departments must be produced in the District.

CLASS I—AGRICULTURAL PRODUCTS.

	1st.	2d.
100 pounds of flour	$3 00	$2 00
barley	3 00	2 00
wheat	3 00	2 00
oats	3 00	2 00
rye	3 00	2 00
shelled corn	3 00	2 00
50 pounds corn in the ear	2 00
alfalfa seed	3 00	2 00
Display of Egyptian corn	2 00
Bale of timothy hay	4 00
alfalfa hay	4 00
Display of grasses	8 00
agricultural products	20 00	15 00

CLASS II—VEGETABLES, ROOTS ETC.

50 pounds Early Rose potatoes	$2 50	$2 00
100 pounds any variety of potatoes	2 50	2 00
25 pounds of sweet potatoes	2 50
20 pounds of parsnips	2 00	1 00
carrots	2 00	1 00
turnips	2 00	1 00
beets	2 00	1 00
tomatoes	2 00	1 00
50pounds of onions	2 00	1 00
10 pounds of garden peas	2 00
white beans	2 00
bayou beans	2 00
lima beans	2 00
Sample of peppers	2 00
1 dozen cabbage	2 00	1 00
½ dozen squash	2 00	1 00
pumpkins	2 00	1 00
watermelons	2 00	1 00
cantaloupes	2 00	1 00
1 dozen cucumbers	2 00	1 00

CLASS III—DAIRY AND FARM PRODUCE.

10 pounds butter in 2 pound rolls	$3 00	$2 00
20 pound jar of butter	4 00	3 00
Cheese	3 00
10 pounds lard	2 00
Display of honey	5 00	3 00
Apiary display	10 00	5 00
Variety of fruit in jars	10 00	5 00
jellies	5 00	3 00
preserves	5 00	3 00
pickles	5 00	3 00
50 pounds ham	10 00
bacon	10 00

THIRD DEPARTMENT.

CLASS I—HORTICULTURAL PRODUCTS.

Display of apples	$7 50	$5 00
peaches	7 50	5 00
pears	6 00	4 00
plums	6 00	4 00
prunes	6 00	4 00
quinces	5 00
grapes	7 50	5 00
table grapes	3 00
raisin grapes	3 00
wine grapes	3 00
raisins	5 00
dried fruits	7 50	5 00
fruits of all kinds	20 00	10 00
figs	5 00
walnuts	5 00
peanuts	5 00
almonds	5 00
½ dozen bottles of wine	5 00

FOURTH DEPARTMENT.

CLASS I—ARTISTIC.

Oil painting on canvas	$10 00
Second best	5 00
Crayon drawing	10 00
Satin and Japanese panel	10 00
Pastel drawing	5 00
Collection of paintings on canvas	10 00
Photograph of scenery in district	5 00
Collection of photographs, Dist. scenery	10 00

FIFTH DEPARTMENT.

CLASS I—MINERALS ETC.

Cabinet of minerals from District	$25 00
Collection of curios from District	15 00
Display of marble	20 00
borax etc	10 00
soda	10 00
silver ore	10 00
gold ore	10 00
silver lead ore	10 00

SIXTH DEPARTMENT.

CLASS I—NEEDLE AND OTHER WORK.

Handsomest pillow shams	$5 00
and best patchwork quilt	5
crazy quilt	5
knitted quilt	5
sofa cushion	5
set of sofa ticks, 3 pieces	5
set of bureau ticks, 3 pieces	5
Greatest variety of crochet work	10
Best crochet quilt	5
embroidered ladies dress	5
childs dress	5
ottoman cover	5
table cover, 4 corners	5
scarf, 2 ends	5
pair of lambrequins	5
wall panel, or banner	5
silk on flannel	5
linen	5
Kensington, or wool	5
toilet set, 3 pieces	5
lace work, hand made	5
darned net, 3 pieces	5
crochet shawl	5
table scarf, hand painted	5
hearth rug	5
made lady's dress	5
display hand-knit work	5
fancy articles	10
wax work	5
Spanish needle work	5
hair work	5
hand-knit stockings	5
calico dress made by girl under 14	5
hand sewing, 4 pieces, girl under 16	5
crochet work, girl under 14	5
patchwork, girl under 14	5
hand made shirt, girl under 14	5

SPEED PROGRAMME.

TUESDAY.

RUNNING—½ mile dash for untried horses. Purse, $75.

TROTTING—½ and repeat, for 2 year olds. Purse, $100.

WEDNESDAY.

TROTTING—2 in 3, mile heats, for stallions owned in district. Purse, $150.

RUNNING—½ mile and repeat for saddle horses Purse, $75.

THURSDAY.

RUNNING—2 in 3, mile heats. Free for all horses owned in district. Purse, $150.

TROTTING 2 in 3 mile heats, for double team. Purse, $100.

FRIDAY.

RUNNING—½ mile dash, free for all owned in district. Purse, $100.

TROTTING—2 in 3, mile heats. Free for all owned in district. Purse, $150.

RUNNING—1 m le, for Indian horses. No entrance fee. Purse, $25.

RULES.

In all the above races 3 or more to enter, 2 or more to start. Entrance fee, 10 per cent. of purse.

All entries to be made with the Secretary on or before 12 o'clock m. of the day preceding the race.

California State Agricultural Society Rules to govern running races. National Trotting Association Rules to govern trotting races.

In all exhibits of animals for premiums, other things being equal, blooded stock will be preferred.

All articles included in the above list, except the first department, to be on exhibition at the Pavilion on second day and remain during the Fair.

Special premiums will be allowed for articles exhibited not included in above list

If you have entries to make, attend to it at once, and when your entries are made, see to it that they are on time and at place for examination by the committee.

Accept no rumors in regard to the business of the exhibition. If you do not know what to do, inquire of the officers whose duty it is to tell you. One half of the trouble and disappointment at the Fair is caused by relying on hearsay. Attend to your business yourself. If it is done wrong you know where the blame lies.

Read the rules, and, by example, at least, assist in enforcing them; but don't forget that mistakes will occur where many people are congregated. The Board endeavors to do justice to all.

If the Superintendents and Committeemen are not always ready at the appointed hour, keep your stock and articles where you can command them at any time. Remember that we have but little time to do much business; patience, with a little system, will overcome many obstacles.

The Board will give the same special attention to details that has contributed to success in the past. It remains for the exhibitors to achieve still better results for the Fair of 1890.

ADMISSION.

Life Membership	$30 00
Membership ticket, admitting member, wife and minor children	5 00
Single season ticket	2 50
To Pavilion, each	50
To Race Track, each	50

NATHAN RHINE.

NATHAN RHINE,
(Successor to Harris & Rhine.)
MERCHANT,
INDEPENDENCE
Inyo Co. Cal.
Wholesale & Retail
—DEALER IN—
General Merchandise

MY STOCK
CONSISTING OF
A lot every needed article is well calculated to satisfy the wants of everybody; and, as in the past, it will be our aim in the future to retain the extensive patronage enjoyed heretofore.

NATHAN RHINE.

NATHAN RHINE
BANKER
Independence, Cal.
SELL EXCHANGE
—ON—
SAN FRANCISCO
Draw Direct
—ON—
NEW YORK,
LONDON, England.
BERLIN, FRANKFORT-on the Main, GERMANY.

I AM PREPARED TO TRANSACT ALL KINDS,
—OF—
GENERAL
BANKING
&
EXCHANGE
BUSINESS.

Wechsel in beliebigen Summen auf Berlin und Frankfurt am de M n,
Deutsche Vollmachten geregelt.
Geldsendungen von und nach Deutschland besorgt.

AGENT FOR WELLS FARGO
& CO'S.
EXPRESS

MUTUAL
Life Insurance Co.
OF NEW YORK
CAPITAL - - - - $5,000,000

LIVERPOOL
AND LONDON AND GLOBE
INSURANCE · COMPANY
Capital - - - - - $21,000,000
NATHAN RHINE.

MISCELLANEOUS.

J. R. ELDRED,
Sheriff and
Tax-Collector.
INYO CO., CAL.

P. H. MACK,
COUNTY CLERK,
—AND—
Ex-officio Auditor and Recorder,
INYO CO., CAL.

GEO. M. GILL,
District Attorney,
INYO CO., CAL.

J. J. MOORE,
County Treasurer,
INYO CO., CAL.

S. P. M'KNIGHT, C. E.
COUNTY SURVEYOR
—AND—
U. S. Deputy Mineral Surveyor
For California and Nevada.
—BISHOP CREEK, INYO CO., CAL.—
The obtaining of United States mineral patents a specialty.
All kinds of surveying given the most careful and accurate attention.

JUSTICE OF PEACE,
C. MULHOLLAND.
Office in the "INDEPENDENT" Building, Independence, Inyo County, Cal.

A. R. CONKLIN,
Attorney-at-Law.
Independence, Cal.
Will practice in all the Courts of the States of California and Nevada.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD,
ATTORNEY-AT-LAW,
Independence, Cal.

P. W. FORBES,
ATTORNEY AT LAW.
NOTARY PUBLIC.
Cases in U. S. Land Office a Specialty.
BISHOP, INYO COUNTY, CALIFORNIA.

IRVING J. WOODIN, M D.,
Physician & Surgeon,
(COUNTY PHYSICIAN)
Louise L. Woodin, M. D.
PHYSICIAN & SURGEON.
NIGHT CALLS ATTENDED.
Office and residence at the Reddy place, Independence.

W. H. GEORGE, M. D.,
Physician and Surgeon,
Bishop Creek, Cal.,
Offers his professional services to the people of Bishop Creek and vicinity. Office and residence opposite Andrew Clark's.

F. E. Bunting, M. D.
Physician & Surgeon
LONE PINE, CAL.
OFFICE IN GELCH BUILDING
All calls attended to immediately.

Lodge 221, F. & A. M.
Regular meetings of Lodge No. 221, F. & A. M., for the year 1889, will be held at the Lodge room at Independence as follows:
Saturday ..... February 1st
" ..... March 1st
" ..... March 29th
" ..... May 3rd
" ..... May 31st
" ..... June 28th
" ..... July 26th
" ..... August 30th
" ..... September 27th
" ..... October 25th
" ..... November 22nd
" ..... December 20th
P. H. MACK, W. M.
C. MULHOLLAND Sec.

P. W. FORBES. P. H. MACK.
MACK & FORBES.
Real Estate Agents,
Address, P. H. MACK, Independence, Cal.
P. W. FORBES, Bishop, Cal.

FRED BURCKHARDT
Watchmaker & Jeweler,
LONE PINE, CAL.
Time pieces of all descriptions repaired and regulated, satisfaction guaranteed. Jewelry made to order. Firearms repaired and loaded.
All orders from any part of the country will be promptly attended to, at the most reasonable charges. At the old stand "Mechanics' Hall," Lone Pine.
FRED BURKHARDT.

MISCELLANEOUS.

CROCKERS' HOTEL.
BIG PINE - CAL.
New House.
New Furniture.
Low Rates
Splendid hunting and fishing near by, in act, it is a veritable paradise for tourists and pleasure seekers.
Special attention given to the wants of every guest.
CROCKER BROS., Props.
sep1-tf

ANTONS SALOON
KEELER, CAL.
BEER, WINES,
LIQUORS and CIGARS
All kinds of Fancy Drinks, including pure water. A comfortable and pleasant Hall.
JOHN C. ANTON, Prop.

IRWIN'S SALOON
Cor. Edwards and Market Streets,
Independence . Cal.
THE PUBLIC GENERALLY ARE RESPECTFULLY invited to call and inspect my establishment, which has been entirely rebuilt and furnished in a style second to none on this side of the mountains. A SPLENDID NEW BILLIARD TABLE provided for the amusement of patrons.
THE BAR
Is supplied with the most celebrated brands of pure Wines and Liquors and the Finest Havana Cigars.
JOHN C. IRWIN, Proprietor.
feb12tf

BUHACH
THE UNRIVALED
Insect Exterminator
Manufactured solely from Pyrethrum flowers, grown in California, in a locality where the soil and climate are peculiarly adapted to the production of flowers rich in the essential oil which makes them so remarkably destructive to insect life.
Avoid the Worthless and Spurious Preparations, sold as Insect Powders, and use Buhach from original packages, and clear your premises of all Annoying and Destructive Insect Pests.
None Genuine Without the Trade Mark.
If your dealer doesn't keep it, order directly from the
Buhach Producing & Manufacturing COMPANY,
SOLE MANUFACTURERS,
STOCKTON, - - CALIFORNIA.

BLACKSMITHING,
Horseshoeing, General Iron
—AND—
WAGON WORK.
PIONEER BLACKSMITH SHOP
Cor. Main St. & Depot Ave.,
INDEPENDENCE, CAL.
W. F. MATLACK ..... PROPRIETOR.
Horseshoeing ..... $2 00 for Cash
For particulars, call as above.
W. F. MATLACK.

LONE PINE
Blacksmith Shop.
R. C. Spear, Prop'r
—ALL WORK ON—
MINING TOOLS,
FARMING IMPLEMENTS
& FREIGHTING OUTFITS
—PROMPTLY ATTENDED TO—
HORSE SHOEING,
CARRIAGE WORK,
GENERAL REPAIRING
All work attended to with neatness and dispatch. Prices to suit the times.

EDWARD CHENOT
Independence, Cal.,
INVITES PUBLIC ATTENTION TO HIS Extensive Stock of
GENERAL MERCHANDIS
....Consisting of....
GROCERIES.
PROVISIONS
Tobacco, Cigars,
WINES AND LIQUORS
FLOUR & GRAIN
Together with an Assortment of
DRY GOODS AND CLOTHING
ETC., ETC
Buyers and consumers should call and examine my stock and prices before purchasing elsewhere.
E. CHENOT.
Independence, Cal., March 9, 1884.
n4761f

MISCELLANEOUS.

DEMOCRATIC COUNTY CONVENTION
—AND—
PRIMARIES.

A MEETING OF THE DEMOCRATIC CENtral Committee of Inyo county was held at Independence on July 16th and arranged for the holding of a County Nominating Convention to assemble at Independence on THURSDAY, SEPT. 18th.

At the hour of 10 o'clock a. m., for the purpose of nominating candidates for county officers and the transaction of such other business as may properly come before such convention. Primaries for the selection of delegates to said convention were ordered to be held in the several precincts of the county on SATURDAY, AUGUST 30th.

In accordance with the following apportionment, based on the votes cast for Presidential Electors in 1888, a delegate for each precinct voting at said election, one delegate for each ten votes so cast and one for each fraction over one-half that number, as follows:

Round Valley	2	Georges Creek	1
Lincoln	3	Lone Pine	3
Station	2	Cerro Gordo	1
Cottonwood	1	Keeler	1
Bishop	6	Olancha	1
Poleta	1	Darwin	2
Big Pine	4	Lookout	1
Fish Spring	1	Panamint	1
Independence	7

Polls are to be open from 2 o'clock until 6 o'clock p. m. at the following places and under charge of the following officers:

ROUND VALLEY—Inspector, David Olds; Judges, C. H. Parsons, J. S. McGee. Olds' House.

LINCOLN—Inspector, John Blair; Judges, George Clarke, T. K. Hutchison. School House.

LAWS—Inspector, R. C. Schively; Judges J. McNally, Frank Mock. Depot.

COTTONWOOD—Inspector, Nathan Gilbert; Judges, S. P. Roberts, — Berry. Gilbert's

BISHOP—Inspector, Wils. W. Yandell; Judges, E. Schober, A. Dell. School house

POLETA—Inspector, Geo. Storey; Judges, — Collins, M. Hooley. Switch.

BIG PINE—Inspector, Henry McMurry; Judges, R. P. Hesslan, L. Eugley. School house.

FISH SPRINGS—Inspector, James Jones; Judges, J. Lane, P. Love. School house.

INDEPENDENCE—Inspector, G. W. Brady; Judges, W. J. Lake, John Lewis. School house.

GEORGES CREEK—Inspector, John Shepherd; Judges, John Parish, C. Hamilton. School house.

LONE PINE—Inspector, Manuel Diaz; Judges, F. P. Meysan, John Lucas. School house.

KEELER—Inspector, John Barnes; Judges John Morton, D. C. Grunow. Hotel.

CERRO GORDO—Inspector, R. B. Nickerson; Judges, J. Hertel, T. O'Keefe. Store

DARWIN—Inspector, Jas. A. McKenzie; Judges, J. C. Eldy, J. Wilson. School house.

LOOKOUT—Inspector, Crit. Hampton; Judges, J. E. Reynolds, A. Smith. Store

PANAMINT—Inspector, H. G. Chickering; Judges, James Wall, John Curran. Store

OLANCHA—Inspector, William. Walker. Judges, E. Walker, W. T. Grant. Walker's

It is provided that any precincts which may be established by the Board of Supervisors prior to the date of holding the Primaries shall be entitled to one delegate each.

VOTING TEST—"Will you support the nominees of the Democratic State Convention?"

E. ROBINSON, Chairman.
IRV. H. MULHOLLAND, Secretary.

NOTICE TO CREDITORS.

IN THE SUPERIOR COURT OF THE County of Inyo, State of California.

Estate of CHARLES D. BEGOLE, deceased.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN BY THE UNdersigned, Administrator of the estate of Charles D. Begole, deceased, to the creditors of, and all persons having claims against the said deceased, to exhibit them with the necessary vouchers, within four months after the first publication of this notice, to the said Administrator, at his residence, in the town of Independence in the county of Inyo.

THOMAS PARKER.
Administrator of the estate of Charles D. Begole, deceased.

Dated July 7th, 1890.

ASSESSMENT NOTICE.

INYO MARBLE COMPANY.

Location of principal place of business, San Francisco, California. Location of works, Inyo county, Cal.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT AT A meeting of the Board of Directors, held on the 26th day of June, 1890, an assessment (No. 10) of Ten Cents per share was levied upon the capital stock of the corporation, payable immediately in United States gold coin, to the Secretary, at the office of the Company, No. 132 California street, San Francisco, California.

Any stock upon which this assessment shall remain unpaid on the 5th day of August, 1890, will be delinquent and advertised for sale at public auction; and unless payment is made before, will be sold on TUESDAY, the 26th day of August, 1890, to pay the delinquent assessment together with cost of advertising and expenses of sale. By order of the Board of Directors.

G. W. LUCE, Sec.

Office—No. 132 California St., San Francisco, California.

J. W. Murphy.
BLACKSMITHING
—AND—
General Iron Work.
Wagons and Carriages Repaired.
HORSESHOEING, $2 00 PER CASH
Shop on Edwards St., opposite the Court House, Independence

Wm. Muth-Rasmussen.
Bee Keeper.
Manufacturer of Comb Foundation.
Independence, Inyo Co. Cal.

INYO INDEPENDENT.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

FRIDAY, AUGUST 1 1890

COURT NOTES.

Superior Court of Inyo County, California Hon. John A. Hannah, Judge.

MONDAY, July 28th.

Ogden vs. Ogden—Issued Alias Summons and order for publication.

Eliza Smith vs. Joseph Smith—Action for divorce. Complaint filed and summons issued.

TUESDAY, July 29th.

People vs. Middleton—Demurrer to information sustained and case ordered submitted to next Grand Jury.

Page vs. Page—Issued Alias Summons. Order for publication.

MARRIED.

CARRASCO—MENDEZ—At Lone Pine, July 30th, by Hon. John A. Hannah, Superior Judge, Mr. Ruperto Carrasco and Miss Felicita Mendez.

Miss Mymie Clark of Bishop is visiting at Independence.

Ad Smith and Marshall Naylor came down from Big Pine on Wednesday.

W. T. Grant came up from Olancha on Tuesday and was in town a few days.

Wilson Butler, of Bodie, is a candidate for the Assembly. Mr. Butler is a Republican.

C. Garretson came down from Bishop on Wednesday. He will make a crop of the lower end of the county.

Dr. S. Bishop and Mrs. Bishop came down from Reno on Wednesday. Their stay here will be short.

D. R. McLaren, R. S. Irving, William Watterson and Frederick Spear were all admitted to citizenship this week.

A. K. Eagley finds that increasing business demands more room and he is putting an addition to his store at Big Pine.

Dr. S. A. Chapman came down from Bishop last Tuesday to install the officers of the Native Sons. He was accompanied by his wife.

J. N. Evans of Reno arrived at Independence last Monday. He left town the next morning for the mountains over about Monache where he now is.

The Supervisors of Lassen County have ordered that the sum of five hundred dollars be paid to the Treasurer of the Fair Association to help pay the expenses of holding the Fair.

L. Laskey was the only person who had any insurance to collect after the recent fire at Lone Pine. The total amount of his policy was $5,000 and it has all been allowed.

J. J. Gunn accompanied by Arthur Smith left town on Tuesday for Sylvania. Mr. Gunn will make a close inspection of the mines and his long experience will give value to his judgment in the matter.

John E. Jones is making extensive repairs upon his flour mill in Round Valley. He is also about to build a dwelling for greater convenience to himself and work men, his present dwelling being to far from the mill.

Four young men, nephews of the Indian who was killed near Darwin on Sunday morning, started on the trail of the murderer on Monday morning. They were all armed and it is considered tolerably certain that they would "save" their man.

One new bridge, at least, is very much needed at Big Pine. The ford across the creek south of town is at times dangerous and more than usually so this season. A few days ago Mrs. Kelley was thrown from a wagon at the ford and was in serious risk of being drowned.

During the past week or two twenty-eight head of cattle have died at Georges Creek. They belonged to different parties. Among others was a valuable Durham bull belonging to W. L. Hunter. This animal has already been of great benefit to stock in the neighborhood. Fortunately, Mr. Hunter has several fine young bulls of his progeny.

It would appear that the difficulties hindering work at Sylvania have been settled. At the beginning of the present week the miners were paid up and have since gone to work again. George Hall and D. Hessian have sent out teams from Alvord loaded with lumber for the camp. Carpenters and other mechanics are reported to be at work on new buildings.

John Lacey, H. Hamilton and Peter Meyer got back home last Saturday from Nevada. They had been working an antimony mine twelve miles from Austin during the past three or four months. A shipment of the ore has been made but returns not yet received; consequently the value of the ore is not yet known to the producers. They report that the mine looks very promising. The demand for antimony has recently increased largely.

The new stage route from Keeler to Mojave is reported to be in a bad way. The mail contract was taken at about one third of what would have been a fair price for carrying the mail. The contractors tried in vain to sublet the contract but nobody would touch it. Now the people who get their mail along the route fear an effort will be made to have the service discontinued as this appears to be the easiest way out of a bad bargain.

Mr. R. C. Spear, of Lone Pine, gives notice that he will ask the Republican nomination for County Assessor. Mr. Spear has been so long a citizen of the County and is so well known that little need be said by way of introduction. He is a man of blameless character, well informed and of such well established reputation that to all who know him his word is as good as his bond. His card will be found in the list of candidates.

Walter James Jr. came in on Wednesday evening from a trip to Monache and Kern river. He said he tried to ford the river above Runkle's place but found the stream too deep and rapid. A few yards from the shore the horse was almost swept away by the swift rushing stream and Walter had some difficulty in getting back. All the streams are full of trout and any desired quantity can easily be caught. The whole country is swarming with sheep and grass is rapidly disappearing before them.

A Double Killing at Darwin.

About sunrise last Sunday morning an Indian known as Jack Gunn shot and killed Frank Paderes at Crystal Spring about seven miles from Darwin. At an earlier hour the same Indian had killed another Indian not far from the same place. The first victim seemed to have been beaten to death. The murderer had been drinking whiskey during the night; shortly before killing Paderes he came to Crystal Spring where there is a permanent camp of wood-choppers and Indians. He made an attack with a club upon another Indian and Paderes urged him to desist. He went to a hut, got a gun and went up on a hillside overlooking camp. Paderes was then sitting in front of his cabin and did not see the Indian. The latter took deliberate aim and shot the former through the body. Gunn then proceeded to load his weapon again, an old fashioned rifle, and Francisco Olivas who was within speaking distance but entirely unarmed, called to him asking him what he meant to do. The Indian replied that he was going to kill his questioner. Olivas dashed down the canyon in an instant and started for Darwin. He threw off his clothes as he went and when he got to the mouth of the canyon divested himself of every stitch of clothing and rushed into Darwin stark naked. When the alarm was given a messenger with a team was sent out to Keeler, twenty-four miles distant. From Keeler a telegram was sent to Dr. Woodin at Independence. The Doctor quickly started for Darwin, relays of horses being furnished at Lone Pine and Keeler, but before he reached Darwin, Paderes was dead. Olivas came on to Independence on Monday and on his testimony a complaint was preferred by District Attorney Gill and a warrant for the arrest of the murderer was issued by C. Mulholland, Justice of Peace. Under Sheriff Yaney left Independence the same evening in pursuit of Gunn. The murderer had a long start, having left the scene of his crime Sunday morning, while the Sheriff had to ride over sixty miles to reach that place and started on Monday evening. Gunn knows every trail and spring in the wild mountain and desert country to which he fled. A party of young men from Lone Pine and several Indians volunteered to go with Yaney and assist him. The hunt will be kept up as long as horses can be made to move. Frank Paderes is described as having been a very quiet and industrious man and his murder causes much indignation about Darwin.

A Moral.

Referring to the murders that were committed near Darwin last Sunday morning one citizen said to another a few days ago: "We should do something with these Indians; they should not be allowed to go on committing murders." The other citizen replied: "We should do something with the whites first." The last speaker was right; what he meant was that the Indians get whisky from white men, and when maddened with liquor they are ready for any desperate act. There never lived more quiet or inoffensive people than these Indians when they are not under the influence of liquor. We all know how quietly they go about and how civil they are. When driving along the highways in their wagons or riding on horseback they never fail to give the right of way to white people. They never speak to white people unless spoken to, and then their replies are always brief and courteous. No white person, man, woman or child, is ever molested by them, and even when drunk the try to keep out of the way of the whites. Every crime committed by Indians in Inyo county during the past twenty-five years was the direct result of whisky drinking. The Indians cannot get liquor except through the agency of the whites, and when crime follows drunkenness the guilt of those who supply the Indian criminal with liquor is greater than his own, no matter what the crime may be.

A Narrow Escape.

Last Sunday night Lone Pine had a narrow escape from another bad fire. Late in the evening Mr. R. C. Spear chanced to be in an alley back of his dwelling; he saw the flash of a match being lighted and on going to the spot found a drunken Indian. He assisted the Indian out of town and on returning to the spot where he had found him Mr. Spear made a close search and discovered a burning cigarette the man had hidden under some dry straw and rubbish. There is not the least doubt that had Mr. Spear been careless and failed to make such a careful examination as he did there would have been a bad fire and much property destroyed. Supplying whisky to Indians is a very dangerous crime and every effort should be made to punish any one guilty of it.

Notice.

Notice is hereby given that Mr. James E. Reynolds is my authorized agent at Modock during my absence from Inyo County, and will pay all bills for labor, supplies, etc. All business communications to be addressed to him at Modock, Inyo County, Cal.

2-1 FRANK FITZGERALD.

For Sale or Rent.

The Palace Saloon, Independence, California. Good stand, on Main Street, opposite Court House. Best fitted up saloon in Inyo County. For terms apply to

J. J. GUNN,
Independence, Cal.

John W. P. Laird, Esq gives notice that he is a candidate for the Democratic nomination for Superior Judge. Mr. Laird is so well known all over the county that every man who may be a delegate to the Democratic convention will be fully competent to decide for himself whether or not Mr. Laird should be nominated. As a practicing attorney, as District Attorney and Register of the Land Office Mr. Laird is personally known to almost every voter in the county.

DELINQUENT SALE NOTICE.

STEVENS DITCH COMPANY.

Location of principal place of business, Independence, California. Location of ditch, near Independence, Inyo county.

NOTICE—There are delinquent upon the the following described stock, on account of assessment No. 4, levied on the 31st day of May, 1890, the several amounts set opposite the names of the respective shareholders, as follows:

Names.	No. Cert.	No. Sh's.	Am't
A. C. Stevens	1761		$176 61
J. V. Skinner	450		45 00
W. H. Jenkins	139		13 90
John Baxter	50		5 00
W. H. Huff	15		1 50
W. S. Enos	500		50 00
W. J. Jenkins	300		30 00
John Davies	60		6 00
John Reynolds	40		4 00
L. Baxter	10		1 00

And in accordance with law, and an order of the Board of Directors, made on the 31st day of May, 1890, so many shares of each parcel of such stock as may be necessary, will be sold at public auction, at the office of the Stevens Ditch Company, Independence, California, on Monday, the 30th day of August, 1890, at the hour of 3 o'clock p. m. of said day, to pay said delinquent assessment thereon, together with costs of advertising and expenses of sale.

P. H MACK, Secretary.

POLITICAL ANNOUNCEMENTS.

All announcements under this head will be charged for at the uniform rate of Ten Dollars

For Superior Judge.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Superior Judge, subject to the action of the Republican County Convention.

GEORGE M. GILL.

For Superior Judge.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Superior Judge, Subject to the action of the Democratic county convention.

JOHN A. HANNAH.

For Superior Judge.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY DECLARE myself as a candidate for the office of Superior Judge, subject to the action of the Republican county convention.

A R. CONKLIN.

For Sheriff.

ANNOUNCEMENNT IS HEREBY MADE that I respectfully declare myself as a candidate for the office of Sheriff, subject to the action of the Republican County Convention.

JOHN S. GORMAN.

For Treasurer.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Treasurer, subject to the action of the Democratic county convention. J. J. MOORE.

For Sheriff.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Sheriff, subject to the action of the Democratic Convention. BEN. T. WILLIAMS.

For Supervisor.

ANNOUNCEMENT IS HEREBY MADE that I will be a candidate for the office of Supervisor of the Third District subject to the action of the Republican Convention.

CHARLES A. WALTER.

For Assessor.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of Assessor, subject to the action of the Democratic Convention. C. W. GARRETSON.

For Sheriff.

NOTICE IS HEREBY GIVEN THAT I RESpectfully declare myself as a candidate for the office of Sheriff, subject to the action of the Democratic Convention.

ALNEY I. McGEE.

For Assessor.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY DECLARE that I am a candidate for the office of Assessor of Inyo county, subject to the action of the Republican convention.

HENRY MELONE.

For County Clerk.

ANNOUNCEMENT IS HEREBY RESPECTfully made that I declare myself a candidate for the office of County Clerk, subject to the action of the Republican convention

JOHN N. YANDELL.

For County Clerk.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE myself as a candidate for the office of County Clerk, subject to the action of the Democratic convention. P. H. MACK.

For County Clerk.

I HEREBY RESPECTFULLY ANNOUNCE that I am a candidate for County Clerk, subject to the action of the Republican County Convention. FRANK P. BLAISDELL.

For Superior Judge.

ANNOUNCEMENT IS HEREBY MADE that I will be a candidate for the office of Superior Judge, subject to the action of the Democratic convention. Respectfully,

JOHN W. P. LAIRD.

For Assessor.

ANNOUNCEMENT IS HEBEBY RESPECTfully made that I will be a candidate for the office of Assessor, subject to the action of the Republican convention. R. C. SPEAR.

MISCELLANEOUS.

DESERT LAND FINAL PROOF

D. E. No. 415.

LAND OFFICE AT INDEPENDENCE, CAL. June 25, 1890.

Notice is hereby given that John A. Hannah, of Independence, Inyo County, California, has filed notice of his intention to make proof on his desert-land claim No. 415, for the S E ¼ of Sec. 32, Tp. 13 S., R. 36 E., M. D. M., before the Register and Receiver at Independence on Saturday, the 2d day of August, 1890.

He names the following witnesses to prove the complete irrigation and reclamation of said land: Finlay McIver, Gilbert Christie, David Johnson and David Vaughn, all of Citrus, Inyo County, Cal.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD, Register.

DESERT LAND FINAL PROOF.

D E No. 414.

LAND OFFICE AT INDEPENDENCE, CAL. June 25, 1890.

Notice is hereby given that Charles Mulholland, of Independence, Inyo County, California, has filed notice of intention to make proof on his desert land claim No. 414, for the N E ¼ of Sec. 32, Tp. 13 S., R. 36 E., M D M, before the Register and Receiver at Independence, California, on Saturday, the 2d day of August, 1890.

He names the following witnesses to prove the complete irrigation and reclamation of said land: Finlay McIver, Gilbert Christie, David Johnson and David Vaughn, all of Citrus, Inyo County, California.

JOHN W. P. LAIRD, Register.

Pioneer Livery & Feed Stables.

INDEPENDENCE, CAL.

Having returned and resumed the management of the above well known feed and livery stables, patrons can be assured of finding there the best of Buggy Teams, Saddle Horses, and

Livery Accommodations

in general. Also, Hay and Grain for sale by the pound or ton.

O. I. MAIRS, Proprietor.

E. H. Edwards,

—DEALER IN—

General Merchandise,

LONE PINE,

INYO COUNTY - - - CALIFORNIA.

HALE BROS. & CO.

Shopping By Mail.

Shopping by mail affords advantages to out-of-town people which are of special importance. They get advanced styles, large assortment and lower prices. HALE BROS & CO. make a specialty of this business. Their patronage extends from Arizona to Alkska, and their trade is constantly on the increase. Do you want to know why?

A Shopping Guide.

It requires no experience to order from us. Our Illustrated Catalogue, issued twice a year, gives illustrations and describes faithfully everything in our immense establishment. It is a book of 100 pages and shows you every thing that fashion demands. Though large and expensive we send it Free to all. It gives you prices that you little dream of.

Largest Importing House On The Coast.

HALE BROS. & CO.

Nos. 825 to 835 K St.,

Sacrameoto, Cal.

How They Treat You

They aim to give satisfaction in every instance. You can send to them for goods with the certainty that you will be treated with the same courtesy and fairness as though you were at their counters. They fill orders carefully, promptly, and take no unfair advantage of patrons. If you have not been satisfied with the way other firms have treated you, note the difference in sending to

HALE BROS. & CO.

What They Keep.

No matter what you need, you can get it at HALE BROS. & CO. An immense assortment of dry-goods is carried. Household Supplies, Notions Shoes and all kinds of wearing apparel for both sexes. Samples of all goods by the yard sent on application. It pays to deal with them because they buy more goods in the East and abroad than any retail house on the Coast. The evidence of it is seen in their prices.

JEWELRY, DIAMONDS, WATCHES.

Hyman Fredrick, Reno, Nev.

The attention of the people of Inyo and neighboring counties is respectfully invited to the

LARGEST AND BEST STOCK

of Watches, Diamonds, Ear and Finger Rings, Bracelets and all other kinds of Jewelry this side of San Francisco. Knives, Forks, Spoons, and other Table Ware of the Best quality.

PRICES DEFY OUTSIDE COMPETITION.

All repairs done promptly and in a workmanlike manner.

Address orders and packages to

HYMAN FREDRICK, Jeweler,

m30-tf RENO, NEVADA.

THE BEST VALUE

LEVI STRAUSS & CO'S

Celebrated Copper Riveted

OVERALLS AND SPRING BOTTOM PANTS

ENJOY A NATIONAL REPUTATION.

NONE GENUINE WITHOUT OUR TRADE MARK.

BEST SEWING! BEST FINISH! BEST FIT!

BEST MATERIALS!

The only kind made by White Labor.

FOR SALE EVERYWHERE

MISCELLANEOUS.

NORMAN HOUSE,

Independence, - - Cal.

New House.
New Furniture.
Low Rates.

Special attention will be given to secure the comfort of guests.

O. I. MAIRS, Prop.

feb12tf

MISCELLANEOUS.

BELL'S Flouring Mills,

A. N. BELL, Prop.

TRY BELL'S

EXTRA PATENT ROLLER FLOUR.

Having added Patent Rolls and other Improvements to our Mills, I am now turning out Flour that is fully

Equal to the Best.

Corn, Oats and Barley Cracked on Short Notice.

A. N. BELL,

Independence, Cal.

BISHOP ADVERTISEMENTS.

GIVEN & INGALLS.

- DEALERS IN -

FARM PRODUCE.

J. E. DUNLAP.

Harness Maker.

Harness of all kinds, from the lightest to the heaviest. Any kind of new work made promptly and of the best material. Repairing done on the shortest notice. A full line of saddles and harness.

Valley View Hotel.

O. H. Hill, Prop'r.

A New House Newly Furnished Throughout. Guests will receive every courtesy and attention.

NEVADA STABLE BISHOP.

Opposite Valley View Hotel, Main St

In the Livery Department nothing is kept but safe and good traveling carriage and saddle horses. Conveyances of all kinds first-class. Good attendance and the best of hay and grain for all animals boarding at the stable

S. P. SMITH, Prop.

BISHOP CREEK BREWERY,

MUNZINGER, PHILLIPPAY & CO., Proprietors.

All the appliances and conveniences of First Class Brewery, including a beautiful grove for out-door parties.

Customers supplied on all points Of the C. & C. Railroad.

Send orders to

MUNZINGER, PHILLIPPAY & CO.

Bishop Creek, Cal.

F. E. Bosworth,

Watchmaker & Jeweler.

BISHOP, CAL.

Fine and Complicated Watch Repairing a Specialty.

Guns, Sewing Machines, Organs and Music Boxes Put in Perfect Condition and Warranted.

I Prefer to do all work at your house and will call if you will write to me at Bishop.

A NEW DEAL!

BISHOP CREEK

Livery. Feed & Sale Stable.

ROBERT O'NEIL, Prop'r.

Horses are boarded by the day, week or month. Stock bought and sold.

Bishop Creek, Cal., Nov. 20, 1883.

A. K. EUGLEY,

BIG PINE INYO CO. CAL.

Dealer in GENERAL MERCHANDISE, GROCERIES MINERS Supplies

PROVISIONS,

&c., &c., &c.

Deputy County Clerk.

A. K. EUGLEY,

Big Pine, Cal.

MISCELLANEOUS.

Railroad Time Table.

CARSON & COLORADO R R

TAKING EFFECT

Sunday, May 10th, 1890

STATIONS.	From Mound House. No. 1	To Mound House. No. 2.
	Leave—	Arrives—
Mound House	12:30 p m	5.55 p. m.
Dayton	1:00 p. m.	5:15 p. m.
Wabuska	3.65 p m	3 06 p. m.
Hawthorne	6 50 p. m.	11:20 a. m.
Luning	7:30 p. m.	10:05 a. m.
Soda Springs	9:15 p. m.	8:05 a. m.
Belleville	10:25 p. m.	7:15 a. m.
Candelaria	Ar. 11.10 p. m	Lv. 7:10 a. m.
	No. 3. Leave—	No. 4. Arrives—
Belleville	8 10 a. m	5:25 p. m.
Benton	11:40 a m
Bishop Creek	1:40p. m.	11:05 a. m.
Alvord	2:35 p. m.	10:00 a. m.
Independence	4 10 p. m.	8:30 a. m.
Lone Pine	5 00p. m.	7:40 a. m.
Keeler	Ar 6:45 p. m.	Lv. 7.00 a. m.

Trains 1 and 2 run daily.
Train 3 runs Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays
Train 4 runs Tuesdays, Thursdays and Saturdays

Passenger trains make close connection at Mound House with express trains of V. & T. R. R., which connect at Reno with east and west bound trains of Central Pacific Railroad.

Stage Connections:

At HAWTHORNE with United States Stage Company's coaches for Aurora (36 miles); Bodie (35 miles); Lundy and Bridgeport.

At LUNING (125 miles from Mound House) with Gilmer, Salisbury & Co's. tri weekly stages (leave Luning Mondays, Wednesdays and Fridays) for Downeyville, Granteville and Belmont.

At CANDELARIA with U. S. Stage Co's. stages for Columbus (8 miles), Silver Peak, Montezuma, Alida Valley, Gold Mountain, etc.

H. M. YERINGTON,
General Superintendent.

R. J. LAWS, Assistant Superintendent.

D A BENDER,
General Freight and Passenger Agent.

The Newest Styles

OF

Fashionable Clothing

Dry Goods, Ladies' Wear, etc., etc.

AT

L. WOOL'S

CASH STORE

A small stock of fresh groceries & canned goods constantly renewed.

Fresh Produce, and Grain Flour, etc., constantly on hand.

CANDIES,
PEANUTS,
WALNUTS,
TOYS!

THE CASH STORE

Is Where You Get

WORTH OF YOUR MONEY

THOMAS & HILL,

—DEALERS IN—

GENERAL MERCHANDISE

BIG PINE, INYO COUNTY, CAL,

We keep constantly on hand goods of all kinds needed in a country home. We order only First-Class Goods and ask 10 more than a reasonable profit. Give us a trial.

THOMAS & HILL.

INDEPENDENCE SHAVING SALOON.

Shaving, Hair-Cutting, etc., done in the best manner.

WM. H. HUFF, Prop'r

COLONEL QUARITCH, V.C.

By H. RIDER HAGGARD.

"Hold your tongue, sir," roared the squire, as usual relieving his feelings on his retainer. "You are always shoving your oar in where it isn't wanted."

"All right, squire—all right," said George the imperturbable; "then his manners shouldn't be sich."

"Do you mean to allow this?" said Cossey, turning fiercely to the old gentleman. "Do you mean to allow this man to marry your daughter for her money?"

"Mr. Cossey," answered the squire, with his politest and most old fashioned bow, "whatever sympathy I may have felt for you is being rapidly alienated by your manner. I told you that my daughter must speak for herself. She has spoken very clearly, and in short I have absolutely nothing to add to her words."

"I tell you what it is," Cossey said, shaking with fury, "I have been tricked and fooled and played with, and so sure as there is a God above us I will have my revenge on you all somehow. The money that this man says that he has found belongs to the queen, and not to you, and I will take care that the proper people are informed of it before you can make away with it, and when that is taken away from you, if indeed the whole thing is not a trick, we will see what will happen to you. I tell you that I will take this property, and I will pull this old place you are so fond of down, stone by stone, and throw it into the moat, and send the plow over the site. I will sell the estate piecemeal and blot it out. I tell you I have been tricked. You encouraged the marriage yourself—you know you did—and you forbade that man the house." And he paused for breath and to collect his words.

Again the squire bowed, and his bow was a study in itself. You do not see such bows nowadays.

